Trust and confidence reposed by one in the integrity and fidelity of another are elements of "confidential" or "fiduciary" relationships which, in law, are synonymous.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Confidential Relationship" and "Fiduciary Relationship".

No one who is in confidential relationship toward another may take advantage of that relationship in favor of himself, or deal with other person upon terms of his own making, and in every such transaction between persons standing in that relationship, law will presume that he who held influence over other exercised it unduly to his own advantage.

12. Deeds Ⓒ196(2, 3)

Grantees who stood in relation of trust and confidence to grantor would have burden of proving that they had exhibited that degree of good faith sufficient to remove all doubt respecting fairness of transaction.

13. Deeds Ⓒ196(3)

A deed may not be set aside because of absence of independent advice alone; but where grantee stood in confidential relation to grantor he will be presumed to have taken undue advantage of grantor unless it appears that grantor had independent advice and acted not only of his own volition but with full comprehension of results of his action.

14. Deeds Ⓒ211(4)

In suit to set aside deed, evidence would support finding that defendants had exercised undue influence in procuring execution of deed without payment of any consideration therefor.

15. Pleading Ⓒ236(5)

Granting or denial of permission to file amendment to pleading to conform to proof rests largely in discretion of trial court.

On record presented, in suit to set aside deed, it was not an abuse of discretion for trial court to permit plaintiffs to file amended complaint, to conform to proof, after trial had been concluded.

Issues tendered by amended pleading, having already been tried, were deemed denied without pleading, and, in suit to set aside deed, trial court would not be put in error for failing to give defendants an opportunity to plead or demur to amended complaint, to conform to proof, which trial court had permitted to be filed after trial had been concluded.

18. Trial Ⓒ367

In cause tried before court, sitting without a jury, no absolute right to argument exists; and, on record presented in suit to set aside deed, trial court, which had granted counsel privilege of filing briefs, could not be charged with an abuse of discretion in declining to hear oral arguments.

On record presented, in suit to set aside deed, trial judge would not be put in error for not rendering decision until almost a month after filing of briefs, notwithstanding defendants' contention that trial judge could not have recalled all of evidence since more than two months had elapsed after it was adduced.

In suit to set aside deed executed by plaintiffs' decedent, wherein defendants contended that earlier deed from them to decedent had in fact been a mortgage or trust deed, it was not error to refuse to grant defendants' motion for new trial on ground of newly discovered evidence, consisting of original promissory note, a copy of which had been admitted into evidence on trial, notwithstanding defendants' claim that it would show that their deed to decedent had in fact been given as security.

James C. Webb, Long Beach, for appellants.

Walker, Johnstone & Walker and Ball, Hunt & Hart, George A. Hart, Jr., Long Beach, for respondents.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiffs, in their capacity as co-executors of the estate of Maria Lamp, Deceased, instituted this action to set aside a certain deed executed July 11, 1955, by said decedent, as grantor, to defendants, the day preceding the grantor's death.

By their complaint plaintiffs alleged fraud, undue influence, lack of capacity, and that the deed was procured by defendants without the payment of any consideration.

By their answer, defendants denied generally the allegations of the complaint, and as a third affirmative defense alleged ownership in the property in question by reason of an administratrix' deed from the Estate of Herman Lamp (husband of decedent), dated October 27, 1949.

At the conclusion of the trial and following submission of the cause on written briefs, the court made the following findings:

I.

That on May 1, 1950, Maria Lamp received an unconditional grant deed to real property located at 4422-4424 Vista Avenue, Long Beach, California, and that from May 1, 1950, to date of her death, July 12, 1955, she was the sole owner in fee of said real property.

II.

That on July 11, 1955, Maria Lamp was without mental capacity to attend to her business affairs, to know the extent or value of the property owned by her, or to know the relationship of persons appearing before her, or to execute the deed of July 11, 1955.

III.

That a confidential relationship existed between defendants and Maria Lamp.

IV.

That defendants did exercise undue influence upon said Maria Lamp, and defendants did, in the exercise of said undue influence, procure said Maria Lamp to execute said grant deed without the payment of any consideration therefor.

V.

That Maria Lamp had no independent advice from any person in reference to the execution of said deed of July 11, 1955.

Judgment was accordingly entered that the deed of July 11, 1955, from Maria Lamp to defendants be cancelled, vacated and set aside as null and void, and of no force or effect. Defendants' motion for a new trial was denied. From the judgment and the order thereafter made, denying their motion for a new trial, defendants prosecute this appeal.

Concerning the factual background surrounding this litigation, the record reflects that the subject property consists of a duplex dwelling situated in the city of Long Beach. In September of 1941 defendants became resident tenants in one unit of the property, at that time owned by decedent Maria Lamp and her husband Herman Lamp, who occupied the other unit. The owners continued to reside on the property until their respective deaths, Herman Lamp until 1949 and decedent herein, Maria Lamp until July 12, 1955. Defendants also continuously lived on the property up to the time of trial of this action.

Following the death of Herman Lamp, his estate was probated in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County. In November, 1949, defendants received an Administratrix' Deed dated October 27, 1949, for the duplex property. The deed was executed by decedent Maria Lamp as Administratrix of the estate of her husband Herman Lamp. The deed reserved in the widow, Maria Lamp, a life estate. Defendants paid a consideration of $5,800 for the property, but the money therefor was received from the administratrix Maria Lamp, and defendants gave Maria Lamp no note, trust deed or any other evidence of said loan or advance, and had no agreement—oral or written—as to time of repayment of principal or any provision for payment of interest.

Subsequently, in April, 1950, defendants borrowed $4,800 for which, according to the testimony of defendant Frank E. Rich, he gave Maria Lamp an unsecured note for $6,000. That, in September, 1953, Maria Lamp, "marked it paid and handed it back to me". The note was not produced. Mr. Rich testified that the last time he saw it was in the office of the attorneys for Maria Lamp. An additional $800 was borrowed by defendants from Maria Lamp shortly after May 1, 1950, and subsequently, a further sum of $1,200 was borrowed, making the total loans from decedent Maria Lamp to defendants the sum of $11,400.

On May 1, 1950, defendants executed and delivered to Maria Lamp a grant deed to the duplex property here involved, which document remained in her safety deposit box until removed by defendant Frank E. Rich, about July 8, 1955.

With regard to the payment of taxes on the subject property after execution of the deed of May 1, 1950, defendant Frank E. Rich testified that while Maria Lamp sent in the check for the taxes he paid "my half of it". That such payments were made in cash, and no receipts were obtained therefor. In 1955, defendant Frank E. Rich was placed upon Maria Lamp's commercial checking account, with the right to withdraw money upon his signature only, and was also placed on the safety deposit box of Maria Lamp, with the right to enter said safety deposit box at the Farmers and Merchants Bank, 3rd and Pine Avenue, Long Beach, California, unaccompanied.

With regard to the foregoing transactions defendant Viola Rich testified she and her husband had known decedent Maria Lamp for approximately twelve years. That she and her husband acquired the foregoing Administratrix' Deed by way of purchase of the duplex property for $5,800 in October, 1949. Admitted that her husband had borrowed approximately $4,800 from deceased to make said purchase. That during the month of April, 1950, her husband received approximately $5,800 as an additional loan from deceased. That the grant deed dated May 1, 1950, was executed and delivered by her and her husband to deceased, at the Farmers & Merchants Bank, 302 Pine Avenue, Long Beach, California, at which time no money or other consideration was received by the Riches in exchange for said grant deed, but was given by way of security to deceased for said sums totaling $5,800, previously borrowed by Mr. Rich from said deceased, and that shortly thereafter said deceased did lend an additional $800 to Mr. Rich. That arrangements for the execution and delivery of said note was made by conversations with deceased at her home a few days prior thereto. That the Riches made regular weekly payments thereafter to deceased on account of said loans. Said grant deed of May 1, 1950, was returned to Mr. Rich's possession about July 8, 1955, on which date decedent stated to this witness that she had instructed Mr. Rich to pick up this deed from her safety deposit box and that decedent wished the Riches to have it. That Mr. Rich had delivered his promissory note for $6,000 to said decedent shortly prior to May 1, 1950. That this witness and her husband visited decedent almost daily during the time she was at home between January 1, 1955 and July 7, 1955, during which period of time she performed numerous tasks for decedent, including the making of her clothes, shampooing her hair, and other personal services, also including business trips, depositing monies, etc., and that upon returning from such business trips she did hand to deceased the bank book and other receipts, at which times said deceased would check the receipts and the bank book. That this witness had also performed similar numerous tasks and made various business trips for said decedent from time to time almost daily for the last five years of decedent's life.

Defendant Frank E. Rich corroborated generally the foregoing testimony of his wife and also stated that he also had performed numerous personal services and attended to business matters for decedent pursuant to her instructions, for approximately five years immediately preceding her death, all without compensation. That in April, 1955, some three months prior to her death, decedent authorized him to sign checks on her bank account and to enter, unaccompanied, her safety deposit box at the bank. He further testified that decedent had stated in December, 1954, that she intended to reconvey title to the duplex property to the Riches shortly after the holidays. That about January, 1955, decedent told this witness that her brother and his wife were coming to visit her; that she would like to have them live in the Riches' side of the duplex and look after her. That she intended to offer the duplex to her brother and his wife and she discussed arrangements with him regarding her selling one of her trust deeds to obtain monies necessary to buy out the Riches' equity in the said duplex. That deceased later requested a Mr. Prichard, her financial adviser, to sell one of her said trust deeds some time in February or March of 1955. That the expenses of the duplex property, including the taxes, were shared and paid jointly by the Riches and the deceased, and the use of said premises was also shared jointly by said parties. That he had repaid to decedent approximately $7,500 for the monies he had received from her. That he kept a memo or record of monies he had paid to deceased and she had kept her own similar records.

Mr. Rich also testified that at and during all times hereinbefore mentioned the decedent discussed fully and in detail all business matters and all other transactions wherein she made demand upon him for his assistance therein and that she fully understood all phases thereof. That he made a full accounting and report to her in each of such instances. That decedent carried on correspondence and other business matters and kept her own business records.

Decedent Maria Lamp had for some considerable time suffered from arteriosclerosis in both her lower extremities, frequently incapacitating her, during which times, according to defendants, they "took care of and looked after her" since decedent was living alone.

In January, 1955, decedent Maria Lamp, then 79 years of age, suffered an acute coronary occlusion for which she was hospitalized for four weeks. In March, 1955, she was again hospitalized for some three weeks following an attack of peripheral vascular disease, consisting of severe hardening of the arteries of the lower extremities.

On July 7, 1955, decedent Maria Lamp was hospitalized for the last time, and on July 8, was examined by Dr. G. D. Bock, an orthopedic surgeon, who diagnosed her ailment as arteriosclerotic gangrene, involving both lower extremities and most marked on the right leg. There is testimony that on July 8, 1955, decedent was in extreme pain. Dr. Bock recommended amputation of the right leg at mid-thigh level and that sympathetic blocks be carried out on the right side to cut down the progress of gangrene in the left limb. Dr. Bock testified that sympathetic block is quite similar to a spinal anaesthetic. A long needle, approximately four or five inches in length, is used, and is inserted in just one side of the spine and pushed down along the bodies of the vertebral column itself. The sympathetic ganglia or nerves lie just to the front of the bodies of the vertebrae. Once the needle engages the site of the body of the vertebrae it is pushed a little farther and the area is infiltrated with novocain or some such drug. That produces a block of the sympathetic system,—nervous system. Such sympathetic nerve blocking was performed on the 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th of July.

Maria Lamp's right leg was amputated at mid-thigh level July 9, 1955, which said operation was considered a severe shock to the nervous system of a woman 79 years of age.

Dr. Bock testified: "I would say surgery of this magnitude would represent quite a shock to the system."

The doctor further testified as follows: "I would say there was great pain; I would even use the term 'agonizing pain' at times."

On July 11, 1955, defendants Frank E. Rich and Viola P. Rich procured from Maria Lamp a grant deed to the real property located at 4422-4424 Vista Avenue, Long Beach, California. No consideration was received by Maria Lamp for the execution of said grant deed. At the time the grant deed was executed, the attending surgeon, Dr. Bock, was not advised.

Maria Lamp passed away July 12, 1955, the day following execution by her of the grant deed to defendants, and the validity of which instrument is the subject of this litigation.

With regard to the events occurring on July 7th when decedent was last removed to the hospital, and the succeeding days prior to decedent's death, defendant Mrs. Viola P. Rich testified that she talked with decedent at the latter's home on July 7. That on the following day, her husband, defendant Frank E. Rich, transported her to the hospital, stating that decedent desired to see the witness. That she did visit with decedent at the hospital on July 8, in the presence of her husband, the attending nurse, and Shirley Mae Smith the notary public. Decedent was very glad to see her and engaged in conversation with her, in which decedent told this witness that she was deeding the duplex property back to her and her husband; that Mr. Rich had picked up the grant deed of May 1, 1950, from her safety deposit box at decedent's request because she wanted the Riches to have it also. That decedent discussed some minor changes to be made in her part of the duplex dwelling after she returned from the hospital, to facilitate her getting about in the wheelchair; that this witness and her husband signed an unrecorded grant deed dated July 8, 1955, as witnesses to decedent's signature thereto in the presence of said notary, Shirley Mae Smith. That said decedent put on her glasses and read the grant deed before signing it and then placed it upon a suitcase across her lap and affixed her signature thereto. Decedent remarked that her signature did not look very good. That decedent did fully discuss with her all business matters and transactions in which this witness assisted or participated. In this testimony Mrs. Rich was corroborated by her husband, defendant Frank E. Rich.

As to the mental capacity of decedent to execute the deed of July 11, 1955, the day before her death, and the validity of which is here challenged, the evidence was in sharp conflict. We deem it unnecessary to here set forth the evidence in detail. Suffice it to say Dr. Bock who performed the surgery was asked, "Taking into consideration the age of Maria Lamp; your examination of the 8th; your surgery on the 9th, where you amputated her right leg above the knee; your personal observation of her during the time she was in the hospital; the administration of nerve blocks and drugs, as indicated by the hospital records and your own records; in your opinion was Maria Lamp, on July 11, 1955, mentally competent to execute a grant deed?" To which question he answered, "No". On cross-examination the witness stated that the novocain or the nerve blocks did not affect decedent mentally in any way as he observed her. He further testified that decedent recognized him as her doctor and responded to questions propounded to her except during and immediately following the surgery. That he discussed fully with her the proposed operation and that she consented to undergo the same.

John Rieger testified he had known decedent some six years prior to her demise and visited her approximately once a week during that period. In the opinion of this witness, decedent was mentally incompetent, and had been for some seven months prior to her death.

A niece of decedent testified that the latter had been incompetent since January, 1955. That the decedent was mentally incompetent was also the opinion of a friend Mrs. William Marxen.

On the contrary, the notary public who took decedent's acknowledgment on the questioned deed testified that while decedent appeared to have some emotional distress, nothing occurred to indicate that the decedent was not mentally competent at the time she affixed her signature to the deed. Margaret Orr, an employee of the hospital who witnessed decedent's signature to the deed on July 11, 1955, testified that nothing occurred at that time to cause her to suspect that Maria Lamp was not mentally competent to understand what she was signing.

Sworn as a witness for defendants, Dr. J. Knutson testified that he had attended decedent continuously from January, 1955, until her death on July 12, 1955. That during this time there was no change in the mental condition of decedent nor was there any mental deterioration during that period. Substantially the same testimony was given by Dr. J. Reed, an associate of Dr. Knutson, Minnie Lee Payne testified she was in constant attendance upon decedent from June 11th to July 7th, 1955. That during this interval it was her opinion that decedent was mentally competent. Similar testimony was given by Mrs. Nora N. Lindemberger and Effie Pauls, a neighbor of the decedent.

We are satisfied that Finding I that on May 1, 1950, decedent Maria Lamp received from appellants an unconditional grant deed to the subject property, and from the date thereof until her death was the sole owner in fee of said real property finds ample support in the evidence. First, the instrument was unconditional on its face, and remained in the safety deposit box of decedent from the time of delivery until removed therefrom early in July, 1955 by appellant Frank E. Rich. The absence of any trust deed, mortgage or other written memorandum to the contrary, supports a reasonable inference that the deed was what it purported to be on its face. Furthermore, the actions of decedent

Maria Lamp from May 1, 1950, to July 11, 1955, were at all times consistent with absolute fee ownership. It was her check that paid the taxes, although appellants testified that for a short period in 1949 and early in 1950, they paid a share of the taxes. There was testimony that on one occasion decedent had stated, "The Riches owe me over six months back rent". Also, on another occasion appellant Mrs. Rich stated to her husband, "You pay the rental on the wheelchair, as we have not paid the rent to Mrs. Lamp this month". Thereafter, in May, 1955, appellant Frank E. Rich delivered some money to decedent, saying: "Here is part of the rent money". This conduct is not at all consistent with a claim of ownership of the property. There is also in evidence an exhibit purporting to be a statement of accounts between appellants and the decedent. On this document appears a notation in the handwriting of decedent wherein she allows appellant Frank E. Rich a credit of $300 "on a car loan" and that this allowance is made for a paint job done on the duplex. If appellants owned the duplex why would they be charging decedent for painting it? Appellant Frank E. Rich testified that decedent was going to give the property to her brother, if the brother would stay in California and take care of her, but because the brother could not stay, Maria Lamp would give it to appellants. Certainly, Maria Lamp must have considered that she owned the property in fee or she would not have considered giving it to her brother in consideration of his caring for her.

[1-3] On their claim that the deed of May 1, 1950, absolute on its face, was in reality something essentially different, viz., a mortgage or a trust deed, the testimony must be clear, convincing and conclusive (Goodfellow v. Goodfellow, 219 Cal. 548, 554, 27 P.2d 898; Davis v. Stewart, 31 Cal.App.2d 574, 577, 88 P.2d 734; Stevens v. Fetterman, 76 Cal.App. 741, 753, 246 P. 102). Appellants' proof consisted for the most part of the oral declarations of the decedent made to appellant Frank E. Rich. It was for the trial court to determine what weight was to be accorded them (Herbert v. Lankershim, 9 Cal.2d 409, 430, 71 P.2d 220). The conclusion of the trial court that the deed of May 1, 1950, from respondents to the decedent was an unconditional deed finds abundant support in the evidence and the inferences reasonably deducible therefrom.

Appellants next assail Finding II that on July 11, 1955, decedent Maria Lamp was without mental capacity to execute the deed bearing that date.

[4] Appellants direct our attention to many cases involving the issues of undue influence which are undoubtedly correct, and in a proper case would doubtless be decisive. However, we are here concerned with a case involving the mental capacity of decedent Maria Lamp to execute the deed in question. The presence or absence of mental capacity is a matter which must necessarily depend upon the peculiar circumstances of the particular case rather than upon bare and academic rules. Manifestly, the trial court was best able to appraise the weight of the testimony and the credibility of the witnesses, and came to the conclusion that on July 11, 1955, decedent was bereft of the mental capacity to know the extent or value of the property owned by her or to know and understand the nature of her act. In other words, that she was not fully cognizant of her actions with regard to her property at the time she affixed her signature to the deed.

[5, 6] It is axiomatic that on appeal, the power of an appellate tribunal begins and ends with a determination of whether there is in the record substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which supports the judgment rendered. And unless it is made clearly to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there sufficient substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached in the court below, that conclusion may not be set aside on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence. We must also assume in favor of the judgment the existence of every fact which the trier of facts could have reasonably deduced from the evidence.

[7] In the case at bar, if the circumstances reasonably justify the judgment of the duly constituted arbiter of the facts, the opinion of the reviewing court that these circumstances might also reasonably be reconciled with a contrary conclusion will not warrant interference with the determination of the trial court. Viewed in the light of these rules, we are persuaded that the finding of the trial court as to mental incapacity must be sustained.

There was evidence that decedent was 79 years of age. During the year 1955 she suffered a severe heart attack which necessitated her hospitalization on two different occasions. She was afflicted with a generalized arteriosclerotic condition, aggravated by advanced gangrene in both legs. During the year 1955, here in question, decedent up to the time of her death suffered extreme pain which required her to take daily doses of pain-killing drugs to alleviate such pain. On July 7, 1955, when decedent was admitted to the hospital the last time, her signature upon hospital records was barely legible. Further evidence of lack of coordination and inability to place scribbles near the signature line is shown on the document consenting to the nerve blocks. At that time appellant Frank E. Rich signed the consent on behalf of decedent.

The hospital records indicate that the spinal blocks were performed on July 8, 9, 10, 11 (date of signing the deed), and 12. As heretofore noted, this is a procedure which involves the insertion of a needle four or five inches long into the lumbar spine of the patient.

On the hospital record designated "Laboratory Pathological Special Report", it is stated: "An extensive generalized arteriosclerosis involving all vessels examined, with marked reduction in visible lumens." Gould's Medical Dictionary defines "lumens" as "cavity of blood vessel".

Noteworthy also is the fact that the nurses' records contained in the hospital records revealed that the decedent Maria

Lamp, suffered excruciating pain throughout her entire stay in the hospital and that she received narcotics frequently to relieve pain and suffering. The hospital charts indicate that the patient cried out, moaned and complained of pain. The record of July 8, 1955, 12 a. m., shows the following: "Patient seems confused; at times pecks at covers; pain in legs severe".

[8] When the foregoing is added to the testimony of other witnesses for respondents, as narrated in the factual background hereinbefore set forth, we are satisfied that under applicable rules, the finding of the trial court as to mental incapacity cannot be strictured as being without substantial evidence in the record to support it, and as not sufficient to overcome any existing presumption of mental capacity.

[9, 10] Appellants next insist that "there is not one shred of evidence herein attesting to the existence of a confidential relationship between the decedent and appellants". They concede there was "friendship, affection and a close relationship", and that "it might be inferred that the deceased reposed confidence in the integrity of (appellant) Mrs. Rich", but that all this amounted to was "the behavior of a friend who serves another at his request * * *" (Hausfelder v. Security-First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles, 77 Cal.App.2d 478, 483, 176 P.2d 84). It would unduly prolong this already lengthy opinion to here state the evidence as to the relationship existing between decedent and appellants. We have already done so. Suffice it to say that the evidence clearly establishes that decedent reposed trust and confidence in the integrity and fidelity of both appellants. These are the elements of a confidential or fiduciary relationship, which in law are synonymous (In re Estate of Cover, 188 Cal. 133, 143, 204 P. 583).

[11-14] Appellants next challenge the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding of undue influence on their part to procure decedent Maria Lamp to execute the deed of July 11, 1955, without the payment of any consideration therefor. There can be no doubt that appellants actively participated in the transaction that resulted in the signing of the deed of July 11, 1955, by decedent and equally unassailable is the statement that by such transaction appellants obtained a gift or advantage which enriched them. Since appellants occupied a confidential relationship toward decedent, the principle applicable to the issues of undue influence is thus stated in Khoury v. Barham, 85 Cal.App.2d 202, 212, 192 P.2d 823, 828:

"The rule is inflexible that no one who holds a confidential relation toward another shall take advantage of that relation in favor of himself, or deal with the other person upon terms of his own making; that in every such transaction between persons standing in that relation, the law will presume that he who held the influence over the other exercised it unduly to his own advantage."

And in Herbert v. Lankershim, 9 Cal.2d 409, 426, 71 P.2d 220, 228, our Supreme Court stated:

"A concise statement of the rule where the relations between the parties were intimate and highly confidential, as here, and where the donor had no independent advice, and where the conveyance was without valuable consideration, or, it may be parenthetically added, in cases where the consideration is grossly inadequate, is announced as follows in Mead v. Mead, 41 Cal. App. 280, 182 P. 761, 763: 'Under such circumstances the decisions hold uniformly that the transaction resulting in benefit to the trustee should be viewed with "the most scrutinizing jealousy," and that the presumption of fraud attaches and must be overcome by evidence that the deed is what it purports to be.'"

Where, as here, appellants base their claim upon a deed obtained from one with whom they stood in a relation of trust and confidence, the usual rule that the burden of proof rests upon the person who asserts fraud is relaxed to the extent that the beneficiary of a transaction under such circumstances must bear the burden of proving that he exhibited that degree of good faith sufficient to remove all doubt respecting the fairness of the transaction (Herbert v. Lankershim, supra, 9 Cal.2d at page 426, 71 P.2d at page 228).

As to the court's finding that decedent had no independent advice with regard to the execution of the deed of July 11, 1955, appellants urge that a deed may not be set aside because of the absence of independent advice alone. Undoubtedly this is true, but the lack of independent advice assumes considerable importance unless it clearly appears that the deed was made freely, voluntarily, and with full understanding of all the facts and the effect of the document (Wilbur v. Wilbur, 197 Cal. 1, 16, 239 P. 332; Mead v. Smith, 106 Cal.App. 2d 1, 5, 234 P.2d 705). In view of the evidentiary features of the case at bar, the rule would seem to be, as stated in Herbert v. Lankershim, supra, 9 Cal.2d at page 426, 71 P.2d at page 228: " * * * one who holds such confidential relation will be presumed to have taken undue advantage of the trusting friend, unless it shall appear that such person had independent advice and acted not only of his own volition but with full comprehension of the results of his action." (Emphasis added.) In the case now engaging our attention there is no evidence that decedent had the benefit of any independent advice, and under the facts and circumstances here present the court was justified in taking the absence of such advice into consideration in formulating its decision.

[15,16] Appellants rest a claim of prejudicial error upon the action of the trial court in permitting respondents over objection, to file an amended complaint to conform to proof after the trial had been concluded. Conceding that the amended complaint raised issues not framed by the original pleadings, it did plead issues raised by the evidence and which were treated as such during the trial. The granting or denial of permission to file amendments to pleadings to conform to proof rests largely in the discretion of the trial court. The reason therefor is obvious and is intended to insure, as far as possible, that substantial justice is done by a liberal construction of the rule. When the amended complaint filed herein is compared with the evidence adduced at the trial, we are satisfied that there was no abuse of discretion on the part of the court in permitting it to be filed (39 Cal.Jur.2d, par. 258; Baker v. Van Dolzer, 142 Cal. App.2d 428, 437, 298 P.2d 86; Farnsworth v. Hunter, 11 Cal.2d 27, 31, 77 P.2d 840; Carman v. Athearn, 77 Cal.App.2d 585, 594, 175 P.2d 926).

[17] Appellants' claim that they were given no opportunity to plead or to demur is answered by the statement that since the issues tendered by the amended pleading to conform to the proof, have already been tried they are deemed denied without pleading (Valencia v. Shell Oil Co., 23 Cal.2d 840, 848, 147 P.2d 558).

[18] Appellants' contention that they were denied a fair and impartial trial, because they were denied an opportunity to orally argue the case at the conclusion of the trial is, in view of the record, unavailing. The reporter's transcript reveals that it was not appellants' counsel who sought to argue, but one of counsel for respondents who stated, "I want to argue just a little bit, if the court please", to which the trial judge replied, "No, we are not going to argue this. You are going to have to submit it. I have to submit this case gentlemen. I have a juvenile matter coming in at 1:30 and another case coming in at 1:45. You may object to the idea of submitting this on written briefs but it has taken some time to try this and it is a little bit complicated in some of its phases and I like that better. It gives me time to read the briefs in between conferences, and that is the only reason I wanted it." After further colloquy between court and counsel, the former said: "I want these briefs to cover your contentions with reference to what is shown and argue the evidence that applies to those points in whatever you claim, or everything that you claim, in full, in other words." We entertain no doubt that when the court declined to hear oral argument but granted counsel the privilege of filing briefs, there was no abuse of discretion (Golden Gate Lumber Co. v. Sahrbacher, 105 Cal. 114, 118, 38 P. 635). See also Dam v. Bond, 80 Cal.App. 342, 347, 251 P. 818. In a cause tried before the court, sitting without a jury, no absolute right to argument exists was the holding in Larson v. Blue & White Cab Co., 24 Cal.App.2d 576, 578, 75 P.2d 612.

[19] On their motion for a new trial, appellants filed an affidavit of their attorney wherein he reiterated the claim that appellants were denied a fair trial because the court refused to permit oral argument, a contention we have herein resolved against them. In the affidavit, complaint is also made that since appellants' closing brief in the trial court was filed February 28, 1957, and the court rendered its decision on March 25, 1957, appellants were denied a fair trial, "* * *" in that said Trial Court could not do justice in determining a cause involving three and one-half days' testimony, and some sixteen witnesses having appeared and testified, without oral argument. It would be highly speculative to assume that the Trial Court could recall all of the evidence adduced during the trial, and numerous individual witnesses called and their manner of testifying, and to do complete justice in deciding the said within cause, more than two months after the conclusion of the adducement of said testimony." We find no merit in this contention. The trial judge had the benefit not only of the notes made by him during the trial but of the briefs filed by counsel, wherein it must be assumed, in view of the request of the trial court that the briefs, "cover your contentions with reference to what is shown and argue the evidence that applies to those points * * *" in full, in other words", that the briefs contained an epitome of the evidence and the law applicable thereto. Certainly, it cannot justly be said that having the case under submission for less than a month would indicate such a lapse of time as would render it probable that the particular case and the evidence and issues therein could not have remained within the memory of the court, aided as it was by trial notes and briefs.

[20] Counsel's affidavit on the motion for a new trial also sets forth that subsequent to the trial affiant discovered the original promissory note that was referred to in the trial and a copy of which we have herein held was properly admitted into evidence. It is contended that the original of said note tends "to strengthen the defendants' (appellants') cause herein, and to show as an instrument in writing, consideration for those certain monies advanced to defendants by the deceased, Maria Lamp, during the month of April, 1950, all to the further proof that the grant deed of the defendants herein to said deceased, bearing date of May 1, 1950, was in truth and fact given as security for the repayment of said monies." We fail to perceive wherein the original note can be regarded as of evidentiary value except insofar as it tends to corroborate the testimony given at the trial by appellant Frank E. Rich. Such testimony does not in any way affect the testimony concerning the ultimate issue involved in this litigation, viz., the mental competency of decedent Maria Lamp, when she signed the grant deed dated July 11, 1955.

We have concluded that there is substantial evidence in the record to support the findings, the latter support the judgment, and no prejudicial errors appear in the rulings of the court.

The attempted appeal from the order denying a new trial is dismissed. The judgment is affirmed.

Sept. 19, 1958.

Action arising out of intersection automobile collision which occurred when defendant motorist attempted to make a left turn in front of automobile driven by one of plaintiffs. From a judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Fred Miller, J., in favor of defendant, the plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that error in submitting issue of contributory negligence as to passenger in automobile operated by plaintiff motorist was prejudicial.

Judgment reversed as to such passenger and affirmed as to other plaintiffs.

Opinions, 318 P.2d 502 and 319 P.2d 643, vacated.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

[1] Plaintiffs have appealed from a judgment for defendants, contending that the court erred in instructing the jury and in refusing to consider affidavits of jurors offered in support of a motion for new trial to prove misconduct of the jury.

The plaintiffs, Mrs. Kollert, Mrs. Abrahamson, and four children, were riding in a car which Mrs. Kollert was driving when it collided with one operated by defendant Cundiff who was then acting in the course of his employment by defendant the Termo Company. Mrs. Abrahamson, who is Mrs. Kollert's mother, was riding in the front seat with her. Four children, Steven and Michael Kollert and Mary and Marlene Cleveland, were riding in the back seat of the car.

The accident occurred in Long Beach at the intersection of Carson Avenue and Paramount Boulevard, where traffic is controlled by electrically operated signals. Mrs. Kollert was driving west on Carson in the lane nearest the center line, and, as she approached the intersection, there was no car in front of her in that lane. She testified that the signal light on Carson turned from red to green when she was half a block from the intersection, that she was driving about 20 miles an hour and that she did not see defendant's car until the collision occurred. A man who had been driving about 300 feet behind Mrs. Kollert in the lane to her right testified that the light was green when she entered the intersection and that it was still green when the accident happened.

Cundiff was driving east on Carson, intending to make a left turn north into Paramount. He testified that the light was green as he came to the intersection and that he stopped even with the curb. He signaled for a left turn, moved into the intersection and waited for several westbound cars to pass. As the light changed to amber, he drove across the double line and saw the car driven by Mrs. Kollert, which was then approximately 50 feet east of the intersection, traveling at about 35 miles per hour. The cars came together in the westbound lane nearest the center line, the right front part of Mrs. Kollert's car colliding with the right front wheel of Cundiff's car.

A witness who was driving the third car behind Cundiff and in the same lane testified that traffic at the intersection had stopped and that as the cars in the lane to the right began to move, Cundiff, starting out very fast, turned left into the intersection. The witness said that he noticed Mrs. Kollert's car coming toward Cundiff "at a good rate of speed," as soon as Cundiff started to move.

There was substantial evidence to support the implied finding of the jury either that Cundiff was not negligent or that Mrs. Kollert was guilty of contributory negligence. However, in considering whether errors, if any, had a prejudicial effect, it should be noted that, on both of these issues, the evidence would also have warranted a finding against defendants.<sup>1</sup>

[2] The court gave instructions which submitted the issue of contributory negligence to the jury not only as to Mrs. Kollert but also as to Mrs. Abrahamson. Defendants did not plead that Mrs. Abrahamson was guilty of contributory negligence, and they concede that the instructions were erroneous as to her but take the position that the error was not prejudicial.

Defendants point out that the jury found against the four children in the car, although it was instructed that the defense of contributory negligence did not apply to them, and they argue that the jury must have based its verdict for Cundiff on a conclusion that he was not negligent. The findings against the children could be explained upon the theory that they had not proved any substantial injuries caused by the accident. With respect to three of the children it is clear that the jury was not required to find under the evidence that they had been injured, and it may be noted that defendants moved for a directed verdict as to them on this ground. However, defendants assert that it was conclusively established that the other minor plaintiff had received a fractured finger as a result of the accident. We do not agree that this is so. Although a doctor testified that a week after the accident he found a slight fracture, defendants presented evidence that X-rays taken at a hospital immediately after the accident showed no fracture, and, on cross-examination by defendants, the doctor acknowledged that the fracture might have been sustained at some time after the accident. Thus the jury may have concluded that the minor plaintiffs received no substantial injuries and may have found against them on that ground.

1. At the time of the accident, July 1955, section 551 of the Vehicle Code provided:

"(a) The driver of a vehicle within an intersection intending to turn to the left shall yield the right of way to any vehicle approaching from the opposite direction which is within the intersection or so close thereto as to constitute an immediate hazard.

"(b) Said driver turning left having so yielded and having given a signal when and as required by this code may make such left turn and the drivers of all other vehicles approaching the intersection from said opposite direction shall yield the right of way to the driver making the left turn."

As we have seen, the evidence would support a finding that both Cundiff and Mrs. Kollert were negligent. The jury may have believed that Mrs. Abrahamson was chargeable with Mrs. Kollert's negligence or that she in some degree failed to exercise due care for her own safety, and the erroneous instructions, when considered with the evidence, may have improperly caused the jury to go beyond the issues pleaded and return the verdict against Mrs. Abrahamson on the ground of contributory negligence. In these circumstances we are of the view that the erroneous instructions require that the judgment against Mrs. Abrahamson be reversed.

When the jurors were polled, they stood nine to three in favor of defendants. In support of the motion for a new trial, affidavits of the three dissenting jurors and of one majority juror were offered. The affidavits may be summarized as follows: The jury, taking four polls, considered the case of Mrs. Kollert only, and by a poll of nine to three found that both drivers were negligent and that Mrs. Kollert should be denied recovery. The bailiff was summoned for the purpose of securing additional instructions as to the remaining plaintiffs. He asked how the deliberations stood, and the foreman answered that the vote was nine to three. The bailiff then left, returned, and advised that there would be no need for further instructions since a verdict had been reached. Over the protest of some jurors the foreman completed the verdicts as to the remaining five plaintiffs without any further deliberation. Two of the affidavits stated that the foreman told the jurors that they would have to abide by the verdicts completed by him or they would never again be allowed to act as jurors. According to three affidavits, the foreman, during a night recess, had investigated the traffic lights at the intersection where the accident occurred, and his report on the periods of the signals was considered by the jury.

It is the general rule in California that affidavits of jurors may not be used to impeach a verdict. See People v. Sutic, 41 Cal.2d 483, 495, 261 P.2d 241 [coercion of a juror by the others to subscribe to a verdict]; People v. Evans, 39 Cal.2d 242, 250, 246 P.2d 636 [evidence received out of court]; People v. Gidney, 10 Cal.2d 138, 146, 147, 73 P.2d 1186 [bailiff discussed case and probable sentence with jurors]; People v. Azoff, 105 Cal. 632, 39 P. 59 [evidence received out of court]; People v. Zelter, 135 Cal.App.2d 226, 235-236, 287 P.2d 183 [juror "coerced" and "intimidated" by other jurors]; Maffeo v. Holmes, 47 Cal.App.2d 292, 295, 117 P.2d 948 [independent investigation by some jurors]; People v. Giminiani, 45 Cal.App.2d 535, 539, 114 P.2d 392 [jury informed by bailiff that a defendant had a bad reputation with the police].

[3] An exception to the general rule is made by statute where "any one or more of the jurors have been induced to assent to any general or special verdict * * * by a resort to the determination of chance.

* * * Code Civ.Proc. § 657, subd. 2.<sup>2</sup> Another exception, recognized by judicial decision, is that affidavits of jurors may be used to set aside a verdict where the bias or disqualification of a juror was concealed by false answers on voir dire. E. g., Williams v. Bridges, 140 Cal.App. 537, 35 P.2d 407.

[4] Subdivision 1 of section 657, which provides that a verdict may be vacated for "irregularity in the proceedings," does not refer to jurors' affidavits and may not be regarded as permitting the use of such affidavits in situations where they would not otherwise be proper. Cf. People v. Evans, 39 Cal.2d 242, 250, 246 P.2d 636 [rejecting a similar argument made with respect to subdivision 2 of section 1181 of the Penal Code]. The statements to the contrary in Shipley v. Permanente Hospital, 127 Cal. App.2d 417, 424, 274 P.2d 53, 48 A.L.R.2d 964, are disapproved.

A few jurisdictions permit a wider use of a juror's affidavit to impeach a verdict than has been allowed in California (see Wright v. The Illinois and Mississippi Telegraph Co., 20 Iowa 195, 210-212; Mattox v. United States, 146 U.S. 140, 148-150, 13 S.Ct. 50, 36 L.Ed. 917), and plaintiffs urge us to relax the rule in this state. The problem involves the balancing of two conflicting policies. It is, of course, necessary to prevent instability of verdicts, fraud, and harassment of jurors, and, on the other hand, it is desirable to give the losing party relief from wrongful conduct by the jury. The court in McDonald v. Pless, 238 U.S. 264, 267-269, 35 S.Ct. 783, 785, 59 L.Ed. 1300, after discussing these policies and stating that the wrong to the individual was the lesser of two evils, concluded that as a general rule the affidavits should be excluded but that there might be instances where the rule could not be applied without "violating the plainest principles of justice."

[5] In California, as we have seen, only two exceptions have been recognized, one by statute and one by judicial decision. The present case does not come within either of them, and, whether or not additional exceptions may be justified under some circumstances, we are of the view that the allegations of the affidavits before us, even if taken as true, do not warrant a departure from the general rule. It is doubtful whether the conduct of the bailiff and the foreman's action at the time of completing the verdicts would have caused persons of ordinary intelligence to acquiesce in verdicts which did not represent their conclusions, and when the jurors were polled in open court all of them except the three affiants who voted for plaintiff affirmed each of the verdicts as written. With respect to the foreman's visit to the scene of the accident and his report to the jury it is difficult to see how, in the light of the evidence relating to the collision, the duration of the traffic signals could have had a significant bearing on the outcome of the case.

The judgment is reversed as to Mrs. Abrahamson and affirmed as to the other plaintiffs.

SHENK, TRAYNOR, SCHAUER, SPENCE and McCOMB, JJ., concur.

2. Section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides in part:

"The verdict may be vacated and any other decision may be modified or vacated, in whole or in part, and a new or further trial granted on all or part of the issues, on the application of the party aggrieved, for any of the following causes, materially affecting the substantial rights of such party:

"1. Irregularity in the proceedings of the court, jury or adverse party, or any order of the court or abuse of discretion by which either party was prevented from having a fair trial;

"2. Misconduct of the jury; and whenever any one or more of the jurors have been induced to assent to any general or special verdict, or to a finding on any question submitted to them by the court, by a resort to the determination of chance, such misconduct may be proved by the affidavit of any one of the jurors;

CARTER, Justice (concurring and dissenting).

I agree with the reasons given by the majority for reversing the judgment against Mrs. Abrahamson, but I can no longer assent to the dogma, so long parroted, that a juror's affidavit cannot be used to impeach his verdict.

The common formula that "a juror's testimony or affidavit is not receivable to impeach his own verdict is not correct as a statement of existing law, nor is it maintainable on any principle in this unqualified form." "It is a mere shibboleth and has no intrinsic signification whatever." 8 Wigmore on Evidence, Privileged Communications, § 2345, p. 663. Notwithstanding Wigmore's acute analysis disapproving the form in which the rule exists and the automatic application of it by the courts (8 Wigmore on Evidence, Privileged Communications, §§ 2345-2356), the practice in both aspects, unfortunately, remains unchanged. This persistence may, perhaps, be attributed to the one great difficulty with a rule that may be stated clearly and simply. When such a rule is completed and rounded, the corners smoothed and the content cohesive and coherent, it is likely to become a thing in itself, a work of art. It is then like a finely engineered bridge or a completed painting. One hates to disturb it. Even if knowledge and experience should demonstrate its obsolescence, one hates to tear it down because it has existed so long in its original design. I resist any such temptation and approach to the law.

The rule that a juror may not impeach his verdict is founded on three independent and general principles: (1) Privileged communications; (2) parol evidence rule; and (3) self-stultifying testimony. 8 Wigmore on Evidence, Privileged Communications, § 2345.

The application of the principle of privileged communications between jurors is to insure the attainment of the jurors' constitutional purposes. It prohibits the disclosure of communications with a fellow juror upon the witness stand without the latter's consent. However, this principle is generally not significant primarily because what is said between jurors is seldom relevant at a new trial. 8 Wigmore on Evidence, Privileged Communications, § 2346. Moreover, what is disclosed in the affidavit herein is not in the nature of a communication.

As for the doctrine of self-stultifying testimony, this principle forbids a juror from showing that a juror's behavior was not in the prescribed form which is necessary before a juror's actions may be valid. 8 Wigmore on Evidence, Privileged Communications, § 2345. It is based on the principle "nemo turpitudinem suam allegans audietur" (a witness shall not be heard to allege his own turpitude). 8 Wigmore on Evidence, Privileged Communications, § 2345. Wigmore convincingly establishes that this principle no longer exists in our law and should not be resurrected for present purposes. 8 Wigmore on Evidence, Privileged Communications, §§ 2352-2353.

Therefore, the only principle on which we may validly reject the affidavits of the jurors herein is by the application of the parol evidence rule. This principle applies to the verdict of a jury like a will or a contract or a judgment.

Applying this principle it is evident that a juror's motives, beliefs, misunderstandings, intentions, and the like are immaterial. The verdict is the sole embodiment of the juror's acts. "The policy which requires this is the same which forbids a consideration of the negotiations of parties to a contract leading up to the final terms as deliberately embodied in the deed, namely, the loss of all certainty in the verdict, the impracticability of seeking for definiteness in the preliminary views, the risk of misrepresentation after disclosure of the verdict, and the impossibility of expecting any end to trials if the grounds for the verdict were allowed to effect its overthrow." 8 Wigmore on Evidence, Privileged Communications, § 2349, p. 668. This rule and policy is followed in California. Amsby v.

Dickhouse, 4 Cal. 102, 103; People v. Wyman, 15 Cal. 70, 75; People v. Hughes, 29 Cal. 257, 258, 263; see People v. Reid, 195 Cal. 249, 232 P. 457, 36 A.L.R. 1435. Accordingly the statements by the jurors in their affidavits that the foreman told them that they would have to abide by the verdicts completed by him or they would never again be allowed to act as jurors are immaterial and may properly be excluded.

However, the policy of the parol evidence rule prohibiting the disclosure of a juror's motives, beliefs, misunderstandings, et cetera, does not compel a similar conclusion with respect to disclosure of irregularities and misconduct of jurors during their deliberations which constitute deviations from those certain formalities that are regarded as desirable policy-wise in the conduct of jury deliberations. The law of verdicts "must prescribe requisite formalities of conduct for the jurors, and define those informalities and irregularities which 'per se' invalidate the verdict. What those shall be is thus elsewhere in the law predetermined. The principle of the Parol Evidence rule then enters and declares that the lack of such formalities, for this as for every other legal act (whatever the respective required formality may be), is always proper to establish as a ground for declaring the act void. Whatever misconduct of the jury, therefore, is an irregularity fatal to the verdict may always be proved." 8 Wigmore on Evidence, Privileged Communications, § 2352, p. 683.

Admittedly the distinction between motive and irregularity may sometimes be shadowy and difficult to perceive, but this offers no excuse for not attempting to remove the cloud of uncertainty. Moreover, it is readily apparent that a court by merely pronouncing the "shibboleth that a juror cannot impeach his verdict can never appreciate the vital distinction between impeaching" it by motive and impeaching it by irregular conduct. 8 Wigmore on Evidence, Privileged Communications, § 2349.

If Wigmore is correct in his deductions that the prohibition against impeaching a jury verdict is founded on the policy behind privileged communications and the parol evidence rule, then this court should be ready to refer its rule to those ends, stating why those ends are desirable, what is given up to attain them, and whether they are worth the price. A reading of the majority opinion leaves one in doubt as to what end is being subserved. This doubt is permitted to grow because of the court's interpretation of the phrase "irregularity in the proceedings," which appears in subdivision 1 of section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The majority opinion declares that this phrase "does not refer to jurors' affidavits and may not be regarded as permitting the use of such affidavits in situations where they would not otherwise be proper."

In view of the principles heretofore stated the holding of the majority avoids the very question the court should decide, i. e., do the affidavits allege irregularity and misconduct which constitute deviations from those formalities that are regarded as desirable in jury deliberations? This is a policy question that has been left to the courts to work out case by case. See, Code Civ.Proc. § 657(1). After due consideration this court might well conclude that the allegations in the affidavits do not state a deviation from the desired formalities, but such a conclusion should only be reached after careful thought.

The court should reconsider the matter clearly setting forth its reasons. This can only be accomplished by rejecting the automatic formula that a juror's testimony or affidavit is not receivable to impeach his own verdict.

I think the affidavits in the instant case are sufficient to establish misconduct of a character justifying the impeachment of the verdict and that a new trial should be granted as to all parties and all issues.

Matter of the ESTATE of Elsie M.
ALLIE, Deceased.

Myrtle MARQUARDT and Stella Kranz, Appellants,
v.

Mitchell S. CASH, Respondent.
S. F. 19782.

Sept. 26, 1958.

Estate proceeding. The Superior Court, San Mateo County, Murray Draper, J., entered a decree of distribution adverse to surviving sisters of previously deceased husband of widow who died intestate, and they appealed. The Supreme Court, Schauer, J., held that where premiums on a National Service Life Insurance policy were paid during marriage of the insured and intestate, and there was no evidence that the premium payments were made from funds other than community property of the parties, insurance proceeds would be deemed to have had their origin or source in community property solely for the purpose of intestate succession under the laws of California, and therefore, under applicable section of the probate code, proceeds of such policy were sharable equally by the relatives of insured spouse and those of intestate into whose estate they were paid.

Decree reversed and cause remanded with directions.

1. Husband and Wife ⇨274(1)

Underlying principle of statutes dealing with distribution of community and other property acquired from predeceased spouse where there is no surviving spouse or issue, and dealing with distribution of former separate property of a previously deceased spouse where there is no surviving spouse or issue, is that the origin or source of acquisition of the property should and does control its intestate distribution. West's Ann.Prob.Code, §§ 228, 229.

Where premiums on a life policy issued on the life of a spouse were paid with community funds, the policy was community property, and the policy proceeds retained their community character for purposes of intestate succession, notwithstanding the fact that such proceeds were paid only after dissolution of the community by death.

3. Armed Services ⇨77(1)

Under a National Service Life Insurance policy, character of funds from which premiums are paid cannot affect the character of the rights of the insured with respect to the benefits of the policy.

4. Husband and Wife ⇨274(1)

Where premiums on a National Service Life Insurance policy were paid during marriage of the insured and intestate, and there was no evidence that the premium payments were made from funds other than community property of the parties, insurance proceeds would be deemed to have had their origin or source in community property solely for the purpose of intestate succession under the laws of California, and therefore, under applicable section of the Probate Code, proceeds of such policy were sharable equally by the relatives of insured spouse, and those of intestate into whose estate they were paid. West's Ann. Prob.Code, § 228.

Emmet B. Hayes, San Francisco, for appellant.

Cooper, White & Cooper, Sheldon G. Cooper and John E. Schaeffer, San Francisco, for respondent.

SCHAUER, Justice.

From a decree establishing heirship with respect to certain property of the estate of an intestate deceased widow and determining that her surviving brother and sole heir at law is entitled to distribution of all of such property, the surviving sisters of the previously deceased husband of the widow appeal. The issue to be decided is whether the origin of such property, as between the widow and her husband, should be deemed to be community or separate, if either, and, therefore, which of sections 225, 228 and 229 of the Probate Code controls the intestate succession thereto. For the reasons hereinafter articulated we conclude that the property should be treated as community for the purposes of intestate succession, that it should therefore go one-half to the relatives of the decedent and one-half to those of the predeceased husband, and that the decree must be reversed.

The appeal is presented on a settled statement in lieu of clerk's and reporter's transcripts. (Rule 7(b), Rules on Appeal.) From such statement it appears that in March, 1956, Joseph Allie died intestate and without issue. The beneficiary under his National Service Life Insurance policy was his widow Elsie, decedent herein. The following month Elsie died intestate and without issue. The proceeds of the policy were paid into her estate, and constitute the property here in controversy. Elsie's sole heir at law is her brother, respondent herein. The sole surviving heirs at law of Joseph are appellants, his sisters.

Section 225 of the Probate Code (see also section 220) provides that the separate property of a person who dies intestate, leaving neither issue nor spouse, goes to his parent or parents if living and if not to his brothers and sisters and to the descendants of deceased brothers and sisters.

Section 228 provides that "If the decedent leaves neither spouse nor issue, and the estate * * * was community property of the decedent and a previously deceased spouse, and belonged or went to the decedent by virtue of its community character on the death of such spouse, or came to the decedent from said spouse by gift, descent, devise or bequest * * *, such property goes in equal shares to the children of the deceased spouse and their descendants * * *, and if none, then one-half of such community property goes to the parents of the decedent in equal shares, or * * * to the survivor, or if both are dead in equal shares to the brothers and sisters of the decedent * * *, and the other half goes to the parents of the deceased spouse in equal shares, or * * * to the survivor, or if both are dead, in equal shares to the brothers and sisters of said deceased spouse * * *."

Section 229 provides that "If the decedent leaves neither spouse nor issue, and the estate or any portion thereof was separate property of a previously deceased spouse, and came to the decedent from such spouse by gift, descent, devise or bequest * * * such property goes" to the heirs at law of the previously deceased spouse.

The settled statement declares that decedent and Joseph were married in 1926, and that "There is no evidence other than that the assets of the estate were acquired during the marriage by the earnings of the parties. The premiums on the insurance policies<sup>1</sup> were paid during the marriage. There is no evidence that the payments thereon were made from funds other than community property of the parties."

The trial court, in reliance upon Wissner v. Wissner (1950), 338 U.S. 655, 658-661, 70 S.Ct. 398, 94 L.Ed. 424, declared that "the community character" of a National Service Life Insurance policy on the life of the husband "cannot affect the distribution of its proceeds," and that therefore section 228, which treats of intestate succession to "community property of the decedent and a previously deceased spouse," cannot apply. The court further concluded that the policy proceeds should be distributed entirely to the widow's heir at law, respondent herein, seemingly upon the theory that they constituted separate property of the widow rather than originating in either community property or the predeceased husband's separate property. This appeal by the sisters of the predeceased husband followed.

[1] In resolving the issue it must be borne in mind that sections 228 and 229 of the Probate Code refer to the status of property as being either community or separate as of a time when both spouses were living; i. e., prior to the death of the "previously deceased spouse" mentioned in the two sections. (See In re Estate of Reizian (1951), 36 Cal.2d 746, 749-750 [1, 2], 227 P.2d 249; In re Estate of Adams (1955), 132 Cal.App.2d 190, 203 [8], 282 P.2d 190.) Further, the rule has been declared that the underlying principle of sections 228 and 229 is that the origin or source of acquisition of the property should and does control its distribution. (In re Estate of Reizian (1951), supra; In re Estate of Abdale (1946), 28 Cal.2d 587, 590-592, 170 P.2d 918; In re Estate of Rattray (1939), 13 Cal.2d 702, 713-714, 91 P.2d 1042.) Thus, in the Abdale case it was held that separate real property of the husband which he had transferred to himself and his wife as joint tenants, and of which he again became sole owner upon her death, should be distributed under section 225 of the Probate Code as being, and having originated wholly from, separate property of the husband, rather than one-half thereof being distributed under section 229 as the separate property of a predeceased spouse (i. e., the wife). (See also Sears v. Rule (1945), 27 Cal.2d 131, 141-143, 163 P.2d 443.) Consequently the question to be determined here is whether for the purposes of administering the pertinent succession statute the origin of the property (which actually came from the United States government) may and should be treated as (1) community, (2) separate property of the "previously deceased spouse" (here, the husband on whose life the insurance policy was issued), or (3) separate property of the surviving spouse (here, the decedent wife).

1. Only the National Service Life Insurance policy is involved on this appeal.

[2, 3] The general rule is that where premiums on a life insurance policy issued on the life of one of the spouses were paid with community funds, the policy is community property (Grimm v. Grimm (1945), 26 Cal.2d 173, 175, 157 P.2d 841, and cases there cited), and the policy proceeds retain their community character for purposes of intestate succession, notwithstanding the fact that such proceeds are paid only after dissolution of the community by death. (In re Estate of Castagnola (1924), 68 Cal.App. 732, 737 [5], 230 P. 188.) However, a National Service Life Insurance policy is issued pursuant to federal law and the principal consideration for it is the relationship between the policyholder and the government. Premiums, when paid at all, are at a rate far less than the rates normally charged by privately owned insurance companies, and the character of the funds from which premiums are paid cannot affect the character of the rights of the insured with respect to the benefits of the policy. In Wissner v. Wissner (1950), supra, 338 U.S. 655, 70 S.Ct. 398, the United States Supreme Court dealt with a case in which the policyholder had named his mother as beneficiary. Such premiums as accrued were assumed to have been paid with community funds, and upon the insured's death his widow sought to recover one-half of the proceeds of the policy. The California courts had held (Wissner v. Wissner (1949), 89 Cal.App.2d 759, 764-770[2], 201 P.2d 837; hearing by Supreme Court denied by a divided court) that inasmuch as premiums paid by the insured "were paid from community funds; and * * * plaintiff [wife] had a vested interest in one-half of such community property" (89 Cal.App.2d at page 764, 201 P.2d at page 841), the "federal government had no power to provide, as it is contended it did in section 454a [of the World War Veterans' Relief Act, 38 U.S.C.A.] that payments made to a beneficiary of a national service life insurance policy shall be exempt from the claims of the widow of the deceased insured to the right vested in her under the laws of this state to one-half of such payments after their receipt by the beneficiary" (89 Cal.App.2d at page 767, 201 P.2d at page 843), and that any such provision would constitute the taking of private property without due process of law, in violation of the Fifth Amendment of the United States Constitution. Judgment awarding the widow one-half the proceeds of the policy, which she had sued to recover from the beneficiary, was affirmed by the California court.

In reversing the California courts the Supreme Court of the United States pointed out that under that court's view of the case it was "unnecessary to decide whether California is entitled to call army pay community property" (note 2, at page 657 of 338 U.S., at page 399 of 70 S.Ct.); that the widow made no claim for the premiums paid on the policy but sought the proceeds of the insurance; that the National Service Life Insurance Act provides, in section 802(g) of 38 U.S.C., that the insured under such a policy "shall have the right to designate the beneficiary or beneficiaries * * * [within a designated class], and shall * * * at all times have the right to change the beneficiary * * *." The court further declares that (at pages 658-659 of 338 U.S., at pages 399-400 of 70 S.Ct.) "Pursuant to the congressional command, the Government contracted to pay the insurance to the insured's choice," and that to award a share of the proceeds to the widow would frustrate "the deliberate purpose of Congress." Moreover, such an award would violate the provision of section 454a of 38 U.S.C. that payments to the named beneficiary "shall be exempt from the claims of creditors, and shall not be liable to attachment, levy, or seizure by or under any legal or equitable process whatever, either before or after receipt by the beneficiary * * *." Also, commented the court (at pages 660-661 of 338 U.S., at pages 400-401 of 70 S.Ct.), "Congress in its desire to afford as much material protection as possible to its fighting force could wisely provide a plan of insurance coverage. Possession of government insurance, payable to the relative of his choice, might well directly enhance the morale of the serviceman. The exemption provision is his guarantee of the * * * full performance of the contract to the exclusion of conflicting claims. The end is a legitimate one within the congressional powers over national defense, and the means are adapted to the chosen end * * *. And since the statute which made the insurance proceeds possible was explicit in announcing that the insured shall have the right to designate the recipient of the insurance, and that 'No person shall have a vested right' to those proceeds, 38 U.S.C. § 802(i), appellee could not, in law, contemplate their capture. The federal statute establishes the fund in issue, and forestalls the existence of any 'vested' right in the proceeds of federal insurance. Hence no constitutional question is presented. However 'vested' her right to the proceeds of nongovernmental insurance under California law, that rule cannot apply to this insurance."

It is thus clear that the insured is fully protected and assured by federal law that the proceeds of his National Service Life Insurance policy (the fund which the "federal statute establishes") will be paid to the beneficiary of his choice and that the beneficiary is likewise protected in receiving and retaining such proceeds free from claims based either upon community property laws or principles or upon the origin or source of funds used to pay the policy premiums. We must then determine what law governs succession to the fund having the unique source here established.

In the first place we note that none of the parties involved in the present litigation seek to disturb, and the issues presented will not and do not involve, the full and complete protection of insured and beneficiary so established by the federal Act and confirmed by the federal court in the Wissner decision. The wishes expressed by the insured have already been fully carried out by payment of the policy proceeds into the estate of his beneficiary (his wife, decedent herein), and if his beneficiary had left a valid last will and testament expressing her own wishes as to further disposition of such proceeds, those wishes would likewise be respected. The issues now before us involve, rather, the distribution of the policy proceeds from the estate of the insured's chosen beneficiary under the laws of intestate succession of California, as expressed in its Probate Code, which, of course, are invoked only when the beneficiary of the National Service Life Insurance policy fails to make a valid testamentary disposition of the proceeds she has received.

[4] As already stated hereinabove, the settled statement on which this appeal is presented declares that premiums on the policy were paid during the marriage of the insured and decedent, and that there is no evidence other than that the assets of decedent's estate were acquired during the marriage by the earnings of the parties, and no evidence that the premium payments were made from funds other than community property of the parties. We are therefore persuaded that on this record we are not precluded from treating the insurance proceeds as having their origin or source in community property solely for the purpose of intestate succession under the laws of California (since, as mentioned hereinabove, the wishes of the insured have already been carried out, and the beneficiary has died without making her wishes known), and that to so treat them will violate neither the congressional purpose in enacting the National Service Life Insurance Act, the government contract entered into pursuant to that Act, the right and desire of the insured serviceman that the policy proceeds go to the beneficiary of his choice (where they have already gone), or the privilege of the beneficiary to receive the insurance proceeds free and exempt from the claims of others (as they have actually been received in this case). (Cf. Clark v. Allen (1947), 331 U.S. 503, 508, 67 S.Ct. 1431, 91 L.Ed. 1633.) Inasmuch as the beneficiary failed to herself dispose of the proceeds or to express her wishes concerning them, no right of insured or of beneficiary is defeated by applying to such proceeds the provisions of section 228 of the Probate Code, which sets forth the rules of intestate succession to property having its source in community property of a decedent and a previously deceased spouse. Rather, such treatment of the policy proceeds will subserve the legislative scheme, which this court has declared to be fair and reasonable, that where the intestate decedent leaves neither spouse nor issue and the predeceased spouse is also without issue, such property as was community in origin should be shared equally by the relatives of the predeceased spouse and those of the surviving spouse. (In re Estate of Rattray (1939), supra, 13 Cal.2d 713-715, 91 P.2d 1048-1049; see also In re Estate of Abdale (1946), supra, 28 Cal.2d 587, 590, 170 P.2d 918; In re Estate of Perkins (1943), 21 Cal.2d 561, 569-571, 134 P.2d 231.)

For the reasons above stated the decree in the present case, under which the property was distributed entirely to the surviving relative of the wife to the exclusion of relatives of the predeceased husband, is reversed, and the cause is remanded to the superior court with directions to enter a decree distributing the proceeds of the subject policy in accordance with the views hereinabove expressed.

Appellant.

Cr. 6199, 6210.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.

Sept. 19, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 15, 1958.

Defendants were found guilty of murder in the first degree and of the offense of arson and from judgments of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Maurice C. Sparling, J., the defendants appealed. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that the word "arson" in Penal Code section 189 includes the offenses of the types described in section 448a as well as those in section 447a; that the evidence sustained conviction; that instructions regarding murder perpetrated by means of torture were proper; that refusal to instruct regarding manslaughter and murder of the second degree was not error; that alleged error in the admission of conversation of an acquitted defendant containing accusatory statements did not require a reversal and that overruling objections to photograph as to the degree of burns on certain bodies was not prejudicial, and that remarks of the court did not require the reversal.

Judgments and orders affirmed.

1. Arson ☞5

The burning of a building in which a bar was located is within the statute, making it a crime for a person to willfully and maliciously burn any building not a parcel of a dwelling. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 447a, 448a.

2. Homicide ☞18(1)

The word "arson" within the statute providing that all murder committed in perpetration or attempt to perpetrate arson shall be murder in the first degree includes offenses of the type described in section 448a as well as those set forth in section 447a. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 189, 447a, 448a.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Arson".

3. Homicide ☞235

Evidence sustained conviction for murder committed in the perpetration of arson. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 189, 447a, 448a.

4. Homicide ☞15

Murder is perpetrated by means of torture when the intent is to cause cruel suffering for the purpose of revenge.

5. Homicide ☞290

In prosecution for murder committed in the perpetration of arson, evidence justified instructions regarding murder perpetrated by means of torture, where gasoline was thrown on the floor of a bar by defendants and ignited and the jury could conclude that the victims suffered pain from burning. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 189, 447a, 448a.

6. Homicide ☞234(1)

Evidence supported conviction of one defendant of murder committed both in the perpetration of arson and by means of torture as against defendant's claim that he was a mere onlooker and did not participate in the subsequent throwing of gasoline which set a bar afire and caused the death of persons therein. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 189, 447a, 448a.

7. Criminal Law ☞829(21)

In prosecution for murder committed in the perpetration of arson, refusing instructions regarding manslaughter and murder in the second degree because of alleged intoxication of defendants was not error where issues of intent and intoxication were submitted by the court's instructions. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 189, 447a, 448a.

8. Criminal Law ☞338(7), 1144(15), 1163(3)

Where statements of a defendant are admitted which are irrelevant in establishing a case against him and are extremely prejudicial and inadmissible hearsay as to a codefendant, they should be excluded from the evidence, but where the statements are relevant to the defendant, and jury is instructed that the evidence is admitted only as to him presumption obtains that the jury followed the instruction and that there was no prejudice to the codefendant.

9. Criminal Law ☞673(4)

In prosecution for murder, evidence relative to a conversation between codefendant and police officers which contained admissions against such defendant were properly admitted where the judge admonished the jury that the evidence was to be received solely as to such defendant and that it should not be used with reference to other defendants. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 189, 447a, 448a.

In prosecution for murder, conversations consisting of accusatory statements made by an acquitted defendant in response to questions by the police in the presence of codefendants were properly admitted as to the codefendant who made minor corrections with respect to such statements but said they were substantially true. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 189, 447a, 448a.

Evidence of accusatory statements made by a defendant is not admissible against a codefendant where there is a denial by the codefendant, but may be received if the truth of the accusation is admitted or if, under the circumstances calling for a denial, there was silence or equivocal or evasive answers indicating a consciousness of guilt or acquiescence in the truth of the statements.

In murder prosecution, accusatory statements made by an acquitted defendant in response to questions by the police in presence of codefendant were not admissible as against a codefendant who was present and denied everything but no harm resulted to such defendant where the court admonished the jury that such conversation was not to be considered in any way with regard to such codefendant. West's Ann. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

In murder prosecution, conversation consisting of accusatory statements made by an acquitted defendant in response to police questions in presence of codefendants was erroneously admitted as to a codefendant insofar as it related to a trip to a gasoline station to procure gasoline which was used to set the building on fire, the return to bar and incriminating remarks made by codefendant on the night of the fire, where codefendant claimed he was unable to remember the conversation because he was intoxicated, but the error did not require a reversal in view of evidence admitted by the court. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

14. Criminal Law ⇨438

In prosecution for murder committed during perpetration of arson, photographs showing bodies of persons killed in fire should be excluded, where the principal effect would be to inflame the jurors against the defendant because of horror of the crime, but if they have probative value with respect to a fact in issue that outweighs the danger of prejudice to the defendant, they are admissible, and resolution of such question is primarily for the trial court in the exercise of its discretion. West's Ann. Pen.Code, §§ 995, 1239(b).

15. Criminal Law ⇨438

In prosecution for murder committed during perpetration of arson, photograph showing bodies inside the premises and the charred condition of the bar, which were used in connection with testimony of a fireman who was called as an arson expert, were admissible as relevant in determining the point of origin of the fire and corroborative of the expert's testimony. West's Ann. Pen.Code, §§ 189, 447a, 448a.

Stipulations ⇨14(7)

In prosecution for murder committed during perpetration of arson, photographs of bodies of persons in the burned building which were taken of the bodies after removal from the premises were improperly admitted where defendants offered to stipulate as to the cause of death and identification of the victims, but error did not call for a reversal, in view of the entire record, including testimony as to the burned condition of the bodies. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 189, 447a, 448a; West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

In prosecution for murder, prosecutor's argument in commenting on testimony of People's witnesses that she hoped the guilty persons would get the gas chamber was not improper.

Alleged improper argument of the prosecutor with reference to cross-examination of an acquitted defendant could not be complained of when no objection was made to such portion of the argument.

In prosecution for murder committed during perpetration of arson where defendant during argument to the jury suggested the possibility of verdicts of second degree murder or manslaughter, remarks of court that the offense of arson had been committed to which no objection was made could not be complained of, where if there had been an objection the court would have made it clear that it did not intend to withdraw the factual question of guilt from the jury, but was merely referring to a matter of law which would be covered in its instructions. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 189, 448a.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

A jury found defendants Manuel Chavez, Clyde Bates, and Manuel Hernandez guilty of murder of the first degree as charged in six counts. The punishment of Bates and Chavez was fixed at death and that of Hernandez at life imprisonment. The jury further found that each of the three defendants was guilty of arson and that, as alleged, Bates had suffered four prior convictions. The appeals of Bates and Chavez are before us automatically under section 1239, subdivision (b), of the Penal Code. Separate notice of appeal was filed by Hernandez.

A fourth man, Oscar Brenhaug, was charged with the same offenses, but the indictment was set aside as to him on the ground that he had been indicted without reasonable or probable cause. See Pen. Code, § 995.

About 11 p. m. on April 4, 1957, six persons died as a result of a fire in a Los Angeles bar called the Mecca. Five were killed by carbon monoxide, and the death of the sixth was caused by asphyxia and burns. During the morning and afternoon of that day Bates and Brenhaug consumed considerable amounts of alcoholic beverages, including wine, beer, bourbon, and tequila. Early in the evening they met Chavez and Hernandez, who joined them in heavy drinking. Later they went to the Corner Cafe, and then they drove in Chavez' car to the Mecca bar where they ordered more drinks. Hernandez, who was 18 years old, was asked for his identification card and said he did not have it. Chavez was also asked for his card and refused to show it. The bartender, believing Chavez and Hernandez might be minors, refused to fill their orders. The evidence appears to be without conflict that all of the defendants were under the influence of alcohol.

A disturbance arose which apparently developed in part out of the refusal of a waitress and another woman to dance with some of the defendants. The bartender, with the assistance of a patron, ejected Chavez, Bates and Hernandez, and there was considerable fighting both inside and outside the building, during which Chavez was knocked down. A few minutes later Chavez returned for Brenhaug, who had remained inside, and Chavez was again knocked down and ejected. Brenhaug, who was in a drunken stupor during the disturbance, left when he was told to do so. There is a conflict in the evidence as to whether Hernandez took any part in the fight. An employee of the Mecca testified that Bates and Chavez re-entered to get Brenhaug and that when the latter got up to leave, one of them said, "We'll be back, and we'll get even." Another witness heard one of the defendants say, "We will be back."

At the trial Brenhaug testified: He and defendants drove away from the Mecca in Chavez' automobile but soon parked it and got into one owned by Bates. They stopped to pick up a five-gallon paint bucket, drove to a gasoline station, and parked the car on a street nearby. Hernandez and Bates went into the station, with Bates carrying the bucket, and bought some gasoline. (According to the station attendant the amount purchased was nearly five gallons.) Bates took the bucket back to the car and put it in the front compartment between his legs, and Hernandez drove them back to the vicinity of the Mecca. Before starting the trip to the gasoline station either Bates or Chavez said "they were going back and get even with them," and when Bates got out to pick up the bucket one of the defendants "said they were going back to the Mecca and fix them people back there." Thereafter, on the way to the station, Bates said that "we were going to get some gas and go back and scare them." When they returned to the Mecca Brenhaug got out of the car and said that he did not want to get into any trouble. Bates seized him and shoved him into the passenger side of the front seat. Bates and Chavez left the automobile, with Bates carrying the bucket of gasoline. The engine of the car was running, and Hernandez was seated behind the steering wheel.

When Bates and Chavez arrived at the door of the Mecca, Bates threw the gasoline on the floor, and the waitress heard him say, "I will get every one of you in there." Chavez threw a book of lighted matches on the gasoline, and there followed an explosion or flash fire which traveled rapidly, destroying the carpeting and damaging the interior. Bates and Chavez ran from the Mecca and got into the rear seat of the car, saying, "Let's get out of here." They left immediately, with Hernandez driving.

Defendants and Brenhaug drove to the Corner Cafe, and en route the bucket was thrown out of the car. All of them except Brenhaug, who remained in the car and slept, went into the cafe and stayed there until closing time. They separated soon after, and Bates and Brenhaug drove to Bates' residence, where they parked in the driveway and went to sleep. Officers took Bates and Brenhaug into custody about 3:10 in the morning. Bates did not stagger and, in the opinion of one of the officers, was not intoxicated. The officer noticed a smell of gasoline on the inside of the car when he opened the door. A chemist who examined the automobile about two hours later detected odors of gasoline and wine on the passenger side of the floor of the front compartment.

Bates was questioned by a police officer at about 4 a. m. on April 5. He said that he had been at the Mecca with Brenhaug the evening before but that he did not know the identity of the other two men and that they had come in later. Chavez was placed under arrest at his home by two police officers on the afternoon of the same day, and, before they indicated why they were there, he said, "I have been expecting you all day." He requested his wife to get him a lawyer, stating, "I didn't do it." When she asked him what he was talking about he replied, "That thing in the bar with all those people, the one you read about in the paper. I was in the bar."

Hernandez told two police officers, when questioned on the morning of April 6, that two men whose names he did not know picked him up in an automobile and drove him to the bar where "all of those people were burned" and that after an argument with the bartender they left and went home. Later he acknowledged that they had gone to a filling station where he purchased gasoline. He said that he bought the gasoline because Bates told him to get it, but he did not know then what Bates was going to do with it; that he drove the car when they left the gasoline station; that he did not want to go back to the Mecca, but Bates "kept" telling him to go there and gave him directions; and that Bates sat in the front seat, with the gasoline container near his feet. Bates and Chavez got out of the car at the Mecca, with Bates carrying the gasoline. After a couple of minutes, they came running back to the car, and the place was on fire.

On April 9, Bates, Chavez, Hernandez and Brenhaug were questioned together in the police administration building. Brenhaug stated: Defendants "got into a fight" at the Mecca, and Bates and Chavez said that they were going to "get even." After the four of them left the Mecca, Bates and Chavez picked up a can, and Bates drove to a filling station where Hernandez purchased gasoline. Bates said they would return to the Mecca and throw some gasoline into the place. They parked near the Mecca, and Bates and Chavez got out of the car, taking the can with them. Hernandez was in the front seat behind the steering wheel. He (Brenhaug) saw a flash of light, and Bates and Chavez came running back to the car, saying they should "get out of there." Either Bates or Chavez said, "We sure fixed them," and they left, with Hernandez driving.

The police, in the presence of Brenhaug, questioned defendants about his statement. Hernandez said that Brenhaug was mixed up a little in some places but had told the truth about what had occurred and that, when something was said about buying gasoline, he (Hernandez) thought they were only going to "scare somebody or something." Bates said he remembered that he and Brenhaug had picked up Chavez and Hernandez, that they had gone to the Mecca and had had a "beef" there, and that he was at the Corner Cafe about closing time with Chavez and Hernandez, but that he did not recall anything else. Chavez said that Brenhaug and Hernandez were lying.

Hernandez did not take the stand at the trial. Bates testified that commencing on the morning of April 4 and continuing into the evening, he and Brenhaug drank considerable amounts of alcoholic beverages. He recalled going to the Mecca, but it was "more of a dream." He did not remember returning to the Mecca, and, if he threw gasoline there, he did not remember it.

Chavez testified that he was at the Mecca during the first visit and was ejected; that the three others left in Bates' automobile; that he entered his own car and drove away; and that he did not see Bates, Hernandez, or Brenhaug again that night or the following morning, nor did he return to either the Mecca or the Corner Cafe.

Defendants have filed separate briefs, and, although their claims of error differ in some respects, their principal contentions may be summarized as follows: (1) the evidence is insufficient to support a finding that murder was committed in the perpetration of arson, and the court erred in instructing the jury on the subject; (2) the evidence is insufficient to support a finding that murder was perpetrated by means of torture, and the court erred in instructing the jury on that issue; (3) it was error to refuse instructions requested by defendants on second degree murder and manslaughter; (4) errors were committed in the admission of evidence; and (5) the district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct.

It is the position of the prosecution that the evidence shows that the homicides were committed in the perpetration of arson and by means of torture and, therefore, constituted murder of the first degree under section 189 of the Penal Code.<sup>1</sup> The jury was instructed on that theory.

[1] The burning of a building such as the one in which the Mecca was located comes within section 448a of the Penal Code, which makes it a crime for a person to wilfully and maliciously burn any building not a parcel of a dwelling.<sup>2</sup> The word

1. Section 189 of the Penal Code provides:

"All murder which is perpetrated by means of poison, or lying in wait, torture, or by any other kind of wilful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, or which is committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate arson, rape, robbery, burglary, mayhem, or any act punishable under Section 238, is murder of the first degree; and all other kinds of murders are of the second degree."

2. Section 448a of the Penal Code provides:

"Any person who wilfully and maliciously sets fire to or burns or causes to be burned or who aids, counsels or procures the burning of any barn, stable, garage or other building, whether the property of himself or of another, not a parcel of a dwelling house; or any shop, storehouse, warehouse, factory, mill or other building, whether the property of himself or of another; or any church,

"arson" does not appear in this section but in section 447a, which provides that any person who wilfully and maliciously sets fire to a dwelling or an adjoining building is guilty of arson.<sup>3</sup>

[2] Defendants argue that only the offense proscribed by section 447a constitutes arson and that section 448a, under which they were charged, sets forth a different offense. This argument was rejected in the case of In re Bramble, 31 Cal.2d 43, 187 P.2d 411, where the defendant was accused of having set fire to store buildings, and the court said, "This contention is based on an untenably (in California) narrow meaning of the word 'Arson.'" 31 Cal.2d at page 48, 187 P.2d at page 414. After setting forth the history of the word "arson," the opinion further states: "It thus appears that there are ample historical and legal bases for designating the acts enumerated in section 448a as 'arson.' The real purpose of differentiating the acts listed in section 448a from those included in section 447a is apparently not to change the nomenclature but to provide a convenient method of pleading and identifying the two classes of acts which are deemed to merit different punishments. * * * For the foregoing reasons it is obvious that the use of the word 'arson' in the indictment and in the judgments is not inconsistent with the specification that the offenses were committed by the burning of store buildings." 31 Cal.2d at page 50, 187 P.2d at page 415.

Although the Bramble case did not involve construction of the word "arson" as used in section 189 of the Penal Code, there is no sound basis for concluding that the word as used in that section is not intended to apply to the offense dealt with in section 448a. From 1850 to 1872 the burning of any building was by statute expressly denominated arson, and any homicide resulting from such burning was murder. Stats.1850, pp. 229, 234-235, as amended by Stats.1856, pp. 131, 132, 219. When section 189 was adopted in 1872 the Legislature provided that the burning of any building capable of affording shelter to a human being, whether or not a dwelling, constituted arson. (Former section 447 et seq. of the Penal Code.) These provisions remained substantially unchanged until 1929 when sections 447a and 448a were adopted. Section 448a was placed in the chapter entitled "Arson," and the 1929 amendments contained nothing to indicate that the offense described by that section should no longer be regarded as arson. The Legislature did not qualify the word "arson" as used in section 189, nor has it done so since 1929, even though the section was amended in other respects subsequent to the decision of the Bramble case in 1947. On the other hand in section 644 of the Penal Code, which relates to prior offenses of an habitual criminal, the Legislature made such a qualification in 1945 when it limited the offense of "arson" to "arson as defined in Section 447a," thereby impliedly recognizing that, unless qualified, the word "arson" in a provision such as section 189 includes offenses of the type described in section 448a as well as those set forth in section 447a. See In re Bramble, 31 Cal.2d 43, 50, 187 P.2d 411.

[3] The evidence is clearly sufficient to support a finding that defendants wilfully and maliciously set fire to the building and that the murders were committed in the perpetration of arson within the meaning of section 189.

meeting house, courthouse, work house, school, jail or other public building or any public bridge; shall, upon conviction thereof, be sentenced to the penitentiary for not less than one nor more than ten years."

3. Section 447a of the Penal Code provides: "Any person who wilfully and maliciously sets fire to or burns or causes to be burned or who aids, counsels or procures the burning of any dwelling house, or any kitchen, shop, barn, stable or other out-house that is parcel thereof, or belonging to or adjoining thereto, whether the property of himself or of another, shall be guilty of arson, and upon conviction thereof, be sentenced to the penitentiary for not less than two nor more than twenty years."

[4, 5] The trial court was also justified in giving instructions regarding murder perpetrated by means of torture. Murder is so perpetrated when the intent is to cause cruel suffering for the purpose of revenge, and where a man killed his wife by burning her with gasoline it was held that the jury could reasonably conclude that his intention was to inflict cruel suffering. People v. Martinez, 38 Cal.2d 556, 561, 241 P.2d 224.

As we have seen, statements were made during the trip to purchase gasoline which could be interpreted as indicating that defendants were motivated by revenge, and, when the fire was set, Bates said, "I will get every one of you in there." There were a number of people visible in the Mecca from the doorway when the gasoline was thrown on the floor, and one patron was so close that his leg was hit by gasoline and burned. The death of one of the victims, who had been at the bar, was caused by asphyxia and by third and fourth degree burns involving the entire body surface, and the jury could reasonably have concluded that he suffered pain from burning. The evidence is amply sufficient to warrant instructions on the theory that murder was committed by means of torture.

[6] Hernandez contends that there is no evidence to support his conviction of murder in connection with either arson or torture, and he points to testimony to the effect that he was a mere onlooker and did not participate in the fighting at the time of the first visit to the Mecca or in the subsequent throwing of gasoline. There was other testimony, however, to the effect that he joined in the fighting outside the door after he was ejected from the bar and that he admitted buying the gasoline. One witness testified that she saw Hernandez at the door just before Chavez threw the lighted book of matches. Hernandez drove the car from the gasoline station to the Mecca and, subsequently, away from the scene of the fire. It could be inferred that he knew that the purpose of the gasoline purchase was to "get even" with the people at the Mecca and that he knew that the gasoline was to be lit. The jury was entitled to find that he was guilty of murder both in the perpetration of arson and by means of torture.

[7] In support of the claim that the court erred in refusing to instruct regarding manslaughter and murder of the second degree, defendants assert that the jury was thus precluded from finding that they were so intoxicated that they could not form the specific intent which is a necessary element of the crimes of arson and murder by torture. The issues of intent and intoxication were submitted to the jury by the court's instructions, and it is obvious that these issues were decided against defendants in a manner which prohibited a finding of a lesser offense than murder of the first degree. The court instructed the jury that specific intent is a necessary element of arson and murder by means of torture, that there must be an inquiry into the state of mind of defendants at the time the alleged acts were committed, that in this connection the evidence of intoxication must be considered, and that the degree of intoxication might be such as to render a person incapable of forming the necessary intent. We must, of course, presume that the jury followed these instructions in returning a verdict of guilty on the count of arson against each of the defendants, and since it was established that the homicides were caused by the fire, the provisions of section 189 of the Penal Code required convictions of first degree murder.

[8] Bates and Chavez contend that the court erred in admitting evidence relative to the conversation on April 6 between Hernandez and two police officers and the conversation on April 9 when Brenhaug and the three defendants were questioned in the police administration building. Where statements of a defendant are admitted which are irrelevant or unnecessary in establishing a case against him and are extremely prejudicial and inadmissible hearsay as to a codefendant, they should be excluded from the evidence. But where the statements are relevant to the defendant, and the jury is instructed that the evidence is admitted only as to him, it will ordinarily be presumed that the jury followed the instruction and that there was no prejudice as to the codefendant. See People v. Foote, 48 Cal.2d 20, 23, 306 P.2d 803.

[9] The April 6 conversation with Hernandez, which was admitted without objection on his part, contained admissions and was relevant in establishing the case against him. The judge admonished the jury that the evidence was to be received solely as to Hernandez and that it should not be used in any way with reference to Bates or Chavez. Under the rule set forth above, it was not error to admit the conversation subject to the admonition of the court.

[10,11] The April 9 conversation consisted of accusatory statements by Brenhaug in response to questions put to him by the police in the presence of the three defendants, together with defendants' reactions when asked what they had to say concerning Brenhaug's version of what occurred on April 4. In general, evidence of this type is not admissible where there was a denial by the defendant, but it may be received if the truth of the accusation was admitted or if, under circumstances calling for a denial, there was silence or equivocal or evasive answers indicating a consciousness of guilt or acquiescence in the truth of the statements. People v. Simmons, 28 Cal.2d 699, 711 et seq., 172 P.2d 18; see People v. Abbott, 47 Cal.2d 362, 373, 303 P.2d 730; People v. Davis, 43 Cal.2d 661, 669-672, 276 P.2d 801.

[12] The conversation was properly admitted as to Hernandez, who made minor corrections with respect to Brenhaug's statements but said that they were substantially true. Chavez, on the other hand, denied everything and said that Brenhaug and Hernandez were lying. The prosecution offered to exclude the portions of the conversation which disclosed that Chavez was present during the questioning and that he had made statements in the nature of denials. Chavez objected to the introduction of the evidence but insisted that if any part of it was to be received it should all be admitted. The trial court recognized that the conversation was not admissible as to Chavez, and admonished the jury that it was not to be considered in any way with regard to him, and we must assume that the jury followed the court's admonition.

[13] With respect to Bates it is clear that part of the conversation was admissible in view of the fact that he said he remembered going to the Mecca with Brenhaug, Chavez and Hernandez, that they had a "beef" there, and that he was with Chavez and Hernandez at the Corner Cafe about closing time. As to the remainder of the conversation, he insisted that he did not remember, and while he did not expressly say so, it seems obvious that his position was that he was unable to remember because he was intoxicated. Under the circumstances his asserted failure to remember cannot properly be taken as an evasive or equivocal response indicating consciousness of guilt or acquiescence in the truth of Brenhaug's account, and it follows that the conversation was erroneously admitted as to Bates insofar as it related to the trip to the gasoline station, the return to the Mecca, and incriminating remarks made by him on the night of the fire. We are satisfied however, that the error does not require a reversal. See Cal.Const. art. VI, § 4½. At the trial Brenhaug took the stand and testified to substantially the same facts as were set forth in the conversation, and he was subjected to lengthy cross-examination. This testimony, together with other evidence, amply established the case against Bates, irrespective of the erroneously admitted conversation. Indeed, Bates' position at the trial was not based on a denial of what happened on the night of April 4 but on the claim that he did not remember and that he was so intoxicated as to be guiltless of the crimes charged, a claim which the jury rejected, as it was entitled to do under the evidence. Moreover, in receiving the conversation and, again, in giving formal instructions to the jury, the court made clear that, unless the conduct of Bates indicated an admission, the conversation should be entirely disregarded, and it is highly unlikely that Bates' response that he did not remember would have been viewed by the jury as an admission.

[14] Defendants complain of the admission, over objection, of a number of photographs showing bodies of persons killed in the fire. Such photographs should be excluded where their principal effect would be to inflame the jurors against the defendant because of the horror of the crime; on the other hand, if they have a probative value with respect to a fact in issue that outweighs the danger of prejudice to the defendant, they are admissible, and the resolution of this question is primarily for the trial court in the exercise of its discretion. People v. Carter, 48 Cal.2d 737, 751, 312 P.2d 665; People v. Cheary, 48 Cal.2d 301, 311-312, 309 P.2d 431.

[15] Two of the photographs, showing bodies inside the premises and the charred condition of the bar, were used in connection with the testimony of a fireman who was called as an arson expert. They were relevant in determining the point of origin of the fire and were corroborative of the expert's testimony. In our opinion the trial court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the probative value of these photographs justified their reception in evidence.

testified as to the degree of burns on certain bodies and that the burns contributed to the deaths. Defendants, however, offered to stipulate to the cause of death and identification of the victims, and, moreover, it was with respect to only one victim that the medical testimony showed that the death was caused in part by burns. The trial court abused its discretion in overruling the objections to these photographs, but, in view of the entire record, including the testimony as to the burned condition of several bodies, the error did not result in a miscarriage of justice. See Cal.Const. art. VI, § 4½.

[17] Defendants point to the prosecution's argument to the jury in support of their claims of prejudicial misconduct. In commenting on testimony to the effect that one of the People's witnesses had stated she hoped the guilty persons would get the gas chamber, the prosecutor said, "I wish I had a dollar for every person in this community that did not know anyone that died there, did not even know where the place was; that when they saw it in the paper, made the same utterance that those who did it should die." Defendants' request that the prosecuting attorney be cited for misconduct in making the statement was properly refused by the trial judge, who pointed out that the remarks were not evidence "but purely a matter of argument."

[18] With reference to the cross-examination of Brenhaug as to whether he or his attorney had made "a deal," the prosecutor said, "A deal with the District Attorney's Office? I know of no such deal. It's my case; and accept my word, there was no deal with Mr. Brenhaug." No objection was made to this portion of the argument. Even though the statement of the prosecuting attorney was improper, we must assume that the court would have admonished the jury if an objection had been made.

[19] Defendants also complain that the jury was misled by what occurred when counsel for Chavez, during his argument to the jury, suggested the possibility of verdicts of second degree murder or manslaughter. The prosecutor objected, saying that the court "has disposed of that matter as a matter of law, and has indicated that the facts of this case constitute arson within the meaning of 448a of the Penal Code." The court stated it would so instruct the jury and directed the attorney for Chavez not to "discuss any other possibilities." Later in the discussion Chavez' counsel said that "448a does not say that this is a crime of arson." The court then made the following statement: "The Court has told you that the Court does find that it is arson, and you are not to argue that law to the jury. The Court will instruct the jury as to the law. You are not to attempt to argue that law to the jury." Counsel then said that he felt he was "entitled to discuss that law with them and the application to this case," and the court replied, "Well, you may do that, but as to whether or not it is arson within the purview, the Court has already expressed it, that under 448a, the Court finds that that is arson." Counsel, instead of making any objection to the court's remarks, said, "I'll take it from there, then." If there had been an objection the court would undoubtedly have made it perfectly clear that it did not intend to withdraw the factual question of guilt from the jury but was merely referring to a matter of law which would be covered in its instructions, i. e., that the offenses specified in section 448a constitute arson, as the term is used in section 189 of the Penal Code.

Other contentions made by defendants are wholly without merit and need not be discussed.

The judgments and orders denying a new trial are affirmed.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

The District Attorney of Los Angeles County filed an information wherein defendant was accused of a violation of Section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code, in that he did, on or about November 26, 1957, have in his possession flowering tops and leaves of Indian Hemp (cannabis sativa), commonly referred to as marijuana.

At the time fixed for his plea, defendant made a motion under Section 995 of the Penal Code on the ground that defendant had been committed without reasonable or probable cause. The motion was granted and the information was ordered set aside. From such order the People prosecute this appeal.

As to the factual background surrounding this prosecution, the record reveals testimony before the committing magistrate that about 12:30 p. m., on the afternoon of November 26, 1957, two police officers were seated in a police automobile marked black and white. Both officers were in uniform. The police vehicle was standing near the curb at Fifth Street and Stanford Avenue. J. W. Ramey, one of the officers, testified that he first observed defendant talking to another man in front of a liquor store at Fifth Street and Towne Avenue. Defendant and his friend started walking east on Fifth Street toward the officers. As defendant approached the police vehicle, the officers asked him to "step over to the car a minute". Defendant ignored the request of the officers and "kept right on walking". Officer Ramey's partner, Officer Drake, got out of the police automobile and "hollered to the defendant to stop, that we would like to talk to him". Defendant arrived at the corner of Fifth Street and Stanford Avenue, and as he was near the corner building, he started to turn left on Stanford Avenue. At that time, defendant looked in the direction of the officers. As defendant passed Officer Ramey, the latter observed defendant's right hand which was "cupped, the fingers drawn into the palm and the thumb laid alongside of it". Defendant was holding his hand, "Alongside—right alongside of his body. He wasn't swinging it at all". As he arrived at the corner, defendant started to turn his head in the direction of Officer Ramey. The latter observed something "drop" near defendant's feet, a "yellowish brown", that looked to the officer like a homemade cigarette. When the officer first saw it, as it was dropping to the ground, it was approximately a foot or maybe two feet from the ground, and it was maybe a foot behind the defendant. When he, the defendant, walked around the corner the cigarette was dropping. There was no one else in the immediate area of the defendant. The officer observed the cigarette strike the ground. The sidewalk was clean and as the officers saw the cigarette fall on the ground, Officer Ramey got out of the vehicle and went over to the cigarette and picked it up.

The officer identified People's Exhibit 1 for identification as the cigarette that he found on the ground, and which he had heretofore described. After picking it up, the officer ran to the corner and observed defendant running north on Stanford Avenue. Officer Drake pursued defendant on foot. They arrived at the alley at the rear of the Torch Club, which is on the corner of Fifth Street and Stanford Avenue, where they turned left into the alley, going west. Officer Ramey ran back to the police vehicle and drove west on Fifth Street to Towne, north on Towne to the alley, and then east in the alley. Officer Ramey observed the defendant run behind a building into an empty lot, and observed the former's partner running after defendant. The witness drove to that location, parked the vehicle, got out, and his partner had already placed the defendant under arrest.

Officer Ramey had often before seen defendant and saw him only two days before the happenings with which we are here concerned. About a week previous the officer encountered defendant with a lady and had stopped them and talked to them on that occasion.

Jack Olin Carter testified that he was a Los Angeles city police officer assigned to the Scientific Investigation Division as a chemist. His qualifications as an expert forensic chemist were stipulated to. The brown-wrapped cigarette testified to by Officer Ramey was found to contain a green leafy material which the witness examined microscopically and tested chemically. As a result of such examination the witness testified that in his opinion the substance was marijuana.

The sole question presented on this appeal is whether the foregoing testimony established reasonable and probable cause to hold defendant to answer to the superior court.

[1, 2] Appellant contends that the corpus delicti of the crime of illegal possession of marijuana and defendant's connection with the crime were established at the preliminary examination. We find ourselves in accord with appellant's claim. A cursory examination of the aforesaid evidentiary features present in the instant prosecution brings it within the sphere of cases holding that while mere presence at the scene of the crime standing alone is insufficient to justify a finding of guilt, nevertheless, guilty knowledge and intent to violate the law may be shown by the facts and circumstances of the case, including the conduct of the accused (People v. Gibson, 64 Cal.App.2d 537, 539, 149 P.2d 25; People v. Foster, 115 Cal.App.2d 866, 868, 253 P.2d 50).

People v. Belli, 127 Cal.App. 269, 15 P.2d 802, involved a prosecution for the illegal possession of morphine, wherein the facts were that shortly before his arrest, while walking along the street, defendant dropped a small white package on the sidewalk; that it was immediately picked up by another person walking in the opposite direction, and that, upon a search of the latter person, a small white package similar to the one defendant had thrown on the sidewalk was found, which contained an illegal quantity of morphine. The court held that the evidence was sufficient to establish defendant's possession, and that proof of possession at the very time of arrest was not essential. See also People v. McDaniel, 154 Cal.App. 2d 475, 481, 316 P.2d 660; People v. Newman, 127 Cal.App.2d 430, 435, 273 P.2d 917.

In several cases in which the facts indicated that defendants threw away narcotics at or about the time of arrest, the evidence was held sufficient to establish defendants' possession of the narcotics. People v. Terrazas, 42 Cal.App.2d 281, 108 P.2d 680; People v. Rodrigues, 25 Cal.App. 2d 393, 77 P.2d 503; People v. Herbert, 59 Cal.App. 158, 159, 210 P. 276. Also, where heroin capsules were found by officers on the seat of defendant's automobile, which defendant had just abandoned, it was held that the inference was justified that defendant had possession of the capsules while in the vehicle. People v. Shafer, 101 Cal.App.2d 54, 58, 224 P.2d 778.

[3, 4] If we consider that in the instant case the officer observed the marijuana cigarette drop near defendant's feet; that the officer first observed this cigarette when it was a foot or two from the ground, and a foot behind the defendant; that there was no one else in the immediate area of the defendant; and that the sidewalk was clean at the particular location, then it appears that it is quite reasonable to infer that defendant was in possession of the marijuana cigarette before it was dropped. This conclusion is fortified by the fact that defendant ignored the officers after they requested him to stop for a minute; that defendant's right hand was "cupped" with the fingers drawn into the palm and the thumb laid alongside of it, and defendant was holding his hand alongside of his body and not swinging it at all; and that defendant started to run from the officers, and it was necessary to pursue him in order to make the arrest. Also, the committing magistrate was entitled to take into consideration the flight of respondent as indicating a consciousness of guilt on his part (Penal Code, Section 1127c).

[5] It is also noteworthy that at the preliminary examination respondent made no objection to the introduction into evidence of the marijuana cigarette. He thereby waived his right to claim that such evidence was improperly received because it had been illegally obtained contrary to the rule announced in People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905, 50 A.L.R.2d 513, and the committing magistrate properly considered it in determining whether there was sufficient cause to believe that the accused had committed a public offense (People v. Pruitt, 155 Cal.App.2d 585, 595, 318 P.2d 552; Robison v. Superior Court, 49 Cal.2d 186, 187, 316 P.2d 1; People v. McFarren, 155 Cal.App.2d 383, 384, 317 P.2d 998).

[6] Since the officers observed respondent drop what appeared to be a "home-made" cigarette and then attempt to flee, there was no search or seizure in this case such as is contemplated by law. As was said in People v. West, 144 Cal.App.2d 214, 219, 220, 300 P.2d 729, 733: "A search implies a prying into hidden places for that which is concealed and that the object searched for has been hidden or intentionally put out of the way. While it has been said that ordinarily searching is a function of sight, it is generally held that the mere looking at that which is open to view is not a 'search'. A seizure contemplates a forcible dispossession of the owner and it is not a voluntary surrender. 79 C.J.S. Searches and Seizures § 1, pages 775-776."

[7] That to observe that which is open and patent is not a search was the holding in People v. Martin, 45 Cal.2d 755, 762, 290 P.2d 855; People v. Jaurequi, 142 Cal.App.2d 555, 561, 298 P.2d 896. Analogous to the situation with which we are here concerned is the case of People v. Edwards, 142 Cal.App.2d 419, 421, 298 P.2d 664, 665, wherein it is said: “* * * Furthermore, here the appellant voluntarily dropped the bundle of heroin to the floor. Hence there is no question of any illegal search involved. After appellant’s attempted flight the officer was entitled to pick up the bundle from the floor as part of his police investigation.” See also People v. Sterling, 154 Cal.App.2d 401, 405–406, 316 P.2d 405.

[8] Although, in the case at bar, there was no search or seizure involved, we are persuaded that under the facts above narrated and the actions and conduct of respondent, the officers were entitled to reasonably believe that respondent was probably engaged in a violation of the law, and that it was their duty to make an investigation. The facts herein speak for themselves (People v. Martin, 46 Cal.2d 106, 108, 293 P.2d 52; People v. Edwards, supra, 142 Cal.App.2d at page 421, 298 P.2d 664; People v. Dore, 146 Cal.App.2d 541, 544, 304 P.2d 103; People v. Garnett, 148 Cal.App.2d 280, 283, 306 P.2d 571).

[9] The applicable rule governing the superior court in the determination of motions, under Section 995 of the Penal Code is set forth in People v. Bradley, 152 Cal.App.2d 527, 535, 314 P.2d 108, 113, as follows:

“The rule defining the function of the trial court when confronted with a motion to set aside an information under the section just cited, was thus enunciated in People v. Jackson, 146 Cal.App.2d 553, [556], 303 P.2d 767, 769: ‘* * * It is the record before the magistrate that is decisive. In arriving at his decision the magistrate may weigh the evidence, may resolve conflicts, and may give or withhold credence to witnesses. In testing the sufficiency of the showing made before him on motion to quash the superior court cannot do these things. (Citing cases.)’ In People v. Flanders, 140 Cal.App.2d 765, 768, 296 P.2d 13, 14, it is stated: ‘* * * On a motion to set aside an information, the court may not substitute its judgment as to the weight of the evidence for that of the magistrate conducting the preliminary examination. On such motion the court will not inquire into the sufficiency of the evidence if there is some evidence in support of the information.’” See also People v. Jablon, 153 Cal.App.2d 456, 459, 314 P.2d 824.

Guided by the rule just stated, and under the facts and circumstances of the case now engaging our attention, it is manifest that the evidence was sufficient to justify the order holding respondent to answer to the superior court.

The order setting aside the information is reversed.

Action for money based on checks on which chattel mortgagor had stopped payment and for money had and received. With the complaint, mortgagee filed affidavit for writ of attachment, writ was issued and mortgagor filed motion to discharge attachment. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, William E. Fox, J., denied motion to discharge writ of attachment, and mortgagor appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that where personal property was mortgaged as security for payment of note for $58,816.82, and mortgage provided that it also secured to maximum extent and amount of $60,000, any other sums thereafter advanced to or for benefit of mortgagor, mortgage secured all advances and indebtedness, including note, to maximum amount of $60,000, not $118,816.62, and in view of fact that balance due on note was more than $48,000, and mortgagor was liable to mortgagee on contingent liability of about $34,000, mortgagee was entitled to attach mortgagor's personal property for amount of checks on which mortgagor had stopped payment and for money had and received.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal by defendant Dix Box Company from an order denying its motion to discharge a writ of attachment.

The action is for money. The complaint is in five counts. The first count is on a check dated June 26, 1957 made by defendant payable to plaintiff for $1,187.80. The second count is on a check dated June 27, 1957 made by defendant payable to plaintiff in the amount of $2,318. The third count is on a check dated June 28, 1957 made by defendant payable to plaintiff in the amount of $255.28. Defendant stopped payment on each check. The fourth and fifth counts are for money had and received totaling $20,227.94. The prayer is for $23,959.02.

With the complaint, plaintiff filed an affidavit for a writ of attachment which stated "that the payment of the same has not been secured by any mortgage, deed of trust, or lien upon real estate or personal property, or any pledge of personal property." The writ issued and about $888.81 was attached.

Defendant filed a motion to discharge the attachment. In support thereof it filed an affidavit of its president which stated: he believes and is advised by his counsel that plaintiff has no reasonable ground for alleging the indebtedness; the debt sued on arose out of a transaction between plaintiff and defendant; defendant executed a chattel mortgage dated January 24, 1957 to plaintiff; the mortgage is "a security" for all debts arising out of the transaction and is a security for all debts sued on in the action; he is advised and believes plaintiff should have availed itself of foreclosure proceedings on the mortgage before it was entitled to a writ of attachment. In a supplemental affidavit he attached a copy of the chattel mortgage which is dated January 24, 1957, mortgages certain personal property as security for the payment of a promissory note of the same date for $58,816.82 with interest at 10 per cent, payable in installments of $1,000 or more on the 24th of each month beginning February 24, 1957. The mortgage contains this provision:

"This mortgage also secures: (a) any and all renewals of said promissory note; (b) the repayment of all sums and amounts that may be necessarily advanced or expended by Mortgagee for the maintenance or preservation of the mortgaged property, or any part thereof; (c) to the maximum extent and amount of Sixty Thousand and No/100 ..... Dollars ($60,000.00), any and all other sums that may hereafter be advanced by Mortgagee to or for the benefit of Mortgagor, any and all other expenditures that may hereafter be made by Mortgagee pursuant to the provisions hereof or for the benefit of or at the instance of Mortgagor, and any and all other indebtednesses and obligations of Mortgagor to Mortgagee that may hereafter be incurred."

This affidavit stated that the total amount secured by the mortgage was $118,816.82.

In opposition to the motion, plaintiff filed two affidavits by its secretary which stated: the causes of action alleged in the complaint did not arise out of the chattel mortgage transaction; the first, second, and third counts are based on checks executed by defendant on which defendant stopped payment; the checks were not given in payment of any obligation secured by the mortgage; the fourth count is on a claim for moneys paid by plaintiff to defendant in the purchase of fictitious accounts receivable sold by defendant to plaintiff; the fifth count is on a claim for moneys collected by defendant without the consent or permission of plaintiff on accounts receivable that had been previously absolutely assigned to plaintiff; the balance due on the principal of the note secured by the mortgage as of July 26, 1957 was $48,886.77, which is in default; in addition, defendant is liable to plaintiff on a contingent liability of about $34,000 for accounts receivable which had been assigned previously to plaintiff and payment of which within 90 days has been guaranteed by defendant.

The motion to discharge the attachment was denied. Defendant appeals.

Defendant claims the chattel mortgage secures future advances to the maximum amount of $118,816.82, and that the debts sued on are within that amount. Defendant also argues that a chattel mortgage need not state the maximum of future advances secured. Plaintiff contends that by its terms the mortgage secures to the maximum extent and amount of only $60,000, including the promissory note and all such amounts, if any, as might be advanced in the future in reliance on the mortgage, or as might qualify as being debts or obligations incurred subsequent to the making of the mortgage and pursuant to respondent's reliance thereon.

[1] A lien may be created by contract as security for the performance of obligations not then in existence. Civ.Code, § 2884. "A mortgage of personal property or crops may be given to secure the repayment of sums that may be advanced, expenditures that may be made, or indebtedness or obligations that may be incurred subsequent to the execution of such mortgage. If the maximum amount the repayment of which is proposed to be secured by such mortgage, is expressed therein * * * such mortgage * * * shall be and constitute a lien or encumbrance of rank, effect, status and standing equal to that established thereby initially and as it may thereafter obtain, as security for the repayment of any sums, expenditures, indebtedness and obligations, owing or due or becoming owing or due thereunder, up to and including such expressed maximum amount which shall be considered only as a limit of the debts, sums, expenditures, indebtedness and obligations that may be secured thereby at any one time, and not to include such as may have existed and been repaid or discharged thereunder." Civ. Code, § 2975.

[2] We are of the opinion that the clause of the mortgage in question secures any and all advances and indebtedness, including the promissory note, to the maximum extent and amount of $60,000, not to the extent and amount of $118,816.82. Section 2975 of the Civil Code requires that the maximum amount the repayment of which is to be secured shall be expressed in a mortgage of personal property in order that the mortgage shall constitute security for future advances and debts and obligations incurred subsequent to the making of the mortgage. Hollywood State Bank v. Cook, 99 Cal.App.2d 338, 342, 221 P.2d 988. Section 2975 was enacted in 1935. Stats. 1935, p. 2228. Frank H. Buck Co. v. Buck, 162 Cal. 300, 122 P. 466, decided in 1912, which apparently held that a crop mortgage need not state the maximum amount of future advances, is therefore not in point. In Oaks v. Weingartner, 105 Cal. App.2d 598, 234 P.2d 194, the encumbrance was a deed of trust of real property. In any case the question is of no consequence since the chattel mortgage at bar expresses the maximum amount as $60,000. That is the amount that is secured by the mortgage at any one time, including the promissory note. There is nothing in the mortgage indicating any intent that it was given to secure obligations in excess of $60,000.

The court was warranted in concluding that the obligations alleged in the complaint are not secured by the chattel mortgage.

Sept. 19, 1958.

Vendors' action for breach of contract. The Superior Court, San Mateo County, A. R. Cotton, J., granted defendants' motion for nonsuit, and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, St. Clair, J. pro tem., held that evidence had sufficiently proved damage to plaintiffs and had been sufficient to take case to jury, and that evidence had not required finding as a matter of law that plaintiffs had failed to mitigate damages.

I. Trial 165

On motion for nonsuit, every favorable inference fairly deducible and every favorable presumption fairly arising from evidence adduced must be considered as facts proved in favor of plaintiffs; and where evidence is fairly susceptible of two constructions, or if one of several inferences may reasonably be made, court must take view most favorable to plaintiffs; and if contradictory evidence has been given, it must be disregarded; and evidence, whether erroneously admitted or not, if relevant to issues joined, must be given credit and benefit of its full probative strength; and any question arising from fact of variation between evidence of witnesses cannot be raised or considered.

Fact that some witness in behalf of plaintiff, or even plaintiff himself, in giving his testimony, may have contradicted or discredited himself in some particular is not determinative on motion for nonsuit.

3. Vendor and Purchaser ⇨322, 330

Proof of damage is vital part of cause of action for breach of contract to purchase; and, as a general rule, value of property to vendor is market value at time of breach. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3307.

4. Vendor and Purchaser ⇨329

Evidence of resale price is properly admitted as one of factors in determining market value of property at time of purchaser's breach; but if resale time was different or later than time of breach, evidence should be adduced as to difference, if any, in market value between two dates.

A nonsuit is proper when plaintiff's evidence conclusively establishes a defense.

6. Vendor and Purchaser ⇨329, 331

In vendors' action for breach of contract, evidence sufficiently proved damage to plaintiffs and was sufficient to take their case to jury; and evidence did not require finding as a matter of law that they had failed to mitigate damages. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 3307.

Vendor is bound by value to him (market value) at time of breach, without regard for time he sells; and Civil Code section providing that value of property to seller shall be deemed, for purposes of estimating damages, to be price which he could have obtained therefor in market nearest to place it should have been accepted by buyer, and at such time after breach of contract as would have sufficed, with reasonable diligence, for seller to effect resale, does not apply to sales of real property. ST. CLAIR, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiffs appeal from an order granting defendants' motion for a nonsuit. In granting the motion, the trial court said: "It is the opinion of the Court that there was no diligence shown in this case in the sale of this house. The plaintiffs being in the building business and knowing the market value, and, in fact, the market rising rather than dropping, the Court feels that the defendants in this case didn't have much to say as to the sale of this property."

On September 20, 1948, plaintiff as "Seller", defendant as "Purchaser", signed a document entitled "Deposit Receipt." "Purchaser" agreed to buy and "Seller" agreed to sell in accordance with the terms and conditions of the receipt. The total purchase price was "Overhead [sic] [the parties at the trial apparently proceeded on the theory that this meant 'cost of building the house'] plus 10% profit in addition to $4900.00 for the lot." Defendant was to furnish plumbing, heating, sheet metal and kitchen cabinets and equipment "which amount sellers shall not pay or allow to purchasers until said deal is consummated." $5,000 was to be paid on or before September 27, 1948. " * * * the balance of same is to be paid within ——— days from the date hereof * * *." The number of days was never inserted nor was any evidence taken thereon at the trial.

At the trial plaintiffs proved (1) the contract, (2) that the house had been started prior to the date of the contract, (3) that the type and design of the house had been decided by the defendant, (4) that defendant had ordered the plumbing, etc., referred to in the agreement, (5) that plaintiffs had paid for the last items, (6) that the $5,000 was never paid, (7) that direct costs were $32,305.21, (8) that total amount due under the contract was $41,905.39, (9) that on March 15, 1949, they demanded that defendant perform under the agreement within five days or meet a third party's offer, (10) that defendant did not perform or meet the offer, (11) that plaintiffs then sold the house for $32,500 to the third party in question.

The suit by plaintiffs was for the difference between $41,905.39 and $32,500, to wit, $9,405.39. This last figure is correct mathematically, according to plaintiffs' proof, although the prayer of the complaint differs by a few cents.

On cross-examination one of plaintiffs testified that in his opinion the fair market value of the property on April 1, 1949, was $45,000; that $32,500 " * * * was all we could get for it at the time"; that the house had been listed with three or four real estate brokers from October, 1948, to date at $45,000; that there had been no offers other than the one accepted.

The defendant (called under Code of Civil Procedure, § 2055) testified that, after September 20, 1948, he listed the house for sale; tried to sell it; assisted plaintiffs in trying to sell; that he felt a certain responsibility and was trying to help move the home; that he knew before signing the agreement that the cost would be thirty-six or thirty-seven thousand without the plumbing, heating or kitchen cabinets.

Over the continuing objection of counsel for plaintiffs that it was an attempt to vary a written agreement by parol evidence the defendant testified that it had been agreed, prior to signing, (1) the cost was not to exceed $10 a square foot, (2) total cost was not to exceed $23,000, (3) if the total cost was over the last figure, the house was to be sold as a speculative venture, (4) plaintiffs wanted the agreement signed (a) to protect their interests and (b) to have something to show as to the reason the house was built.

[1,2] On a motion for nonsuit, "[e] very favorable inference fairly deducible and every favorable presumption fairly arising from the evidence adduced must be considered as facts proved in favor of the plaintiffs. Where evidence is fairly susceptible of two constructions, or if one of several inferences may reasonably be made, the court must take the view most favorable to the plaintiffs. If contradictory evidence has been given, it must be disregarded. * * * Evidence, whether erroneously admitted or not, if relevant to the issues joined, must be given the credit and benefit of its full probative strength and any question arising from the fact of variation between the evidence of the witnesses cannot be raised or considered." (Emphasis added.) Wulfjen v. Dolton, 24 Cal.2d 878, 880, 151 P.2d 840, 841, quoting from Berger v. Lane, 190 Cal. 443, 452-453, 213 P. 45. "The fact that some witness in behalf of plaintiff, or even plaintiff himself, in giving his testimony, may have contradicted or discredited himself in some particular, is not determinative." Cash v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 6 Cal.App.2d 738, 742, 45 P.2d 280, 282; see also In re Ross' Estate, 173 Cal. 178, 183, 159 P. 603.

[3-6] Applying the above rule to the above facts, it would appear that the judgment of nonsuit should be reversed. Defendant urges here, and urged in the trial court that one other element negatives the ordinary application of the rule, to wit, that the plaintiffs failed to prove damage. Proof of damage is a vital part of the cause of action. Senter v. Monroe, 77 Cal. 347, 349, 19 P. 580; Westwater v. Rector, etc. of Grace Church, 140 Cal. 339, 73 P. 1055; Southall v. Security Title Ins. etc. Co., 112 Cal.App.2d 321, 323, 246 P.2d 74; see Domino v. Mobley, 144 Cal.App.2d 24, 29, 300 P.2d 324. Civil Code, section 3307, provides: "The detriment caused by the breach of an agreement to purchase an estate in real property, is deemed to be the excess, if any, of the amount which would have been due to the seller, under the contract, over the value of the property to him." As a general rule, the value to the seller of the property is the market value at the time of the breach (Employees' Participating Ass'n v. Pine, 91 Cal.App.2d 299, 301, 204 P.2d 965).

Defendant seizes upon the testimony of one of appellants that the market value of the property on April 1, 1949 (see infra, discussion as to the time of breach) was $45,000. He then argues that it is not possible for plaintiffs to be injured as the contract price was below the market value.

In Shurtleff v. Marcus Land etc. Co., 59 Cal.App. 520, at page 522, 211 P. 244, at page 245, the court had the following to say as to how one proves market value: "In arriving at the value of the property to the seller the court properly received evidence not only of the amount realized by the seller through the sale which she made, but also of the rental value of the property, the condition of the title, and the reasonable market value as testified to by experts, which included those elements which they regard as relevant to the issue, such as: The activity of the market, the use for which the property is adapted, its relation to transportation facilities, and other matters which we need not here delineate. The appellant's expert witnesses in response to questions asked by her counsel, gave opinions as to the market value of the property at the date of the breach of contract."

It is clear from the above quotation, and from Royer v. Carter, 37 Cal.2d 544, 233 P.2d 539, and Mathews v. McArthur, 119 Cal.App.2d 196, 258 P.2d 1068, that evidence of the resale price is properly admitted as one of the factors in determining market value.

If the resale time is different or later than the time of the breach, then evidence should be adduced as to any difference, if any, in the market value between the two dates. Mathews v. McArthur, supra.

In the instant case, all parties apparently tried the case on the theory that the breach occurred on March 15, 1949, or April 1, 1949. The question by which defendant elicited that the market value was $45,000 (the prime basis for respondents' position on appeal) keyed the value to April 1, 1949. The resale was at substantially the same time as the breach.

There having been considerably more evidence relating to market value than the opinion relating to $45,000, including a resale at the time of breach at $32,500, the application of the above quoted rule applicable to nonsuits brings the conclusion that a trier of facts could reasonably deduce that the value to the plaintiffs at the time of the breach was $32,500 and hence the plaintiffs were damaged, as prayed.

Did the evidence conclusively establish a defense?

Defendant's second argument, that a defense of failure to mitigate damages had been conclusively proved, also depends upon uncontradicted proof that the market value of the house was actually $45,000. It is true that a nonsuit is proper when the plaintiff's evidence conclusively establishes a defense. Crebs v. Uplifters Country Home, 133 Cal.App. 88, 95, 23 P.2d 807; Nulsen v. Nulsen, 3 Cal.App.2d 407, 409, 39 P.2d 509; Meadows v. Emmett and Chandler, 86 Cal.App.2d 1, 11, 193 P.2d 785; 16 Cal.Jur.2d 215, § 48. However, since it was not conclusively proved that the market value of the house was greater than the contract price, and the contrary inference is permissible, it cannot be said that the defense was conclusively established here.

[7] In view of the fact that the case must be returned to the trial court for further hearing it seems appropriate to comment on the grounds given by the trial judge for the nonsuit. It is assumed that the reference to lack of diligence on the part of the appellants invokes the rule that a vendor must so act as to mitigate the damages to the vendee.

The rule as to diligence is set forth in Civil Code, section 3353, reading: "In estimating damages, the value of property to a seller thereof is deemed to be the price which he could have obtained therefor in the market nearest to the place at which it should have been accepted by the buyer, and at such time after the breach of the contract as would have sufficed, with reasonable diligence, for the seller to effect a resale."

In Royer v. Carter, supra, 37 Cal.2d 544, 233 P.2d 539, the Supreme Court squarely held that that section does not apply to sales of real property. And in logic, it should not, as the vendor is bound by the value to him (market value) at the time of breach, without regard for the time he sells.

Judgment is reversed.

Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of dismissal entered on an order sustaining the demurrers of defendants to the original complaint without leave to amend.

The complaint alleges:

1. On August 14, 1957, defendants "without warrant or legal right or authority, whatsoever, wilfully and maliciously caused, instigated, perpetrated, directed, procured, stirred up and agitated the arrest and impri[s]onment of the plaintiff, to his damage in the sum of $5,000.00"; they "did so corruptly and by collusive arrangement among themselves, commonly known as a 'fix,' on a false, malicious, untrue and fabricated misdemeanor contempt charge, without facts evidence or jurisdiction to support it."

2. Defendants wilfully and maliciously deprived plaintiff of his right to secure legal counsel, held him without bail, and failed and refused to comply with sections 849 and 4001 of the Penal Code,<sup>1</sup> but "forced plaintiff to be confined under maximum security to sleep on the floor, without proper care, in unfit, unsafe and overcrowded conditions, and in condemned detention facilities, thereby endangering his life, limbs and health to his further damage in the sum of $5,000.00."

3. Defendants wilfully, maliciously, and corruptly failed to protect the rights, health, safety and well-being of plaintiff while he was thus unlawfully confined; but they caused, directed, encouraged, suffered, and permitted brutal assaults on plaintiff to his further damage in the sum of $5,000.

4. Defendants maliciously caused and directed jail trustees to spray plaintiff three times in five days with a strong and burning solution about his head and body to his damage in the sum of $750.

5. Defendants had an untrained and incompetent person—not a doctor, and not qualified to do so—carelessly, recklessly, and negligently, without the consent of plaintiff and without warrant or authority, jab plaintiff in the right arm with a needle and remove and extract blood from him to his damage in the sum of $250.

The prayer is for $16,000 damages.

Defendants Grazer, Chantry, Fox, Rhone, and Biscailuz demurred jointly on the grounds the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against them; it is uncertain and ambiguous in various particulars; and several causes of action are not separately stated. Defendant Kennedy filed a separate demurrer on the same grounds. The record does not disclose the ground or grounds on which the demurrers were sustained.

PEEK, Justice.

This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment of conviction of murder of the second degree following a trial before the court sitting without a jury.

The evidence shows that defendant had loaned a dollar to one Williams upon his statement that he would repay defendant that same evening. However when defendant asked Williams for the return of the money, Williams stated he would pay the defendant when he got it. The following morning while the two men were in a bar in the city of Stockton, the subject of the loan was brought up again. Williams informed defendant he wasn't going to pay him the money. Williams thereafter left and with one Mingo walked across the street to a second bar. A few moments thereafter defendant entered the second bar and again demanded the money from Williams. When Williams informed him he had no money, defendant became angry and was admonished by Mingo to be quiet. Shortly thereafter Williams and the defendant came out of the bar and continued their argument on the sidewalk. Before leaving the bar defendant made sure that he had his knife in his pocket. Williams stood facing the defendant, holding his coat over his arm with his hands at his sides. According to one witness, Williams did not appear to be arguing with the defendant but did appear like a man who was "kind of drunk." Defendant said something to Williams who shook his head. At that moment defendant sprang at him and stabbed him in the chest, the impact of the blow knocking Williams off his feet. As he lay on his back on the sidewalk defendant kicked him in the face two or three times. Persons nearby helped Williams to his feet and to an adjourning hotel where he requested that someone call for an ambulance. Defendant immediately left the scene and went to his hotel where he hid the knife. When apprehended by the police that same evening, he denied any connection with the stabbing; however he later admitted his acts but stated they were done in self defense. The autopsy revealed that the cause of death was a stab wound which entered the pericardium of the heart causing an acute hemorrhage in the left chest.

[1] Defendant contends that under the record he at most could only be convicted of manslaughter. The Supreme Court of this state has defined murder of the second degree as " * * * a willful act characterized by the presence of malice aforethought and, at least ordinarily, by the specific intent to kill, and by the absence of premeditation and deliberation." People v. Bender, 27 Cal.2d 164, 181-182, 163 P.2d 8, 18. Applying this rule to the facts in this case, there can be no question but that all of the elements noted in the Bender case are present here.

But, says the defendant, much of the evidence relied upon by the prosecution in support of the conviction was inherently improbable; that is, that a person wounded as was the decedent could have arisen from the sidewalk and walked to a nearby hotel to summon aid. And, secondly, the testimony of the main witness for the prosecution was so contradictory and incredible as to be unworthy of belief.

As regards defendant's first argument, the record shows testimony by the autopsy surgeon that the length of survival of an individual receiving a like wound depended upon the facts of the particular case. Nothing to the contrary appears. Secondly, any conflict in the testimony of the state's witnesses, the weight to be given such testimony and its credibility, were matters for determination by the trier of fact and not this court on appeal. People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 104 P.2d 778.

[2] Defendant's further contention, that at most he could only be guilty of manslaughter, is also without merit. Under the provisions of Penal Code, section 192, subdivision 1, manslaughter is defined as the unlawful killing of a human being without malice "upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion." In amplification of such statutory definition, our Supreme Court has held that voluntary manslaughter is "a wilful act, characterized by the presence of an intent to kill engendered by sufficient provocation and by the absence of premeditation, deliberation and (by presumption of law) malice aforethought * * * [and that] to be sufficient to reduce a homicide to manslaughter, the heat of passion must be such as would naturally be aroused in the mind of an ordinary, reasonable person, under the given facts and circumstances, or in the mind of a person of ordinary self-control." People v. Bridgehouse, 47 Cal.2d 406, 413, 303 P.2d 1018, 1022. Here the record discloses ample evidence from which the trial court could reasonably have found that defendant did not act "upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion" but, to the contrary, that he acted wilfully, with malice and without provocation and hence was guilty of the crime of murder of the second degree. Under such circumstances this court would not be warranted in reducing the homicide to manslaughter or otherwise interfering with the judgment as entered.

The judgment is affirmed.

Gordon, Knapp & Gill and Joseph C. Gill, Los Angeles, for respondents.

PARKER WOOD, Acting Presiding Justice.

On October 1, 1956, the director of agriculture made an order (No. 63) determining minimum prices for packaged fluid milk in the Los Angeles County Marketing Area. The order provided that, in sales by a processor-distributor to a sub-distributor, the minimum price for a quart of such milk was 15 cents, and the minimum price for a half-gallon of milk was 29.5 cents.

The plaintiffs, who are wholesale sub-distributors of fluid milk within said area, sought to enjoin the director and certain members of his staff from enforcing the portion of the order relating to the minimum sub-distributor prices for milk in quart and half-gallon containers. They also sought to enjoin them from determining, in the future, minimum prices for packaged fluid milk sold by processor-distributors to sub-distributors.

The complaint alleged that defendants, in fixing the minimum sub-distributor prices, acted arbitrarily and failed to regularly pursue their statutory authority in that they fixed such prices upon the basis of the cost of packaging milk in fiber containers rather than upon the basis of the lower cost of packaging milk in glass containers.<sup>1</sup>

The trial court found that the minimum sub-distributor prices (for a quart and half gallon), fixed by the order, were based upon the cost of bringing processed milk to the sales platform packaged in fiber containers, and that the cost of bringing a quart of milk to the platform in a fiber container was approximately nine-tenths of a cent higher than the cost of bringing a quart of milk to the platform in a glass container.

One of the conclusions of law was that the defendants, in establishing the minimum sub-distributor prices for milk in quart and half-gallon containers, failed to regularly pursue their statutory authority in that they selected the cost of fiber containers rather than the lower cost of glass containers when they were determining the reasonably necessary costs of delivering such milk at the sales platform.

By the judgment the defendants and their successors were enjoined, as follows: (1) from enforcing the minimum sub-distributor price schedule which is in said order No. 63; (2) from selecting, in the determination of reasonably necessary costs in any future surveys in said area with respect to such prices, any packaging costs other than "the packaging costs which will result in the lowest total reasonably necessary costs at the platform"; and (3) from enforcing any minimum price established by any present or future order with respect to such sales unless the defendants comply with the provisions as set forth in subdivision (2) of this judgment (above referred to) in the determination of reasonably necessary costs.

1. The complaint also alleged that the order violated provisions of the federal and the state constitutions. The court found against plaintiffs on those issues, and such findings are not involved on appeal.

It was also alleged that there were other errors in determining the minimum prices. The trial judge stated, in the

The judgment also directed the defendants to notify all persons, whose names are on the Los Angeles area mailing list of the director, that the sub-distributor prices for quart and half-gallon sizes of milk, fixed by order No. 63, are no longer in effect.

Defendants appeal from the judgment.

As above indicated, the issue herein relates to the minimum prices for packaged fluid milk which a processor-distributor of such milk may charge a sub-distributor. A processor-distributor, as referred to herein, means a person who processes or prepares fluid milk for resale and who delivers the packaged milk (at the processor-distributor's platform) to wholesale or retail sub-distributors. Wholesale sub-distributors purchase milk at the sales platform of the processor-distributor and sell the milk to food markets, restaurants, and other wholesale customers. Retail sub-distributors purchase milk at the sales platform and sell it to consumers on home-delivery routes. Wholesale sub-distributors usually purchase and sell the milk in fiber containers. Retail sub-distributors usually purchase and sell the milk in glass containers. The minimum prices, at the sales platform, for a quart or half-gallon of milk are the same irrespective of whether the container is fiber or glass.

For the purpose of indicating part of the background of the present action, reference should be made to some of the prior orders of the director. Order No. 55, made by the director in December, 1953, determined the minimum prices for packaged fluid milk in sales by processor-distributors to sub-distributors. The prices therein were based upon the cost of packaging milk in glass containers. In March and April, 1956, the director held hearings for the purpose of determining whether order No. 55 should be findings, "That with respect to other issues of fact presented by the pleadings and on which evidence was received, the Court makes no Findings, it being of the view that additional Findings are unnecessary and therefore immaterial in light of the other Findings hereinabove made."

modified. Prior to those hearings the director made cost surveys in order to determine whether there had been any changes in the costs of processing and distributing milk. As a result of the surveys, the director prepared a schedule of proposed minimum prices for fluid milk in sales by processor-distributors to sub-distributors; and prior to said hearings (in March and April, 1956) he sent a copy of the schedule to all the distributors and sub-distributors in the marketing area. The schedule stated that the proposed minimum prices for milk (during summer months) at the platform of processor-distributors were 14.1 cents for a quart, and 28.2 cents for a half gallon. Those prices were based upon the cost of bringing milk to the platform in glass containers. At the hearings in March and April, 1956, numerous witnesses testified, and documentary evidence was received. Representatives of two processor-distributors testified that all the milk sold by those distributors to sub-distributors was packaged in fiber. Representatives of two other processor-distributors testified that substantially all the milk sold by those other distributors to sub-distributors was packaged in fiber. A wholesale sub-distributor testified that all the milk purchased by him from processor-distributors was packaged in fiber. The president of the Retail Milk Distributors Association testified that there were 78 or 79 members of his association; he believed that all the milk purchased by those members was purchased in glass bottles; most of the milk was purchased by them from processor-distributors. A retail sub-distributor testified that, at the hearing, he was representing himself and 12 other retail sub-distributors; he delivers milk in glass bottles on a home-delivery route; there are approximately 300 retail sub-distributors in the Los Angeles area; those distributors deliver milk in glass bottles on home-delivery routes; only a small amount of the milk delivered by such distributors is delivered in fiber containers. After those hearings the director made order No. 60 (effective May 10, 1956) which fixed the sub-distributor prices at the platform, as follows: 15 cents for a quart, and 29 cents for a half gallon. Those prices were based upon the cost of bringing milk to the platform in fiber containers. (The chief of the bureau of milk control, who presided at the hearings, testified that the minimum sub-distributor prices, as stated in order No. 60, were based on the cost of packaging in fiber, rather than on the cost of packaging in glass, for the reasons: (1) that the testimony of several processor-distributors, at the hearings, indicated that practically all the milk sold by them to sub-distributors was sold in fiber containers; and (2) it appeared, in connection with stability in the industry, that the sub-distributor prices based on the fiber cost were more appropriate.)

According to a statement by counsel for plaintiffs, made at the beginning of the trial herein, these plaintiffs commenced an action (not the present action) on June 2, 1956, to enjoin these defendants from enforcing order No. 60; thereafter the director made orders Nos. 62 and 63 (effective September 1 and October 1, 1956, respectively) which fixed minimum sub-distributor prices; the prices in order 62 were the same as in order 60; the prices in order 63 were the same as in order 60, except that the half-gallon price in order 63 was one-half cent higher than in order 60; before the date set for the trial of the action regarding order 60, the present action regarding the then existing order, No. 63, was commenced. (The former action was placed off calendar.)

Appellants (defendants) contend that the portion of the judgment enjoining them from enforcing the minimum sub-distributor prices, as stated in order No. 63, is not supported by the evidence. They argue to the effect that the evidence shows that the director did not act arbitrarily, or abuse his discretion, in fixing the minimum sub-distributor prices in order No. 63, based upon the cost of packaging milk in fiber containers; and that the director acted pursuant to legislative standards. They also argue to the effect that, in establishing such prices in order No. 63, the director's determination of "reasonably necessary costs" was supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole administrative record, insofar as the determination was based upon the cost of packaging milk in fiber containers; and there was substantial evidence, at the administrative hearings, that the fiber container was the predominant package at the platform.

[1-3] Respondents state in their brief that order 63 has been superseded by subsequent orders but that fact is immaterial herein. This court takes judicial notice of orders of the Department of Agriculture of this state. See O'Neal v. Seabury, 24 Cal. App.2d 308, 311, 74 P.2d 1082; Code Civ. Proc. sec. 1875, subdiv. 3; 18 Cal.Jur.2d 446-447, sec. 24. Orders 71 and 73 made by the director of agriculture (effective June 1 and September 1, 1958, respectively) provide that the minimum sub-distributor prices (during summer months) are: 15.2 cents for a quart, and 29.4 cents for a half gallon. Also, each of those orders provides, in part, that: "The costs used in determining the minimum prices contained in this Order include the costs of acquisition and maintenance by the seller of adequate reusable containers, and such costs are spread over the average period of use of such containers. Therefore, such minimum prices do not make any provision for the sale of such reusable containers to the customer. If a distributor or retail store charges a container deposit or a charge above the minimum prices contained herein or sells a reusable container to a customer, such deposit, charge, or container sales price shall be in addition to the applicable minimum prices set forth herein. * * *" It cannot be determined from orders 71 and 73 whether the minimum subdistributor prices were based on the cost of packaging milk in fiber or in glass. It does appear that those orders include a provision regarding reusable containers (that is, glass, etc.), which provision is, in part, that the "costs used in determining the minimum prices * * * include the costs of acquisition and maintenance by the seller of adequate reusable containers * * *." It might well be that the fact is, with respect to the present existing order, that the minium sub-distributor prices are not based on the cost of packaging milk in fiber (as were the prices in order 60), but are based on a lower cost of packaging in glass. In any event order No. 63, which is referred to in the judgment appealed from, has been superseded by various orders. The issue herein with respect to the minimum sub-distributor prices fixed by order No. 63 is now of academic interest only. In O'Neal v. Seabury, supra, 24 Cal.App.2d 308, at page 311, 74 P.2d 1082, at page 1084, it was said: "An appellate court will not review or determine questions which are moot, since the decision will serve no beneficial purpose to the litigants or at all." The said issue with respect to order No. 63 has become moot, and it need not be determined herein.

[4] Appellant contends further that the permanent injunction restraining the director in the matter of fixing minimum sub-distributor prices is invalid in that it is contrary to statutory provisions defining administrative duties of the director in fixing such prices. That portion of the judgment, just referred to, enjoins the director perpetually "From selecting, in the determination of reasonably necessary costs in any future cost surveys * * * with respect to * * * 'subdistributor prices,' any packaging costs * * * at the platform * * * other than the packaging costs which will result in the lowest total reasonably necessary costs at the platform." (Italics added.) Section 4355 of the Agricultural Code enumerates various economic factors, in addition to other matters, which are to be considered by the director in determining minimum prices. That section does not include the language included in the judgment herein, namely, "the lowest total reasonably necessary costs." The language in the section is "reasonably necessary costs." That section provides, in part: "In determining minimum wholesale * * * prices for fluid milk * * * the director shall take into consideration the following economic factors operative in such marketing area * * *. (e) The reasonably necessary cost of handling fluid milk * * * incurred by distributors, including all costs of hauling, processing, selling and delivering and reasonable return on necessary capital investment, for each of the several methods of distribution used in such marketing area * * as such costs are determined by impartial cost surveys, or examination of the books and records * * * of all, or such portion of the distributors in such marketing area as are reasonably determined by the director to be sufficiently representative to indicate the reasonably necessary costs of sufficient efficient distribution for such marketing area." (Italics added.) It thus appears that the director is required to determine the "reasonably necessary costs" expended by such portion of the distributors in the area as is determined by the director to be sufficiently representative to indicate the "reasonably necessary costs" of efficient distribution in the area. The director is vested with the administrative duty and authority to prescribe and enforce minimum wholesale prices for fluid milk. Agr.Code, sec. 4350. In performing such duties the director may exercise a wide discretion. See Knudsen Creamery Co. of California v. Brock, 37 Cal.2d 485, 495, 234 P.2d 26; Brock v. Superior Court, 109 Cal.App.2d 594, 604, 241 P.2d 283.

In Knudsen Creamery Co. of California v. Brock, supra, it was said at page 495 of 37 Cal.2d, at page 32 of 234 P.2d: "Considering the complexities of the administration of the Milk Control Act and the plain intent of the Legislature to give to the director a wide discretion in formulating regulations for the effective production and distribution of milk throughout the state, Order No. 26 must be sustained * * *."

In Ray v. Parker, 15 Cal.2d 275, at page 311, 101 P.2d 665, at page 684, it was said: "Courts should let administrative boards and officers work out their problems with as little judicial interference as possible. * * * Such boards are vested with a high discretion, and its abuse must appear very clearly before the courts will interfere."

In the present case the effect of the injunction is to require the director to select, in the future, the packaging cost which will result in the "lowest total" reasonably necessary costs at the platform irrespective of (1) whether the lowest cost container is the predominant container in the marketing area, or (2) whether the lowest cost container is in widespread or general use, or (3) whether there are any other factors in the area which would justify the selection of another kind of container as a part of the "reasonably necessary costs" of efficient distribution. The director, in determining packaging costs, will be confronted, of course, with varied combinations of cost factors. It might well be that under some circumstances the cost of packaging which would result in the "lowest total" reasonably necessary costs at the platform (as required by the injunction) would not be a proper factor in determining the reasonably necessary cost of sufficient efficient distribution in the area (as required by the statute). Section 4360 of the Agricultural Code<sup>1</sup> provides that under certain circumstances the

1. Section 4360 of the Agricultural Code provides, in part: "Following such hearings, investigation, surveys or examinations authorized above, the director shall establish minimum wholesale * * * prices * * * for distributors * * * which * * * prices shall be sufficient * * * to cover costs, as such costs are described in Section 4355 of this code * * * and reasonable return upon necessary capital investment * * *; provided, however, that whenever the director shall determine from credible evidence that any prices established as hereinabove set forth will not or would not conform to and effectuate the legislative declarations, purposes and intent set forth in this chapter, then he shall instead establish minimum wholesale * * prices which are higher or lower than those sufficient to cover said costs and reasonable return on capital investment, upon the condition that he shall determine in his judgment and shall find in writing with respect to such higher or lower minimum prices: (a) That such minimum prices will tend to maintain in the business of distributing fluid milk * * * such reasonably efficient retail stores and distributors of fluid milk * * * as the director finds necessary to insure to consumers * * * sufficient distribution facilities to supply the quantity of fluid milk * * * required director may fix minimum wholesale prices higher or lower than the "reasonably necessary costs" fixed pursuant to said section 4355 (above mentioned); provided he shall determine in his judgment and shall find in writing that such higher or lower minimum prices (1) will tend to maintain certain efficient conditions (therein specified) in the distribution of fluid milk, (2) will not tend to induce certain unfair trade conditions (therein specified), and (3) will tend to encourage the efficient marketing of fluid milk.

[5] In the present case the injunction, specifying a method to be followed by the director in fixing future minimum prices, improperly restricted the director in the exercise of the discretion vested in him as an administrative officer. The court erred in granting that injunction.

Reference should be made to the position plaintiffs occupy in asserting that the minimum prices should have been based on the cost of packaging milk in glass containers. Plaintiffs, as wholesale sub-distributors, buy milk in fiber containers only. Orders 60 and 63 fixed the minimum sub-distributor prices upon the basis of the cost of packaging milk in fiber containers. The cost of packaging milk in glass containers was less than the cost of packaging in fiber (about nine-tenths of a cent less per quart). Plaintiffs, who use only fiber containers, are complaining herein because the director did not fix the minimum prices on the basis of the lower cost of packaging in glass. It is to be noted that retail sub-distributors, who usually buy milk in glass containers and who are required to pay the fiber container prices, are not parties to this action and apparently are not contending that the director should have fixed the prices on the basis of packaging in glass. (Orders 60 and 63 provided that retail sub-distributors should make a service charge of five cents on each sale at a single delivery location.) If the minimum prices had been fixed on the basis of packaging in glass, the plaintiffs might have had the advantage of buying fiber packages of milk at the lower cost of glass packages. Plaintiffs assert, however, in substance that the minimum price is only a minimum, and that even if the minimum price were based on the cost of the glass package, the processor-distributors could charge more than the minimum for fiber packages and thereby require plaintiffs to pay a price based on the higher cost of the fiber package. It is to be noted, however, that plaintiffs alleged in their complaint that the milk market has been so highly competitive that minimum prices are in practical effect the maximum prices. If the minimum prices are controlling, as plaintiffs allege, and if the minimum prices are based on the cost of the glass package, as plaintiffs assert they should be, the plaintiffs would have the advantage of buying the fiber packages (which they use exclusively) at the lower cost of glass packages. Also, it is to be noted that under orders 60 and 63 (of which plaintiffs complain and which were based on the cost of packaging in fiber) plaintiffs' gross margin of profit was greater than it was under the prior order 55 (which was based on the cost of packaging in glass).

In view of the conclusions hereinabove stated it is not necessary to discuss other contentions on appeal.

The appeal with respect to the portion of the judgment enjoining defendants from enforcing order No. 63 (as to which portion the issue has become moot) is dismissed. The judgment is reversed as to all other portions thereof. Appellants to recover their costs on appeal.

Davis Carl ATKINS, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 2754.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Sept. 25, 1958.

Hearing Denied Nov. 19, 1958.

Accused was convicted of first degree burglary. The Superior Court, San Joaquin County, M. G. Woodward, J., entered judgment upon verdict and order denying new trial and accused appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that where accused testified that he had recently bought jacket which had been introduced in evidence and identified by witnesses as jacket worn by accused on evening of burglary, rebuttal testimony that witness had bought jacket for her son and had written his name, which was still there, inside jacket in India ink, and jacket had either been lost by her son or stolen from him prior to burglary, was admissible even though it might connect accused with another crime than one charged.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal Law §1159(2, 4)

Questions pertaining to weight of evidence and credibility of witnesses are matters which rest entirely with jury and before challenge to sufficiency of evidence can be upheld it must appear that on no reasonable hypothesis is there sufficient evidence to support conclusion reached in trial court.

2. Criminal Law §741(2)

In first degree burglary prosecution, where witness identified accused as man she saw in her yard after her doorbell had been rung, question whether witness had such view of accused as to enable her to make at trial positive identification which she did make was for jury.

3. Burglary §41(1)

Evidence sustained conviction for first degree burglary.

4. Burglary §46(7)

In first degree burglary prosecution, instruction that while mere possession of stolen property, however soon after taking, unexplained by person having possession, was not sufficient to justify conviction, it was circumstance which jury might consider in connection with other evidence in determining question of guilt or innocence was proper when there was evidence, that he could not satisfactorily explain, that accused, when arrested was in possession of $20 bill, and there was testimony to support inference that $20 bill had been taken from purse of witness by man she had seen in her yard after burglary.

5. Burglary §42(3)

In first degree burglary prosecution, evidence that accused, when arrested, was in possession of $20 bill, and testimony to support inference that $20 bill had been taken from purse of witness by man she saw in her yard after burglary, and failure of accused to satisfactorily account for his possession of such a bill was to be considered by jury along with other circumstances in determining issue of guilt.

6. Criminal Law §369(2), 683(1)

In first degree burglary prosecution, where accused testified that he had recently bought jacket which was introduced in evidence and identified by witnesses as jacket worn by accused on evening of burglary, rebuttal testimony that witness had bought jacket for her son and had written his name, which was still there, inside jacket in India ink, and jacket had either been lost by her son or stolen from him prior to burglary, was admissible even though it might connect accused with another crime than one charged.

7. Criminal Law §339

In first degree burglary prosecution, police officer's testimony, after witnesses' positive identification of accused, that he and other officers had taken accused out of pool hall to automobile in which witnesses were seated, that he informed accused that he was taking him there for purpose of identification, and that when they were near automobile occupants all indicated by finger motion or head nods that accused was man witness had seen in her yard and man that other two had seen proceeding down street and entering pool hall was admissible.

8. Criminal Law ⚖️444

In first degree burglary prosecution, refusal to permit voir dire examination of witness by accused's counsel, at time photograph of scene of alleged crime was introduced and witness testified concerning it, was not prejudicial error, where accused's counsel examined witness extensively on cross-examination touching fidelity of photograph and her ability to see under conditions existing at time of burglary.

9. Criminal Law ⚖️720(8), 1171(3)

In first degree burglary prosecution, although court struck police officer's testimony that accused was seen leaving place of burglary, prosecuting attorney's statement that accused was seen walking away from home where burglary took place in certain direction was not misconduct or prejudicial error, in view of testimony of other witnesses that they had seen accused leave premises where burglary was committed and walk down street in that direction.

Ralph D. Drayton, Sacramento, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., by Doris H. Maier, and Lloyd Hinkelman, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

The appeal herein is from the judgment and order denying motion for new trial following a jury verdict finding appellant guilty of the crime of burglary of the first degree.

Appellant contends that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict, that the trial court committed prejudicial error in the admission of evidence, in the giving of certain instructions, and in refusing appellant's counsel the right of preliminary cross-examination before admitting evidence of prior identification. Appellant also contends that the district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct. Before discussing these contentions we will summarize the evidence upon which the prosecution relies.

[1] This we will do in line with the well-settled rule that questions pertaining to the weight of evidence and the credibility of witnesses are matters which rest entirely with the jury and that before a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence can be upheld it must appear that on no reasonable hypothesis is there sufficient evidence to support the conclusion reached in the trial court. People v. Hills, 30 Cal.2d 694, 185 P.2d 11; People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 104 P.2d 778. There was testimony that at about 8:45 P.M. on September 19, 1956, the front doorbell of a Mrs. Siegfried was rung. She resides with her husband and son in a two-story house located at the intersection of Walnut and Lee Streets in the City of Lodi. She was in an upstairs bedroom and had been in bed for about thirty minutes when she heard the ring. Due to her ill health she disregarded the bell, but within a few minutes heard the rear door buzzer sound. She then arose and went to the window and looked out. The lights in the house were out and the doors were unlocked; it was a bright moonlight night and the area of Walnut and Lee Streets was lighted by two street lamps. There were no screens on the windows and no objects that would obstruct the view from Mrs. Siegfried's bedroom window to the ground at the rear of the house. As Mrs. Siegfried watched, she saw a man, whom she later identified as appellant, coming from the back of the house carrying a brown object over one arm and holding several objects in his hands. She saw the man take a few steps, then stop and throw a white object, and another article that made a thud when it landed, under an orange tree in the yard. She then saw the man proceed down Lee Street towards Oak Street. After the man left she searched under the orange tree and found a white purse belonging to her, and a jug or vase that had been on her dining room table. Returning to the house she discovered that there was missing a black patent leather purse which had contained a $20 bill, a $10 bill and a $5 bill. She also discovered that her husband's suit coat, which had been hanging on a dining room chair, was gone. She called her husband at his music store in town, and informed him and their son of the burglary. She gave them a description of the burglar as a man of slight build, with a thin face, dark, "slick" hair, who was wearing suntanned trousers and a dark green jacket. Mr. Siegfried notified the police and gave them his wife's description of the burglar. He and his son then drove down Oak Street towards Lee Street. They encountered a man they identified as appellant as he was crossing an intersecting street. They parked their vehicle and watched him cross the street. As he went, he was counting some green objects in his hands which they described as looking like greenbacks. They followed this man along Oak Street to the Rex Pool Hall which he entered about 9:10 P.M. They then went to the police station, where they reported appellant's whereabouts to the officers who requested them to get Mrs. Siegfried over to the pool hall for purposes of identification. The police went to the pool hall where they found appellant playing poker. There was testimony that appellant had entered the pool hall and purchased a beer, using a five or ten dollar bill to pay for it; that he then went into an adjoining room where a poker game was going on and joined the game at about 9:15 P.M.; that during thirty minutes of play he made two five dollar purchases of poker chips. There was testimony that at about 9:30 P.M. two officers, having received Mrs. Siegfried's description of the man who had left her yard, went to the pool hall and found appellant. They said he fitted the description they had received. They took him from the card game to the street where Mrs. Siegfried and her family were waiting in their automobile. Mrs. Siegfried there identified him as the man she had seen in her yard and her husband and son identified him as the man they had followed to the Rex Pool Hall. He was arrested and searched. The officers found a $20 bill, five $1 bills, and over $1 in change. When questioned about the money, appellant said he had been in Lodi four days, had come from Sacramento, and possessed $18 on his arrival; that he had worked two days since, earning a total of $15.50. When requested to account for the $20 bill he was unable to do so. Mrs. Siegfried's black patent leather purse was found on Oak Street about 100 feet from Lee Street. Some of the contents of the purse were found scattered on the sidewalk along Oak Street. Mr. Siegfried's coat was found on a lawn adjacent to the Oak Street sidewalk. There was testimony by the Siegfrieds and the arresting officers that when arrested appellant was wearing a dark green jacket.

[2,3] From the foregoing recital of evidence, it is apparent that appellant's contention the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict is without merit. While appellant seriously challenges the ability of Mrs. Siegfried to identify him as the man she saw in her yard after the doorbells had been rung, the argument goes merely to the weight of the evidence. It was for the jury to determine whether, under the circumstances as described in the testimony, Mrs. Siegfried had such a view of appellant as to enable her to make at the trial the positive identification which she did make. In addition to that identification the record as related contains many supporting circumstances. It is unnecessary to reiterate them. We hold the evidence was sufficient to support the jury's verdict.

[4,5] Appellant contends that People's Instruction No. 13 should not have been given. Therein the court told the jury that, although mere possession of stolen property, however soon after the taking, unexplained by the person having possession, was not sufficient to justify conviction, it was a circumstance which the jury might consider in connection with other evidence in determining the question of guilt or innocence. When arrested, appellant was in possession of a $20 bill and there was testimony to support an inference that a $20 bill had been taken from Mrs. Siegfried's purse by the man whom she had seen in her yard. This circumstance is coupled with the appellant's failure to satisfactorily account for his possession of such a bill. While of little weight, this evidence was nevertheless to be considered by the jury along with other circumstances in determining the issue of guilt. People v. Arbaugh, 82 Cal.App.2d 971, 187 P.2d 866. The giving of the instruction complained of was not error.

[6] Appellant complains of the court's permitting rebuttal evidence concerning the jacket worn by appellant on the night of the burglary. The jacket had been introduced in evidence and identified by a number of witnesses as the one which appellant had been wearing on that evening. Appellant testified that he had just recently bought the jacket at a Sacramento department store. In rebuttal, a Mrs. Gatzert testified that she had bought the jacket for her son and had written his name inside it with India ink. The name was still there. She testified further that the jacket had either been lost by her son or stolen from him several months prior to the burglary. There was no error in permitting the rebuttal testimony. Appellant argues that the district attorney introduced the rebuttal testimony merely for the purpose of rebutting appellant's testimony concerning his acquisition of the jacket. The rebuttal testimony was properly admitted in view of appellant's testimony and the fact that it might incidentally connect him with another crime than the one charged was not a circumstance sufficient to justify its exclusion. People v. Sizelove, 134 Cal.App. 2d 104, 285 P.2d 4.

that the officers had taken appellant out of the pool hall and to a car in which the Siegfrieds were seated; that he informed the appellant he was taking him there for purposes of identification; that when they were near the Siegfried car the occupants all indicated by finger motion or by head nods that appellant was the man Mrs. Siegfried had been in her yard and that the other two had seen proceeding down Oak Street to and entering the pool hall. Objection was made to that part of the testimony which included testimony of the extrajudicial identifications and the conduct of the prosecuting attorney in eliciting the testimony was assigned as prejudicial misconduct. Under the circumstances it was not error to permit the testimony objected to. People v. Slobodion, 31 Cal.2d 555, 559-560, 191 P.2d 1. The circumstances here are similar to those recited in the Supreme Court's discussion of the point in the Slobodion case.

[8] Appellant contends that the trial court committed prejudicial error by refusing his request for a voir dire examination of Mrs. Siegfried at the time People's Exhibit No. 8 was introduced in evidence. This exhibit is a photograph showing the area at the rear of Mrs. Siegfried's home, as she observed it from her upstairs bedroom window on the night of the burglary. The photograph shows a peace officer standing in a location marked by Mrs. Siegfried as that where she observed appellant on that night. Mrs. Siegfried had been shown the photograph and had testified that the officer depicted was standing where she had first seen appellant; that the photograph showed the window from which she had looked and the yard below which she had seen; that before the picture had been taken as depicting what she saw as she looked down she had assisted in placing the officer in the position occupied by the appellant. She said: "I could see everything that you have in that picture." The picture was then offered in evidence for illustrative purposes only and was admitted by the court over the objection of appellant's counsel for that limited purpose. From the record we think the jury must have fully understood this. Counsel asked for permission at that time to examine Mrs. Siegfried touching the fidelity of the picture as such illustration. The court refused at that time to permit this. While it would have been well to allow counsel's request, we think there is no error and certainly no prejudicial error in its refusal. On cross-examination counsel examined Mrs. Siegfried extensively touching the fidelity of the photograph and her ability to see under the conditions existing at the time of the burglary.

[9] Appellant cites two instances of what he claims to have been misconduct on the part of the prosecuting attorney. The first concerned the elicitation of testimony of extrajudicial identification hereinbefore discussed, and the second had to do with testimony obtained from the same officer with regard to the distance from the Siegfried home to the Rex Pool Hall and the time required to walk it. The officer said: "This distance was measured by an automobile speedometer \* \* \* it showed  $\frac{5}{40}$ ths of a mile \* \* \* from the sidewalk area and where the defendant was observed, seen leaving, to the front of the Rex Pool Hall." On motion the court struck out the reference to defendant's having been seen leaving the Siegfried home. The officer then testified as to the length of time it had taken him to walk the distance and that he had walked it at a normal walk or rate. Motion to strike was based upon want of evidence that appellant had walked the indicated route and counsel for the People said, "the defendant was seen walking away from this house in this direction here, up to Oak Street." The making of that statement was assigned as misconduct. In view of the fact that at the time of the occurrence of this incident in the trial Mrs. Siegfried had testified that she saw the appellant leave her premises and proceed down Oak Street and Mr. Siegfried had testified that he and his son had seen him walking down Oak Street and had followed him to the Rex Pool Hall, the inference could well be drawn that appellant had been seen walking the route indicated and that counsel's statement to that effect was at least inferentially correct. However, appellant's counsel asked the court to admonish the jury to disregard the statement and the court did so. It would have been better for counsel for the People to have stated his conclusion that the appellant had been seen walking the route as mere argument from the preceding testimony, but we are satisfied that there was nothing worthy of the name of misconduct and certainly nothing prejudicial in the assignment of error under discussion.

There are no other assignments of error which merit discussion.

For the reasons heretofore stated, the judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO,
a municipal corporation, Defendant,
Respondent and Appellant.

Civ. 17630.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Sept. 23, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 23, 1958.

Hearing Denied Nov. 19, 1958.

Action by pedestrian against city under Public Liability Act for injuries received when pedestrian tripped and fell over broken piece of sidewalk which was tilted so that one jagged end was raised inch and quarter above sidewalk and another end projected two inches over hollow space and which had allegedly existed for about six months before accident. The Superior Court, San Francisco County, Daniel R.

Shoemaker, J., granted city's motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict and motion for new trial, but limited new trial to issue of damages and city appealed from limited new trial order and pedestrian appealed from judgment notwithstanding verdict. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that questions whether condition of sidewalk was dangerous and defective one, whether it was of such nature that reasonable inspection would have disclosed its nature and existence, and whether it existed long enough to give city constructive notice of it in time to repair it were for jury, and that whether new trial should have been granted on all issues or on issue of damages alone was for trial court whose discretion in matter could not be reversed unless city demonstrated that such discretion had been abused.

Judgment notwithstanding verdict reversed and order granting new trial on issue of damages affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⚡934(1)

On appeal from judgment notwithstanding verdict for defendant, evidence most favorable to plaintiff must be accepted as true by appellate court.

2. Municipal Corporations ⚡761(1)

City is liable for dangerous and defective condition of sidewalk resulting in injury to pedestrian under Public Liability Act where condition is known to city and exists for reasonable time after city acquires such knowledge so that the city has reasonable opportunity to repair condition. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 53050, 53051.

3. Municipal Corporations ⚡755(1)

Duty imposed on city to keep its sidewalks in repair is not that of insurer, but duty is to maintain streets and sidewalks in reasonably safe condition. West's Ann. Gov.Code, §§ 53050, 53051.

4. Municipal Corporations ⚡821(6)

Whether city has complied with requirement of maintaining streets and sidewalks in reasonably safe condition and whether particular condition is dangerous or defective one are generally questions

Condition existing in public property is dangerous or defective one if hazard is one from which injury may reasonably be anticipated to those properly using area for purpose intended.

6. Municipal Corporations ⚡821(6)

If condition existing in city sidewalk is trivial then it is neither dangerous nor defective, and, as matter of law, city is not liable for injuries to pedestrian who fell over broken place in sidewalk. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 53050, 53051.

7. Municipal Corporations ⚡768(1)

In order for city to be liable under Public Liability Act for injuries sustained because of condition of city sidewalk, condition existing must be such that it constitutes danger to persons using sidewalk in lawful manner. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 53050, 53051.

City is not liable for minor defects in sidewalk that could not reasonably be anticipated to result in accidents, but public is entitled to be protected from even small defects if injury is likely to result from them. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 53050, 53051.

9. Municipal Corporations ⚡857

Fact that person has been proximately injured as result of defect is some indication that condition is dangerous or defective.

10. Municipal Corporations ⚡788(1)

Before city can be liable under Public Liability Act it must have knowledge of dangerous or defective condition, but actual notice of dangerous or defective condition is not required. West's Ann.Gov. Code, §§ 53050, 53051.

11. Municipal Corporations ⚡791(2)

City will be charged with, and finder of fact may find that city has, constructive knowledge of dangerous or defective condition if condition has existed long enough that it may be inferred that reasonable in-

Philander Brooks Beadle, John A. Hodges, San Francisco, for plaintiff and appellant.

Dion R. Holm, City Atty., George E. Baglin, Deputy City Atty., San Francisco, for defendant and appellant.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff, Mimis Gentekos, tripped and fell over a broken place in the sidewalk on the north side of Eddy Street in San Francisco. He brought this action against the city pursuant to sections 53050 and 53051 of the Government Code for the injuries allegedly then received. After defendant's motions for a nonsuit and for a directed verdict had been denied, the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $8,000. Judgment was entered accordingly. The defendant then moved for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, or, in the alternative, for a new trial. The trial court granted both motions, but limited the new trial to the issue of damages. Plaintiff has appealed from the judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and defendant has appealed from the limited new trial order, claiming that if a new trial is to be granted it should be on all issues.

The making and granting of these two apparently conflicting motions is permitted by statute. § 629, Code Civ.Proc. When both motions are granted "the order granting a new trial shall be effective only if, on appeal, the judgment notwithstanding the verdict is reversed and the order granting a new trial * * *, if appealed from, is affirmed." § 629, Code Civ.Proc.

The accident happened shortly after 9 a. m. on July 15, 1954, on the sidewalk located on the north side of Eddy Street between Mason and Taylor Streets in downtown San Francisco. The sidewalk in this area is about 12 feet wide. The day was dry and the sky was overcast. Plaintiff lives about a block from where he fell. He was walking towards Market Street. He had walked along Eddy Street occasionally in the past and knew that the sidewalk was "kind of rough down there" but had never observed the broken place where he fell. At the time of the accident there was no other pedestrian near the place where it occurred.

The defect in the sidewalk was located about seven feet from the curb and between a laundry and the entrance to the Empress Hotel. The sidewalk for some distance surrounding the defect is in good condition. The defective section was pie-shaped. Its longest dimension, which was parallel to the curb, measured 13 inches, while at the east end it measured 10½ inches and on the west end 4½ inches. The broken portion was loose and tilted so that the west side of the break was raised about an inch and a quarter above the sidewalk. The edges of the break were irregular and jagged, and some parts of the broken piece were missing. There was a hollowed out space below a part of the broken portion so that in this area the broken piece projected about two inches above the bottom of the depression. The plaintiff was walking easterly and fell over the westerly edge of the defect, at the point where it is highest above the surrounding sidewalk. These physical facts were testified to by an engineer who examined the area the afternoon of the accident, and by several lay witnesses. Photographs taken the day of the accident amply corroborate the descriptive testimony.

[1] There was substantial evidence that the defect had existed for about six months before the accident. There is some conflict on this issue, but this being an appeal from a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the evidence most favorable to the plaintiff must be accepted as true. During this six-month period several people stumbled over the defect, but there is no evidence that anyone had fallen. There was no evidence that anyone had ever complained to the city about the condition, and admittedly there was no evidence that the city otherwise had actual notice that the defect existed.

The Appeal from the Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict.

This action was brought under the Public Liability Act now codified in sections 53050 and 53051 of the Government Code. Under section 53050 the term "public property" is defined as including the public streets. Section 53051 provides that:

"A local agency is liable for injuries to persons and property resulting from the dangerous or defective condition of public property if the legislative body, board, or person authorized to remedy the condition:

"(a) Had knowledge or notice of the defective or dangerous condition.

"(b) For a reasonable time after acquiring knowledge or receiving notice, failed to remedy the condition or to take action reasonably necessary to protect the public against the condition."

[2] Under these provisions, if the conditions set forth in the section are shown to exist, a city is liable for the dangerous and defective condition of a sidewalk resulting in injury to a pedestrian. Ackers v. City of Los Angeles, 40 Cal.App.2d 50, 104 P.2d 399.

Under the sections the conditions that must exist are, first the condition must be a "dangerous or defective" one; second, the city must have knowledge of the condition; and third, the condition must exist for a reasonable time after acquiring such knowledge so that the city has a reasonable opportunity to repair the condition.

[3-9] The duty imposed on the city to keep its sidewalks in repair is not that of an insurer. The duty is to maintain the streets and sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition. Whether the city has complied with this requirement, that is, whether the condition complained of constitutes a "dangerous or defective" condition is normally a question of fact. George v. City of Los Angeles, 11 Cal.2d 303, 79 P.2d 723. A condition is a dangerous or defective one if the hazard is one from which injury may reasonably be anticipated to those properly using the area for the purpose intended. Jones v. City of Los Angeles, 104 Cal.App.2d 212, 231 P.2d 167. Whether a particular condition is a dangerous or defective one is generally a question of fact. Sandstoe v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 28 Cal. App.2d 215, 82 P.2d 216; Bauman v. City and County of San Francisco, 42 Cal.App.2d 144, 108 P.2d 989. Of course the condition must be one that is truly dangerous or defective. If it is trivial then it is neither dangerous nor defective, and, as a matter of law, the city is not liable. The condition existing must be such that it constitutes a danger to persons using the sidewalk in a lawful manner. Bigelow v. City of Ontario, 37 Cal.App.2d 198, 99 P.2d 298. In other words, a city is not liable for minor defects that could not reasonably be anticipated to result in accidents (Whiting v. City of National City, 9 Cal.2d 163, 69 P.2d 990; Balkwill v. City of Stockton, 50 Cal.App.2d 661, 123 P.2d 596), but the public is entitled to be protected from even small defects if injury is likely to result from them. Barrett v. City of Sacramento, 128 Cal.App. 708, 18 P.2d 356; Hook v. City of Sacramento, 118 Cal.App. 547, 5 P.2d 643. The fact that a person has been proximately injured as a result of the defect is some indication that the condition is dangerous or defective. Balkwill v. City of Stockton, 50 Cal.App.2d 661, 123 P.2d 596; Bauman v. City and County of San Francisco, 42 Cal.App.2d 144, 108 P.2d 989; see generally 35 Cal.Jur.2d pp. 296 to 305, §§ 511 to 518.

In the present case it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the defect was so trivial that reasonable minds could not differ as to whether the condition was dangerous or defective. That being so, that was a fact question.

[10, 11] But this question of whether a defect is or is not a minor one becomes important in another connection. Before a city can be liable under the public liability act it must have knowledge of the dangerous or defective condition. Watson v. City of Alameda, 219 Cal. 331, 26 P.2d 286; Nicholson v. City of Los Angeles, 5 Cal.2d 361, 54 P.2d 725; Howard v. City of Fresno, 22 Cal.App.2d 41, 70 P.2d 502. But actual notice of the dangerous or defective condition is not required. The finder of the fact may find that the city has constructive knowledge, if the condition has existed long enough that it may be inferred that a reasonable inspection would have ascertained its existence. Hook v. City of Sacramento, 118 Cal.App. 547, 5 P.2d 643; Van Dorn v. City & County of San Francisco, 103 Cal.App.2d 714, 230 P.2d 393. A city will be charged with constructive notice of substantial defects which have existed for some time, and which are so conspicuous that a reasonable inspection would have disclosed them. Peters v. City & County of San Francisco, 41 Cal.2d 419, 260 P.2d 55. However, if the defect is so minor that it would not be disclosed by a reasonable inspection no liability attaches to the city. There are a substantial number of cases holding that, although a particular defect may have created a dangerous or defective condition, it was not so conspicuous as to give the city constructive notice of its existence. See Nicholson v. City of Los Angeles, 5 Cal.2d 361, 54 P.2d 725; Whiting v. City of National City, 9 Cal.2d 163, 69 P.2d 990; Balmer v. City of Beverly Hills, 22 Cal.App.2d 529, 71 P.2d 854; Beckley v. Vezu, 23 Cal.App.2d 371, 73 P.2d 296; Barrett v. City of Claremont, 41 Cal.2d 70, 256 P.2d 977; Cheyney v. City of Los Angeles, 119 Cal.App.2d 75, 258 P.2d 1099; Graves v. Roman, 113 Cal. App.2d 584, 248 P.2d 508; Ness v. City of San Diego, 144 Cal.App.2d 668, 301 P.2d 410; Beck v. City of Palo Alto, 150 Cal. App.2d 39, 309 P.2d 125; Sischo v. City of Los Banos, 26 Cal.App.2d 642, 80 P.2d 116, 1020; Sischo v. City of Los Banos, 37 Cal.App.2d 717, 100 P.2d 305; Meyer v. City of San Rafael, 22 Cal.App.2d 46, 70 P.2d 533.

The fundamental philosophy of these cases was stated as follows in Whiting v. City of National City, 9 Cal.2d 163, 165, 69 P.2d 990, 991, as follows: "A municipality cannot be expected to maintain the surface of its sidewalks free from all inequalities and from every possible obstruction to travel. Minor defects due to continued use, or action of the elements, or other cause, will not necessarily make the city liable for injuries caused thereby."

In determining whether a defect is or is not so conspicuous as to give the city constructive notice of it, some courts in this and other jurisdictions have tended to fix rigid tests, and to hold that a defect of a certain size is, as a matter of law, too trivial to constitute a dangerous or defective condition or too trivial to give the city constructive notice of it, while if the defect is over a certain height it becomes a question of fact as to whether it is dangerous or defective or so conspicuous that a reasonable inspection would have disclosed its condition. See Annotation, 37 A.L.R. 2d 1187.

height or depth. The nature of the defect, that is, whether it is a constructional one, one caused by natural causes such as normal wear or tear, the elements, or tree roots, etc., or whether it is an artificial break in the sidewalk, and how long it has existed are all important. The condition of the sidewalk surrounding the defect is important, as is its location on the sidewalk. All of the cases recognize that the basic questions are whether a reasonable inspection would have disclosed the defect, and, if so, whether the city, having knowledge of it, should have repaired it. These only become questions of law when reasonable minds cannot differ on them. If reasonable minds can differ on those questions, or if they are reasonably debatable, they are questions of fact and should be submitted to the jury. There are many cases so holding. A few of them are: Peters v. City & County of San Francisco, 41 Cal.2d 419, 260 P.2d 55; Hook v. City of Sacramento, 118 Cal.App. 547, 5 P.2d 643; Balkwill v. City of Stockton, 50 Cal.App.2d 661, 123 P.2d 596; Newman v. County of San Mateo, 121 Cal.App.2d 825, 264 P.2d 594; Ervin v. City of Los Angeles, 117 Cal.App. 2d 303, 256 P.2d 25; Sebern v. City of Riverside, 42 Cal.App.2d 701, 109 P.2d 747; Warren v. City of Los Angeles, 91 Cal.App.2d 678, 205 P.2d 719; Van Dorn v. City & County of San Francisco, 103 Cal.App.2d 714, 230 P.2d 393; Maddern v. City & County of San Francisco, 74 Cal. App.2d 742, 169 P.2d 425; Jones v. City of Los Angeles, 74 Cal.App.2d 183, 168 P.2d 480; Barrett v. City of Sacramento, 128 Cal.App. 708, 18 P.2d 356; George v. City of Los Angeles, 51 Cal.App.2d 311, 124 P.2d 872; Sheldon v. City of Los Angeles, 55 Cal.App.2d 690, 131 P.2d 874; Ackers v. City of Los Angeles, 40 Cal.App. 2d 50, 104 P.2d 399; Owen v. City of Los Angeles, 82 Cal.App.2d 933, 187 P.2d 860; Allen v. City of Los Angeles, 43 Cal.App. 2d 65, 110 P.2d 75; Fackrell v. City of San Diego, 26 Cal.2d 196, 157 P.2d 625, 158 A.L.R. 773; *Bauman v. [14,15] No useful purpose would be served by analyzing the facts of those cases holding that a particular defect is so minor as to relieve the city of liability as a matter of law and those holding that the question of liability is one of fact. No doubt, some of the cases are apparently inconsistent with some of the others. This conflict has arisen because some of the cases seem to have applied a tape measure to the defect to determine whether or not the question of liability is one of fact or of law. But no California court has expressly adopted the tape measure test. Obviously, such a rigid test is unsound. The size of the defect is a factor, an important factor, that must be considered, but it is not the only factor. The cases all declare that all of the conditions surrounding the defect must be considered in the light of the facts of the particular case, before the issue can be determined. All of the cases purport to adopt the same rule—if reasonable minds can differ on the question it is one of fact, and that it is only when reasonable minds must come to the conclusion that the defect is so trivial that a reasonable inspection would not have disclosed it, that the question becomes one of law. Each case must be determined on its own facts.

[16] In the present case a series of photographs of the defect and of the area surrounding it were introduced into evidence. We have examined those photographs. An expert and several lay witnesses described the defect in detail. We have read their testimony. The evidence shows that this defect was not the type of defect caused by natural wear or tear, or by natural causes. It was an artificial condition that existed in about the center of a 12-foot heavily traveled sidewalk that was otherwise smooth and level. The broken piece was loose and tilted, and its edges jagged and broken. It projected at least an inch and a quarter abruptly above the surrounding area. It existed in this condition for six months. After looking at the pictures and reading the testimony we think that it was for the jury to determine whether the condition was a dangerous and defective one, whether it was of such a nature that a reasonable inspection would have disclosed its nature and existence, and whether it existed long enough to give the city constructive notice of it in time to repair it. Certainly, reasonable minds can differ on these questions. That being so, they should not have been taken from the jury. The judgment notwithstanding the verdict must be reversed.

The Order for a Limited New Trial.

As already noted, the city has taken a precautionary appeal from the order granting the new trial on the issue of damages alone, contending that the new trial should have been granted on all of the issues.

[17,18] It is, of course, elementary, that where issues are severable the trial court may grant a new trial on one of the issues and deny it as to others. It is also obvious that the issue of liability in the instant case is severable from the issue of damages. On the issue of liability the evidence supports the implied findings of the jury. On the issue of damages the evidence was highly conflicting, and would readily support a finding of damages in a lesser sum. Therefore, whether the new trial should have been granted on all of the issues or on the issue of damages alone was a question for the trial court. Its discretion in the matter cannot be reversed unless appellant demonstrates that such discretion has been abused. (See generally 36 Cal.Jur.2d p. 157, § 17.)

[19,20] In the present case the plaintiff has not appealed from the limited new trial order. He, then, cannot and does not challenge it. It is the defendant who contends that it was entitled to a new trial on all of the issues. In this connection it is urged that the jury was erroneously instructed on the issue of liability and that certain instructions on that issue were erroneously refused. We have read the entire charge on that issue. While some of the instructions were awkwardly expressed, and others could have been given, as a whole, the charge was full, fair and equitable and adequately covered all of the basic issues.

Appellant first challenges the instruction relating to the standard of care relating to a pedestrian. It states: "In the absence of notice or knowledge to the contrary, a pedestrian exercising ordinary care and making normal use of a public sidewalk has a right to assume that it is in reasonably safe condition, and while he must use ordinary care for his personal safety and make reasonable use of his faculties to avoid injury to himself, he is not required to keep his eyes fixed on the ground or to be on a constant lookout for danger." (R.T. 137.) (Italics added.) The court also instructed that "Whether plaintiff made reasonable use of his faculties and whether he should have observed the condition which allegedly caused him injury are questions of fact for you to decide."

The appellant complains that the instruction first quoted is predicated on the premise that the city must furnish a pedestrian a safe sidewalk, and contends that the city is under no such duty.

[21,22] The challenged portion of the instruction is taken almost verbatim from language used in the recent case of Peters v. City & County of San Francisco, 41 Cal. 2d 419, at page 424, 260 P.2d 55. While it has frequently been held that it is dangerous to frame an instruction based upon isolated extracts from court opinions, this does not mean that it must never be done, or that to do so is necessarily error. The Peters case correctly states the law as to duty of pedestrians using the sidewalk and the duty of the city to keep the sidewalk in repair. The cases cited by appellant relate to the duty of a pedestrian crossing a street, an entirely different problem from the one here involved. There was no error in the two challenged instructions.

The city next complains that the refusal of the court to give the following requested instructions was reversible error:

"A duty rests on the plaintiff to exercise reasonable care to look where he is going and to see that which is in plain sight in front of him. It is negligence to fail to exercise such care."

"It is the duty of every adult person, regardless of age or sex, at all times to exercise reasonable care and precaution for his own safety while walking on the sidewalk. If a claimed defect is or should be reasonably apparent to a pedestrian who is exercising reasonable care, the pedestrian is required by law to exercise reasonable care to avoid injury therefrom and if he fails to exercise such care and as a proximate result is injured, he is in such case guilty of contributory negligence and cannot recover any damages."

"It is the duty of a pedestrian traveling on a public sidewalk to exercise reasonable care for his personal safety and to make reasonable use of his faculties of sight, and if he fails to do so and is injured by reason of such failure, he cannot recover damages on account of such injury."

[23] These proffered instructions undoubtedly state correct principles of law applicable to the facts of the instant case. But the fact that they were not given in the language desired by the city was not error. The fact is that the issues involved were adequately covered by other instructions. The court instructed that a pedestrian "must use ordinary care for his personal safety and make reasonable use of his faculties to avoid injury to himself"; that whether "plaintiff made reasonable use of his faculties and whether he should have observed the condition which allegedly caused him injury are questions of fact" for the jury to decide; that "Contributory negligence is negligence on the part of the person injured, which, cooperating with the negligence of another, helps in proximately causing the injury of which the former thereafter complains"; and that one "who is guilty of contributory negligence may not recover from another for the injury suffered."

[24,25] These instructions adequately covered the field. It must be remembered that the issue as to the possible contributory negligence of the pedestrian and the issue as to whether a reasonable inspection should have disclosed the defect are not identical. A pedestrian is not an inspector. As was said in Peters v. City & County of San Francisco, 41 Cal.2d 419, 424, 260 P.2d 55, 59, a pedestrian making normal use of a sidewalk in the absence of knowledge to the contrary "has a right to assume that it is in reasonably safe condition, and while he must use ordinary care for his personal safety and make reasonable use of his faculties to avoid injury to himself, he is not required to keep his eyes fixed on the ground or to be on a constant lookout for danger. [Citing many authorities.] Even if a defect is one which might be visible to a person who is looking for such a condition, it does not follow that a pedestrian is guilty of negligence as a matter of law in failing to see and avoid it. [Citing authorities.] Whether plaintiff made reasonable use of her faculties and whether she should have observed the condition which caused her injury were questions of fact. [Citing authorities.]" These principles were adequately covered in the instructions given. While the proffered instructions repetitively stated the same rules, appellant cannot properly complain that its theory was not overemphasized or not stated in a particular way, so long as the theory was adequately and fairly covered. Jaeger v. Chapman, 95 Cal.App.2d 520, 213 P.2d 404. That is this case.

[26] The city also complains that an instruction on constructive notice assumed that the condition complained of was dangerous and defective and would import notice. While the challenged instruction was awkwardly expressed, the court fully and carefully instructed that: "* * * before the plaintiff may be entitled to your verdict, you must find from a preponderance of the evidence:

"First, that plaintiff suffered an injury of which a proximate cause was some dangerous or defective condition to the sidewalk on Eddy Street."

"A dangerous or defective condition, as denoted by the use of that term in these instructions, means a condition in the sidewalk in question that would have caused it to be not reasonably safe for persons who, with ordinary care for their own safety, used said sidewalk, or might have used it for the purpose intended, or as expressly or impliedly invited, or as permitted by the controlling authority."

Thus the jury was properly instructed that the issue of whether the condition was such as to import notice was a question of fact for it to determine. No possible confusion could have resulted from the awkward expression of the rule in the challenged instruction.

[27] The trial court refused a proffered instruction to the effect that to impose liability the jury must not only find that the city had notice of the defect, but also of its dangerous character. The proffered instruction correctly stated this principle. But the principle was fully and adequately covered by a series of instructions appearing on pages 133, 134, 135 and 136 of the Reporter's Transcript. Thus failure to give the proffered instruction was not error.

[28,29] Appellant also complains of the refusal to give a proffered instruction on unavoidable accident. Such an instruction is confusing and misleading and superfluous and serves no useful purpose. Butigan v. Yellow Cab Co., 49 Cal.2d 652, 320 P.2d 500. Failure to give it was not error.

The other errors complained of are of a minor character and do not require discussion. Suffice it to say that none of them was prejudicially erroneous.

The judgment notwithstanding the verdict is reversed; the order granting a new trial and limiting such new trial to the issue of damages alone is affirmed.

Civ. 17338.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Sept. 25, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 24, 1958.

Hearing Denied Nov. 19, 1958.

Action to recover for materials and services, and for foreclosure of mechanics' liens. The Superior Court, Alameda County, Charles Wade Snook, J., rendered judgment for plaintiffs, and an appeal was taken. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that the evidence would sustain finding that defendants had been engaged in joint venture.

1. Pleading ⚡252(2)

Technically, an amended complaint will supersede original complaint unless there is something in former showing that it is to be considered merely an amendment to the complaint.

2. Pleading ⚡279(1)

Technically, a "supplementary" complaint is supposed to deal only with acts arising after filing of original complaint, and has nothing to do with amendment to conform to proofs.

4. Appeal and Error ⚡230

Question as to sufficiency of pleadings to raise issue came too late when first raised on motion for new trial.

5. Joint Ventures ⚡1.15

In action for materials and services, and to foreclose mechanics' liens, evidence would sustain finding of joint venture between defendants.

6. Joint Ventures ⚡8

Whether there was joint venture is question of fact for trial court to determine from facts and inferences therefrom.

7. Joint Ventures ⚡1.4, 1.15

There need be no specific formal agreement between joint adventurers, and joint venture may be shown by parties' conduct and circumstances from which it is made to appear that the relationship was, in fact, entered into.

8. Joint Ventures ⚡1.7

An agreement to share profits of joint venture implies an agreement to share proportionately in losses.

9. Joint Ventures ⚡1.7

Where failure to provide for sharing of losses is mere contrivance to allow party to escape liability for loss, law will not permit it and will construe relationship as joint venture.

10. Joint Ventures ⚡1.8

Joint venture may exist even though parties thereto do not have equal control of operation.

11. Joint Ventures ⚡7

In absence of special agreement, one joint venturer does not have right to bind others.

12. Joint Ventures ⚡8

In action for materials and services and for foreclosure of mechanics' liens, evidence would sustain finding that one of defendant joint venturers had been authorized to bind other in purchase of materials or labor.

13. Joint Ventures ⚡7

Where purchasing venturer had authority to make purchases, mere fact that seller did not know of relationship would not preclude him from holding both joint venturers liable.

Questions Presented.

1. Was the pleading of joint venture eliminated by the "amended and supplemental complaint?"
  2. Is the finding of joint venture supported?
  3. Is the finding of joint venture one of fact?
  4. Did the court fail to find on a material issue?
  5. Alleged error in refusing to permit defendant Tarman to file cross-complaint against Van Vleck.
  6. Did the court err in dismissing Bank of America as a defendant?
  7. Was sending letters by plaintiffs to the trial judge after submission prejudicial?
- Record.

The complaints of the materialmen were consolidated for trial, and were identical in their allegations except for the amounts sought. There were two causes of action, enter judgment in favor of appellant Tarman on the cross-complaint of said respondent Burt. See order at end of this opinion. No further mention of the Burt cross-complaint and Burt judgment will be made.

one for foreclosure of mechanics' liens, the second for materials and services. Both counts alleged that the materials and services were furnished at the request of defendant Van Vleck and used in the construction of houses on property of defendants J. H. and Bessie Tarman, which houses were being constructed by defendants J. H. and Bessie Tarman and Van Vleck as a joint venture, and that all material and labor was furnished with the knowledge and consent and at the request of said Tarmans. Defendant Van Vleck defaulted. The Tarmans denied the allegations concerning joint venture. After the action was tried and submitted for decision, plaintiff moved to file an "amended and supplemental complaint" to conform to the proofs. This complaint set up three causes of action: (1) alleging an oral third party beneficiary contract between Tarman and Van Vleck; (2) such a written contract, and (3) an agency and employee relationship between Tarman and Van Vleck. Also the parties stipulated to eliminate the lien foreclosure claims as the houses and lots had been sold at trustee's sale under deeds of trust held by Bank of America which were superior to the mechanics' liens.

The court found that Tarman and Van Vleck were in a joint venture in the construction of the homes and gave plaintiffs personal judgment against both. It found against plaintiffs on the three theories set up in the amended and supplemental complaint.

1. Amended and Supplemental Complaint.

As stated, both counts of the original complaint, in addition to alleging that the materials and labor were furnished with the knowledge and consent and at the request of Tarman, alleged that in the construction of the houses Tarman and Van Vleck were engaged in a joint venture. The three causes of action in the amended and supplemental complaint are inconsistent with those in the original complaint. The filing of the second complaint appears to leave the pleadings in a confused situation. The second complaint incorporated by reference certain allegations of the first complaint but did not incorporate any of the joint venture allegations.

Defendant contends that the second complaint superseded the first one and therefore there was no cause of action on joint venture, and, as the court found against plaintiff on the allegations of the second complaint, there is no pleading of joint venture to support a finding and judgment on that ground.

[1-4] Although technically an amended complaint will supersede the original complaint unless there is something in the former showing that it is to be considered merely an amendment to the complaint and a "supplementary" complaint is supposed to deal only with facts arising subsequently to the filing of the original complaint and has nothing to do with amendment to conform to the proofs,<sup>2</sup> it appears in this case that regardless of its title, the second complaint was intended to be additional to the original complaint and not in substitution of it. Although entitled "amended and supplemental complaint" it states in the beginning "Comes now plaintiffs, and * * * file herein their supplemental complaint * * *" (Emphasis added.) It alleges no facts occurring subsequent to the filing of the original complaint. The introductions to both the second and third causes of action in the second complaint state "* * * by way of supplement to and amendment of complaint on file herein to conform to proof * * *" Its only prayer is "* * * plaintiffs pray judgment as is set out in the respective complaints of each of the plaintiffs on file herein." That the trial court understood that the pleading of the issue of joint venture was not eliminated is shown by its referring in its findings and judgment to the "supplementary complaint" and by its finding of joint venture. Too, the parties briefed in the trial court the issue of joint venture without any contention that it was not an issue in the case. The record fails to show that defendant offered any counter-findings showing that the pleading question had been raised. According to the record no question of the sufficiency of the pleadings to raise the issue of joint venture was raised until the hearing of the motion for new trial. It was too late to raise it then and now. Moreover, "It is not what a paper is named, but what it is that fixes its character." Parnham v. Parnham, 32 Cal.App. 2d 93, 96, 89 P.2d 189, 190. Defendant was in nowise misled by the second pleading. He had abundant opportunity to, and did, brief the question of joint venture. "No error or defect in a pleading is to be regarded unless it affects substantial rights. * * * Moreover, the matter of pleading becomes unimportant when a case is fairly tried upon the merits and under circumstances which indicate that nothing in the pleadings misled the unsuccessful litigant to his injury." Buxbom v. Smith, 23 Cal.2d 535, 542, 543, 145 P.2d 305, 308.

2. Joint Venture.

[5] While the evidence probably is sufficiently conflicting to support a contrary finding, there is plenty of it to support the finding that Tarman and Van Vleck were engaged in a joint venture. It is conceded that none of the plaintiffs supplied labor or materials at any one's request other than Van Vleck's and that they did not know Tarman's connection until after the labor and material had been supplied. The evidence supporting the finding follows: Van Vleck was a building contractor. In May of 1952, Tarman, for whom Van Vleck had previously worked, told him that he had 59 lots available in Hayward Heights. Tarman offered Van Vleck the three best lots for $4,250 and the remainder at a later date for a lower price. Van Vleck accepted the three and Tarman said he would put a deed of them in escrow. Two or three weeks later Tarman asked Van Vleck to sign a note for $4,250 for the lots. This Van Vleck did. To obtain construction loans Van Vleck gave the Bank of America a deposit receipt as evidence of title. It showed Tar-man as seller, Van Vleck as buyer, and a cash price of $4,250. Van Vleck had never executed the receipt in conjunction with Tarman or delivered it to him. August 10, 1952, Van Vleck started construction of the houses on the lots. In the middle of October, Tarman asked that the property be deeded back to him as he needed the deed to show that the property was a part of his assets. He stated that he did not intend to record the deed but would hold it until the houses were completed, and sold, which would enable him to put in escrow a demand for the $4,250. Van Vleck executed the deed and on November 10 Tarman recorded it. Van Vleck did not discover that it was recorded until some time in February, 1953. Plaintiffs furnished materials and labor for the construction of the houses. Eventually Van Vleck got behind in his payments to them and was unable to obtain the remainder of the progress payments on the construction loan. In January, 1953, at a time when the houses were substantially completed, Van Vleck was employed by Tarman to supervise the subdividing of some of Tarman's acreage at Paradise, being paid weekly a salary and expenses. About March 2, 1953, Tarman told Van Vleck that he, Tarman, would take care of all work to be done on the Hayward houses and would pay the bills therefor, and would sell the houses, as Van Vleck would be better off working in Paradise for Tarman. Shortly thereafter Van Vleck signed a letter prepared by Tarman, to the Bank of America, stating that Tarman was authorized to issue instructions for the disposition of construction money so that all bills outstanding against the three houses in Hayward and one in Oakland would be settled. Tarman, in a letter which at the trial was stapled to the last mentioned letter and which Van Vleck claimed never to have seen, informed the bank that he agreed to deposit sufficient funds in a certain escrow account to cover all liens on the three lots with instructions to release the liens in conjunction with the sums which the Bank of America was holding for Van Vleck on the construction loans. Tarman stated that he meant that he would deposit funds from the sale of the homes. Tarman told Van Vleck to forget the Hayward job as he was taking care of it; it was his field. In April of 1953 there was a conference at the bank at which Tarman and Van Vleck and the banker were present, at which after considering the financial status of the houses, Tarman stated that he would take over the deal, sell the houses, and pay all the bills. Van Vleck testified that he did not tell Tarman that he could have any of the profits from the construction and sale of the houses, but that as the lots were not worth $4,250, Tarman because of the artificial value would share any profit resulting. The Veterans Administration issued a certificate of reasonable value valuing the houses each at a minimum of $12,000 with $1,400 allocated to the land. Van Vleck testified that from May, 1952, until November 10th he was the owner and operator of the project but that on the latter date Tarman became the owner. In a prior deposition Van Vleck said that he had no agreement to share the profits and was constructing the houses on his own account. At the trial, he explained that at the deposition he was not given an opportunity to explain that he was going to pay for the lots by offsetting their price by an amount owed him by Tarman on another deal.

On May 11, 1953, a creditors' meeting was held at Tarman's office, at which about 15 materialmen and Tarman were present. Tarman said that he would pay all of the bills if the creditors would take a certain discount. Tarman's son, both before the meeting and in Tarman's presence at the meeting, stated that Tarman was going to see that all bills would be paid. Tarman did not deny it. Plaintiff Nelson testified that at this meeting Tarman had an account showing that Tarman had taken over and was selling, or trying to sell, the houses. Tarman included his claim for $4,300 and one for 5 per cent of the sales prices of the houses as a commission. Tarman then agreed to pay off all of the debts, instructed the creditors to send their bills to the title company and gave them an escrow number.

Nelson further testified that prior to this meeting, Tarman stated that Van Vleck was a poor business man and that Tarman had to take over the jobs on the three houses, and that he was going to pay all the bills; that Nelson need not segregate his bills between materials for the three houses and a fourth belonging to Tarman.

Tarman testified that he signed the Van Vleck deposit receipt and received Van Vleck's promissory note. On July 1, 1952, Tarman deeded the three lots to Van Vleck with Van Vleck's deed back executed in the same month. Both deeds were placed in escrow until November 10, when, without consulting Van Vleck, he had Van Vleck's deed to him recorded. February 10, 1953, Tarman signed and recorded notice of completion on all three houses. Tarman denied making the promises of payment.

The facts and the reasonable inferences therefrom support the joint venture finding. They show that Tarman and Van Vleck were associated as employee and employer and also in other ventures; that Van Vleck considered himself subject to direction by Tarman as illustrated by Tarman having Van Vleck stop work on the three houses and go to Paradise, by Tarman recording the deed back without consulting Van Vleck, by Tarman having Van Vleck sign the letter of authorization to the bank; that the two agreed to build on the three lots as a pilot project looking toward the development of the remainder of the lots; that they executed a deposit receipt to get a construction loan; that Tarman would get a profit from the price for the lots, with the remainder of the profit to be used to adjust equities between them; that they commingled goods and services on the jobs (three houses and another one belonging to Tarman which was being remodeled); Tarman paid various bills on the three houses; Van Vleck told plaintiff Robello that he and Tarman were together; Robello called the credit association for material dealers and was told that the construction was a joint venture;<sup>3</sup> Tarman made statements that the project was "his job," "his field"; and Tarman told various people including Van Vleck that he would pay all bills.

A joint venture has been defined as an undertaking by two or more persons jointly to carry out a single business enterprise for profit with its existence dependent upon the intention of the parties as shown by an express agreement or by inference from their acts and conduct. The requisites are stated to be: (1) community of interest in the enterprise; (2) a sharing of profits and losses; (3) joint participation in the conduct of the business. Lasry v. Lederman, 1957, 147 Cal.App.2d 480, 485, 305 P.2d 663 and Beck v. Cagle, 1941, 46 Cal. App.2d 152, 161, 115 P.2d 613, add thereto the element of a close and even fiduciary relationship between the parties.

There is a difference in the determining of the relationship where third parties are involved, as here, and where the issue is only between the parties themselves. Particularly appropriate here is the statement in Westcott v. Gilman, 1915, 170 Cal. 562, 568-569, 150 P. 777, 779: "In truth, the existence or nonexistence of a partnership in any case cannot be determined by the method appellant adopts of dissecting the whole relationship into broken parts and members, and studying each disjointed fragment as though it were the complete whole. A partnership, especially where, as here, the rights of third parties are involved, is to be determined by the contract, taken with the conduct and the dealings with the world of those who are parties to it. If that contract, and if those dealings, so far as the world is concerned, measure up to the partnership relation, with the joint duties and liabilities attaching thereto, then, so far as third persons are concerned who have had dealings with them, the defendants are partners." (Emphasis added.)

to determine from the facts and inferences therefrom. Milton Kauffman, Inc., v. Superior Court, 1949, 94 Cal.App.2d 8, 17, 210 P.2d 88. The facts need not be shown by a specific formal agreement but may be shown by the parties' conduct and circumstances from which it is made to appear that the relationship was, in fact, entered into. The law then fixes their rights. San Francisco Iron & Metal Co. v. American Milling & Industrial Co., 1931, 115 Cal.App. 238, 246, 1 P.2d 1008. And the acts and conduct of the parties engaged in the accomplishment of their purposes may speak above their expressed declarations to the contrary. Universal Sales Corp. v. California Press Mfg. Co., 1942, 20 Cal.2d 751, 765, 128 P.2d 665; San Joaquin Light & Power Corp. v. Costaloupes, 1929, 96 Cal. App. 322, 332, 274 P. 84; see also 28 Cal. Jur.2d, Joint Adventurers, § 6, p. 484.

Here the appellant was to get $4,250 upon the completion of the construction as the price for the lots. In that regard, whether the price was inflated or not, it would seem that he was sharing the expected profit resultant from the venture. Whether obtaining such payment was merely payment for the lots or whether it extended beyond and bestowed an interest in the profits themselves so as to constitute the undertaking a joint venture, presents primarily a question of fact. Singleton v. Fuller, 1953, 118 Cal.App.2d 733, 741, 259 P.2d 687. Yet even if considered as an interest in the profits, it alone without a showing that appellant had some power of control over the venture would not make him a joint venturer as such sharing of profits is also common in an employer-employee or lessor-lessee relationship. Westcott v. Gilman, supra, 170 Cal. at page 568, 150 P. at page 779; Wiltsee v. California Employment Comm., 1945, 69 Cal.App.2d 120, 126, 158 P.2d 612.

[8,9] The facts of this case do not infer or show an agreement on the sharing of losses. However, that factor is immaterial as the law will supply that provision as an agreement to share profits implies an agreement to share proportionately in the losses. Fitzgerald v. Provines, 1951, 102 Cal.App.2d 529, 536, 227 P.2d 860; Constans v. Ross, 1951, 106 Cal.App.2d 381, 389, 235 P.2d 113. Furthermore, if the agreement of the parties is contrived so as to allow a party to escape liability for loss, the law will not permit it and will construe the relationship as a joint venture. See San Joaquin Light & Power Corp. v. Costaloupes, supra, 96 Cal.App. at page 334, 274 P. at page 89.

3. No objection was made to the testimony on this subject.

[10, 11] There is sufficient evidence to infer that appellant had some control over the venture. He recorded the deed back without consultation as well as later filing the notice of completion. He also told Van Vleck to work up in Paradise and that he would take care of the project in Hayward. There are also the statements made to two respondents as well as the letters to the bank, one of which he had Van Vleck sign. It could be said that Van Vleck had supervision of the actual construction while appellant exercised overall control with particular concern with financial matters. It is not necessary that the parties to a joint venture have equal control of the operation as a joint venture may exist where they do not. Foster v. Keating, 1953, 120 Cal.App. 2d 435, 452, 261 P.2d 529. The equal right of control of management problem is a result of the rule that a joint venturer, in the absence of a special agreement, does not have the right to bind the others. See Sime v. Malouf, 1949, 95 Cal.App.2d 82, 95-96, 212 P.2d 946, 213 P.2d 788.

In view of the fact that third parties are here involved, the complete picture of all the circumstances and statements and conduct of appellant in regard to the project support a finding that the parties were engaged in a joint venture regardless of the fact that perhaps, as between themselves, they did not consider themselves to be in such a relationship.

[12] Tarman contends that even though there was a joint venture, there is no evidence to support the court's finding that Van Vleck was authorized to bind Tarman in the purchase of the materials or labor. While there is no direct evidence of such an authorization there is indirect evidence of it. Among other matters, Tarman's statements after the construction that he would pay the bills and that the jobs were his, his checks for payments during 1953 for various services and materials for the three houses, reasonably support an inference of authority in Van Vleck. The houses were substantially completed prior to the time that Tarman took over their management for sale purposes, sent Van Vleck to Paradise and agreed to assume payment for them. These actions, although not occurring at or during the construction, together with the other circumstances such as the recording of the deed by Tarman, are highly significant in determining what the true relationship of Tarman and Van Vleck actually was.

in the course of the business of the agency and within the scope of the agent's powers as such, although made in the name of the agent and not purporting to be other than his own personal obligation or contract.' Geary St., [Park & Ocean] R. Co. v. Rolph, 189 Cal. 59, 64, 207 P. 539, 541. 'A creditor may sue an undisclosed principal when found although he may not have known of the existence of such principal at the time the debt was incurred.' Hulsman v. Ireland, 205 Cal. 345, 352, 270 P. 948, 951."

In Wahyou v. Kiernan, 145 Cal.App.2d 443, 445, 302 P.2d 638, 639, the court announced the same elementary rule, and then stated: "Again, here * * * there was no intervening circumstance such as was present in Rigney v. De La Salle Institute, 10 Cal.App.2d 492, 52 P.2d 579, which would warrant a conclusion by this court that credit had been extended exclusively to Hemley, and it is only by such a circumstance that the defendant can escape liability under the general rule previously set forth."

If this is the rule as to undisclosed principals, and it clearly is, it certainly applies to an undisclosed partner. If a case is necessary to support such an obvious rule it is to be found in Schwaegler Co. v. Marchesotti, 88 Cal.App.2d 738, at page 743, 199 P.2d 331, at page 334, where the court laid down the rule by quoting from Bissell v. King, 91 Cal.App. 420, 267 P. 356, as follows:

"* * * 'Thus, in cases of secret partnership and dormant partners, a creditor is entitled to recover from all the partners when discovered, though the debt was not originally charged to all [citation], and even though one partner holds himself out as the sole owner, the ostensible partner is the agent of the dormant one, and the latter is bound by his representations.'

"And in Section 500 of the text of Rowley on Partnership, last cited, it is said:

"* * * As a rule, he [the dormant or undisclosed partner] is liable to the firm creditors to the same extent as if he were known to the creditor at the time the credit was obtained, under the doctrine that an undisclosed principal is liable for the acts of his agent. * * * If the dormant partner be completely so, and not known as such to the firm creditor, he will be liable to the firm creditor for indebtedness incurred by the firm to the creditor during the dormant partner's connection with the firm * * *." See, generally, Lindner v. Friednash, 160 Cal.App.2d 511, 325 P.2d 612.

3. Finding of Joint Venture.

[16] Defendant's contention that the finding of joint venture is merely a conclusion and not one of fact is answered in Oakley v. Rosen, 76 Cal.App.2d 310, 312, 173 P.2d 55, 56: "No inhibition exists against a court's finding that an agreement was for the prosecution of a joint adventure. It was so found in Tiffany v. Short, 22 Cal.2d 531, 139 P.2d 939, and in Hansen v. Burford, 212 Cal. 100, 297 P. 908, and no adverse comment followed. In the latter case it was held that the finding of a joint adventure was one of probative fact." Here the court found the fact of joint venture plus the fact of Van Vleck's authority. Moreover, the findings distinguish the relationship from that of employer-agent, seller-buyer, and from that arising under a third party beneficiary agreement.

4. Material Finding.

Defendant contends that although the court found that Tarman purported to convey the three lots to Van Vleck it failed to find that Tarman sold them to Van Vleck, and that a stipulation made by the parties conclusively established that the transaction was a sale. Appellant's contention has no merit. The findings do not state expressly that there was no sale or that there was a sale. But the clear import of them is that there was only a purported sale and that from the time of the recording of the deed from Van Vleck to appellant, appellant held legal title. It is also implicit from the finding that Van Vleck was not engaged in the construction of the homes as an owner thereof but that appellant remained the owner at all times.

As to the purported stipulation, a reading of the transcript shows that the parties were intending to stipulate to preliminary matters, primarily to dates, without attempting to stipulate to the effect of the transactions. Counsel for appellant remarked that the statements did not state the full facts. Counsel for respondents replied that they were not intended to, that "These are only dates. I haven't gone into the other angles of it because I know some of it you won't stipulate to."

5. Refusal of Cross-Complaint.

[17,18] Tarman filed his original answer August 28, 1953. March 30, 1954, he asked leave to file a cross-complaint against his codefendant Van Vleck, which was denied. In the proposed cross-complaint Tarman alleged an agreement between him and Van Vleck in which the latter agreed to pay plaintiffs' bills for material and labor and asking that the prosecution of actions brought by Van Vleck against Tarman in the Oakland-Piedmont Judicial Court and in Solano County respectively be enjoined. In it Tarman also sought recovery on a promissory note of Van Vleck to him for $4,250 and one of $3,150, and of moneys advanced. The record does not show the reason for denying the motion to file. A defendant may file a cross-complaint at time of answering. Thereafter, it may only be done by permission of the court. The ruling of the trial court is within its discretion and will be reversed only upon a showing that the court abused its discretion. Glogau v. Hagan, 107 Cal. App.2d 313, 320, 327 P.2d 329. In that case it was held that the defendant's dereliction in not asking to file the cross-complaint for 11 months after answer filed, where a prior action based upon the causes alleged in the cross-complaint was still pending, was sufficient cause for denying the motion. In our case the motion was not made until 7 months after answer filed. Moreover, the Solano County case referred to in the proposed cross-complaint involved other persons. To inject it into this case would have made for confusion.

The issue as to the $4,250 note was already in this case. The court did not abuse its discretion.

6. Bank of America.

[19] At the close of the case Bank of America, then a defendant, moved that the action be dismissed as to it. Plaintiffs opposed the motion. Tarman's attorney stated: "If your Honor please, we see no evidence against the Bank of America in this case and, as a matter of fact, it is very doubtful whether or not the allegations of the complaints even state a cause of action against the Bank of America in my judgment." Thereupon the court granted the motion. We see no reason for discussing the merits of the court's ruling for the reason that if it was erroneous, the error was invited by defendant Tarman. A party may not complain of error invited by it. See People v. Ocean Shore Railroad, 1948, 32 Cal.2d 406, 429, 196 P.2d 570, 6 A.L.R. 2d 1179; 3 Witkin, California Procedure, pp. 2257-2260; 4 Cal.Jur.2d 420, 424.

7. Letters.

On motion for new trial defendant's attorney filed an affidavit stating that he had protested to plaintiffs' attorney against the latter sending certain letters to the trial judge after submission of the case and before decision. The letters dealt merely with the effort of plaintiffs' attorneys and the bank's attorney to get the parties to agree to reduce the homes to cash to be held to await the outcome of the case after paying the bank's loans. The letters showed that defendant Tarman's attorney refused to cooperate in this effort. As to them the court stated on the hearing of the motion for new trial: "I will say for the record right now that it had nothing to do with the method or manner in which the Court made the decision. I read the letters; as far as I was concerned, they explained the reason for certain delays and I paid no attention to them otherwise." We find nothing in the record which would justify this court in determining that the court's determination of this case was influenced by those letters.

Pursuant to stipulation the judgment in favor of respondent Burt and against appellant Tarman is reversed and the trial court is directed to enter judgment in favor of appellant Tarman on the cross-complaint of said respondent Burt. In all other respects, the judgment is affirmed.

163 Cal.App.2d 740

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Carl G. SAUER, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 2858.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Sept. 25, 1958.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing
Oct. 20, 1958.

Hearing Denied Nov. 19, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of forgery of checks. The Superior Court, Shasta County, Richard B. Eaton, J., rendered judgment, and defendant appealed. The Third District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that permitting handwriting expert to use post litem motam signatures of parties, whose names were allegedly forged, as basis of comparison was erroneous, but in view of fact that expert used other signatures which were not post litem motam, that parties testified that signatures on checks were not theirs, and that defendant did not testify, use of post litem motam signatures did not result in miscarriage of justice and did not require reversal.

1. Indictment and Information ⇨110(15)

Informations charging forgery in language of applicable statute sufficiently charged public offense and informed defendant of offenses charged and were not defective on ground that they did not allege that forged instruments, if genuine, would have been of legal efficacy or could have any tendency to defraud another. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 470.

2. Indictment and Information ⇨71

All that is required for an information to be sufficient is that it in substance charge defendant with commission of public offense in words sufficient to give him notice of offense of which he is accused.

3. Criminal Law ⇨627½

Pretrial inspection of reports in hands of prosecution is not a matter of right in all cases.

4. Criminal Law ⇨1044

Where motion of defendant, who was charged with forgery, for pretrial inspection of prosecution's handwriting expert's report was denied without prejudice to renewal of motion at trial if it became necessary, but motion was not renewed at trial, defendant was in no position to raise point on appeal.

Where two informations, each charging three counts of forgery, dealt with crimes committed approximately 22 months apart and informations were filed about four months apart, consolidating of cases for trial was not an abuse of discretion. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 470, 954.

6. Criminal Law ⇨620(1), 1148

Whether consolidation of two or more accusatory pleadings should be granted rests in sound discretion of trial judge whose decision will only be disturbed where an abuse of discretion is shown. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 954.

7. Criminal Law ⇨404(5)

In prosecution for forgery, post litem motam signatures are not admissible for purposes of comparison.

8. Criminal Law ⇨491(2), 1169(9)

In prosecution for forgery of checks, permitting handwriting expert to use post litem motam signatures of parties, whose names were allegedly forged on checks, as basis of comparison was error, but in view of fact that expert used other signatures, which were not post litem motam, that parties testified that signatures on checks were not theirs, and that defendant did not testify, use of post litem motam signatures did not result in miscarriage of justice and did not require reversal. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 470.

9. Criminal Law ⇨721(1)

In prosecution for forgery of checks, prosecuting attorney's commenting several times in his argument to jury upon fact that defendant had not taken witness stand to testify in his own behalf and explain or deny incriminating evidence which had been introduced against him was not improper. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 470, 1323; West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 13.

10. Criminal Law ⇨721(1)

It is proper for prosecution to point out to jury that defendant has failed or refused to take witness stand and that he has failed to explain or deny incriminating facts which have been produced against him especially in cases where facts concern matters which are peculiarly within knowledge of defendant, and such comments do not violate any constitutional rights of defendant. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1323; West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 13.

11. Criminal Law ⇨1037(1, 2)

Where no objection to alleged prejudicial remarks by prosecuting attorney in his argument to jury was made at time remarks were made, nor was court requested to instruct jury to disregard them, question could not be raised for first time on appeal.

William H. Phelps, Fall River Mills, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., by G. A. Strader, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Carl G. Sauer was charged with six counts of forgery. He has appealed from the judgment entered after a jury found him guilty as charged.

Two informations, each charging three counts of forgery, were filed against Sauer. The first, which will be referred to as the Warner matter, charged three counts of forgery in May, 1957. The second, which will be referred to as the Copeland matter, charged three separate forgeries on August 25, 1955. A typical count reads as follows:

"That said Carl G. Sauer, on or about the 25th day of August, 1955, in the County of Shasta, State of California, did fraudulently make, forge and counterfeit a certain check in writing for the payment of money in the sum of One Hundred Seventy and 43/100 Dollars ($170.43) and did then and there utter, publish and pass the same, knowing that the said check was false, forged and counterfeited, with the intent then and there to defraud James H. Rodgers, Verner Copeland, Red Mt. Lumber Company and Bank of America, a corporation."

A motion to consolidate the two informations for trial was granted. Thereafter; Sauer sought inspection of certain evidence in the sheriff's possession. The court ordered the sheriff's office and the district attorney to deliver all exemplars of handwriting which were used in the investigation of the case and inspection of all books of account of the concerns which Sauer was accused of defrauding by forging checks. The motion was denied as to any reports and papers and investigation information in the hands of the sheriff or district attorney. As to the documents denied, the court said that the motion was denied without prejudice to a renewal of the motion at the trial if it became proper.

The evidence as to the Warner counts shows that Sauer was employed by Dawson & Warner, a lumber concern, as a bookkeeper. As part of his job he prepared all the payroll checks. Sauer passed three checks with Mr. Warner's signature to various merchants. Mr. Warner testified that he had not signed the checks in question nor had he authorized anyone else to sign his name to the checks. Lewis Davis, an examiner of questioned documents for the Bureau of Criminal Identification, compared the signatures on the allegedly forged checks with exemplars of Mr. Warner's signature and stated that in his opinion the signatures on the checks were not those of Mr. Warner.

The evidence as to the Copeland accounts shows that at the time of the alleged forgeries, Sauer was employed as a bookkeeper by a company Mr. Copeland controlled. All checks drawn by this company were drawn on an account known as the Vernon Copeland Special Account. Mr. Copeland also testified that he had not signed the checks which were the basis of the charge nor had he authorized anyone else to sign his name to the checks. Mr. Davis also testified that these checks were not signed by Mr. Copeland. Again Mr. Davis used exemplars of Mr. Copeland's signature in making his comparisons. Sauer passed each of the checks in question. Sauer admitted to Deputy Sheriff Richard Hart that the endorsement of his name on the back of each check was written by him.

Appellant's first contention is that the informations fail to charge a public offense under the provisions of section 470 of the Penal Code and that the informations do not inform him of the charge. It is contended that the charge is fatally deficient because there is no allegation that the instruments would, if genuine, be of legal efficacy or could have any tendency to defraud another.

[1,2] We do not agree with this contention. Section 470 of the Penal Code provides that "Every person who, with intent to defraud, signs the name of another person, or of a fictitious person, knowing that he has no authority so to do, to, or falsely makes, alters, forges, or counterfeits any * * * check, draft, bill of exchange * * * for the payment of money * *; or utters, publishes, passes, or attempts to pass, as true and genuine, any of the above named false, altered, forged, or counterfeited matters, as above specified and described, knowing the same to be false, altered, forged, or counterfeited, with intent to prejudice, damage, or defraud any person * * *, is guilty of forgery." It is apparent that the informations charged the several offenses in the language of the statute. As stated in section 952 of the Penal Code: "Such statement may be made in ordinary and concise language without any technical averments or any allegations of matter not essential to be proved. It may be in the words of the enactment describing the offense or declaring the matter to be a public offense, or in any words sufficient to give the accused notice of the offense of which he is accused." All that is required is that the pleading in substance charge the defendant with the commission of a public offense in words sufficient to give him notice of the offense of which he is accused. (26 Cal.Jur.2d, Indictment and Information, p. 495.)

The informations in the instant case without doubt informed the appellant of the offenses charged against him.

[3,4] Appellant next contends that the trial court abused its discretion in not permitting pretrial inspection of the handwriting expert's report. The court denied the motion without prejudice to a renewal of the motion at the trial if it became necessary. It is contended that the basis of the prosecution's case was the testimony of the handwriting expert and that without an opportunity to examine it before trial the defense could not adequately prepare to meet it. The motion was not renewed at the trial. Pretrial inspection of reports in the hands of the prosecution is not a matter of right in all cases. The record does not show that a motion for inspection was made at the trial. Under such circumstances we do not believe that appellant is in a position to raise the point on appeal.

[5,6] Appellant contends also that the trial court abused its discretion in consolidating the two cases for trial. The two informations dealt with crimes committed approximately twenty-two months apart. The informations were filed about four months apart. Section 954 of the Penal Code permits consolidation of two or more accusatory pleadings charging the same class of crimes. This test was met. In People v. Feigelman, 65 Cal.App. 319, 223 P. 579, consolidation was approved where the crimes were committed thirteen months apart. The rule is that whether or not consolidation should be granted rests in the sound discretion of the trial judge whose decision will only be disturbed where an abuse of discretion is shown. People v. Duane, 21 Cal.2d 71, 130 P.2d 123. In view of the similarity of the charges we cannot hold that there was any abuse of discretion in consolidating the cases for trial.

The most serious contention of appellant is that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence certain handwriting exemplars. At the trial, Lewis Davis, an examiner of questioned documents, was called by the prosecution and in his examination of the questioned signatures on the several checks which were alleged to have been forged he used for comparison a number of known genuine signatures of Mr. Warner and Mr. Copeland. Included among these signatures were a number of cards and a sheet of paper upon which had been placed the signatures of these persons. Some of these signatures were written by Mr. Warner and Mr. Copeland for the purpose of comparing their genuine signatures with the questioned checks.

The appellant contends that the trial court erred in admitting these signatures in evidence and that the handwriting expert used improper standards of comparison in presenting his testimony with respect to the forged signatures on the checks. The basis of the appellant's contention is that these signatures were made especially for the purpose of this trial and are what he refers to as post litem motam signatures. Appellant states that on the Warner counts three out of eight signatures were post litem motam, and in the Copeland counts two out of four were post litem motam.

While there seems to be a division of authority on the question of whether post litem motam signatures may be used as a basis of comparison, we think the better rule is stated in 20 Am.Jur., Evidence, sec. 746, p. 623, as follows:

"* * * A signature or specimen writing that is made for the occasion and post litem motam may not be used for comparison by the party making it. It is only when a writing is written, not by design, but unconstrainedly and in the natural manner of the writer so as to bear the impress of the general character of his chirography as the involuntary and unconscious result of constitution, habit, or other permanent cause that it furnishes, if otherwise admissible in evidence, any satisfactory test of genuineness."

[7] Two California cases have considered the question and appear to be in accord with the rule that post litem motam signatures are not admissible for purposes of comparison. In People v. Briggs, 117 Cal.App. 708, 4 P.2d 593, the defendant was accused of a violation of section 288 of the Penal Code. The defense seriously challenged the credibility of the complaining witness, a girl of thirteen, by introducing a writing allegedly written and signed by her to the effect that she and her sister should tell a lie concerning the defendant so that he and his wife, who was a codefendant, would go to jail. After the case was closed the prosecution was allowed to reopen the case and was permitted to have the complaining witness write in the presence of the jury, in an attempt to corroborate her testimony that she did not write the note. It was held to be reversible error for the court to permit her to corroborate her testimony by writing in the presence of the jury. The court indicated that post litem motam signatures are inadmissible to corroborate a witness' testimony. In People v. Golembiewski, 25 Cal.App.2d 115, 76 P.2d 717, the appellant contended that the trial court erred in sustaining an objection of the prosecution to a question relative to comparison of the handwriting of the appellant with the signature of the appellant in the pawnbook of the second-hand dealer who had purchased some of the property appellant was alleged to have stolen. In that case the exemplars submitted were made after the arrest of the appellant. The court ruled the objection properly sustained.

[8] We think that it was error to permit the handwriting expert to use the post litem motam signatures of Warner and Copeland as a basis of comparison but we do not believe that this error requires a reversal of the judgment. The record shows that the handwriting expert used other signatures which were not post litem motam and also that both Warner and Copeland testified that the signatures on the questioned checks were not their signatures. In view of this testimony and the other testimony in the case, together with the fact that appellant did not testify, we do not believe that the fact that the court permitted a number of post litem motam signatures to be used along with others as a basis for comparison resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

[9] Appellant contends also that the prosecuting attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct in commenting several times in his argument to the jury upon the fact that the appellant had not taken the witness stand to testify in his own behalf and explain or deny the incriminating evidence which had been introduced against him. This contention cannot be sustained.

The provisions of California Constitution, Art. I, section 13, and Penal Code, section 1323, specifically provide that the failure of a defendant to testify or to explain or deny incriminating facts which have been produced against him may be commented upon by the prosecuting attorney. The constitutional provision provides as follows:

“* * * but in any criminal case, whether the defendant testifies or not, his failure to explain or to deny by his testimony any evidence or facts in the case against him may be commented upon by the court and by counsel, and may be considered by the court or the jury. * * *”

Penal Code, section 1323, provides in part as follows:

“The failure of the defendant to explain or to deny by his testimony any evidence or facts in the case against him may be commented upon by counsel.”

[10] Numerous cases in this jurisdiction have held that it is proper for the prosecution to point out to the jury that the defendant has failed or refused to take the witness stand and that he has failed to explain or deny incriminating facts which have been produced against him, and especially in cases where the facts concern matters which are peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant, as in the present case. Such comments by the court or the district attorney do not violate any constitutional rights of the defendant, and the provisions of the above-cited constitutional provision and statute have been held not to violate any provision of the United States Constitution. Adamson v. People of the State of California, 332 U.S. 46, 67 S.Ct. 1672, 91 L.Ed. 1903. Numerous cases have upheld the right of the district attorney to so comment. See, for example: People v. Cuevas, 148 Cal. App.2d 331, 306 P.2d 510; People v. Williams, 141 Cal.App.2d 849, 297 P.2d 759; People v. Dozier, 35 Cal.App.2d 49, 94 P.2d 598; People v. Zirbes, 6 Cal.2d 425, 57 P.2d 1319; People v. Perry, 14 Cal.2d 387, 94 P.2d 559, 124 A.L.R. 1123.

[11] Appellant contends further that the prosecuting attorney made a number of other remarks which constituted prejudicial misconduct in his argument to the jury. The record shows that no objection was made to such remarks at the time, nor was the court requested to instruct the jury to disregard them. The general rule is that in the absence of any objection the point may not be raised for the first time on appeal. People v. Adamson, 27 Cal.2d 478, 165 P.2d 3. Furthermore, we have read the remarks complained of and do not believe that they exceeded the bounds of legitimate argument.

The judgment is affirmed.

CALIFORNIA SPORTS CAR CLUB, a California corporation, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 23192.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Sept. 22, 1958.

Action by spectator at sports car races for personal injuries suffered when hand was struck by wheel which came loose from sports car and crashed through snow fence barrier. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, John F. Aiso, J., entered judgment for spectator and track operator appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, P. J., held that where spectator was familiar with sports car races and voluntarily chose not to sit in grandstand but to stand opposite turn in track which had as its only protection a snow fence barrier, spectator assumed risk of injury.

Reversed with directions.

1. Automobiles ¶168(11)

Where spectator was thoroughly familiar with sports car races and voluntarily chose not to sit in grandstand but to stand opposite turn having a snow fence barrier as the only protection, spectator voluntarily assumed risk of injury which occurred when wheel came loose from sports car and crashed through barrier and struck spectator.

2. Evidence ¶5(2)

It is common knowledge that sports car racing is a dangerous sport, that accidents during such races are not uncommon, and that each year a number of people, both drivers and spectators, are killed or injured as the result of such accidents.

3. Evidence ¶5(2)

It is well known fact that most of the accidents at sports car races occur on turns because additional stresses and strains on car caused by centrifugal force being exerted against it increase likelihood that car will spin out of control or lose some of its parts, and therefore it is obvious that one of the most dangerous places from which a spectator may view a race is on a turn.

One may assume risk even though dangerous condition is caused by the negligence of others.

7. Appeal and Error ¶1176(3)

Since trial court should have directed verdict for defendant in personal injury action District Court of Appeal was authorized to order that judgment be entered for defendant. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 629.

John R. Allport, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Royal M. Galvin, Beverly Hills, for respondent.

FOX, Presiding Justice.

This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries suffered by the plaintiff while attending a sports car race in Kern County. Defendant has appealed from the adverse judgment and from the order denying its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

Plaintiff has been a member of defendant club for many years and has attended several sports car races. He also has attended several dinner meetings of the club where films of sports car races were shown. Although he had never driven in any races, he had "assisted a little bit at the races" by keeping lap charts and picking up debris left around the course after a race. Plaintiff owned a sports car, and this was one of the reasons for his interest in sports car races.

On the day of the accident plaintiff was a member of a party of four who drove to Bakersfield to witness a race which was being sponsored by defendant club. The members of his party drove their cars onto the grounds, paid an admission fee and parked. Although the grandstand was not filled, plaintiff and his party chose to view the races from various vantage points around the course. At the time of the accident plaintiff and his companions were located on one of the turns of the course about 150 feet from the track itself. Plaintiff enjoyed walking around the track during the races because he was in a better position to observe the skill of the various drivers as they negotiated the turns. The only barrier between the spectators and the track was a "snow fence" (somewhat similar to a picket fence) less than four feet high. However, there were some hay bales about 150 feet from where plaintiff was standing. Plaintiff had chosen his vantage point voluntarily. It was within the area where spectators were permitted to stand, and a great many spectators were nearby.

As one of the sports cars entered the turn on the track near plaintiff, it went into a spin and one of its wheels came off and bounded along at great speed. The wheel crashed through the snow fence and struck plaintiff's hand, thereby injuring him. There was no evidence as to what caused the wheel to come off. Defendant always took precautions to see that the vehicles which raced were in good condition and that their drivers were in good health.

At the trial defendant moved for a directed verdict after plaintiff rested his case. The trial court denied the motion and submitted the case to the jury. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $2,000. Defendant then made a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and a motion for new trial, and they too were denied by the trial court. Judgment was entered, and defendant thereafter prosecuted this appeal.

[1-3] Defendant's principal contention is that the evidence established as a matter of law that plaintiff assumed the risk of being injured. We have determined that this contention must be sustained. The uncontradicted facts show that plaintiff was thoroughly familiar with sports car racing. Plaintiff did not choose to sit in the grandstand; nor did he choose to take a position behind any of the hay bales that were scattered around the course; his own testimony showed that there were hay bales not more than 50 yards from where he was standing. He chose instead to watch the races from a point on one of the turns where he could best observe the cars as they negotiated the turn. It was obvious to any one that the "snow fence," which was the only barrier between plaintiff and the race track, would provide little or no protection if a sports car or a part thereof should leave the track and travel toward the spectators. From his previous experience in connection with sports car races, plaintiff was aware of the fact that the cars travel at high rates of speed. It is common knowledge that sports car racing is a dangerous "sport," that accidents during such races are not uncommon, and that each year a number of people, both drivers and spectators, are killed or injured as a result of such accidents. It is a well known fact that most of the accidents at sports car races occur on the turns because the additional stresses and strains on the car caused by the centrifugal force being exerted against it increase the likelihood that the car will spin out of control or lose one of its parts. It is therefore obvious that one of the most dangerous places from which a spectator may view a race is on a turn.

[4-6] We hold that plaintiff assumed the risk of any injury that he might receive as a result of being struck by a car, or a part of a car, participating in the races. The defense of assumption of risk is available when there has been a voluntary acceptance of a risk, and such acceptance, whether express or implied, has been made with knowledge and appreciation of the risk. Austin v. Riverside Portland Cement Co., 44 Cal.2d 225, 235, 282 P.2d 69; Prescott v. Ralph's Grocery Co., 42 Cal.2d 158, 161-162, 265 P.2d 904. "Where the facts are such that the plaintiff must have had knowledge of the hazard, the situation is equivalent to actual knowledge, and there may be an assumption of the risk. * * *" Austin v. Riverside Portland Cement Co., supra, 44 Cal.2d at page 235, 282 P.2d at page 75; Prescott v. Ralph's Grocery Co., supra, 42 Cal.2d at page 162, 265 P.2d at page 906. In the instant case the evidence discloses that plaintiff must have had knowledge of the hazard to which he was subjecting himself by taking the position he did on the race course. He ignored this hazard in his desire to observe the races from the best (rather than safest) location. The fact that defendant may have been negligent in failing to provide sufficient protection around the course for all spectators is of no consequence since one may assume a risk even though the dangerous condition is caused by the negligence of others. Rogers v. Los Angeles Transit Lines, 45 Cal.2d 414, 419, 289 P.2d 226; Prescott v. Ralph's Grocery Co., supra, 42 Cal.2d at page 162, 265 P.2d at page 906. "Indeed, the cases in which this defense is applied usually involve dangerous conditions created by the negligence of another." Prescott v. Ralph's Grocery Co., supra, 42 Cal.2d at page 162, 265 P.2d at page 906. Of course, plaintiff could not be held to have assumed the risk that defendant created a dangerous condition by negligently permitting a defective car to race on the course since one could have no knowledge of such a risk. However, there is no allegation or proof that defendant was negligent in that regard; there is no evidence that any act or omission on defendant's part was the cause of the wheel coming off, and there is affirmative evidence that defendant took precautions to see that the vehicles which raced were in good condition and that their drivers were in good health.

It should be noted that while the baseball cases in this state have usually applied the doctrine of assumption of the risk as a matter of law<sup>1</sup> (Quinn v. Recreation Park Ass'n, 3 Cal.2d 725, 46 P.2d 144; Brown v. San Francisco Ball Club, 99 Cal.App.2d 484, 222 P.2d 19), the ice hockey cases have treated the question as one of fact (Shurman v. Fresno Ice Rink, 91 Cal.App.2d 469, 205 P.2d 77; Thurman v. Ice Palace, 36 Cal.App.2d 364, 97 P.2d 999). But it is not necessary for us to determine in this case

1. In Ratcliff v. San Diego Baseball Club, 27 Cal.App.2d 733, 81 P.2d 625, the court refused to apply the doctrine of assumption of risk. But the case is distinguishable from the ordinary baseball case in that plaintiff was injured by a bat which slipped from a batter's hands, traveled in the air some eighty feet into the stands along the first base line and struck her as she walked along an unscreened passageway toward her seat in the screened area. The court apparently felt that the occurrence of a flying bat was not of such common knowledge as to bring into play the theory of assumption of risk which is usually applied in baseball cases, especially where the injured person had purchased a seat in the screened area.

whether the question of assumption of risk is one of law or of fact as applied to sports car races in general. Even if we assume that the question would ordinarily be one of fact, the evidence in the instant case so clearly establishes the defense of assumption of risk that reasonable minds could not differ and the question should not, therefore, have been submitted to the jury. The court should have granted defendant's motion for directed verdict or, having failed to do this, should have granted the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The situation here is similar to that in Bolar v. Maxwell Hardware Co., 205 Cal. 396, 271 P. 97, 60 A.L.R. 429. In the Bolar case, an action based on negligence, the trial court denied defendant's motion for directed verdict. The jury rendered a verdict for plaintiff and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court held that the facts conclusively established a defense to the plaintiff's action, that reasonable minds could not differ on the question, and that the trial court should therefore have granted defendant's motion for a directed verdict.

The cases relied upon by plaintiff, Atlantic Rural Exposition, Inc., v. Fagan, 195 Va. 13, 77 S.E.2d 368, 37 A.L.R.2d 378, and Saari v. State, 203 Misc. 859, 119 N.Y.S.2d 507, do not control the instant case. In the Fagan case the plaintiff was sitting in the grandstand when a wheel came off one of the racing cars, struck the 18-inch metal guard at the outer edge of the track, bounded into the air over a 42-inch wire fence, struck the ground on the spectator side of the fence, and bounded high into the grandstand and struck him. The court rejected the defense of assumption of risk on the ground that there was no evidence indicating that the plaintiff had any knowledge of the hazard of wheels breaking off the cars and bounding over the protective barriers into the stands; moreover, there was nothing to suggest to plaintiff that the grandstand was not a safe place for him to sit. In the case at bar plaintiff did not seek the apparent protection of the grandstand or the hay bales around the course; rather, he took an unprotected position on a turn in spite of the obvious danger it entailed.

In the Saari case there were no barriers or signs to indicate to spectators where they should stand to watch the races or how far from the track they should be. The claimants took a position near the track just beyond the end of a straightaway and on the outside of the entrance to a curve. They had been directed to that position by a National Guardsman, who appeared to be on police duty. One of the racing cars somehow left the track and crashed into them. The court rejected the defense of assumption of risk, pointing out that none of the claimants had ever actually witnessed an automobile race before and that they were directed to their vantage point by a National Guardsman (which thus indicated to them that they were watching the races from a proper place). Although the court's decision is somewhat questionable in light of the fact that some danger must have been apparent to the claimants, the case is distinguishable from the present situation because none of the claimants was familiar with auto racing whereas here plaintiff was thoroughly familiar with sports car racing and its attendant hazards. Moreover, the court in the Saari case did concede that "spectators or patrons assume the obvious dangers arising from the normal operation or conduct of the sport or amusement in question." Saari v. State, supra, 119 N.Y.S.2d at page 521.

In view of the foregoing, it is unnecessary to discuss the other points raised in the briefs.

The judgment and order are reversed with directions to enter judgment for defendant.

LILLIE, Justice.

This is an appeal by the county of Los Angeles, the Board of Supervisors and the Superintendent of Charities from a judgment in a mandamus proceeding ordering them to grant petitioner Arthur Globe, a temporary county employee, a full hearing in respect to his discharge from county employment.

On March 28, 1955, Arthur Globe was employed on a "non-eligible temporary" basis as a social worker in the Department of Charities. On May 1, 1955, he became a "temporary, eligible" employee in the same position continuing as such until May 2, 1956, the date of his discharge from county service. On April 20, 1956, petitioner, having been duly subpoenaed, appeared before a Subcommittee on Un-American Activities of the United States House of Representatives, and after having been sworn refused to answer certain questions relating to past and present knowing membership in the Communist Party, his familiarity with and membership in a certain "John Reid Club of the Communist Party," his acquaintance with the activities of any persons known to him to be members of that club and whether during his service in the armed forces he had been, or was then, a member of the Communist Party. Petitioner refused to answer such questions, basing his refusal on the First Amendment of the United States Constitution and on a claim of privilege against self-incrimination under the Fifth Amendment.

Shortly thereafter petitioner was summarily discharged from county employment, his conduct in refusing to answer such questions being deemed insubordination and a violation of section 1028.1 of the Government code of the State of California. This section provides in part as follows:

"It shall be the duty of any public employee who may be subpoenaed or ordered by the governing body of the state or local agency by which such employee is employed, to appear before such governing body, or a committee or subcommittee thereof, or by a duly authorized committee of the Congress of the United States or of the Legislature of this State, or any subcommittee of any such committee, to appear before such committee or subcommittee, and to answer under oath a question or questions propounded by such governing body, committee or subcommittee, or a member or counsel thereof, relating to:

"(d) Questions as to present knowing membership of such employee in the Communist Party or as to past knowing membership in the Communist Party at any time since September 10, 1948.

"Any employee who fails or refuses to appear or to answer under oath on any ground whatsoever any such questions so propounded shall be guilty of insubordination and guilty of violating this section and shall be suspended and dismissed from his employment in the manner provided by law." (Emphasis added.)

Petitioner requested a hearing before the Los Angeles County Civil Service Commission concerning his discharge and appeared before it on May 29, 1956. The commission ruled that petitioner was a temporary employee and therefore, pursuant to sections 19.07 and 19.09 of the county civil service rules was not entitled to such a hearing as a matter of right.

Thereafter petitioner instituted the present mandamus proceeding seeking reinstatement as a county employee and reimbursement for loss of compensation. The trial court found that regardless of his temporary status he was entitled to a hearing before the commission to explain his reasons for refusing to answer the questions propounded and that appellants' refusal to give him a full hearing constituted a denial of due process. The trial court granted a peremptory writ of mandate directing that a hearing be granted on petitioner's discharge.

The issue before us is whether the county Civil Service Commission is required to hold a hearing on the discharge of a temporary county employee for a violation of section 1028.1 of the Government Code.

Appellants contend that in petitioner's discharge from county employment without a hearing there was no arbitrary act or discrimination which denied him due process. With this position we agree.

[1] Authority to prescribe regulations for the admission of persons into civil service and their discharge from employment has been vested by the Charter of the County of Los Angeles in the Civil Service Commission. The rules of the commission have the same force and effect as charter provisions as long as they are applied in the scope contemplated by the charter. Campbell v. City of Los Angeles, 47 Cal.App.2d 310, 117 P.2d 901; Bruce v. Civil Service Board, 6 Cal.App.2d 633, 45 P.2d 419.

Section 34 of Article IX of the Charter of the County of Los Angeles provides in pertinent part as follows:

"The Commission shall prescribe, amend and enforce rules for the classified service, which shall have the force and effect of law; * * *.

"The rules shall provide * * *.

"(7) For a period of probation not to exceed six months before appointment or promotion is made complete, during which period a probationer may be discharged or reduced with the consent of the Commission. * * *

"(9) For temporary employment of persons on the eligible list. * * *"

Section 19.07 of the civil service rules provides:

"An employee who has not yet completed his first probationary period may be discharged or reduced in accordance with Rule 19.09 by the appointing power by written notice, served on the employee and a copy filed with the Commission, specifying the grounds and the particular facts on which the discharge or reduction is based. Such an employee shall be entitled to answer, explain, or deny, the charges in writing within ten business days but shall not be entitled to a hearing, except in case of fraud or of discrimination because of political or religious opinions, racial extraction, or organized labor membership." (Emphasis added.)

Section 19.09 states in pertinent part:

"If the Commission has consented prior to the filing of an answer by the employee and such answer alleges fraud, or discrimination as above stated, and requests a hearing, the Commission shall immediately set aside its consent. The hearing shall be limited to the question of fraud or discrimination. After such hearing the Commission may consent to the discharge or may order such employee reinstated, and unless such order otherwise provides, it shall be effective as of the date of the discharge or reduction.

"No consent need be secured to the discharged or reduction of a temporary or recurrent employee."

It is undisputed that petitioner Globe had "not yet completed his first probationary period" and was employed only on a temporary, eligible basis. The record discloses that a written notice was served upon him specifying the reason for his discharge—insubordination and a violation of section 1028.1 of the Government Code.

[1] The right to discharge a public employee for refusal to testify under the circumstances here involved, the fact that his refusal constituted insubordination, and the conclusion that either disloyalty or insubordination establishes unfitness have been determined by prior judicial decisions.

Board of Education, etc. v. Mass, 47 Cal.2d 494, 304 P.2d 1015; Steinmetz v. California State Board of Education, 44 Cal.2d 816, 285 P.2d 617. Petitioner at no time has denied that he refused to testify before the House Subcommittee on Un-American Activities and answer questions relating to his past or present knowing membership in the Communist Party. At no time has the cause of petitioner's discharge been alleged to be anything but insubordination and a violation of section 1028.1, nor indeed under the record before us could it be. No question of opinion or political belief was involved. Under these circumstances no hearing on discharge was provided or permitted a temporary employee under the civil service rules, nor was the consent of the commission necessary. The Los Angeles County Charter (§ 34, Art. IX) and the rules of the Los Angeles County Civil Service Commission (§§ 19.07 and 19.09) control on the issue whether a hearing had to be granted on discharge of an employee in petitioner's class. They require none. On the applicability of the charter and rules the court stated in Cronin v. Civil Service Comm., 71 Cal.App. 633, at pages 641-642, 236 P. 339, at page 342: "For this court now to hold that a hearing should be had by the commission before a principal could discharge a deputy when none had been provided for in the charter would be for this court to usurp the functions of the freeholders and to change their work in a material respect. This it has neither the right nor the inclination to do. We must accept the charter as framed by the freeholders and not attempt to enlarge its scope under the guise of judicial interpretation. Neither subdivision 13 of said section 34 of the charter nor rule 11, as prescribed by the commission, provides for any hearing upon the charges preferred against a deputy before the principal may discharge him. All that is required by the charter and the rules of the commission is that the officer discharging the deputy shall serve upon him, a reasonable time before his discharge, and file with the commission,

[2,3] Section 1028.1 of the Government Code, and similar legislation, providing that a public employee who fails or refuses on any ground whatsoever to answer questions propounded to him by a legislative committee relating to past and present knowing membership in the Communist Party shall be guilty of insubordination and of violating the section and shall be "dismissed from his employment in the manner provided by law," have been held constitutional. Board of Education, etc. v. Mass, 47 Cal.2d 494, 304 P.2d 1015; Steinmetz v. California State Board of Education, 44 Cal.2d 816, 285 P.2d 617. Both the Legislature and the courts have declared that the Communist Party is a continuing conspiracy against our Government (sec. 1027.5, Gov.Code; sec. 12600, Educ.Code; Black v. Cutter Laboratories, 43 Cal.2d 788, 278 P.2d 905), and without doubt the state has the power and authority to require county employees to testify on such subjects as a condition to continued employment. Adler v. Board of Education of City of New York, 342 U.S. 485, 72 S.Ct. 380, 96 L.Ed. 517. Loyalty on the part of county employees is essential to the order and peaceful operation of government and is relative to fitness for such employment. Therefore a government employee may be required to disclose certain information relative to fitness and loyalty as a reasonable condition for retaining public employment even though the disclosures may in some cases constitute self-incrimination. Board of Education, etc. v. Mass, supra, 47 Cal.2d 494, 304 P.2d 1015; Steinmetz v. California State Board of Education, supra, 44 Cal.2d 816, 285 P.2d 617. Although by the terms of section 1028.1 of the Government Code petitioner must be discharged "in the manner provided by law," under the authority (charter and civil service rules) by which he was hired and held his employment, he as a temporary employee was not entitled to a hearing upon discharge. Therefore, as applied to him section 1028.1 does not require a hearing and a county temporary employee who is summarily discharged is discharged in the "manner provided by law." By refusing him a hearing it is clear that no right was taken from petitioner which he otherwise would have had, or been entitled to.

[4] In demanding a hearing regardless of his employment status, petitioner is in effect asking the court to equalize the rights of all civil service employees whether they be temporary, probationary or permanent. To do so would lose sight of the entire philosophy of civil service in government and destroy the distinction between the various classifications. The basic reasoning behind the "stepladder" classifications in civil service is the necessity for a trial period for both employee and employer. It is during this time the employer formulates its opinion of the suitability, capability, ability to work with others, stability and loyalty of the employee, and determines whether he will make a satisfactory permanent worker. During this period the employee, too, has the opportunity to determine whether he likes the work involved, conditions, personnel, etc., and wishes to remain. He may quit at any time. The employer also has the right to discharge him. As stated in Parsons v. County of Los Angeles, 37 Cal.App.2d 666, at page 672, 99 P.2d 1079, at page 1082: "It is a well-settled rule of law that where there are no restrictive provisions the power of the appointment carries with it the power of removal. Fee v. Fitts, supra [108 Cal. App. 551, 291 P. 889]. The legislature has ample authority to determine the manner in which city employees may be removed and it has undertaken to fix the procedure to be followed. Subject to the limitations expressly imposed, the proper executive officers may discharge." See also Neuwald v. Brock, 12 Cal.2d 662, 86 P.2d 1047; Snelling v. Civil Service Board, 90 Cal. App.2d 865, 204 P.2d 358. It is only after the employee has completed his probationary period and remains to become "permanent" that certain employment rights become available to him.

To hold on the one hand that under ordinary circumstances a temporary employee can be constitutionally validly discharged without a hearing and on the other that, if he is discharged for insubordination and a violation of section 1028.1, he must be given a full hearing is to allow privilege and destroy equality. To grant him a hearing because of his refusal to answer questions with reference to his membership in a communist organization is to grant him a status which the ordinary employee in this same classification does not have. Petitioner can demand no greater degree of privilege than any other temporary county civil service employee regardless of any implied question of loyalty or disloyalty.

Petitioner contends that appellants make the same argument rejected in Housing Authority of City of Los Angeles v. Cordova, 130 Cal.App.2d Supp. 883, 279 P.2d 215. The Housing authority contended that because the lease provided it could terminate a tenancy upon ten days' notice it needed to give no reason for termination and could terminate if tenants refused to sign the "Housing Loyalty Oath." There the court simply held that the right to public housing could not be based on the signing of a loyalty oath and a statutory right to public housing having been created this right could not be taken away without due process of law. This is quite another situation than the one at bar in which no statutory right exists in any event. It seems to this court that housing subversives does not present the same serious problem as hiring them.

Petitioner, defending the judgment of the lower court, relies heavily on Slochow v. Board of Higher Education of City of New York, 350 U.S. 551, 76 S.Ct. 637, 100 L.Ed. 692, and Board of Education, etc. v. Mass, 47 Cal.2d 494, 304 P.2d 1015, urging that under these authorities he is entitled to a full and complete hearing and a determination of whether his reasons for invoking the privilege are sufficient.

The petitioner, a temporary employee, does not fall within the framework of due process laid down in either of these two cases. In Slochower v. Board of Higher Education of City of New York, 350 U.S. 551, 76 S.Ct. 637, 100 L.Ed. 692, Professor Slochower, a permanent employee entitled to tenure under the state law, was summarily discharged by the board under a New York City charter provision. A New York statute gave a procedural right to a hearing before discharge to persons in the class of Slochower. The Supreme Court concluded there was a violation of due process in summarily dismissing him. However, the court also held that one does not have a constitutional right to government employment and "he must comply with reasonable, lawful, and nondiscriminatory terms laid down by the proper authorities." Slochower v. Board of Higher Education of City of New York, supra, 350 U.S. at page 555, 76 S.Ct. at page 639.

Thereafter, the case of Board of Education, etc. v. Mass, 47 Cal.2d 494, 304 P.2d 1015, involving the constitutionality of section 12604 of the Education Code was decided. Mass, an instructor at City College in San Francisco, had appeared before a subcommittee of the House of Representatives and refused to answer questions asked of him regarding his membership in the Communist Party. He was later suspended without a hearing before the board of education for his refusal to testify. The court held that Mass was entitled to a hearing. Here again the employee enjoyed a specific statutory right to a hearing before discharge.

[5] An analysis of both opinions discloses that the court determined the rights of employment and discharge under conditions of tenure, or permanency, wherein by statute the employee was entitled to a hearing as compared with the temporary status of petitioner herein and his total lack of any right of hearing under the charter and civil service rules. The rights involved under the Slochower and Mass cases were of statutory origin and in each the statutory safeguards had been built into certain rights of tenure which required there could be no discharge in the manner provided by law until such time as a full and complete hearing had been granted. In the instant case there is no statutory right for a hearing prior to the discharge of petitioner, a temporary employee. Holding a temporary status only he had no basic right to either a hearing or to county employment and whatever his rights were must be measured by the county charter and the civil service rules adopted thereunder. The temporary status enjoyed by him distinguishes him from the permanency in the Slochower and Mass cases.

Petitioner contends that he was discharged for invoking his constitutional privilege and that the implication of guilt it carries was responsible for his discharge. Actually he was discharged because he was guilty of insubordination and of violating section 1028.1 of the Government Code. Whatever implication he wishes to attach to his having invoked the privilege is immaterial here. Section 1028.1 heretofore held constitutional defines the refusal to answer as "insubordination" which authorizes dismissal.

Petitioner also claims that all he did was to exercise a constitutional privilege in refusing to answer the questions and that his discharge without a hearing therefore was a violation of due process.

At the outset a temporary employee has no vested right to county employment and may therefore be discharged summarily. Bailey v. Richardson, 86 U.S.App.D.C. 248, 182 F.2d 46, affirmed by an equally divided court 341 U.S. 918, 71 S.Ct. 669, 95 L.Ed. 1352; Friedman v. Schwellenbach, 81 U.S.App.D.C. 365, 159 F.2d 22, certiorari denied 330 U.S. 838, 67 S.Ct. 979, 91 L.Ed. 1285. Although involving federal civil service, these cases are persuasive here. The court in the Bailey case recognized that Congress had provided the President of the United States with authority to prescribe regulations for the admission of persons into civil service and for their discharge. The court held that a summary discharge of a probational appointee was proper and without constitutional objection. At page 58 of 182 F.2d, it stated: "Due process of law is not applicable unless one is being deprived of something to which he has a right." The holding in the Friedman case is similar to that in the Bailey case. The facts therein relative to status are practically identical with those in the instant case. The dismissal without a hearing was upheld. In the case of Parker v. Lester, 9 Cir., 227 F.2d 708, at page 716, on the issue of due process the court stated: "When it is proposed to take from a citizen through administrative proceedings some right which he otherwise would have, it has always been held that the constitutional requirement is that he shall be afforded notice and an opportunity to be heard."

We fail to see what it is to which petitioner "has a right" for which a hearing must be given. Because of his temporary employment status he is, at the most, only an applicant for a permanent position. Of interest in this connection is the analogous situation expressed in Bailey v. Richardson, supra, 182 F.2d 46, at page 55: "If her status was merely that of an applicant for appointment, as we think it was, her non-appointment involved no procedural constitutional rights. Obviously, an applicant for office has no constitutional right to a hearing or a specification of the reasons why he is not appointed."

Furthermore, due process does not always require a hearing even where vested rights are involved. Defining "due process" the United States Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Frankfurter, stated in Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee v. McGrath, 341 U.S. 123, at page 163, 71 S.Ct. 624, at page 644, 95 L.Ed. 817: "Due process is not a mechanical instrument. It is not a yardstick. It is a process. It is a delicate process of adjustment inescapably involving the exercise of judgment by those whom the Constitution entrusted with the unfolding of the process. * * * The Court has responded to the infinite variety and perplexity of the tasks of government by recognizing that what is unfair in one situation may be fair in another. * * * Whether the ex parte procedure to which the petitioners were subjected duly observed 'the rudiments of fair play,' (citing cases) cannot, therefore, be tested by mere generalities or sentiments abstractly appealing. The precise nature of the interest that has been adversely affected, the manner in which this is done, the reasons for doing it, the available alternatives to the procedure that was followed, the protection implicit in the office of the functionary whose conduct is challenged, the balance of hurt complained of and good accomplished—these are some of the considerations that must enter into the judicial judgment." We are satisfied petitioner in the case at bar has been treated fairly at all stages of his employment and dismissal.

As to the applicability of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution, or Art. I, sec. 13 of the California Constitution, the court in Bailey v. Richardson, supra, said at page 57 of 182 F.2d: "The due process clause provides: 'No person shall * * * be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; * * *' It has been held repeatedly and consistently that Government employ is not 'property' and that in this particular it is not a contract. We are unable to perceive how it could be held to be 'liberty'. Certainly it is not 'life'. So much that is clear would seem to dispose of the point. In terms the due process clause does not apply to the holding of a Government office." Referring to the First and Sixth Amendment infringements, the court stated at page 60 of 182 F.2d: "The situation of the Government employee is not different in this respect from that of private employees. A newspaper editor has a constitutional right to speak and write as he pleases. But the Constitution does not guarantee him a place in the columns of a publisher with whose political views he does not agree," and again at page 61 of 182 F.2d: "No one denies Miss Bailey the right to any political activity or affiliation she may choose. What is denied her is Government employ. The argument upon the clear and present danger rule, therefore, must be that Miss Bailey has a right to Government employ unless her presence there would constitute a clear and present danger. There simply is no such right. To state the proposition is to demonstrate its untenability."

In the instant case it is clear that the controlling provision of the charter and civil service rules permit no hearing prior to discharge of those in Globe's class. There is no reason why petitioner should be permitted to claim and secure any extraordinary rights merely because he was insubordinate and refused to answer questions about his communist affiliations. He had no basic right to county employment in the first instance. No hearing as a matter of either constitutional or statutory right had to be granted an employee in Globe's position.

Untenable is petitioner's contention that the Congressional Committee was not a duly authorized committee for the reason that the authorizing resolution was too broad and vague in its terminology which empowered the committee to investigate un-American and subversive activities and all other questions in relation thereto, without adequately or at all limiting or defining such terms. This point is predicated upon the case of Watkins v. United States, 354 U.S. 178, 201, 77 S.Ct. 1173, 1 L.Ed.2d 1273, in which the court commented upon the indefinite nature of the authorization but did not hold the authorizing resolution unconstitutional. The facts in the Watkins case and in the instant controversy are entirely dissimilar, for in the Watkins case appellant was prosecuted for contempt after refusing to answer certain questions as to past Communist Party membership of other persons. Watkins had offered to answer any such questions pertaining to himself. In the present situation, certainly, there was no vagueness in reference to the subject matter of the inquiry or its relation to the investigative powers of the committee;—the employee was asked directly in regard to his own communistic activities and refused to answer such inquiries.

For the foregoing reasons, judgment is reversed.

Thomas W. NELSON, Petitioner and Appellant,

v.

COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES, Board of Supervisors, Los Angeles County, Burton W. Chace, Chairman thereof, Herbert C. Legg, Kenneth Hahn, John Anson Ford and Roger W. Jessup, Members thereof; Civil Service Commission of Los Angeles County, Harry Albert, President thereof, and Hayden F. Jones and Winston W. Crouch, Members thereof, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 22680.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,

Sept. 18, 1958.

Hearing Denied Nov. 13, 1958.

Mandamus proceeding by discharged permanent civil service employee of Los Angeles County seeking reinstatement. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, John J. Ford, J., entered judgment denying writ and discharged employee appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that where permanent civil service employee upon being subpoenaed before Congressional committee refused to answer questions pertaining to political opinions and associations and knowing membership in Communist Party in violation of statute making civil service employee so refusing to answer such questions guilty of insubordination, and employee was granted a full hearing by Civil Service Commission but refused to present any testimony explaining reasons for refusal to testify, employee was afforded due process.

1. Constitutional Law ☞277(2)

Where permanent Los Angeles County civil service employee appeared pursuant to subpoena before Congressional committee and refused to answer questions concerning his political opinions and associations and knowing membership in the Communist Party, in violation of statute making it duty of government employees to answer such questions and providing that refusal constituted insubordination for which employee would be discharged, and employee received a full hearing before Civil Service Commission but declined to testify or offer any evidence concerning reasons, if any, for refusing to testify, discharge of employee was in accordance with due process of law. U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1, 5; West's Ann. Gov.Code, § 1028.1.

2. Officers ☞72(1)

Civil Service Commission has a discretion which may be exercised if it deems civil service employee's reason for refusal to answer questions before specified bodies as to knowing membership in Communist Party sufficient, notwithstanding statute making all employees refusing to answer such questions guilty of insubordination and subject to discharge from employment in manner provided by law. West's Ann.Gov. Code, § 1028.1.

A. L. Wirin, Fred Okrand, William T. Pillsbury, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, Wm. E. Lamoreaux, Asst. County Counsel, Fred R. Metheny, Deputy County Counsel, Los Angeles, for respondents.

LILLIE, Justice.

By stipulation this appeal was consolidated for oral argument with the companion case of Globe v. County of Los Angeles, Cal.App., 329 P.2d 971, involving similar and related facts and questions of law.

On June 16, 1953, Thomas W. Nelson became a permanent civil service employee of the county of Los Angeles in the capacity of a medical social worker. On April 20, 1956, he was summoned to appear before a subcommittee on un-American activities of the United States House of Representatives and after being sworn refused to answer a series of questions pertaining to his political opinions, associations and knowing membership in the communist party. He based his refusal on the First Amendment of the United States Constitution and on a claim of privilege against self-incrimination under the Fifth Amendment. Petitioner was discharged from county employment on May 2, 1956, on the ground that he had been guilty of insubordination and a violation of section 1028.1 of the Government Code. Thereafter, he appealed to the Civil Service Commission and was granted a hearing before that body. Pursuant thereto, he personally appeared before it on June 11, 1956. On August 9, 1956, the commission filed its findings and conclusions. It found that petitioner refused to answer certain questions under oath as a witness before the United States House of Representatives Committee on Un-American Activities and concluded that he was guilty of insubordination and a violation of section 1028.1 of the Government Code and subject to discharge from employment.

Petitioner filed a petition for writ of mandate in the superior court seeking reinstatement. The trial court found that at the hearing before the Civil Service Commission petitioner failed to offer any evidence as to his reasons for refusing to answer questions before the subcommittee, or to give explanation as to other matters germane thereto; and concluded that petitioner had been accorded a full and fair hearing on his discharge, at which he was given the opportunity to explain the reasons for his refusal to testify, and that he was discharged "in the manner provided by law." The petition for writ of mandate was denied and petitioner appeals from that judgment.

[1] Unlike the companion case of Globe v. County of Los Angeles, Cal.App., 329 P.2d 971, petitioner herein, a permanent employee, upon his request, was accorded a hearing before the Civil Service Commission. In the opinion of the trial court, as of the reviewing court in the present appeal, appellant was afforded the opportunity for a full hearing which due process requires under the cases of Slochow v. Board of Higher Education of City of New York, 350 U.S. 551, 76 S.Ct. 637, 100 L.Ed. 692, and Board of Education, etc. v. Mass, 47 Cal.2d 494, 304 P.2d 1015.

The record in the instant case discloses that at the hearing before the Civil Service Commission petitioner appeared with counsel. The county of Los Angeles, after having offered, by way of stipulation, certain facts concerning petitioner's employment with the county of Los Angeles, his appearance before the United States House of Representatives Committee on Un-American Activities, his failure to answer certain questions, and a transcript of the hearing before the committee covering the testimony of petitioner, rested its case. The chairman then suggested that all witnesses be sworn and asked, "Is anybody going to testify in this case?" to which the petitioner's counsel answered: "Perhaps Mr. Nelson will testify." Petitioner then offered his entire personnel file in evidence, together with a copy of the introductory statement made by Congressman Moulder as to the scope and purpose of the hearings before the House Committee on Un-American Activities. Before resting his case, counsel for petitioner stated, "The employee does not care to offer any evidence or testimony at this time. He merely wishes to make a statement through counsel as to his position in regard to his discharge." The chairman of the commission asked counsel if that meant he was ready to rest his case. Counsel answered in the affirmative and the chairman followed it up with the further question, "Now you just want to argue?" to which counsel replied, "That is all." The petitioner did not take the stand, offered no testimony and no witnesses. Counsel's argument was essentially an attack upon the constitutionality of section 1028.1 of the Government Code as applied to him.

Petitioner, although given a clear opportunity to do so, declined to testify at the hearing before the commission or offer any evidence concerning his reasons, if any, for refusing to testify before the House subcommittee or matters germane thereto.

Both parties rely upon Slochow v. Board of Higher Education of City of New York, supra, 350 U.S. 551, 76 S.Ct. 637, 100 L.Ed. 692, and Board of Education, etc. v. Mass, supra, 47 Cal.2d 494, 304 P.2d 1015.

Any point raised by petitioner that the statutory requirements of section 1028.1 bar or prohibit his privilege of self-incrimination has heretofore been decided by the Supreme Court in the case of Steinmetz v. California State Board of Education, 44 Cal.2d 816, 285 P.2d 617. The court said, at page 824 of 44 Cal.2d, at page 621, of 285 P.2d: "Moreover, a person may properly be required to disclose information relevant to fitness and loyalty as a reasonable condition for obtaining or retaining public employment, even though the disclosure, under some circumstances, may amount to self-incrimination. (Citations.) A public employee, of course, cannot be forced to give an answer which may tend to incriminate him, but he may be required to choose between disclosing information and losing his employment." A like holding is found in the case of Board of Education, etc. v. Mass, 47 Cal.2d 494, 304 P.2d 1015, relative to section 12604 of the Education Code, which contains substantially the same language found in section 1028.1, here under consideration. At page 498 of 47 Cal.2d, at page 1018 of 304 P.2d, the court stated: "A teacher may properly be required to disclose information relative to fitness and loyalty as a reasonable condition for obtaining or retaining public employment, even though the disclosure under some circumstances may amount to self-incrimination. See Steinmetz v. California State Board of Education, 44 Cal.2d 816, 824, 285 P.2d 617; Pockman v. Leonard, 39 Cal.2d 676, 687, 249 P.2d 267; Christal v. Police Comm., 33 Cal.App.2d 564, 567 et seq., 92 P.2d 416."

Although the Supreme Court has previously held that under section 1028.1 of the Government Code and similar legislation providing for the dismissal of a public employee who fails or refuses to answer questions propounded by a legislative committee relating to past or present membership in the Communist party, an employee shall be deemed guilty of insubordination and dismissed in a manner provided by law (Board of Education, etc. v. Mass, 47 Cal.2d 494, 304 P.2d 1015; Steinmetz v. California State Board of Education, 44 Cal.2d 816, 285 P.2d 617; Adler v. Board of Education, 342 U.S. 485, 72 S.Ct. 380, 96 L.Ed. 517), petitioner herein urges that section 1028.1 of the Government Code is unconstitutional as applied to him. He argues that to have explained his reasons for invoking the privilege at the hearing before the commission would have been meaningless under the statute because it flatly provides that any employee who refuses to answer on any ground whatsoever shall be guilty of insubordination and a violation of the section and shall be dismissed "in the manner provided by law."

[2] The California Supreme Court does not accept this strict interpretation. Board of Education, etc. v. Mass, 47 Cal.2d 494, 304 P.2d 1015. It recognizes a discretion on the part of the employer which may be exercised if it deems the employee's reasons for refusing to answer sufficient. In discussing Slochower v. Board of Higher Education of City of New York, 350 U.S. 551, 76 S.Ct. 637, 100 L.Ed. 692, holding that summary dismissal violated the constitutional requirements of due process because no consideration is given to such factors as the subject matter of the questions, remoteness of the period to which they are directed, or justification for exercise of the privilege or whether the plea resulted from mistake, inadvertence, or legal advice conscientiously given, either wisely or unwisely, our Supreme Court in the Mass case made it clear that it understood that the Slochower case held that a public employee may be dismissed for invoking the privilege against self-incrimination only if "after a full hearing in which he is afforded an opportunity to explain his reasons for claiming the privilege, it is determined that his refusal to answer is sufficient under the circumstances to warrant dismissal." 47 Cal.2d at page 499, 304 P.2d at page 1019. A full hearing under section 1028.1 of the Government Code is guaranteed to a public employee by the use of the language "in the manner provided by law." The court in the Mass case so interpreted this language, and at page 499 of 47 Cal.2d, at page 1019 of 304 P.2d stated: "Section 12604, as we have seen, provides for the dismissal of an employee 'in the manner provided by law,' and we construe these words to mean that, before an employee may be found guilty of insubordination or dismissed for refusing to answer under the claim of privilege against self-incrimination, there must be a full hearing and a determination that his reasons for invoking the privilege are not sufficient." Factors of the type mentioned in the Slochower decision should, of course, govern the determination as to the sufficiency of the employee's reasons. For what purpose would the Supreme Court insist on a full hearing to give the employee an opportunity to explain his reasons if the statute required a dismissal regardless of his explanation for refusing to answer?

If the scope of inquiry in the instant case was limited to a determination of whether he refused to answer the questions put to him by the committee, petitioner himself limited it. He was given the type of full hearing contemplated by the Slochower and Mass cases and section 1028.1 of the Government Code. Petitioner elected to remain silent.

Appellant argues that section 1028.1 of the Government Code, in its terms, by the use of the language: "on any ground whatsoever" does not permit a reason or justification for a refusal to answer questions, and that it requires a dismissal if petitioner refuses to answer on any ground whatsoever. Counsel confuses the ground upon which petitioner refused to testify, in effect the basis of his refusal, with the reason why he refused to answer on that ground. Our Supreme Court has held that the terms of the statute do permit a reason or justification for refusing to answer and require a hearing for the purpose of permitting the employee to give it, and a determination of the employer that he was or was not justified.

Any argument that the county should have questioned petitioner about his reasons for invoking the privilege is specious. The record discloses that he was given every opportunity to explain if he wished to do so and "an opportunity to explain" does not imply that the county must elicit the information from the employee. Whether his explanation comes through query of the employer or the employee's own counsel would seem immaterial as long as the employee is given a full hearing in which he is afforded an opportunity to explain his reasons. The hearing is for the purpose of giving him the opportunity to explain. If he chooses to remain silent and not do so he cannot now be heard to say he has been denied due process. If petitioner's hearing was limited in any way, it was limited by his own voluntary choice to remain silent. It is clear that petitioner was afforded the hearing which due process requires under the pronouncements of the United States and California Supreme Courts in the Slochower and Mass cases and there is no basis for setting aside his dismissal.

As to whether the congressional committee was a duly authorized committee, petitioner cites Watkins v. United States, 354 U.S. 178, 77 S.Ct. 1173, 1 L.Ed.2d 1273, claiming that the authorizing resolution in the instant case was too broad in its terminology empowering the committee to investigate un-American and subversive activities. Although the court in the Watkins case commented upon the indefinite nature of the authorization it did not hold it unconstitutional. In any event the factual situation in the Watkins case and in the one at bar are not similar for in the Watkins case appellant was prosecuted for contempt after refusing to answer certain questions as to past communist party membership of other persons. Watkins had offered to answer such questions pertaining to himself. In the present situation there was no vagueness in reference to the subject matter of the inquiry or its relation to the investigative powers of the committee. Petitioner was asked directly in regard to his own communistic activities and refused to answer such inquiries.

Petitioner contends that he was discharged for invoking the privilege and that the implication of guilt it carries was responsible for his dismissal. As a matter of fact, petitioner was discharged because he "was guilty of insubordination and guilty of violating section 1028.1 of the Government Code of the State of California." Whatever implication petitioner wishes to attach to his having invoked the privilege is immaterial here. The statute heretofore held constitutional defines the refusal to answer as "insubordination," which authorizes a dismissal in the manner provided by law. It has been long established by the United States Supreme Court and the California Supreme Court that there is a correlation between loyalty and fitness and public employment. In Board of Education, etc. v. Mass, supra, at page 498 of 47 Cal.2d, at page 1018 of 304 P.2d, the court stated: "Loyalty on the part of public employees is essential to orderly and dependable government and is therefore relevant to fitness for such employment." Steinmetz v. California State Board of Education, 44 Cal.2d 816, 285 P.2d 617; Pockman v. Leonard, 39 Cal.2d 676, 249 P.2d 267; Christal v. Police Commission, 33 Cal. App.2d 564, 565, 92 P.2d 416. Section 1028.1 of the Government Code demands disclosure of information relative to such fitness as a reasonable condition for retaining employment even though the disclosure may constitute self-incrimination in some cases. It is clear that both insubordination and disloyalty are factors of fitness. The unquestioned basis for petitioner's dismissal was insubordination—a lack of cooperation. There appears in the record ample evidence of unfitness for county employment and a legal basis for discharge.

The judgment is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
Sept. 29, 1958.

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court, El Dorado County, Robert E. Roberts, J., for assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder, and he appealed. The Third District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that since witness, who had first testified that he had never been convicted of a felony, thereafter had given testimony clearly indicating that he had been convicted of some military offense but that he was uncertain as to whether it constituted a "felony," no prejudice to defendant could have resulted.

John W. Ross, Jr., Sacramento, for appellant.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Defendant above named was found guilty by a jury of the crime of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder. His motion for a new trial was denied and judgment was pronounced. He has appealed from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant urges a number of grounds for the reversal of the judgment and order, but before discussing them we shall give a brief summary of the evidence as shown by the record.

At the time of the alleged assault, Mathews, a resident of Nevada, was an unemployed "pit boss" and an unpaid deputy sheriff in certain counties in Nevada. On December 15, 1957, he was returning from Sacramento to his home in Reno. He stopped in Placerville where he had some drinks. At Lindy's Bar about 4 p. m. he began a conversation about narcotics with William Grissom. After about an hour, and after the bartender refused the two men further service, they visited another bar and then, in Mathews' car, drove about 8 miles before stopping at the Eight Mile House where each had one drink. After they were refused further service they again drove a short distance and stopped at a restaurant where they ate. They then drove to Pollock Pines where they stopped the car in front of the Fifty Grand Bar about 9 p. m. Before entering the bar Mathews removed a 38-caliber revolver from the glove compartment of his car and placed the revolver in a holster attached to his belt.

During the time Grissom and Mathews were together they had one argument over Mathews' money which he had been flashing in the various bars. On one occasion Mathews accused Grissom of taking his money.

The two men entered the Fifty Grand Bar and sat down at the bar. Mathews testified that Grissom got off of the stool on which he had been sitting and at the same time grabbed Mathews' keys and said, "You are a stool pigeon." "I'll show you what we do to stool pigeons. I'm going to take your car and your money and scatter your brains down the highway." Mathews also testified that Grissom grabbed the keys, came off the bar stool, wrestled with him, and hit him on the left side with something. Mathews said that he was in fear of his life so he reached for his gun and fired twice. He also testified that he had no intent to kill.

In response to a radio message that a man was flashing a badge and waving a gun, Officer Allen of the California Highway Patrol proceeded to the Fifty Grand Bar. Upon his arrival he looked through a circular window about six or eight inches in diameter and saw two men, one of whom was seated at the bar and the other standing behind and slightly to the right of the seated one. There were about four or five feet between the two. The officer testified that he had a good view of both men though the body of the one seated was partially obscured. The officer then entered the bar. He walked toward the men and when he was within three or four feet of them he heard two loud reports, and the man seated at the bar fell over to the left and off the stool. The man standing turned to the right and the officer saw a 38 revolver in his hand. Officer Allen then struck him on the back of the head with his flashlight and knocked him to the floor.

A deputy sheriff arrived at the bar shortly after the shooting and while examining Mathews detected the odor of alcohol on his breath. The physician who attended Grissom testified that he suffered two gunshot wounds; that two bullets had entered his back and had come out the front of his body; that one bullet made three holes in the splenic flexure of the colon, and the other entered just below the diaphragm and went through a portion of the lung and hit a rib as it came out.

Appellant's first contention is that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment.

Appellant contends that the evidence produced at the trial was insufficient to establish one of the essential elements of the crime of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder, namely, the specific intent to commit murder. In this regard appellant argues that the evidence established the fact that he was so intoxicated at the time of commission of the crime that he was incapable of forming a specific intent to commit murder. The appellant argues further that the evidence establishes self-defense.

However, appellant's testimony at the trial indicates that he had a clear recollection of the events that occurred prior to the shooting which would tend to show that he was not so intoxicated as to render him incapable of forming a criminal intent. People v. Sellas, 114 Cal.App. 367, 300 P. 150.

[1] It is well established that the weight to be accorded to evidence of intoxication and whether such intoxication precluded the accused from forming a specific intent to kill and murder are matters essentially for the determination of the trier of fact. People v. Dement, 48 Cal.2d 600, 311 P.2d 505; People v. Cheary, 48 Cal.2d 301, 309 P.2d 431; People v. Owens, 3 Cal.App. 750, 86 P. 980.

[2] The court in the instant case gave the jury the standard approved instructions on intoxication from California Jury Instructions, Criminal, CALJIC 607, 607-A, 78-B. While in this case there is evidence of the intoxication of appellant before and after the commission of the assault, there is ample proof that he was not so drunk that he was incapable of committing the crime charged, namely, assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder. People v. Dement, supra; People v. Owens, supra. As stated in People v. Isby, 30 Cal. 2d 879, 890, 186 P.2d 405, 415:

"In the light of such record, it was for the jury to determine, under proper instructions, which the court gave, whether defendants, by reason of their voluntary intoxication, were incapable of forming the specific criminal intent essential to sustain their conviction; and it cannot be said from the evidence that the jury was not justified in deciding the question against defendants."

[3] Appellant's further contention that the evidence establishes that he shot the victim, William Grissom, in self-defense is not borne out by the record. Officer Allen of the California Highway Patrol, who was within four feet of appellant when he shot Grissom in the back, testified that at the time of the shooting Grissom had his back to appellant, was sitting on a bar stool with his feet on the rungs of said stool, his elbows on the bar and in a slumped-over position. Although the two men had on one occasion had an argument over appellant's money, Officer Allen testified that they were not arguing when he entered the bar; in fact, neither party had spoken. The examining physician testified that Grissom had been shot twice in the back. The evidence fully sustains the implied finding of the jury that the shooting was not in self-defense.

Appellant contends that the trial court committed error in permitting his counsel to enter into a stipulation for the introduction into evidence of People's Exhibit No. 8. This exhibit was a statement made by appellant shortly after the shooting and his subsequent arrest. In this connection, appellant contends that People's Exhibit No. 8 contained a non-accusatory statement made by Officer Allen to appellant which was inadmissible hearsay. This was the first of two statements made by the appellant to the police. The second statement was introduced by the prosecution as part of its case in chief. While cross-examining the appellant, the prosecution attempted to impeach him by showing through the use of Exhibit 8 that the appellant had made prior inconsistent statements. This statement contained a statement by Officer Allen telling appellant how the shooting occurred. The exhibit had originally been offered by defense counsel but the prosecution refused the offer. When the prosecution offered it defense counsel objected to a part of it. The trial judge ruled that unless both parties agreed to its admission in its entirety the court would not permit it to be introduced. It was then stipulated that the entire statement could go in and the exhibit was introduced in evidence. Appellant contends that if the officer's statement was admissible at all it was admissible as part of the prosecution's case in chief and not in rebuttal, and, secondly, the statement of the officer was not an accusation.

[4] In view of the fact that the counsel who represented appellant at the trial stipulated that Exhibit 8 in its entirety could be admitted in evidence, we do not believe that appellant may now raise the question of its admissibility. The counsel who represents appellant upon this appeal states: "Now counsel for appellant herein has not overlooked the fact that this statement in its entirety, People's Exhibit No. 8 was stipulated to be admitted into evidence by both the prosecuting attorney and the defense attorney, but this poses the question of how far may an attorney in a criminal case go in stipulating away the rights of his client." However, it is well settled that an attorney may stipulate as to evidence which may be received. Morgan v. Morgan, 139 Cal.App.

2d 704, 294 P.2d 45. And as stated in People v. Ah Ton, 53 Cal. 741, "it is competent for a defendant on trial for a felony to consent to the introduction of evidence to which he might otherwise have well objected." Furthermore, in fairness to the counsel who defended appellant at the trial, the reporter's transcript of 516 pages shows that appellant was vigorously and ably defended.

Appellant next challenges the instruction on specific intent. The court instructed the jury: "In the case of certain crimes it is necessary that in addition to the intended act which characterizes the offense, the act must be accompanied by a specific or particular intent without which such a crime may not be committed. Thus, in the crime of assault with intent to commit murder a necessary element is the existence in the mind of the perpetrator of the specific preconceived intent to kill a human being and unless such intent so exists, that crime is not committed." Appellant contends that the instruction is erroneous because it tells the jury that if appellant had a preconceived intent to kill, a crime had been committed. It is contended that since all killings are not unlawful a specific intent to murder must be found and since the jury was not told a specific intent to murder must exist the instruction was prejudicial.

[5] Appellant also urges that the court erred in not specifically defining murder. However, the court did instruct the jury that in order for them to return a verdict of guilty they must find the existence of facts which as a matter of law amounted to an assault with intent to commit murder. The court need not instruct in the language of the code. People v. Hayes, 161 Cal.App. 2d 129, 326 P.2d 169. The court is only required to state the elements necessary to constitute the crime charged. People v. Ortiz, 63 Cal.App. 662, 219 P. 1024.

[6] The court in its instructions to the jury defined an assault and also defined a deadly weapon. The court further instructed the jury that in order to find the appellant guilty it was necessary that there existed in the mind of the accused the "specific, preconceived intent to kill a human being." The court also told the jury that in the crime of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder the specific intent to murder is a necessary element of the crime, and that the defendant could not be found guilty unless he had the specific intent to murder Grissom. The instructions must be considered in their entirety and the court did in effect instruct the jury that before the accused could be guilty of the offense charged they must find that he acted with the unlawful intent to kill with malice aforethought.

Similar contentions were made in the recent case of People v. Hayes, supra. In the Hayes case the defendant was charged with and convicted of the offense of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder. On appeal the defendant raised the issue that the trial court erred in failing to instruct the jury on the definition of murder as found in section 187 of the Penal Code and malice as found in section 188 of the Penal Code. The following quotation from the opinion of this court in People v. Hayes [161 Cal.App.2d 134, 326 P.2d 172] is applicable to the instant case:

"In instructing on the crime here charged it is proper to define murder since the element of intent to commit murder is definitely involved. People v. Whitlow, 24 Cal.App. 1, 6, 139 P. 826. However, we think that essentially the court did this. The court told the jury that an assault was an unlawful attempt, coupled with a present ability, to commit a violent injury upon the person of another. The court defined a deadly weapon as any object, instrument or weapon which, used in the manner in which it appears to have been used, is capable of producing and is likely to produce death or great bodily injury. Coming now to the specific intent which the statute requires, that is, the intent to commit murder, the court told the jury that this intent must be proved and was an element of the offense charged. Then the court told the jury: 'In the crime of assault with intent to commit murder, there must exist in the mind of the perpetrator the specific, preconceived intent to kill a human being.'

"We have in the instructions given an adequate explanation of what is meant by charging an intent to commit murder, for the jury has been told that appellant must have acted with a specific preconceived intent to unlawfully kill a human being, which is to say that he must have acted with the intent unlawfully to kill with malice aforethought. Of course, it is never necessary to instruct in the exact language of a statute."

[7] Appellant also challenges the instruction on confessions and admissions. One instruction that was given began: "Evidence has been received in this case tending to show that on an occasion other than this trial the defendant himself made a statement tending to prove his guilt of the alleged crime for which he is on trial." Another instruction contained the following: "* * * although the court has admitted evidence tending to show defendant made a confession * * *" Appellant contends that by the instructions the court told the jury that appellant had confessed the crime and all the jury need do was to find that the confession was voluntary in order to convict. This contention cannot be sustained. The court in its instruction to the jury properly defined the terms confession and admission (CAL JIC 29; People v. Ferdinand, 194 Cal. 555, 229 P. 341; People v. Gardner, 147 Cal. App.2d 530, 305 P.2d 614; People v. Crowl, 28 Cal.App.2d 299, 82 P.2d 507), and further instructed the jury that it was within their province to determine whether a confession had been made and if so, whether it was true and voluntary (CALJIC 29, 29-A; People v. Cryder, 90 Cal.App.2d 194, 202 P.2d 765).

[8] Where the trial court fully and clearly instructs the jury as to the distinction between confessions and admissions and leaves the jury the question whether a confession has been made and, if so, whether it is true, the court has not invaded the province of the jury. People v. Lucas, 160 Cal.App.2d 305, 324 P.2d 933; see also People v. Gardner, supra.

Appellant also contends that the district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct. The first alleged instance of misconduct concerns a remark the district attorney made in his closing argument to the jury when he speculated on the kind of case the jury would have before it if the victim had succumbed as the district attorney alleged he would have done except for the skill of the attending doctor. The district attorney said, "Does anyone question but what we would have had a murder case on our hands?" An objection was made and the court told the district attorney to refrain from speculation and that the remark of the district attorney appeared to border on speculation. No request was made that the court admonish the jury to disregard the remark, but the statement of the court was in effect such an admonition.

Appellant contends further that the district attorney committed misconduct in withholding People's Exhibit No. 8 until the close of appellant's case and introducing it on rebuttal instead of presenting it in his case in chief. This contention is without merit because, as hereinbefore stated, both appellant's counsel and counsel for the people stipulated that said exhibit be introduced in evidence.

[9] The final claim of misconduct is that the district attorney permitted Grissom to perjure himself. On cross-examination Grissom testified that he had never been convicted of a felony. Then Grissom was shown something to refresh his memory. Again he was asked the question and he replied that he did not know. Apparently, Grissom, while in the army, was convicted of a violation of the articles of war. In an insertion in his brief appellant has provided a photostatic copy of a "rap sheet" showing Grissom was convicted of desertion and sentenced to the disciplinary barracks at Fort Leavenworth. This, however, is not a part of the record on appeal. There is a division of authority as to whether or not the fact of a conviction of a military crime can be used to impeach a witness. In Henderson v. United States, 6 Cir., 202 F.2d 400, the court held that it was error for the government to ask questions about court martial convictions for AWOL in order to impeach. In United States v. Tomaiolo, 2 Cir., 249 F.2d 683, it was said that a breach of military discipline was neither a felony nor a misdemeanor involving moral turpitude and, therefore, it was error to cross-examine the defendant on such matters. See also Midkiff v. State, 29 Ariz. 523, 243 P. 601. The following cases have held desertion in time of war was a crime involving moral turpitude and therefore it was permissible to use the fact of conviction to impeach: Nelson v. State, 35 Ala. App. 179, 44 So.2d 802; Jordan v. State, 141 Ark. 504, 217 S.W. 788.

[10] In view of the fact that there is a division of authority in other jurisdictions as to whether a military conviction of desertion can be used to impeach a witness, and no California case has passed upon the question, we do not believe it can be held that the district attorney was guilty of any misconduct in the instant case. It is clear from the testimony of Grissom that he did not know whether or not he had been convicted of a felony, as is evident from the following:

"Q. * * * Have you ever been convicted of a felony? A. Well, if you are referring to the one in the Army that is the only thing I can think of.

"Q. I am asking you again, have you ever been convicted of a felony, and remember, when you answer that, I might admonish you that you are under oath? A. I know that. Q. All right. Have you ever been convicted of a felony? A. It depends.

"Mr. Winkler: Your Honor—

"The Court: Answer it yes or no, if you can.

"Mr. Winkler: I object—

"By The Witness: I don't know."

In any event it is clear that the jury would gather from Grissom's answer that he had been convicted of some military offense. We think no possible prejudice could have resulted to appellant.

In conclusion we are convinced from a study of the entire record that appellant received a fair trial, that the jury was fully and fairly instructed, that the evidence was sufficient to support the judgment, and that no prejudicial error was committed.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Hearing Denied Nov. 26, 1958.

Prosecution for possession of heroin. The Superior Court, San Francisco County, Raymond J. Arata, J., entered judgment upon verdict of guilty and accused appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that where police officer had known informant for over three years and had found him to be reliable, and informant told officer that accused would make delivery of narcotics at specified time and place and accused was seen, at that time and place, perform acts consistent with inference that he was about to make a delivery, officers had reasonable grounds to believe accused was about to make illegal delivery of narcotics and arrest was justified.

1. Arrest $\S$ 63(4)

Where police officer had known informant for over three years and had found him to be reliable, and informant told officer that accused would make delivery of narcotics at specified time and place and accused was seen at that time and place performing certain acts consistent with inference that he was about to make a delivery, officers had reasonable grounds to believe accused was about to make illegal delivery of narcotics and arrest was justified. West's Ann.Pen.Code,  $\S$  841.

2. Arrest $\S$ 63(4), 71

Information secured from reliable informant may justify arrest and search without warrant without production of informant as witness.

3. Arrest $\S$ 68

Where accused was actually engaged in commission of felony and officers had reasonable grounds to believe that this was so, fact that arresting officers did not inform him of cause of arrest did not make arrest illegal. West's Ann.Pen.Code,  $\S$  841.

4. Criminal Law $\S$ 1169(1)

Introduction of illegally secured evidence does not per se require reversal, but it depends upon whether such evidence was prejudicial.

5. Criminal Law $\S$ 1169(1)

In prosecution for possession of heroin, admission of evidence obtained by search of residence of accused without his permission, but with permission of one who was at residence and who said that he stayed there from "time to time", was not prejudicial, in view of fact that evidence that large quantity of heroin was found on accused was uncontradicted and overwhelming.

Walter H. Duane, San Francisco, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., Peter T. Kennedy, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Defendant, Grover Herman, also known as Harmon, was charged with unlawful possession of heroin, and with four prior felony convictions. He admitted three of the priors, and the fourth was dismissed on motion of the prosecutor. The case was tried before the court without a jury, and defendant was found guilty. On this appeal he urges that his arrest, the search of his person, and the search of his home were illegal.

The sole witness was Officer Logan of the San Francisco Police Department. He testified that for about a month prior to October 11, 1957, the police had defendant's residence on Green Street in San Francisco under surveillance. During this period persons were seen to enter and to leave the premises who were known to the police as narcotic addicts. About 7 p. m. on October 11, 1957, an informant, who had been known to Officer Logan for 3½ years, told Logan that defendant was going to make a delivery of heroin that night near Union and Columbus Streets at about 10 p. m., and that defendant usually carried the narcotics in his pocket. During the period Logan had known this informant the latter had supplied the officer with quite a bit of information which had always been found to be reliable. On the faith of such information several arrests were made and a considerable amount of narcotics discovered.

Logan and several other officers, after receiving this information, proceeded to defendant's residence and kept it under surveillance. At about 10 p. m. defendant entered his residence and in about five minutes came out and started to walk west on Green Street. He stopped and talked with a man who got out of an automobile parked on Green Street, and then proceeded towards Powell Street. When he reached that area the officers stopped him. The officers identified themselves as such and Logan placed the defendant under arrest. Logan did not tell defendant the cause for the arrest. The officers then searched defendant. In one of his pockets two small Manila envelopes were found. It was stipulated that one envelope contained 90 grains of heroin, and the other 47 grains.

Logan and another officer then proceeded back to defendant's residence, defendant in the custody of a third officer, following them. As they approached the door, a man—the man to whom defendant had talked a short time before—arrived with a package of beer. As the officers arrived at the door of defendant's house it was opened by a man who identified himself as one Marchesi. Marchesi was told that Herman had been arrested. Logan asked Marchesi if he lived with Herman. Marchesi replied that he did not, but "I stay here from time to time." Logan then said that defendant would arrive in a minute and that the officers wanted to come in and look around. Marchesi then stated "Help yourself." The two officers entered. At that time defendant was outside on the sidewalk in the custody of an officer. No request was made of defendant for permission to enter.

Logan then searched the premises. In a paper tissue box he found four packets. It was stipulated that these contained a total of 255 grains of heroin. About this time defendant was brought into the premises. He admitted that the packets in the tissue box belonged to him. Thus, it will be noted, the police found 137 grains of heroin in defendant's physical possession, and 255 grains at his residence, a total of 392 grains.

The first contention of appellant is that his arrest and the search of his person were illegal under the rule announced in People v. Harvey, 142 Cal.App.2d 728, 299 P.2d 310, and 156 Cal.App.2d 516, 319 P.2d 689, 690. On both appeals in that case the arrest and search of the defendant were held to be illegal, and the evidence so discovered inadmissible. The case was undoubtedly correctly decided. On the first trial the evidence was that the arresting officers were told that defendant had been under surveillance for some time, that it was believed that he dealt in narcotics, and that if the officers believed that "something was wrong" they should arrest him. The officers saw defendant drive up near his residence, talk to a person who drove up in a coupe and then enter his residence. Shortly thereafter defendant came outside, looked up and down the street, crossed the street, again looked up and down, and was then arrested and searched. The appellate court properly reversed the conviction, holding the arrest and search to be illegal. The court pointed out that so far as the officers knew defendant was engaged only in "innocent actions that any law-abiding citizen should be able to engage in without fear of search or arrest." 142 Cal.App.2d at page 731, 299 P.2d at page 312. There was no reasonable ground for the arrest and search.

On the second trial, the arresting officer testified that a superior officer had told him that an informant was to make a buy that night from the defendant at about nine o'clock, and that defendant's mode of operation was to talk to the buyer outside his residence, pick up the marijuana at his residence, and then meet the buyer outside. All of the justices agreed that the arrest and search were still illegal because the arresting officer did not have reasonable grounds to believe that defendant was then violating the law. 156 Cal.App.2d 516, 319 P.2d 689. It is significant that on the second appeal Justices Dooling and Draper joined in a special concurring opinion in which they stated (156 Cal.App.2d at page 523, 319 P.2d at page 693): "We are satisfied that if Aiello [the arresting officer] had received this information directly from a reliable informer, including the description of appellant's customary method of selling marijuana, and had observed thereafter appellant talk to a man in a blue coupe, go into his house, reappear and stand looking up and down the street, under those circumstances and with that information Aiello could reasonably believe that appellant had marijuana in his possession and was waiting for the return of the blue coupe to deliver it. Under those circumstances we would hold that Aiello had reasonable grounds for arresting the appellant." However, the information possessed by the arresting officer had been received from a superior officer, who was dead at the time of trial. The search was clearly illegal because there was no evidence at all of the reliability of the informant or that an emergency existed.

[1] The instant case is not similar to the facts of the Harvey case, but is very similar to the hypothetical case posed in the concurring opinion as an example where the arrest would have been justified. In the instant case Officer Logan testified that he had known the informant for 3½ years, during which time he had found the informant to be reliable. The informant told Logan that defendant would make a delivery of narcotics at a specified time and place. At that time and place the defendant was observed to perform certain acts, all consistent with the inference that he was about to make a delivery. If all that was observed and known was what was observed outside defendant's residence, then the arrest and search without a warrant would have been unwarranted under the rule of the Harvey case. All of the actions observed would have been consistent with innocence. But when those activities were observed after receiving the information above set forth from a known reliable informant, those activities became highly suspicious and gave the officers reasonable grounds to believe that defendant was about to make an illegal delivery of narcotics.

[2] Of course, the fact the non-participating informant was not produced at the trial is immaterial. Information secured from a reliable informant may justify an arrest and search without a warrant without production of the informant as a witness. Lorenzen v. Superior Court, 150 Cal. App.2d 506, 310 P.2d 180; People v. Dean, 151 Cal.App.2d 165, 311 P.2d 85; People v. Moore, 154 Cal.App.2d 43, 315 P.2d 357. It should be noted that, although the name of the informant was not divulged by the prosecution, no request for the name was made by defendant or his counsel.

[3] Some complaint is made of the fact that the arresting officer admittedly did not inform the defendant of the nature of the charge at the time of his arrest, it being contended that this rendered the arrest illegal under the provisions of section 841 of the Penal Code. That section requires the arresting officer to inform the person to be arrested of the cause of his arrest "except when the person making the arrest has reasonable cause to believe that the person to be arrested is actually engaged in the commission of or an attempt to commit an offense." In the instant case the defendant was actually engaged in the commission of a felony and the officers had reasonable grounds to believe that this was so. Thus, the case falls within the exception. People v. Beard, 46 Cal.2d 278, 294 P.2d 29.

[4, 5] Appellant also challenges the validity of the search of his residence. There is some confusion in the cases as to when a search of a residence is permissible where the defendant has been arrested some distance away. Compare Hernandez v. Superior Court, 143 Cal.App.2d 20, 299 P.2d 678, relying on Agnello v. United States, 269 U.S. 20, 46 S.Ct. 4, 70 L.Ed. 145, cited with approval in People v. Gorg, 45 Cal.2d 776, 291 P.2d 469, with such cases as People v. Montes, 146 Cal.App.2d 530, 303 P.2d 1064, and People v. Alaniz, 149 Cal.App.2d 560, 309 P.2d 71. In the instant case the house had been under police surveillance for about a month. Known narcotic addicts were seen to go in and out. On the night of the arrest defendant was seen to go into his house and come out under circumstances where it is reasonable to infer that he went into the house to secure narcotics. He was then lawfully arrested a short distance from the residence and narcotics found in his possession. Then, at the house, Marchesi answered the bell, and invited the officers to enter. Although Marchesi told the officers that he did not live with Herman, he did say "I stay here from time to time." The fact that he was in the house alone supports the reasonable inference that this was one of the times that he was staying with Herman, was in joint possession, and was not simply a casual guest. See generally People v. Silva, 140 Cal.App.2d 791, 295 P.2d 942; People v. Stewart, 144 Cal.App.2d 555, 301 P.2d 301. Under these circumstances the search of the residence was probably reasonable. In any event, even if the search of the residence was improper, the error in admitting the evidence secured in that search was harmless. Appellant was charged with one count of possession of heroin. The evidence that a large quantity of heroin was found on his person is uncontradicted and overwhelming. Once the validity of the arrest and search of appellant is established there can be no doubt at all that appellant is guilty of the offense charged. Thus, even if the evidence secured in the house was improperly admitted its admission could not have been prejudicial. The introduction of illegally secured evidence does not per se require a reversal—it depends upon whether such evidence was prejudicial. People v. Valenti, 49 Cal.2d 199, 316 P.2d 633; People v. Tarantino, 45 Cal.2d 590, 290 P.2d 505; People v. Felli, 156 Cal.App.2d 123, 318 P.2d 840. Here, even if the evidence were illegally secured, its erroneous admission into evidence could not possibly have been prejudicial.

Johnnie Lee CANTLEY, Defendant and Respondent.
Cr. 6203.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Sept. 26, 1958.

Defendant was charged by information with owning and having in his possession and under his custody and control a revolver capable of being concealed upon the person after defendant had been convicted of a felony in violation of West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 12021. From an order of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Albert E. Wheatcroft, J., setting aside the information on ground defendant had been committed without reasonable or probable cause, the People appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that evidence before committing magistrate justified conclusion that officers had reasonable cause to arrest defendant and, as an incident to arrest, were entitled to search automobile which he was driving.

On motion to set aside information, court is only to determine whether magistrate acting as a man of ordinary caution or prudence could conscientiously entertain a reasonable suspicion that a public offense had been committed in which defendant participated, and question of guilt or innocence of defendant is not before court nor does issue concern quantum of evidence necessary to sustain conviction. VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal by the People from an order setting aside the information on the ground defendant had been committed without reasonable or probable cause. Pen.Code, § 995.

The information charged that on November 5, 1957, defendant did unlawfully own and have in his possession and under his custody and control a .38 caliber revolver capable of being concealed on the person and having a barrel less than 12 inches in length, and that defendant had theretofore, on November 15, 1940, been convicted of a felony by the United States District Court of the Western District of Arkansas in violation of section 12021 of the Penal Code.

Penal Code, section 12021, provides that any person who has been convicted of a felony under the laws of the United States "who owns or has in his possession or under his custody or control any pistol, revolver, or other firearm capable of being concealed, upon the person is guilty of a public offense."

Mix Lewis, a police officer of the city of Los Angeles, testified at the preliminary hearing as follows: about 10:45 p. m. on November 5, 1957, he, in company with another police officer, saw defendant get out of his automobile in front of 1401 Santee Street in Los Angeles, enter an apartment house, stay two or three minutes, return and get into his car, make a U-turn on Santee and head north from 14th Street on Santee; he and the other officer were in a police vehicle; about 100 feet south of Pico Boulevard he had defendant pull his car over to the curb;<sup>1</sup> as defendant pulled over to the curb he "saw the defendant reach—as if reaching under the seat—front seat of the vehicle"; defendant got out of his car, walked back toward the police car, and said, "What did I do wrong, Officer?"; he asked defendant his name and where he was coming from; defendant said "his name was Cantley and that he had just been over to 14th and Santee to see a friend of his by the name of John Benson"; he asked defendant what he put underneath the front seat of his car; defendant said, "Nothing"; he had learned from a police report of a robbery and murder which occurred on November 2 at 4173 South Harvard in Los Angeles; the police report described the suspect as "Approximately five eight or nine, 170 to 180 pounds; male Negro, dark complected; wearing a dark jacket and light pants"; at the time defendant said "Nothing," he (the officer) believed defendant had committed a felony—the robbery and murder at 4173 South Harvard; he then opened the car door on the driver's side, flashed a flashlight in the car, and saw a revolver lying on the floorboard on the driver's side; he took possession of the revolver; it had six live rounds of ammunition in the cylinder; defendant said he got the gun from a John Benson about three months before, he loaned the man $13 on the gun, he needed the money and had gone to see if he could get the money for the gun at 1402 Santee, that Benson was not at home so he was leaving.

The revolver, introduced in evidence at the preliminary hearing, was capable of being concealed on the person. Proof was

[4,5] Reasonable cause to believe a person had committed a felony is such a state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary care and prudence to believe, or entertain an honest and strong suspicion, that the person is guilty of a felony. People v. Moore, 141 Cal.App.2d 87, 89, 296 P.2d 91. In determining whether an arresting officer had probable cause to believe a person had committed a felony and therefore was justified in placing him under arrest, the court looks only at the facts and circumstances presented to the officer at the time he was required to act. People v. Paul, 147 Cal.App.2d 609, 619, 305 P.2d 996.

"In the instant case the arresting officers received an all-points bulletin regarding the robbery and describing the suspect. Based on the information received, they had reasonable grounds to stop defendants' car and question them as suspects. From the observation of appellant, dressed as he was, being a Mexican of his age, fitting the description of the suspect, riding in a car fairly well described, and observing the five receipts on the front seat of the car which were taken from the victim, the arrest of the suspects and search of them and the car were justified."

"The officers had a right to interrogate persons on the streets in the nighttime. People v. Simon, 45 Cal. 2d 645, 650, 290 P.2d 531. When, as they approached defendants to perform this lawful duty, they saw the Balazs movement, they were justified in thinking it likely that he had a weapon. If the proposition holds true that search is not justified by its results, the converse holds true that a search based on appearances is not rendered unlawful by the fact that the contraband actually on hand was not that which reasonably was thought to be present.

"The case of People v. Blodgett, 46 Cal.2d 114, 293 P.2d 57, is very much in point. Officers saw a cab parked in front of a hotel at 3 a. m., a man and woman in the back seat. The officers ordered them out, and saw one of them withdraw his hand from the juncture of the seat and back cushion. The officer removed the seat and found three marijuana cigarettes. The furtive action of defendant was held to have given reasonable grounds for belief that he was hiding contraband. His act was similar to that of Balazs in the present case, but the present case is somewhat stronger for the People because the ordering of the occupants out of the car in the Blodgett case was before, and in this case after, the furtive motion. It is a natural impulse on confrontation to hide immediately any contraband, and one cannot be heard to complain that he, or a companion, has betrayed the presence of illegal goods by the alacrity with which he attempted to conceal them. Likewise, as was said in People v. Martin, 46 Cal.2d 106, 293 P.2d 52, the officers in making the investigation had a right to protect themselves, as by ordering the men out."

In People v. Sanson, 156 Cal.App.2d 250, 319 P.2d 422, it was held that where police officers, who had reasonable grounds for stopping an automobile being driven "very slowly" at an early morning hour with defective lights, noticed that the defendants appeared to be hiding something under the front seat, it was proper for one officer, after the defendants got out of the car, to look under the front seat, and on discovering a dirty paper bag, to examine its contents; and that marijuana thus discovered was found as the result of a reasonable search.

[6-8] About 10.45 at night Officer Lewis and his partner saw defendant making a U-turn. They had a right to interrogate him. They drove their car alongside that of defendant and identified themselves as police officers. As defendant pulled over to the curb he was observed making a furtive movement: reaching under the front seat of the car. Prior to that time the officers had learned of a robbery and murder in which they had a description of a suspect. It could be inferred that defendant fitted the description. The magistrate saw defendant, had an opportunity to compare him with the description, and could conclude that the officers had reasonable cause at the time of the arrest to believe defendant had committed a felony. We think the magistrate was justified in concluding that the officers acted reasonably in light of the information they had received in connection with what they observed, and that he was warranted in concluding they entertained a reasonable suspicion defendant had committed a felony, that they had reasonable cause to arrest defendant and, as an incident to the arrest, were entitled to search defendant's car.

The order is reversed.

B. H. Findlay, San Bernardino, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and William E. James, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

MUSSELL, Justice.

Appellant was charged with issuing a check without sufficient funds (Pen.Code, Sec. 476a). It was alleged in the information that the appellant J. R. Leon, also known as Jerome F. Moki, on or about July 25, 1956, with intent to defraud the Bank of America, Upland Branch, and the Bank of America, Sixth and "K" Branch, Sacramento, California, made, drew, uttered and delivered to Aase Gram and Bank of America, Upland Branch, a check in the sum of $75, knowing at the time that he had neither sufficient funds in or credit with said bank for the payment of said check in full upon its presentation. Four prior felony convictions were also alleged in the information. Appellant entered pleas of "not guilty" and "not guilty by reason of insanity", admitted one of the prior convictions alleged and denied the others. Trial by jury was waived and the court found appellant guilty as charged. The three prior convictions denied were found to be true and appellant was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison. There was no disposition made by the court of the issue raised by the plea of "not guilty by reason of insanity".

[1-3] Appellant's first contention is that the evidence was insufficient to show intent to defraud and there was no showing of a lack of sufficient funds or credit with the drawee bank to meet the check involved at the time it was presented for payment. This contention is without merit. The evidence shows that the check was presented to Aase Gram, a teller for the Bank of America, Upland Branch, on or about July 25, 1956. The check appeared to be a payroll check of "Moki's School of Jiu-jitsu". It was dated July 15, 1956, and drawn on the Bank of America, Sixth and "K" Branch, Sacramento, California, to the order of J. R. Leon. It was signed by Jerome K. Moki and endorsed by appellant in the presence of the teller, Aase Gram. She gave appellant cash in the sum of $75, the amount of the check. "Moki's School of Jiu-jitsu" had no account in the Bank of America, Sixth and "K" Branch, on July 15, 1956, said account having been closed on July 6, 1956, at which time it was overdrawn in the sum of $20.81.

Exemplars of appellant's handwriting were compared with the signature "Jerome

F. Moki" on the check and the endorsement "Jerry Robert Leon" on the back thereof. There was evidence that the two signatures had been written by the same person. At the trial defendant denied signing "Jerome Moki" on the face of the check. However, on cross-examination, he admitted that he had told an officer that he wrote the name "Jerome F. Moki" to the check, rather "than to drag my family in".

Appellant's defense was mainly that he had not written the check and he made no attempt at the trial to show that he had funds or credit in the bank to meet the check upon its presentation.

An intent to defraud is a fact which may be inferred from the acts or admissions of the accused, or from the surrounding circumstances. People v. Markos, 146 Cal. App.2d 82, 85, 303 P.2d 363. The intent to defraud is the subject of evidence in the same manner and to the same extent, depending on the same general rules of procedure, as any other necessary fact in the case, and it is a question of fact for the jury or court to determine. People v. Oster, 129 Cal.App.2d 688, 692, 278 P.2d 39. In People v. Wallin, 34 Cal.2d 777, 780, 215 P.2d 1, 3, the court said:

"The court must assume in favor of the verdict the existence of every fact which the trier of fact could have reasonably deduced from the evidence and then determine whether or not the guilt of the defendant is deducible therefrom. The question for the appellate court to pass upon is whether there was evidence in the record justifying the inference of guilt. People v. Deysher, 2 Cal.2d 141, 40 P.2d 259; People v. Payton, 6 Cal.App.2d 198, 44 P.2d 376."

We conclude that the evidence and the inferences to be drawn therefrom are sufficient to support the findings of the trial court.

[4] Appellant further claims that the trial court committed prejudicial error in admitting and considering extrajudicial statements and admissions of appellant. This contention is likewise without merit. It is based on the assumption that a prima facie case was not established and that therefore the extrajudicial statements and admissions should not have been admitted. However, the admissions and statements of appellant were not essential to establish the commission of the crime charged and the order of proof was within the discretion of the trial judge. People v. Cullen, 37 Cal.2d 614, 624-625, 234 P.2d 1. No abuse of discretion was shown.

[5] The evidence is clearly sufficient to support the judgment of the court on appellant's plea of "not guilty". However, since the judgment was prematurely entered by reason of the failure of the trial court to pass upon appellant's plea of "not guilty by reason of insanity", the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for trial upon the remaining issue of "not guilty by reason of insanity". If appellant is found "not guilty by reason of insanity", the court will then take proper steps in the premises. If appellant is found sane in the insanity issue, the court will resentence him as provided by law. People v. Wilson, 15 Cal.App.2d 172, 179, 59 P.2d 187.

Action for injuries sustained by customer when she fell backward while riding on escalator from basement to street floor of defendant's store. The Superior Court of San Diego County, Joe L. Shell, J., rendered judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal Griffin, P. J., held that trial court was justified in rejecting any inference of negligence under res ipsa loquitur doctrine and that evidence did not establish negligence of defendant as a matter of law.

1. Carriers ⇨280(4)

Store proprietor in operation of escalator owed the same duty of care as a common carrier toward customer using escalator.

2. Carriers ⇨280(1)

Common carriers, though not insurers of absolute safety of passengers, must exercise utmost care and diligence of very cautious persons as far as human care and foresight can go and are responsible for injuries occasioned by the slightest neglect against which human care and foresight might have guarded.

Negligence ⇨136(3)

Where the defendant was negligent or plaintiff was contributorily negligent is ordinarily a question of mixed fact and law and may be determined as a matter of law only if reasonable men following the law can draw but one conclusion from the evidence presented, and where two or more inferences can be reasonably deduced from the facts, reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of trial court.

"Res ipsa loquitur" doctrine is not applicable unless it appears either as a matter of common experience or from evidence in the case that accident was of a type which probably would not happen unless some one was negligent and that defendant had sufficient control or connection with accident that it can be said that he was more probably than not the person responsible for plaintiff's injury.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Res Ipsa Loquitur".

5. Negligence ⇨121(2)

Plaintiff may properly rely on res ipsa loquitur doctrine even though he participated in events leading to accident, if the evidence excludes his conduct as the responsible cause.

6. Negligence ⇨121(2)

Purpose of rule that for res ipsa loquitur to apply, accident must not have been due to any voluntary action or contribution by plaintiff is merely to assist court in determining whether it is more probable than not that defendant was responsible for accident and the rule should not be confused with problem of contributory negligence.

In action for injuries sustained by customer when she fell backward while riding on escalator from basement to street floor of defendant's store, trial court was justified in rejecting any inference of negligence under "res ipsa loquitur" doctrine on ground that customer's conduct as responsible cause of fall could not reasonably be excluded and because plaintiff did not meet burden of showing that defendant was more probably than not the one responsible for injury to customer.

8. Carriers ⇨318(1), 320(23)

In action for injuries sustained by customer when she fell backward while riding on escalator from basement to street floor of defendant's store, failure of defendant's clerk, who was a member of safety committee, to assist customer up escalator or warn her to use stairs did not establish negligence of defendant as a matter of law or sustain plaintiff's burden of proving that injuries were due proximately to negligence of defendant, in view of evidence that customer may have lost her balance and fallen because of lack of capacity to sufficiently grip handrail or that boy accompanying her may have lost his balance and pulled customer backward.

Luce, Forward, Kunzel & Scripps, San Diego, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff-appellant brought this action for personal injuries against defendant-respondent company, alleging that on September 10, 1955, she descended to the basement of defendant's store by escalator to purchase various items, and after making such purchases she again made use of it to ascend to the street floor; that while so ascending she was injured due to the carelessness and negligence in the maintenance of said escalator in that it was being maintained in a dangerous, defective and unsafe condition; that plaintiff had no notice of such condition and she was using it in the ordinary and usual manner for which it was designed. She sought general damages in the sum of $50,000 and special damages in the sum of $3,000.

By answer defendant generally denied these allegations, admitted plaintiff did fall while ascending on said escalator, and alleges the affirmative defense of contributory negligence on her part. A trial by the court resulted in a judgment for defendant with a finding that plaintiff entered the premises and on ascending from the basement, as alleged, she fell and sustained certain injuries, incurred certain bills and lost certain income. It specifically found that defendant was not negligent in its maintenance and operation of the escalator, and that neither the fall nor the injuries were caused by any negligent act or omission of the defendant.

It is plaintiff's claim on appeal that the evidence is contrary to the findings and insufficient to support the judgment; that it clearly indicates a failure on the part of defendant to fulfill its duty of care toward the plaintiff; and that the evidence gave rise to an inference of negligence under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

[1,2] It was stipulated or agreed by counsel and the court that the defendant's operation of the escalator placed it in the category of a common carrier, and the duty of care for the plaintiff in the instant case was the same as that of a common carrier, citing Hendershott v. Macy's, 158 Cal.App.2d 324, 322 P.2d 596; and Champagne v. A. Hamburger & Sons, 169 Cal. 683, 147 P. 954, to the effect that although not insurers of the absolute safety of passengers, the common carrier is bound to the utmost care and diligence of very cautious persons as far as human care and foresight can go and are responsible for injuries occasioned by the slightest neglect against which human care and foresight might have guarded. See, also, McBride v. Atchison, Topeka & S. F. Ry. Co., 44 Cal.2d 113, 119, 279 P.2d 966; and Croom v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 52 Minn. 296, 53 N.W. 1128, 18 L.R.A. 602.

[3] It is defendant's claim that the sole question on this appeal is whether or not there is any substantial evidence which directly or inferentially supports the court's finding, citing Callahan v. Gray, 44 Cal.2d 107, 111, 279 P.2d 963, 965, where the rule is stated to be that:

"Whether or not defendant was guilty of negligence * * * or plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence * * * is ordinarily a question of mixed fact and law and may be determined as a matter of law only if reasonable men following the law can draw but one conclusion from the evidence presented' * * * and 'When two or more inferences can be reasonably deduced from the facts, the reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial court * * *'" (Citing cases.)

In support of her claimed cause of action plaintiff testified she had been a maid at the Mercy Hospital and had sprained her leg and had been off duty for some time, but on September 10th she was able to place her weight on her sprained leg and was about ready to go back to work; that although she did not use crutches in her home the doctor told her it was better for her to use them when she went out so she took them with her; that in company with her grandson, who had been on the escalator before that day, she safely rode the escalator to the basement, bought a little train for him, and started up the escalator carrying her package (about one foot square), crutches (because she did not need them to support her), and her handbag with one arm, and gripping the rail with her hand; that the boy had one hand on the rail and one hand was holding onto the pocket in her jacket; that the escalator was moving continuously; that there were no other passengers on it; that when she stepped on the escalator it "seemed as though" it "shook as though something heavy or something was under your feet * * * it acted as though it couldn't go * * * trudging * * * and that is the only thing"; that she didn't have any idea of what happened; that she did not notice any change in the way the escalator was moving; that when about half way up she fell backwards and found herself at the bottom of the escalator with her head on the floor and her feet extending up on the escalator; and that she supposed the company had stopped it by that time; that she suffered considerable injuries, was taken to the hospital, and was under treatment for some time. She testified that about one year before that she had broken her hip and she had always gone on that escalator every time she went down town because that is the only way she could get upstairs.

Thereafter plaintiff called a clerk in the curtain department in the basement of defendant's store under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure. She testified that her counter was about 10 to 15 feet from the escalator; that her other duties were as a buyer and she was on the safety committee of the store; that they watched the activities of other employees, involving safety precautions and checked on the escalator, and in case of an accident they turned it off; that on the day in question she recalls seeing a woman with crutches, accompanied by a little boy; that the woman with the crutches was standing by the escalator for a few minutes as though she was deciding whether she wanted to go up or not; that she (the clerk) turned her head to wait on a customer and the next thing she heard was a scream and the lady was lying at the bottom of the escalator; and that the escalator was turned off by some one on the safety committee. She then said that on occasions if people have crutches or seem to be frightened of the escalator some member of the committee might ask them to go up on the stairway, or if they seemed as though they could not go up normally and are a little bit afraid, they have gone up on the escalator behind them so they would not fall; that she was waiting on a customer and did not ask plaintiff to take the stairs nor did she go with her up the escalator. Thereafter, plaintiff rested her case on the question of liability. Defendant moved for a nonsuit but subsequently withdrew its motion and rested its case on the question of liability. Thereafter the court made the findings indicated.

since in the absence of such a probability there would be no basis for an inference of negligence which would serve to take the place of evidence of some negligent act or omission; that for res ipsa loquitur to apply it must appear that defendant had sufficient control or connection with the accident that it can be said that he was more probably than not the person responsible for plaintiff's injury; that a plaintiff may properly rely on res ipsa loquitur even though he has participated in the events leading to the accident, if the evidence excludes his conduct as the responsible cause; and that a statement in cases that for res ipsa loquitur to apply the accident must not have been due to any voluntary action or contribution on the part of the plaintiff should not be confused with the problem of contributory negligence, and its purpose, like that of control by defendant is merely to assist the court in determining whether it is more probable than not that defendant was responsible for the accident.

[7] Under the evidence related, the trial court was justified in rejecting any inference of negligence under the rule, believing it could not reasonably exclude plaintiff's conduct as the responsible cause and because plaintiff did not meet the burden of showing that defendant was more probably than not the one responsible for plaintiff's injury. See also Worden v. Central Fireproof Building Co., 172 Cal. 94, 96, 155 P. 839.

[8] The claimed acts of negligence of defendant, which plaintiff claims were shown as a matter of law, involve the failure of defendant's clerk or safety committee member in not assisting plaintiff up the escalator or warning her to take the stairs. Here it appears that plaintiff was familiar with this escalator, having used it on many previous occasions. Although she did not need her crutches and could stand on her feet without strain, she chose to carry her crutches which she did not in fact need for walking purposes. Apparently she was carrying them at the time she was about to step upon the escalator and did in fact negotiate the first step in safety without assistance and it was not until she was half way up that she fell and said she did not know the reason. Her testimony that there seemed to be strain, sluggishness or "trudging" as she first stepped on it may well have been discounted by the trial judge in view of the testimony that the escalator continued to run and she did not notice any change in the way it was running. At least the trial court could have found from plaintiff's actions in approaching the escalator and satisfactorily negotiating the first step that it was reasonable to believe she did not need the assistance of the clerk and that plaintiff could well negotiate the trip unassisted. Apparently plaintiff thought she could and it was not unreasonable for the clerk to think likewise. From the evidence produced the court may well have believed that the plaintiff properly entered the escalator and that the cause of her fall was not due to its sudden stopping or starting but from plaintiff losing her balance by reason of her lack of capacity to sufficiently grip the handrail or that the boy may have lost his balance and pulled plaintiff backwards in a fall. Under these circumstances it cannot be said that defendant was guilty of negligence as a matter of law or that plaintiff had met the burden of proving her injuries were due proximately to defendant's negligence.

Judgment affirmed.

Action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when his automobile collided at an intersection with corporate defendant's left-turning truck. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Stanley Mosk, J., entered an order granting plaintiff's motion for new trial and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that evidence, including testimony that defendant's truck made a sudden left turn in front of plaintiff's approaching automobile and that truck driver had not signaled such a left turn, would support a verdict for plaintiff, and therefore order granting a new trial would be affirmed.

Appeal by defendant from an order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

The action is to recover damages for personal injuries sustained in a collision between a 1955 Dodge automobile driven by plaintiff and defendant's 1948 tank truck and tank pull trailer, operated by Herman Cole,<sup>1</sup> an employee of defendant. The tank truck and tank pull trailer had an overall length of 60 feet; it was empty and weighed about 33,000 pounds.

The accident occurred about 10 a. m. on May 19, 1956, at the intersection of Foothill Boulevard and Etiwanda Avenue in San Bernardino County. Foothill Boulevard was a through highway (U. S. Highway 66) with two lanes running east and two running west, each lane measuring about 10 to 11 feet. A 4½-foot painted divider separated the north and south sides of the highway, and each side had a paved shoulder about 8 feet wide. Etiwanda Avenue runs north and south, was about 49 feet wide, and had boulevard stop signs for vehicles entering Foothill in either direction. The area where the accident occurred was rural in character. Foothill was in a 55 mile per hour zone.

Plaintiff was traveling east on Foothill in the lane next to the dividing strip, referred to as lane E-1. Defendant's truck was approaching in a westerly direction on Foothill, also in the lane nearest the divider. The day was clear and dry. Traffic was light and there were no eastbound cars in front of plaintiff for a half mile or a mile from the intersection.

Plaintiff testified: he was traveling between 40 and 45 miles an hour and estimated that when he first saw the truck it was about 800 feet "down the road," traveling about the same speed; as he approached the intersection he slowed down slightly; he did not see the signal arm on the truck raised for a left turn or any signal of an intention to make a left turn; when he was about 75 feet west of the intersection the driver of the truck suddenly made a left turn in front of him, traveling about 15 miles an hour; he immediately applied his brakes and swerved to the right, skidding into the impact, and glancing off defendant's vehicle; he estimated he was traveling 10 to 15 miles an hour at the moment of impact. There was evidence that the truck was traveling from 2 to 6 miles an hour as it made the left turn.

Police officers who were called to the scene testified that plaintiff's car laid down about 81 feet of locked wheel skid marks on two wheels and 51 feet on the other two wheels in lane E-1, leading almost to the southerly edge of the shoulder. There were no skid marks left by the tank truck and trailer, and no evidence that the driver applied his brakes prior to the collision. The officers checked the brakes on both vehicles and found they were working satisfactorily. Plaintiff's car was damaged at the left front and side.

An expert, a graduate civil engineer and technical consultant, called by plaintiff, testified from facts encompassed in a hypothetical question that plaintiff's car was traveling approximately 44 to 46 miles an hour at the time the brakes took hold, and that plaintiff's car was only 52 feet west of the intersection when the front of the truck was in the intersection. Another of plaintiff's expert witnesses, a police sergeant, testified he was of the opinion, based on the skid marks, plaintiff's vehicle was traveling about 41½ miles an hour when it started to lay down the skid marks.

The motion was granted on the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict and error of law in the giving of an instruction on unavoidable accident.

[1] On the hearing of the motion below, counsel for defendant-appellant stated there was "a lot of testimony and a lot of conflict in the evidence"; "I feel it was a close case. Many of them are. However, I strongly feel it was a question of fact, not only as to the negligence of the truck driver, but the contributory negligence of the plaintiff." In view of this concession as to the state of the evidence in the trial court it is obvious there is evidence which would support a verdict for plaintiff and consequently that the order must be affirmed. Brown v. Guy, 144 Cal.App.2d 659, 661, 301 P.2d 413.

[2] The rules which govern a reviewing court in the determination of an appeal from an order granting a new trial are so well known they need not be repeated. The order of the trial court will be reversed only when it can be said as a matter of law there is no substantial evidence to support a contrary judgment. Gibson v. Stuck, 125 Cal. App.2d 340, 342, 270 P.2d 17. See the comprehensive statement of this court in Marlowe v. City of Los Angeles, 147 Cal.App.2d 680, 683, 305 P.2d 604; also, Jensen v. Western Pioneer Ins. Co., 151 Cal.App.2d 570, 573, 312 P.2d 285; Hughey v. Candoli, 159 Cal.App.2d 231, 323 P.2d 779.

We cannot say, as a matter of law, that there was no substantial evidence to support a verdict for plaintiff. The court could have inferred that plaintiff was close to the intersection at the time the truck driver began his left turn. The court also could have inferred from the evidence that the truck was going as slow as 2 to 6 miles an hour, that the driver could easily have brought his equipment to a stop before any impact occurred if he had been exercising ordinary care. And it could have concluded that the truck driver was required to yield the right of way and that he failed to do so; that his failure was negligence, and that his negligence was the sole proximate cause of the accident. At the time in question section 551 of the Vehicle Code provided:

"The driver of a vehicle within an intersection intending to turn to the left shall yield the right of way to any vehicle approaching from the opposite direction which is within the intersection or so close thereto as to constitute an immediate hazard."

[3] It is unnecessary to decide whether it was prejudicial error to give an instruction on unavoidable accident. See Butigan v. Yellow Cab Co., 49 Cal.2d 652, 320 P.2d 500; Brenner v. Beardsley, 159 Cal.App.2d 304, 323 P.2d 841.

The appeal is without merit.

The order is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Sept. 19, 1958.

Hearing Denied Nov. 12, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of abortion. The Superior Court, County of Contra Costa, Homer W. Patterson, J., rendered judgment, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that even though woman's testimony that she had wanted a pessary for an abortion and that defendant after inserting it used a vibrator to start cramps was difficult to reconcile with any possibility that defendant could have inserted it for contraceptive purposes only, determination of defendant's intent was made upon circumstantial rather than direct evidence and instruction that to find defendant guilty on circumstantial evidence alone, the proved circumstances must be irreconcilable with any conclusion other than guilt should have been given, but failure to do so was not prejudicial where court instructed jury to give defendant benefit of any reasonable interpretation of evidence favorable to his innocence and evidence of defendant's guilt, although circumstantial, was overwhelming.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law §814(17), 824(9)

An instruction on irreconcilability of circumstantial evidence must be given, whether requested or not, in any case where conviction rests substantially on circumstantial evidence, but instruction need not be given where conviction is based principally upon direct testimony of victim and circumstantial evidence is only incidental and corroborative.

2. Criminal Law §784(1), 829(15)

In prosecution for abortion, even though woman's testimony that she had wanted a pessary for an abortion and that defendant after inserting it used a vibrator to start cramps was difficult to reconcile with any possibility that defendant could have inserted it for contraceptive purposes only, determination of defendant's intent was made upon circumstantial rather than direct evidence and instruction that to find defendant guilty on circumstantial evidence alone, the proved circumstances must be irreconcilable with any conclusion other than guilt should have been given, but failure to do so was not prejudicial where court instructed jury to give defendant benefit of any reasonable interpretation of evidence favorable to his innocence and evidence of defendant's guilt, although circumstantial was overwhelming. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 274.

3. Criminal Law § 772(5), 1172(1)

In prosecution for abortion, instruction on general criminal intent should not have been given, but where, by believing prosecution witness, jury could not escape finding requisite intent, instructions stressed necessity of specific intent, and jury, by acquitting defendant on counts relating to alleged abortions performed on two other women, demonstrated that it understood that specific instructions on intent prevailed, giving of instruction was not prejudicial. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 274.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., John S. McInerny, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

BRAY, Justice.

On this appeal by defendant from a judgment of conviction after jury verdict, on two counts of violating section 274, Penal Code (abortion) and from denial of his motion for new trial, defendant makes but two contentions: (1) failure of the court to give on its own motion an instruction similar to CALJIC No. 27; (2) alleged error in instructions on intent.

Record.

Defendant was charged by indictment with four counts of abortion, each on a different woman. The jury acquitted him on counts II and III. Briefly, the evidence is as follows: For 20 years defendant has been a licensed chiropractor practicing in Richmond. Count I. Evangeline testified that believing herself to be pregnant, and directed by a friend, she went to defendant's office, with Joel, a friend. There, defendant instructed her to take off her underpants. He then took her to his treatment room where he requested her to lie on a table. With a speculum he opened up her private parts and inserted a pessary. No mention of Evangeline's menstrual periods was made by either person. While inserting the pessary or immediately thereafter defendant told Evangeline that she could expect her menstrual period to start within one hour to several days; that she would have a heavy vaginal flow which would probably end with cramps and a miscarriage. She paid defendant $35, receiving no receipt. At midnight she began having vaginal flow of blood. Three days later she removed the pessary. The next day she became ill and went to a hospital where some 11 days later she had a miscarriage and expelled a fetus.

Count II. Marian determined that she was about three months pregnant. At defendant's office she told him that she "feared being pregnant or becoming pregnant." She did not remember the specific language she used. Defendant told her he could administer a pessary for prevention, although he did not ask about her menstrual periods or physically examine her. He took her to the treatment room where he inserted a pessary. She paid him $35, receiving no receipt. From that night (Saturday) until Wednesday there was a heavy vaginal flow. She then expelled both the pessary and an 11-inch fetus.

Count III. Lee Ila was told she was pregnant after having an appendectomy performed. Her sister took her to defendant. Defendant asked her how many months she had "been gone." Just before inserting a pessary defendant told her not to tell any one what he was doing because it would incriminate them both. After about seven days the pessary became dislodged. After about another seven days she returned to defendant, who took out the pessary, telling her to return in about a week. On returning he then inserted another pessary, saying "This one will do the job." A couple of weeks later she began to have a vaginal flow and cramps. She was taken to a hospital where she had a miscarriage. Lee Ila's sister paid defendant $35.

Count IV. Vernadine, discovering that she was 2 or 3 months pregnant, decided to terminate the pregnancy by getting a "button" to cause a miscarriage. She went to defendant's office and asked him for a "button." When he asked her what she wanted it for, she told him that she might be pregnant as she had missed a couple of menstrual periods. Defendant quoted a price of $35 for a pessary. Not having the money with her she made an appointment for a later date. Returning a few days later, she told defendant that she wanted a pessary as she was pregnant. After she removed her clothing defendant put her on a guernsey and inserted the pessary. Defendant told her the pessary should come down in several days, and if nothing happened to return, and that if it became necessary for her to go to the hospital she was to be sure to remove the pessary first. He then used a vibrator on her stomach to start the cramps. She paid defendant $35, asking defendant for a receipt. He refused to give one. Two days later she started to bleed. She entered a hospital where that night she had a miscarriage, expelling a fetus 7 or 8 inches long. It was later determined that the fetus was 4½ or 5 months old. Prior to entering the hospital she had expelled the pessary.

The prosecution produced two other women, the first of whom testified that she had gone to defendant's office, told him she was pregnant and desired the insertion of a pessary. He complied. She returned several days later and he inserted a second pessary. In a few days she had a miscarriage and passed a fetus. The other woman told him that she had missed one of her periods and desired a pessary inserted. He did so. In a few days she passed a few small clots of blood. Each woman paid him $35.

Dr. George Loquvam, physician and pathologist and witness for the prosecution, testified that in his opinion a pessary was not an accepted medical device for contraceptive purposes but was an abortive, as it caused an inflammatory reaction, which will cause an abortion of the very early fetus. The insertion of a pessary into a woman pregnant from 1 to 4 months would cause an abortion. The medical reports on Evangeline, Vernadine and Lee Ila were consistent with the conclusion of criminal abortion. However, he additionally stated that pessaries had been sold as contraceptives and were known among medical men as such, but in his opinion no qualified medical person used them for any purpose as they did not prevent conception.

Defendant admitted inserting the pessaries in all four women. He claimed, however, that he did it for contraceptive purposes only and not to cause miscarriages. None of the women told him that she was pregnant nor did he know that she was. Evangeline told him that she wanted a pessary for birth control purposes so that she could finish school without becoming pregnant. Lee Ila's sister told him that Lee Ila was "playing around" and wanted the pessary for birth control so that she could finish her school. Marian also said she wanted it for birth control and stated that her menses were regular. Vernadine, who was married, told him she wanted it for birth control, that she had two children and her menses were regular. Defendant testified that pessaries had been used by chiropractors and physicians for 25 years as contraceptive devices; that the Chiropractic Board inspectors knew that he was using them for that purpose and had never complained to him regarding their use; that as far as he knew there was no question of his right as a chiropractor to use pessaries as contraceptive devices. Moreover, he did not believe that a pessary could cause a miscarriage in a pregnant woman.

Dr. David Siegman, physician and pathologist and witness for the defense, testified that pessaries were known to the medical profession as a means of contraception but were not too strongly recommended although they were still being used by older physicians. In his opinion the insertion of a pessary into a pregnant woman would not always produce a miscarriage although there was a good chance of their doing so. From the medical records, he opined that Vernadine's miscarriage was spontaneous, the kind which is seen where there is an accidental abortion. Evangeline's miscarriage resulted from an infection which resulted more likely from another source than the pessary; and Lee Ila was no more than 1½ months pregnant at the time of her miscarriage.

1. Instruction on Circumstantial Evidence.

Defendant contends the court of its own motion should have given CALJIC No. 27, or a similar instruction, to the effect that to find the defendant guilty on circumstantial evidence alone the proved circumstances must be irreconcilable with any other rational conclusion than that of guilt. The court, at defendant's request, gave CALJIC No. 26, to the effect that if the evidence is susceptible of two constructions it is the duty of the jury to adopt the one favorable to defendant's innocence; if one of the conclusions is reasonable and the other unreasonable, it is the jury's duty to adhere to the reasonable deduction, bearing in mind, however, that even if the reasonable deduction points to defendant's guilt, the entire proof must carry the convincing force required by law to support a verdict of guilt.

In this case, defendant having admitted the acts of inserting the pessaries, the main issue was the intent with which he did it—was it for purposes of abortion as claimed by the prosecution, or for contraceptive purposes, as claimed by defendant? (The court instructed that defendant was authorized to use a pessary "for every lawful purpose upon the persons of the women named in the indictment.") whether requested or not, in any case where the conviction rests substantially on circumstantial evidence. People v. Bender, 1945, 27 Cal.2d 164, 163 P.2d 8 [conviction for murder]; People v. Yrigoyen, 1955, 45 Cal.2d 46, 286 P.2d 1 [conviction for issuing a check without sufficient funds and with intent to defraud]; People v. Koenig, 1946, 29 Cal.2d 87, 173 P.2d 1 [prosecution for robbery]; People v. Candiotto, 1954, 128 Cal.App.2d 347, 275 P.2d 500 [prosecution for possession of narcotics]; People v. Crisel, 1955, 137 Cal.App.2d 275, 290 P.2d 9 [conviction of second degree burglary]; People v. Neel, 1957, 151 Cal.App.2d 1, 310 P.2d 986 [conviction of grand theft of an automobile]. The instruction need not be given where the conviction is based principally upon the direct testimony of the victim and the circumstantial evidence is only incidental and corroborative. People v. Norton, 1956, 141 Cal.App.2d 790, 794, 297 P.2d 439. People v. Candiotto, supra, 128 Cal.App.2d 347, 357, 275 P.2d 500. CALJIC No. 27, which defendant contends should have been given, itself limits its application to convictions "on circumstantial evidence alone." (Emphasis added.) It is sometimes difficult to determine whether the principal evidence is direct or circumstantial. Let us analyze the evidence in this case. As pointed out before, the real issue was the intent with which the doctor acted.<sup>1</sup>

As to Count I, the jury rejected defendant's version and accepted that of Evangeline to the effect that without inquiry as to her menstrual periods he inserted the pessary and then told her what to expect as a result. His statement that his action would probably result in cramps and a miscarriage was completely inconsistent with his claim that he did not intend to produce that result.

As to Count IV, while defendant denied Vernadine's version of what she told him, the jury believed her testimony that she told defendant that she was pregnant, wanted a pessary for an abortion, and that after inserting the pessary he used a vibrator on her stomach to start the cramps, something which even he would not claim was done to prevent conception.

1. Counts II and III need not be discussed, for the acquittals make discussion of possible error as to them moot.

It seems difficult to reconcile this testimony with any possibility that in view of it defendant could have inserted the pessary for contraceptive purposes only. Still the determination of his intent is made upon the circumstances rather than direct evidence. See People v. Wales, 1955, 136 Cal.App.2d 846, 289 P.2d 305, and People v. Yokum, 1956, 145 Cal.App.2d 245, 302 P.2d 406.

[2] While CALJIC No. 27 should have been given, the failure to do so under the circumstances here was not prejudicial. The court did give CALJIC No. 26 which while not as strong as CALJIC No. 27 did require the jury to give the defendant the benefit of any reasonable interpretation of the evidence favorable to his innocence. In the second place and more important, the evidence of defendant's guilt, although circumstantial, is overwhelming. It just is not reasonable to expect any reasonable person to believe under the circumstances of this case that defendant, having been told that the women were pregnant, inserted the pessaries for contraceptive purposes. It is inconceivable that had the jury been given CALJIC No. 27 in addition to CALJIC No. 26, any different result would have followed.

In the cases hereinbefore cited holding that an instruction on irreconcilability in circumstantial evidence cases must be given on the court's own motion, no instruction similar to CALJIC No. 26 given here was given, with the exception of People v. Bender, supra, 1945, 27 Cal.2d 164, 163 P.2d 8, and People v. Koenig, supra, 1946, 29 Cal.2d 87, 173 P.2d 1. In the Bender case the court gave the first part of CALJIC No. 26 given here, and stated that as a result the jury was not altogether uninstructed as to the law necessary to a proper consideration of the circumstantial evidence and that the failure to give CAL-

JIC No. 27, upon the facts of the case, was not reversible error. The court said that the evidence pointed irresistably to defendant's guilt. In the Koenig case it was held that the refusal to give CALJIC No. 27, which had been requested by defendant, was not prejudicial error in view of the fact that CALJIC No. 26 was given. Moreover, in People v. Candiotto, supra, 1954, 128 Cal.App.2d 347, 275 P.2d 500, although the court held that CALJIC No. 27 should have been given, it held the error not to be prejudicial. CALJIC No. 26 was given there but the court does not expressly give any weight to that fact.

In People v. Heuss, 1928, 95 Cal.App. 680, 273 P. 583 [forgery], the Supreme Court in denying a petition for hearing after decision by the District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division One, stated in effect that an instruction similar to CALJIC No. 27 should have been given but "In view of the state of the record, we do not feel that we would be justified in reversing the case for the error complained of, as the evidence is sufficient in all respects to have warranted the jury in returning its verdict of guilty." 95 Cal.App. at page 684, 273 P. at page 584.

An examination of the cases in which CALJIC No. 26 was given but the failure to give CALJIC No. 27 was held prejudicial demonstrates that they were all cases in which the guilt of the defendant was a close question. In People v. Hatchett, 63 Cal. App.2d 144, 146 P.2d 469 (conviction of manslaughter) where an instruction similar to CALJIC No. 26 was given, but the one similar to CALJIC No. 27 offered by defendant was refused, the court held prejudicial the failure to give the latter instruction coupled with error in other instructions and the refusal to give other offered instructions on other subjects. However, the court stated, 63 Cal.App.2d at page 165, 146 P.2d at page 480: "* * * we are not basing a reversal upon any single error among those which we have discussed. We regard all of them as substantial, although some are considerably more serious than others." It then said that the evidence was not sufficient to clearly establish the defendant's guilt. In this respect and in the facts of the case, there is no similarity to our case.

In People v. Rayol, 65 Cal.App.2d 462, 150 P.2d 812 (conviction of violation of Penal Code, § 288a) an instruction similar to CALJIC No. 26 was given but the court refused to give an instruction offered by defendant similar to Caljic No. 27. This refusal was held prejudicial error, the court saying (65 Cal.App.2d at pages 466-467, 150 P.2d at page 814): "A portion of the police officers' testimony as to what happened between these parties in the hotel room is such that the jury might reasonably have drawn the inference that the defendant was not a knowing participant in the alleged immoral act, but a mere automaton."

2. Instructions on Intent.

[3] The following general instructions were given on this subject:

"In every crime or public offense there must exist a union, or joint operation, of act and intent. The intent or intention is manifested by the circumstances connected with the offense and the sound mind and discretion of the accused, and I further instruct you that all persons are of sound mind who are neither idiots nor lunatics nor affected with insanity to such an extent as to be unable to discern right from wrong."

"The word 'wilfully,' when applied to the intent with which an act is done or omitted and as used in my instructions, implies simply a purpose or willingness to commit the act or to make the omission in question. The word does not require in its meaning any intent to violate law, or to injure another, or to acquire any advantage."

"The word 'knowingly,' as used in my instructions, imports only a knowledge of the existence of the facts in question, when those facts are such as bring the act or omission within the provision of the law. The word does not require in its meaning any knowledge of the unlawfulness of such act or omission."

"Where a person voluntarily commits an act which under the law is punishable as a crime, the law implies that the act knowingly done was committed with criminal intent, even though the perpetrator did not know that the act was so punishable."

"When the evidence shows that a person voluntarily did that which the law forbids and which it declares to be a crime, he has no defense in the fact, if it be a fact, that he did not know that his act was unlawful or that he believed it to be lawful."

The specific instructions follow:

"Every person who provides, supplies, or administers to any woman, or procures any woman to take any medicine, drug, substance, or uses or employs any instrument or other means whatever, with intent thereby to procure the miscarriage of such woman, unless the same is necessary to preserve her life, is guilty of a criminal offense."

"The provision of the law that 'to constitute the crime of abortion, it is immaterial whether the woman is pregnant or not' does not relieve the prosecution from the duty and burden of proving to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant believed that said women, or any of them, were pregnant."

"Stated another way, the prosecution must prove the specific intent to procure the miscarriage of said women, or any of them, and no such intent could exist unless the defendant had knowledge or believed that they, or any of them, were pregnant."

"You are further instructed that the defendant, Dr. Barkoff, was authorized to use for every lawful purpose upon the persons of the women named in the indictment the appliance which has been designated as a pessary."

"An essential element of the crime of which Arthur Barkoff is accused in the indictment is his intent, the law requiring that to constitute such a crime there must exist a union or joint operation of criminal conduct and specific criminal intent. The law requires that to be guilty of crime one must intend the conduct that fits the description of the crime, and must engage in that conduct knowingly and wilfully."

Plaintiff concedes that as the crime of abortion requires a specific intent the instructions on general criminal intent should not have been given. The authorities support the proposition that where the lawfulness of the act depends upon a specific intent, to instruct upon general as well as specific intent normally would confuse the jury and is error. See People v. Simms, 1956, 144 Cal.App.2d 189, 300 P.2d 898, where on charges of grand theft by false pretenses the trial court in addition to specific instructions gave the instruction on "wilfully" given in our case; People v. Geibel, 1949, 93 Cal.App.2d 147, 177, 208 P.2d 743, where on charges of forgery the court additionally to specific instructions gave the "wilfully" instruction and another instruction on general intent somewhat similar to the one given here; People v. Snyder, 1940, 15 Cal.2d 706, 104 P.2d 639, where in a prosecution for attempted murder the trial court additionally instructed that a person is presumed to intend to do that which he voluntarily did and to intend all the natural and probable consequences of his acts; People v. Maciel, 1925, 71 Cal.App. 213, 234 P. 877, where on a charge of assault with a deadly weapon to commit murder the trial court additionally to specific instructions on intent gave the charge contained in the first paragraph of general instructions hereinabove set forth. In all these cases the reviewing court held the errors to be prejudicial. In People v. Simms, supra, 144 Cal.App.2d 189, 300 P.2d 898, the defendant was indicted on five counts of grand theft (obtaining money by false pretenses) and convicted on two. The court held the giving of instructions on both specific and general intent, combined with flagrant misconduct of the prosecuting attorney, to be prejudicially erroneous. However, the court pointed out that the case was a close one. The facts of that case and its closeness differentiate it from ours. However, in the following cases similar errors were held not to be prejudicial: People v. Chessman, 1950, 38 Cal.2d 166, 183, 238 P.2d 1001, where on a charge of kidnaping the trial court additionally to specific instructions on intent gave the general instruction that to constitute criminal intent it is merely necessary that a person intend to do an act which, if committed, will constitute a crime; People v. Zerillo, 1950, 36 Cal.2d 222, 223 P.2d 223, in a prosecution for offering a bribe, the trial court additionally gave the above mentioned instruction given in the Chessman case and then added that when a person intentionally does that which the law declares to be a crime, such person is acting with criminal intent even though he may not know that such act is unlawful and even though there be no bad motive—although the case was reversed on other grounds, the reviewing court held that under the circumstances of that case the error in giving this instruction was not prejudicial; People v. Swenson, 1954, 127 Cal.App.2d 658, 665, 274 P.2d 229, and People v. Guasti, 110 Cal.App.2d 456, 466–467, 243 P.2d 59, where in prosecutions for embezzlement and perjury respectively, instructions similar to the above mentioned one in the Zerillo case were given. In the Swenson case the trial court also gave an instruction similar to the one given here to the effect that it is not a defense to the doing of an act which the law forbids that the person did not know that his act was unlawful or that he believed it to be lawful. The reviewing court pointed out that this instruction is not contradictory of instructions on specific intent as it merely states the general rule that ignorance of the law is no excuse and relates only to defendant's knowledge and not to whether or not he had requisite specific intent.

People v. Richardson, 1911, 161 Cal. 552, 120 P. 20, is somewhat similar to our case. There the defendant was charged with abortion. He admitted giving the victim certain pills at her request. His defense, as is defendant's here, was that he gave them for purposes other than to cause a miscarriage. The trial court instructed additionally to the general instructions on intent that a person is presumed to intend to do that which he voluntarily and wilfully does and must be presumed to intend all the natural, probable and usual consequences of his own acts. The Supreme Court held this instruction to be erroneous but not prejudicial under the circumstances of the case.

While the instructions on general intent should not have been given, it is inconceivable that the jury could have been misled by them. In the first place, believing the prosecution witnesses in counts I and IV as it did, the jury could not escape finding the requisite intent on the part of defendant. Secondly, the instructions stressed the necessity of there being a specific intent. The court defined the crime of abortion as the administering of a substance "with intent thereby to procure the miscarriage * * *" It charged that the fact it was immaterial whether or not the woman was pregnant did not relieve the prosecution of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the woman was pregnant, and that the prosecution must "prove the specific intent to procure the miscarriage" and that "no such intent could exist unless the defendant had knowledge or believed" that there was pregnancy. It then charged that defendant was authorized to use pessaries on the woman in question for every lawful purpose. Its final instruction on intent was that an essential element of the crime charged was defendant's intent and that to be guilty he must have engaged knowingly and wilfully in conduct that fitted the description of the crime. It is inconceivable that under the facts of this case, the jury could have convicted defendant without believing Evangeline and Verna-dine, and in view of that belief could possibly have found that defendant used the pessaries for any purpose other than that charged, and for what they told him they wanted the pessaries. Thirdly, the jury acquitted defendant on counts II and III. On count II Marian's testimony as to what she told defendant easily could be reconciled with defendant's claim that he was only acting to prevent conception. On count III Lee Ila appeared to be a confused and uncertain witness, and there was medical evidence that possibly she was not pregnant when she came to defendant. On both of these counts the evidence left some doubt as to whether the women told defendant they were pregnant. At any rate, the jury demonstrated in making these acquittals that it understood that the specific instructions on intent prevailed.

Judgment and order affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Robert McSHANN, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 6243.

Supreme Court of California,

In Bank.

Oct. 1, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 28, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of sale and possession of narcotics and from a judgment of the Superior Court, Alameda County, Marvin Sherwin, J., the defendant appeals. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that nondisclosure of the identity of the informer was prejudicial error.

Judgment reversed.

Spence, Shenk, and McComb, JJ., dissented in part.

Vacating, 321 P.2d 533, opinion.

1. Witnesses ⇨216

In narcotics prosecution, where the alleged sale by defendant was to an informer, defendant was entitled to a disclosure of his identity. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1881, subd. 5.

2. Criminal Law ⇨1170½(1)

In narcotics prosecution, denying defendant disclosure of identity of the informer was not nonprejudicial on the ground that defendant received telephone calls from the informer and that defendant knew the informer's identity where the very evidence was in issue in that defendant denied that he received such telephone calls or that he made a sale to the informer. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1881, subd. 5.

3. Witnesses ⇨216

The common-law privilege of nondisclosure of an informer is based on public policy and to insure the informer of some protection against reprisals. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1881, subd. 5.

4. Witnesses ⇨223

It is for the court to determine whether the public interest will suffer by disclosure of identity of the informer. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1881, subd. 5.

5. Witnesses ⇨216

There is no privilege of nondisclosure of name of the informer if disclosure is relevant and helpful to the defense of the accused or is essential to a fair determination of the cause and disclosure is not limited to the informer who participates in the crime alleged. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1881, subd. 5.

6. Witnesses ⇨216

When it appears from the evidence that the informer is a material witness on the issue of guilt and the accused seeks disclosure on cross-examination, the people must either disclose his identity or incur a dismissal. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1881, subd. 5.

7. Witnesses ⇨216

In prosecution for unlawful possession of narcotics, if the informer was a material witness as to the possession, a refusal to disclose his identity was error. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1881, subd. 5.

8. Criminal Law ⇨1170½(1)

In narcotics prosecution, where defendant denied possession and that he received an alleged telephone call and the officers testified thereto and the informer's telephone call was persuasive evidence on possession and the prosecution chose to introduce evidence of the call substantiating the testimony of the officers and discrediting the defendant who denied receiving the call, nondisclosure of the informer's name was prejudicial error. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1881, subd. 5.

Vaughns, Dixon & White and Clinton W. White, Oakland, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., and Victor Griffith, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction on two counts of violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code. Count one charged a sale of heroin on November 26, 1956. Count two charged possession of heroin on November 27, 1956.

The prosecution's evidence showed that on November 26, 1956, Police Officers McBee, Hilliard, Leen, and Goodrum met a confidential informer in Oakland. Officers McBee and Hilliard searched the informer and found no narcotics on him. The informer, accompanied by the four officers, then went to the Oakland Police Department where he made an appointment by telephone for the purchase of narcotics from defendant. Officer McBee dialed the number listed for the residence of defendant, and a recording was made of the conversation. Officers McBee, Hilliard, and Goodrum were present during the telephone conversation and later listened to the recording. The recording was played before the jury, and the officers identified the voice talking to the informer as defendant's.

The officers gave the informer a $20 bill, a $10 bill and a $5 bill, each dusted with fluorescent powder. They took him to the vicinity of Market and Grand Streets where he entered an automobile driven by defendant. Officer McBee followed the automobile until he lost sight of it. Ten or fifteen minutes later the informer entered Officer McBee's automobile at 21st and Market Streets and gave Officer McBee a small bindle containing a white powder later identified as heroin. Officer Goodrum saw the informer enter the automobile identified as defendant's and followed it until the informer got out and entered Officer McBee's automobile.

On November 27, 1956, the informer again made a telephone call to defendant, which was also recorded (and later played to the jury), and arranged to purchase heroin from him at a bar. Officer McBee and the informer then went to the vicinity of the bar. Later Officer Hilliard joined them, and after listening to the recorded conversation he obtained a warrant to search defendant's residence.

On November 27th Officers Goodrum, Reppas, and Woishnis kept defendant's residence under surveillance. Officer Hilliard instructed them to follow defendant when he left his residence and arrest him at the first opportunity. Thereafter defendant left his residence in an automobile. He stopped at the intersection of Adeline and Market Streets for a traffic signal, and the officers drove their automobile in front of his and told him that he was under arrest. They told him to back his car into a gas station and to get out and place his hands on top of the car. As he got out of the car, Officer Woishnis observed a "silvery flutter" and said: "He dropped it." Officer Goodrum saw something shiny "hit off of his [defendant's] shoe and land on the ground * * *." Officer Reppas picked up four tinfoil packages and asked defendant: "What about these?" Defendant said he didn't know anything about them. A smaller package wrapped in cellophane was found in defendant's pocket. All five packages contained heroin. The officers, together with Officers Hilliard and McBee, then went to defendant's residence and searched it. They found $1,058, including a $20 bill, a $10 bill and a $5 bill on which an ultraviolet light disclosed a large amount of fluorescent powder. The prosecution's evidence also showed that defendant made certain admissions after his arrest.

Defendant testified that he was not a party to the alleged telephone conversations, denied the alleged meeting with the informer, and denied that he had possession of narcotics on November 27th.

During the cross-examination of Officers McBee and Hilliard before the jury and of Officer Hilliard on the hearing on probable cause in the absence of the jury, the trial court sustained on the ground of privilege (Code Civ.Proc. § 1881, subd. 5) the prosecution's objections to questions by the defense seeking to obtain the name of the informer. Defendant contends that the

November 26, 1956

[1,2] Since the alleged sale by the defendant was to the informer, defendant was clearly entitled to disclosure of his identity. Roviaro v. United States, 353 U.S. 53, 58, 77 S.Ct. 623, 1 L.Ed.2d 639; People v. Alvarez, 154 Cal.App.2d 694, 696, 316 P.2d 1006; People v. Castiel, 153 Cal.App.2d 653, 656-659, 315 P.2d 79; People v. Lawrence, 149 Cal.App.2d 435, 451, 308 P.2d 821. The People contend, however, that defendant was not prejudiced invoking the evidence that defendant received two telephone calls from the informer and that he made a sale to the informer to establish that the defendant knew the informer's identity. That very evidence was in issue, however, for defendant denied that he received such calls or that he made such a sale. There was no finding that the defendant knew the informer and it cannot be assumed that he did. Such an assumption would in effect assume his guilt. See Roviaro v. United States, supra, 353 U.S. at page 60, 77 S.Ct. at page 627.

Count Two: The Possession of Heroin on November 27, 1956

The People seek to uphold the conviction on count two on the grounds that the informer's identity has no bearing on that charge and that in any event there is a privilege of nondisclosure of informers.

[3] The common-law privilege of nondisclosure is based on public policy. "The purpose of the privilege is the furtherance and protection of the public interest in effective law enforcement. The privilege recognizes the obligation of citizens to communicate their knowledge of the commission of crimes to law-enforcement officials and, by preserving their anonymity, encourages them to perform that obligation." Roviaro v. United States, supra, 353 U.S. at page 59, 77 S.Ct. at page 627. The informer is thus assured of some protection against reprisals. The use of informers is particularly effective in the enforcement of sumptuary laws such as those directed against gambling, prostitution, or the sale and use of liquor and narcotics. Disclosure of the informer's identity ordinarily destroys his usefulness in obtaining information thereafter. See Donnelly, Judicial Control of Informants, Spies, Stool Pigeons, and Agent Provocateurs, 60 Yale L.J. 1091, 1093; 1 U.C.L.A.L.Rev. 405, 512.

[4] Section 1881, subd. 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure encompasses the privilege of nondisclosure of informers: "A public officer cannot be examined as to communications made to him in official confidence, when the public interest would suffer by the disclosure." There is a divergence of opinion as to whether the common-law privilege covers only the identity of the informer or also includes the contents of the communication. See McCormick, Evidence (1954), pp. 309-311; Donnelly, supra, 60 Yale L.J. at 1094-1095; 98 U. of Pa.L.Rev. 719, 730. Since the reason for the privilege relate primarily to the identity of the informer, some authorities take the position that the privilege does not extend to the communications unless the contents would disclose or tend to disclose the identity of the informer. See Wigmore, Evidence, 3d Ed., vol. 8, p. 755; McCormick, supra, p. 310. Under section 1881, subd. 5, it extends to the communications "when the public interest would suffer by the disclosure."

It is for the court to determine whether the public interest will suffer by disclosure. See Dwelly v. McReynolds, 6 Cal.2d 128, 131, 56 P.2d 1232; Wigmore, supra, vol. 8 at 798-801; 22 Cal.L.Rev. 667, 676. At common law the privilege could not be invoked if the identity of the informer was known to those who had cause to resent the communication. See Roviaro v. United

1. Defendant does not contend that the recorded telephone conversations were an unlawful interception and therefore in-

States, 353 U.S. 53, 60, 77 S.Ct. 623, 1 L.Ed.2d 639. Under section 1881, subd. 5, the test is whether the public interest would suffer by the disclosure. Conceivably, even when the informer may be known to persons who have cause to resent the communication, disclosure in open court might still be against the public interest. A defendant who knows the identity of the informer, however, will ordinarily not be prejudiced by a refusal to disclose that identity.

[5] There is general agreement that there is no privilege of nondisclosure if disclosure "is relevant and helpful to the defense of the accused, or is essential to a fair determination of a cause * * *." Roviaro v. United States, supra, 353 U.S. at pages 60-61, 77 S.Ct. at page 628, see People v. Castiel, supra, 153 Cal.App.2d at page 659, 315 P.2d at page 82; People v. Lawrence, supra, 149 Cal.App.2d at page 451, 308 P.2d at page 830; Portomene v. United States, 5 Cir., 221 F.2d 582, 583-584; United States v. Conforti, 7 Cir., 200 F.2d 365, 367; Sorrentino v. United States, 9 Cir., 163 F.2d 627, 628-629; United States v. Li Fat Tong, 2 Cir., 152 F.2d 650, 651-652; Wilson v. United States, 3 Cir., 59 F.2d 390, 392; Marks v. Beyfus, L.R. 25 Q.B.D. 494, 498; *Centoamore v. Disclosure is not limited to the informer who participates in the crime alleged. The information elicited from an informer may be "relevant and helpful to the defense of the accused or essential to a fair determination of a cause" even though the informer was not a participant. For example, the testimony of an eyewitness-nonparticipant informer that would vindicate the innocence of the accused or lessen the risk of false testimony would obviously be relevant and helpful to the defense of the accused and essential to a fair determination of the cause.

[6] Disclosure is frequently a problem in such cases as the present one involving violations of the narcotics laws, when the so-called informer is also a material witness on the issue of guilt. A mere informer has a limited role. "When such a person is truly an informant he simply points the finger of suspicion toward a person who has violated the law. He puts the wheels in motion which cause the defendant to be suspected and perhaps arrested, but he plays no part in the criminal act with which the defendant is later charged." People v. Lawrence, supra, 149 Cal.App.2d at page 450, 308 P.2d at page 830. His identity is ordinarily not necessary to the defendant's case, and the privilege against disclosure properly applies. When it appears from the evidence, however, that the informer is also a material witness on the issue of guilt, his identity is relevant and may be helpful to the defendant. Nondisclosure would deprive him of a fair trial. Thus, when it appears from the evidence that the informer is a material witness on the issue of guilt and the accused seeks disclosure on cross-examination, the People must either disclose his identity or incur a dismissal. See Roviaro v. United States, supra, 353 U.S. at page 61, 77 S.Ct. at page 628. Any implications to the contrary in People v. Cox, 156 Cal.App.2d 472, 319 P.2d 681, and People v. Gonzales, 136 Cal.App.2d 437, 440-441, 288 P.2d 588, are disapproved.

Jencks v. United States, 353 U.S. 657, 671-672, 77 S.Ct. 1007, 1014, 1 L.Ed.2d 1103, involved a comparable situation wherein the defendant sought the production of F.B.I. reports made by the two principal witnesses against him on a charge that he falsely swore in an affidavit that he was not a member of the Communist party. The court stated:

"It is unquestionably true that the protection of vital national interests may militate against public disclosure of documents in the Government's possession. * * * The Attorney General has adopted regulations * * * declaring all Justice Department records confidential and that no disclosure, including disclosure in response to a subpoena, may be made without his permission.

"But this Court has noticed, in United States v. Reynolds, 345 U.S. 1, 73 S.Ct. 528, 97 L.Ed. 727, the holdings of the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit that, in criminal causes ' * * the Government can invoke its evidentiary privileges only at the price of letting the defendant go free. The rationale of the criminal cases is that, since the Government which prosecutes an accused also has the duty to see that justice is done, it is unconscionable to allow it to undertake prosecution and then invoke its governmental privileges to deprive the accused of anything which might be material to his defense * * *.' 345 U.S. at page 12, 73 S.Ct. at page 534."

[7] Likewise, if the informer in the present case was a material witness as to the possession charged in count two, the refusal to disclose his identity was prejudicial error as to that count.

[8] Defendant denied that he had heroin in his possession and denied that he received the alleged telephone call. Officer McBee and Officer Hilliard testified to the telephone call, and a recording thereof cut by Officer Hilliard was played before the jury. The informer's telephone call was persuasive evidence on possession, for it indicated that defendant was en route to make a sale of heroin when he was arrested and therefore knowingly had possession at that time. As the originator of the telephone call the informer was a material witness on the issue of possession. The prosecution made him such a witness by introducing evidence of his telephone call to make a purchase of heroin and by playing a recording of the telephone conversation before the jury.

The prosecution could have relied solely on the testimony of the officers as to defendant's possession of heroin and as to his admissions without reference to the telephone call. They chose instead also to introduce evidence of the telephone call, which substantiated the testimony of Officers Goodrum and Reppas and discredited defendant's. Defendant denied receiving the call. He had no fair opportunity to substantiate his denial and impeach the testimony of the officers without disclosure of the informer's identity. Had there been disclosure, the informer might have testified that no such telephone call was made, that it was not defendant who received the call, that someone else was called, or that there was an entrapment.

The cross-examination of Officers McBee and Hilliard as to the telephone call and the identity of its originator dealt with an alleged telephone call to the defendant setting up a sale and the identity of the person making that call. It did not deal with communications made to them "in confidence" (Code Civ.Proc. § 1881, subd. 5) or with the identity of a person making communications "in confidence."

There are strong parallels between the instant case and Roviaro v. United States, supra, 353 U.S. at pages 58-59, 77 S.Ct. at page 627, wherein defendant was charged with a sale of heroin (count one) and with "illegal transportation of narcotics" (count two). A conviction under count two was proper "when the Government has proved that the accused possessed narcotics, unless the accused explains or justifies such possession." 353 U.S. at page 63, 77 S.Ct. at page 629. The Government sought to uphold the conviction on count two on the ground that the identity of the informer (John Doe) had no bearing on that charge and was therefore privileged. The Government had introduced evidence that John Doe had a conversation in his car with defendant as he drove him to a place where defendant got out of the car, walked to a nearby tree, picked up a small package, returned and deposited the package in Doe's car and left in another car. An officer secreted in the trunk of Doe's car testified to the conversation between Doe and the defendant, and both he and another officer testified that they saw the defendant pick up the small package and return to Doe's car. The package contained an opium derivative. The Court held that under the circumstances, "John Doe's possible testimony was highly relevant and might have been helpful to the defense. * * *

The informer was the only witness [other than the accused] in a position to amplify or contradict the testimony of government witnesses." 353 U.S. at pages 63-64, 77 S. Ct. at page 629.

Although the informer in the present case was not an eye witness to the crime, as John Doe was in the Roviario case, the prosecution's own election to introduce evidence of the telephone conversation made it imperative that it disclose the identity of the informer, for he alone could amplify or contradict the testimony of the officers. As in the Roviario case nondisclosure was prejudicial error.

The judgment is reversed as to both counts.

GIBSON, C. J., and CARTER and SCHAUER, JJ., concur.

SPENCE, Justice (concurring and dissenting).

I concur in the reversal as to count one but dissent from the reversal as to count two. In my opinion, the case of Roviario v. United States, 353 U.S. 53, 77 S.Ct. 623, 1 L. Ed.2d 639, is not authority for the majority's reversal as to both counts, but on the contrary, clearly indicates that the judgment of conviction on the second count should be affirmed.

In the Roviario case, the two charges were (1) sale of narcotics and (2) illegal transportation of narcotics. Both charges arose out of a single transaction occurring on August 12, 1954. The Government did not "defend the nondisclosure of Doe's identity with respect to Count 1, which charged a sale of heroin to John Doe," but it sought "to sustain the judgment on the basis of the conviction on Count 2, charging illegal transportation of narcotics." 353 U.S. at pages 58-59, 77 S.Ct. at page 627. The court there held that, under the circumstances, it was reversible error as to both counts for the trial court to deny disclosure of the identity of the informer.

In so holding with respect to the second count, the court, after stating that "no fixed rule with respect to disclosure is justifiable" (353 U.S. at page 62, 77 S.Ct. at page 628), was careful to point out that the second count there did not "charge mere possession" (353 U.S. at page 63, 77 S.Ct. at page 629); that the informer had "been present with the accused at the occurrence of the alleged crime" of illegal transportation (353 U.S. at page 55, 77 S.Ct. at page 625); and that "the Government's informer was the sole participant, other than the accused, in the transaction charged" (353 U.S. at page 64, 77 S.Ct. at page 630). In the present case, count two did charge "mere possession"; the informer was not "present with the accused at the occurrence of the alleged crime" charged in count two; and the informer was not a participant in the offense of "mere possession" on November 27, 1956, as distinguished from the prior offense of sale on November 26, 1956.

If, as declared in the Roviario case, the problem is one of "balancing the public interest in protecting the flow of information against the individual's right to prepare his defense"; and if the question of error in refusing disclosure depends "on the particular circumstances of each case" (353 U.S. at page 62, 77 S.Ct. at page 628), I am of the view that the balance here is clearly in favor of the public interest. The compelling reasons for preventing disclosure of the identity of informers, except where the interests of justice demand it, are forcefully stated in the dissent of Mr. Justice Clark in the Roviario case. Here, however, we have only to follow the implications of the majority opinion in that case in order to sustain the judgment of conviction as to count two.

I would therefore reverse as to count one but affirm as to count two.

SHENK, J., concurs.

McCOMB, Justice (concurring and dissenting).

I concur in the reversal of the judgment as to count one, but dissent from the reversal of the judgment as to count two.

v.

The SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO,
Respondent.

S. F. 19111.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.

Oct. 1, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 28, 1958.

Prosecution against defendant charging violations of the Health and Safety Code. Defendant's motion to set aside the information on the ground that evidence against him was obtained by an illegal search and seizure was denied and he seeks a writ of prohibition to prevent his trial. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that where the prosecution sought to show reasonable cause for the search and relied on testimony as to communications from an informer, either the identity of the informer should have been disclosed when the defendant sought disclosure or such testimony should have been struck on proper motion of the defendant and that such disclosure may be required at the preliminary hearing in view of proper objections by the defendant.

Peremptory writ of prohibition issued.

Vacating, 319 P.2d 796, opinion.

1. Criminal Law 238

Indictment and Information 137(5)

Prohibition 5(4)

A defendant has been held to answer without reasonable or probable cause if his commitment is based entirely on incompetent evidence and in such case the trial court should grant a motion to set aside the information and if it does not do so a peremptory writ of prohibition will issue to prevent further proceedings. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 995, 999a.

2. Criminal Law 238

The proof authorizing a magistrate to hold an accused for trial must consist of legal competent evidence and no other type of evidence may be considered.

3. Criminal Law 394.5(4)

Defendant made a prima facie case that evidence was illegally obtained by showing that his arrest and search of his person and apartment were made without a warrant and the burden was then on the prosecution to show proper justification.

4. Witnesses 216

If testimony of communications from a confidential informer is necessary to establish the legality of a search, defendant must be given a fair opportunity to rebut that testimony and must be permitted to ascertain the identity of the informer. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1881, subd. 5.

5. Witnesses 216

When the prosecution relies on communications from an informer to show reasonable cause for search and has elicited testimony as to those communications on direct examination, it is essential to a fair trial that defendant have the right to cross-examine as to the source of such communications, and if the prosecution refuses to disclose the identity of the informer the court should not order disclosure, but on proper motion should strike the testimony as to communications from the informer. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1881, subd. 5.

6. Witnesses 216

In narcotics prosecution, where defendant made a prima facie case of illegal search by showing that his arrest and search of his person and apartment were made without a warrant and the prosecution claimed that they met the burden to show justification by an officer's testimony of communications from two informers, defendant was entitled to disclosure of the informer's identity. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 5.

7. Witnesses ⇨216

Where defendant at preliminary hearing made a prima facie case of illegal search by showing that his arrest and search of his person and apartment were made without a warrant, defendant was entitled to disclosure of identity of the informers on whose testimony the prosecution sought to justify the search or to striking on proper motion of the testimony of the officer as to the communications of the informers as against claim that such disclosure should not be required at a preliminary hearing. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1881, subd. 5.

8. Criminal Law ⇨1028, 1044

A defendant cannot raise the problem of nondisclosure of identity of informers in the appellate court when he did not seek disclosure at the trial or preliminary hearing or did not move to strike the testimony on a refusal to disclose. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 1881, subd. 5.

Searches and Seizures ⇨3(1)

On failure of defendant to object to nondisclosure of identity of the informer, evidence of information from a reliable informer is unobjectionable and may be sufficient to sustain a finding the search was made with reasonable cause. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1881, subd. 5.

10. Witnesses ⇨216

In narcotics prosecution, where defendant objected to officer's testimony on direct examination as to legality of search and demanded disclosure of informers' identities and moved that testimony be struck and indicated during direct examination of officer that defense would demand disclosure on cross-examination, trial court should have required disclosure of identities of informers on direct examination or should have excluded or struck the testimony. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1881, subd. 5.

11. Criminal Law ⇨394.5(1)

In narcotics prosecution, where defendant made a prima facie case as to the illegality of search of his person and apartment where narcotics were found, narcotics seized in the search were not admissible and should have been excluded from evidence on defendant's motion to set aside the information. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

Arthur D. Klang, San Francisco, for petitioner.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Two counts of an information charged defendant with possessing narcotics in violation of Health and Safety Code, section 11500. His motion to set aside the information on the ground that the evidence against him was obtained by an illegal search and seizure was denied, and he now seeks a writ of prohibition to prevent his trial.

The evidence at the preliminary hearing showed that at approximately 3 p. m. on April 18, 1957, Officer McKinley of the San Francisco Police Department received information from an informer that defendant had heroin in his apartment and that the informer had been there previously and obtained narcotics from defendant. The informer also said that there were narcotics in an apartment occupied by Cecil Thomas. At about 3:30 p. m. Officer McKinley and another officer went to the apartment occupied by Cecil Thomas, arrested him there, and found narcotics in his apartment. At that time, the officers received information from a second informer that defendant possessed narcotics.

Acting solely on the information from the two informers, Officer McKinley and the other officer went to defendant's apartment and knocked on the door. After about ten minutes defendant opened it, and they then placed him under arrest and searched his person and the apartment. They found heroin on his person and dolophine, a narcotic, in a dresser drawer. The arrest and search were made without a warrant.

[1] It is settled that "a 'defendant has been held to answer without reasonable or probable cause if his commitment is based entirely on incompetent evidence', and accordingly, in such a case the trial court should grant a motion to set aside the information, Penal Code, § 995, and if it does not do so, a peremptory writ of prohibition will issue to prohibit further proceedings. Penal Code, § 999a." Badillo v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 269, 271, 294 P.2d 23, 24; People v. Valenti, 49 Cal.2d 199, 203, 316 P.2d 633; Willson v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 291, 292, 294 P.2d 36; Rogers v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 3, 7, 291 P.2d 929; People v. Jablon, 153 Cal. App.2d 456, 459, 314 P.2d 824; see, People v. Schuber, 71 Cal.App.2d 773, 775, 163 P.2d 498; In re Martinez, 36 Cal.App.2d 687, 689, 98 P.2d 528.

[2] The narcotics, introduced over defendant's objections constituted essential evidence of defendant's guilt. If illegally obtained, it was not competent to show reasonable cause to believe the defendant guilty of a public offense, for "(t)he proof which will authorize a magistrate in holding an accused person for trial must consist of legal, competent evidence. No other type of evidence may be considered by the magistrate. The rules of evidence require the 'production of legal evidence' and the exclusion of 'whatever is not legal' * *." Rogers v. Superior Court, supra, 46 Cal.2d at page 8, 291 P.2d at page 932; People v. Schuber, supra, 71 Cal.App.2d at page 775, 163 P.2d at page 499. Accordingly, if the only evidence of guilt was illegally obtained, defendant is held without reasonable or probable cause, and a peremptory

[3] Defendant made a prima facie case by showing that his arrest and the search of his person and apartment were made without a warrant. The burden was then on the prosecution to show proper justification. Badillo v. Superior Court, supra, 46 Cal.2d at page 272, 294 P.2d at page 25. The People contend that they met that burden by the officer's testimony of the communications from the two informers. Defendant contends that this testimony is not competent since he objected to it, demanding that the identity of the informers be disclosed or the officer's testimony be struck.

The People contend that defendant was not entitled to the disclosure of the informers' identities invoking section 1881, subd. 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure: "A public officer cannot be examined as to communications made to him in official confidence, when the public interest would suffer by the disclosure." In People v. McShann, Cal. Sup., 330 P.2d 33, the informer was a material witness on the facts relating directly to the question of guilt. The policy conflict there involved was between the encouragement of the free flow of information to law enforcement officials and the right of the defendant to make a full and fair defense on the issue of guilt. In the present case the communications of the informers are material to the issue of reasonable cause to make the arrest and search, and the policy conflict is between the encouragement of the free flow of information to law enforcement officers and the policy to discourage lawless enforcement of the law. See People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 445, 282 P.2d 905, 50 A.L.R.2d 513.

The federal rule under such circumstances is set forth in Roviaro v. United States, 353 U.S. 53, 61, 77 S.Ct. 623, 628, 1 L.Ed.2d 639: "Most of the federal cases involving this limitation on the scope of the informer's privilege have arisen where the legality of a search without a warrant is in issue and the communications of an informer are claimed to establish probable cause. In these cases the Government has been required to disclose the identity of the informant unless there was sufficient evidence apart from his confidential communication." <sup>1</sup>

[4-6] The foregoing rule requiring disclosure of the identity of an informer whose communications are relied upon to establish probable cause to make a search is sound and workable. See People v. Wasco, 153 Cal.App.2d 485, 488, 314 P.2d 558; People v. Lundy, 151 Cal.App.2d 244, 249, 311 P.2d 601; People v. Dewson, 150 Cal.App.2d 119, 136, 310 P.2d 162; People v. Alaniz (dis-sent), 149 Cal.App.2d 560, 570, 309 P.2d 71; Wilson v. United States, 3 Cir., 59 F.2d 390, 392; Hill v. State, 151 Miss. 518, 118 So.

1. The reasons supporting this rule are stated in the following federal cases cited with approval in the Roviaro case:

Scher v. United States, 305 U.S. 251, 254, 59 S.Ct. 174, 176, 83 L.Ed. 151: In this case the officers had sufficient independent evidence to justify the arrest and search without relying on information from an informer: "In the circumstances the source of the information which caused him to be observed was unimportant to petitioner's defense. The legality of the officers' action does not depend upon the credibility of something told but upon what they saw and heard—what took place in their presence. Justification is not sought because of honest belief based upon credible information as in United States v. Blich, D.C., 45 F.2d 627."

United States v. Blich, D.C., 45 F.2d 627, 629: "The court has no quarrel with the Prohibition Department in its policy of guarding and keeping secret the name of an informant, with the idea of being thereby better enabled to enforce the Prohibition Law. The only question here is as to whether or not, when the matter is presented to a court for the purpose of seeking a determination of whether, under all the circumstances, there was probable cause, this element of those circumstances may remain undisclosed. It is scarcely an answer to the proposition that an agent testifies that his informant was a reliable person, and that he believed the information so given, unless the court sitting in judgment may have the right to determine whether, under all the circumstances, such information was reliable and the agent was justified in having such belief. A belief must or should rest upon a substantial basis. It is not a question of impugning the motives or doubting the honest belief of the agent in regard to the information which he may have received. It is simply requiring the witness to sustain his motives and his beliefs by all the evidence at his command."

of the informer was unreliable or he was unworthy of belief, the officer did not have probable cause to make either the search or the arrest. It follows that the court must have all the facts before it can properly determine whether the officer acted on reasonable grounds. If an officer should stop a peaceful, law-abiding citizen on the highway and search his car, subjecting him to humiliation and ridicule, and the offended citizen should seek redress by a suit for damages, surely no court would say the officer would be relieved of responsibility by an answer that he was informed by a reliable person that the citizen was engaged in the illicit liquor traffic, but he could not and would not disclose the name of his informer, thus preventing a fair and impartial investigation of his conduct. The certainty of the law is one of its greatest attributes. We cannot have one law applicable to an identical state of facts for the innocent and another for the guilty. The guilty may sometime escape under such a rule, but this need not follow if the officer be diligent, and likewise the secrets of state may be kept inviolate. The officer may use the facts furnished by the informer as a basis for his own investigation and discover sufficient facts to search or arrest without disclosing the source of his information. * * *

"When the government calls a witness whose testimony is based in part on that of an informer, it subjects the witness to cross-examination and the informer to whatever peril may arise out of such cross-examination. It is a sound rule to keep secret information furnished to the state of violations of its laws, but this commendable public policy must yield to a higher, or at least an equal, right accorded to an accused to have a court investigate the facts material to his offense in a criminal prosecution, and sometimes the departments of government will be put to a choice of either foregoing a criminal prosecution or disclosing the source of material information necessary to the conduct of orderly judicial procedure."

In sum, when the prosecution seeks to show reasonable cause for a search by testimony as to communications from an informer, either the identity of the informer must be disclosed when the defendant seeks disclosure or such testimony must be struck on proper motion of the defendant. Any holdings or implications to the contrary in People v. Johnson, 157 Cal.App.2d 555, 321 P.2d 35; People v. Salcido, 154 Cal.App.2d 520, 522, 316 P.2d 639; People v. Moore, 154 Cal.App.2d 43, 46-47, 315 P.2d 357; People v. Merino, 151 Cal.App.2d 594, 597, 312 P.2d 48; People v. Alaniz, 149 Cal.App.2d 560, 567, 309 P.2d 71; and People v. Gonzales, 141 Cal.App.2d 604, 606-607, 297 P.2d 50, are disapproved.

[7] The People contend that even if disclosure is required at the trial, it should not be required at the preliminary hearing. Since the purpose of the preliminary hearing, however, is to determine whether there is competent evidence to commit the defendant for trial, disclosure at that time is necessary to determine whether the evidence acquired by the search is competent. The defendant may not be committed for trial when there is no competent evidence to support a belief that he is guilty of a public offense. Moreover, disclosure at the preliminary hearing will ordinarily obviate the necessity of a continuance during the trial to permit the defendant to locate and interview the informer. Defendant was therefore entitled either to disclosure of the informers' identities or to the striking on proper motion of the testimony of the officer as to the communications of the informer offered to establish the legality of the search.

[8-11] The question remains whether the officer's testimony was incompetent in this case. A defendant cannot raise the problem of non-disclosure in the appellate courts when he did not seek disclosure at the trial or preliminary hearing or did not move to strike the testimony on a refusal to disclose. People v. Johnson, supra, 157 Cal. App.2d at page 559, 321 P.2d at page 37; People v. Gorg, 157 Cal.App.2d 515, 321

P.2d 143; People v. Lundy, 151 Cal.App.2d 244, 249, 311 P.2d 601. Upon his failure to do either at that time, evidence of information from a reliable informer is thereafter unobjectionable and may be sufficient to sustain a finding that the search was made with reasonable cause. Willson v. Superior Court, supra, 46 Cal.2d at page 294-295, 294 P.2d at page 38-39; People v. Dupee, 151 Cal.App.2d 364, 367, 311 P.2d 568; *People v. In the present case defendant objected to the officer's testimony on direct examination and demanded disclosure of the informers' identities; he moved that the testimony be struck; and he indicated during the direct examination of the officer that the defense would demand disclosure on cross-examination. Under such circumstances, the trial court should have required disclosure on direct examination or should have excluded or struck the testimony. Since there was no other competent evidence to justify the search and defendant made a prima facie case as to its illegality, it follows that the narcotics seized in the search were not admissible and should have been excluded.

Let the peremptory writ of prohibition issue as prayed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SCHAUER, J., concur.

CARTER, Justice (concurring).

I concur in the views expressed in the opinion prepared by Mr. Justice TRAYNOR but wish to add some additional views which are pertinent to the issue here involved.

The issue presented is whether there is any competent evidence of probable cause on which to hold defendant to answer. If there is no such evidence, the writ of prohibition must issue. Rogers v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 3, 291 P.2d 929; Badillo v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 269, 294 P.2d 23; People v. Valenti, 49 Cal.2d 199, 316 P.2d 633. Narcotics seized during the arrest and subsequent search of defendant's person and premises was the sole evidence offered to show probable cause. This evidence is admissible only if the arrest and search by the police officers was legal. People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905, 50 A.L.R.2d 513. Defendant challenged the legality of the arrest and seizure, pointing out that there was no warrant, and contending that the police officers acted without probable cause. In these circumstances the burden is on the prosecution to justify the officers' conduct. Badillo v. Superior Court, supra, 46 Cal.2d at page 272, 294 P.2d at page 25. Thus, whether defendant can be held to answer, as well as the issuance or denial of the writ of prohibition, hinges on proof of the same fact, namely did the police officers act with probable cause.

The police officers testified that they had received information from two reliable informants that defendant was in possession of narcotics. This was the only evidence offered to establish that the police officers had probable cause, and thus it forms the sole basis on which the arrest and search can be justified. On cross-examination defendant sought to elicit the names of the informants. The magistrate denied defendant the right to cross-examine on such matter, ruling that the identity of the informants was confidential and privileged.

Conceding that this testimony is sufficient to establish probable cause to make an arrest and search, nevertheless the denial of defendant's right to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses regarding the identity of informants renders it incompetent. The result being that the search and seizure is illegal, which renders the evidence seized inadmissible under the exclusionary rule, and leaves the court without any competent evidence of probable cause to hold defendant to answer.

The People contend that the magistrate properly refused to disclose the identity of the informants for the reason that such matter is privileged under section 1881, subdivision 5, of the Code of Civil Procedure. This section provides: "A public officer cannot be examined as to communications made to him in official confidence, when the public interest would suffer by the disclosure."

It is argued that if the identity of informants must be disclosed this flow of information to police officers will break an important link in law enforcement, causing the public to suffer.

For the reasons stated below I have concluded that the privilege asserted by the People must yield in the present circumstances to the greater interest of protecting an accused's constitutional right to a fair hearing.

"The purpose of the preliminary hearing is to weed out groundless or unsupported charges of grave offenses, and to relieve the accused of the degradation and the expense of a criminal trial." Jaffe v. Stone, 18 Cal.2d 146, 150, 114 P.2d 335, 338, 135 A.L.R. 775. To accomplish this purpose the Legislature has prescribed the procedure to be followed. In essence this procedure is a carbon copy of the minimum requirements and safeguards which are required to be used in criminal trials pursuant to Article I, section 13 of the California Constitution. An accused at a preliminary hearing is entitled to counsel (Pen.Code, § 859), examination and cross-examination of witnesses (Pen.Code, §§ 866, 865) and the traditional rights of an accused at a criminal trial (Pen. Code, § 866.5). To state the obvious, orderly procedures based on the concept of fair play provide the means by which the purpose of a preliminary hearing is to be accomplished. See People v. Brooks, 72 Cal. App.2d 657, 661, 165 P.2d 51.

The right to cross-examination, which is basic to our judicial system and has been from earliest times, is part of this fundamental right available to an accused. People v. Ramistella, 306 N.Y. 379, 118 N.E.2d 566; see, Alford v. United States, 282 U.S. 687, 51 S.Ct. 218, 75 L.Ed. 624; People v. Cole, 43 N.Y. 508, 512-513. An improper denial of the right of cross-examination constitutes a denial of due process (Argonaut Ins. Exchange v. Industrial Accident Commission, 120 Cal.App.2d 145, 152, 153, 260 P.2d 817; Columbia-Geneva Steel Division, United States Steel Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 115 Cal.App.2d 862, 865, 253 P.2d 45; Langendorf United Bakeries

v. Industrial Accident Commission, 87 Cal. App.2d 103, 104-105, 195 P.2d 887). Apart from historical considerations the reason cross-examination is one of the ingredients of a fair hearing is practical. In a trial or preliminary hearing there is usually a disputed factual issue. Where this occurs, cross-examination provides a major method for establishing the accuracy and reliability of direct testimony. The method of cross-examination is necessary since experience tells us that ex parte statements are too uncertain and unreliable to be considered in the investigation of controverted facts. People v. McGowan, 80 Cal.App. 293, 298-299, 251 P. 643; People v. Seitz, 100 Cal. App. 113, 119, 279 P. 1070; see People v. Cole, supra, 43 N.Y. at page 512-513.

A violation of these fundamental rights at a preliminary hearing results in a deprivation of due process of law. See People v. Napthaly, 105 Cal. 641, 644, 39 P. 29. People v. Salas, 80 Cal.App. 318, 250 P. 526; People v. Miller, 123 Cal.App. 499, 11 P.2d 884.

Not every instance in which a cross-examiner's question is disallowed will defendant's right to a fair hearing be abridged, since the matter may be too unimportant (Naylor v. Ashton, 20 Cal.App. 544, 130 P. 181), or there may be no prejudice (People ex rel. Bradford v. Burch, 46 Cal.App. 391, 189 P. 716), or the question may involve issues which can be brought up at a more appropriate time (Mitchell v. Excelsior Water & Mining Co., 41 Cal.App. 240, 182 P. 326). However, where the subject of cross-examination concerns the matter at issue there can be no doubt that the refusal to permit such question results in a denial of a fair hearing. People v. Manchetti, 29 Cal.2d 452, 459, 175 P.2d 533; People v. McGowan, supra, 80 Cal.App. at pages 296-299, 251 P. at page 644; Langendorf United Bakeries v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, 87 Cal.App.2d at pages 104-105, 195 P.2d at page 887; Columbia-Geneva Steel Division, United States Steel Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, 115 Cal.App.2d at page 865, 253 P.2d at page 47; Argonaut Ins. Exchange v. Industrial Accident Com-

Such principle applies to the case at bar. As heretofore pointed out the only evidence to show probable cause that defendant had committed a felony was evidence seized by the police officers. This evidence is only admissible if the search was legal (People v. Cahan, supra, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905, 50 A.L.R.2d 513). In an attempt to show the search was legal the prosecution witnesses testified that they were acting on the information of a reliable informant. This was the sole evidence offered by the prosecution to prove the legality of the search. Defendant can only rebut this evidence by either showing that the informant does not exist, that he is unreliable, or that the information conveyed to the police officers was otherwise than that testified to. But the opportunity to establish any one of these alternatives depends on knowledge of the informant's identity. To deny defendant this opportunity is to hold him to answer on the basis of ex parte statements, which we know from experience are too unreliable to be considered as evidence where factual issues are disputed.

The words of Mr. Justice Douglas dissenting in United States v. Nugent, 346 U.S. 1 at page 13, 73 S.Ct. 991 at page 998, 97 L.Ed. 1417, echo the unfairness of such a denial: "The use of statements by informers who need not confront the person under investigation or accusation has such an infamous history that it should be rooted out from our procedure. A hearing at which these faceless people are allowed to present their whispered rumors and yet escape the test and torture of cross-examination is not a hearing in the Anglo-American sense."

Thus, the choice was with the prosecution; they could elect to claim the privilege of not disclosing the informants' identity, and have the evidence on direct examination stricken, or save this direct testimony by revealing the name of the informants. In this case they chose to rely on the privilege. Under these circumstances the testimony of the police officers, who refused to submit to cross-examination, is to be stricken from the record. People v. Manchetti, supra, 29 Cal.2d at pages 459-462, 175 P.2d at page 538; People v. McGowan, supra, 80 Cal. App. at pages 296, 297, 251 P. at page 644; People v. Seitz, supra, 100 Cal.App. at page 119, 279 P. at page 1072, Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1846, 2048; see People v. Ochoa, 118 Cal. App.2d 566, 568-569, 258 P.2d 104; McCormick on Evidence, § 19; 5 Wigmore on Evidence, 3d Ed., § 1391, p. 112.

Therefore, there is no competent evidence of probable cause before the magistrate and the writ of prohibition must be granted.

SPENCE, Justice (dissenting).

This is not an appeal from a judgment of conviction following a trial. It is a proceeding to prohibit the respondent court from trying the charges against petitioner upon the theory that said court has no jurisdiction. The claim of lack of jurisdiction is based upon the theory that there was no competent evidence against petitioner at the preliminary examination, and therefore petitioner was held to answer without "reasonable or probable cause." Pen.Code, § 995. The claim that there was no competent evidence against petitioner is in turn based solely upon the theory that all the incriminating evidence introduced against petitioner at the preliminary examination became incompetent because the committing magistrate allegedly erred in denying petitioner the right to ascertain from the police officers the identity of their informers. The majority opinion sustains all of petitioner's claims and orders the issuance of a writ of prohibition. I cannot agree.

It is conceded that there was introduced at the preliminary hearing uncontradicted evidence showing that petitioner was guilty as charged of possessing narcotics in violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code. At the time of his arrest, he had narcotics both on his person and in his apartment. When questioned about the black metal box which he had in his pocket and which contained narcotics, he said: "You have got me. This is mine. This is for my own use."

If the above-mentioned testimony had been introduced before a grand jury and petitioner had thereafter been charged by indictment, there would be no question concerning the jurisdiction of the superior court to proceed with the trial of petitioner. In that case, petitioner could not have complained because he had not been present when the testimony was taken before the grand jury and, of course, he would have had no opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses or to demand the disclosure of the names of any informers. But here the majority denies the existence of the jurisdiction of the superior court to proceed with a trial on the merits merely because of the claimed error on the part of the committing magistrate in refusing to compel the disclosure of the identity of the informers at the preliminary hearing. I do not believe that such error, if any, at the preliminary hearing should be dignified with jurisdictional significance in any case; and that therefore the writ of prohibition, which is strictly a jurisdictional writ (Code Civ.Proc. § 1102), should be denied.

I find no constitutional problem, and certainly no jurisdictional problem, arising from the alleged error at the preliminary hearing. Such preliminary hearings are not clothed with the formalities of a trial on the merits, and the only grounds for setting aside an indictment or information, or for issuing a writ of prohibition, are those specified in sections 995 and 999a of the Penal Code. Mere error in admitting or refusing to admit evidence at the preliminary hearing is not one of the grounds so specified. In this connection, Costello v. United States, 350 U.S. 359, 76 S.Ct. 406, 100 L. Ed. 397, while involving a grand jury indictment, points out the distinction between proceedings on the trial and those leading up to the filing of the charges. It was there said at page 364 of 350 U.S., at page 409 of 76 S.Ct.: "In a trial on the merits, defendants are entitled to a strict observance of all the rules designed to bring about a fair verdict." The court declared, however, on page 362 of 350 U.S., on page 408 of 76 S.

Ct.: "But neither the Fifth Amendment nor any other constitutional provision prescribes the kind of evidence upon which grand juries must act." With respect to other preliminary proceedings, attention may be directed to Hurtado v. People of State of California, 110 U.S. 516, 4 S.Ct. 292, 28 L.Ed. 232; Lem Woon v. State of Oregon, 229 U.S. 586, 33 S.Ct. 783, 57 L.Ed. 1340; Gaines v. State of Washington, 277 U.S. 81, 48 S.Ct. 468, 72 L.Ed. 793; People v. Bird, 212 Cal. 632, 300 P. 23.

In reaching the foregoing conclusion that the writ of prohibition should not issue here, I have assumed, solely for the purpose of the above discussion, that the committing magistrate may have erred in his rulings at the preliminary hearing. I now turn to the question of whether there was any such error.

In the present case, the two counts of the information charged "mere possession" by petitioner of two different types of narcotics on the day of his arrest. No informer was "present with the accused" at the time of the alleged offenses; and no informer was a "participant" in either of the offenses of "mere possession" with which petitioner was charged. Under these circumstances, the case of Roviaro v. United States, 353 U.S. 53, 77 S.Ct. 623, 1 L.Ed.2d 639, clearly indicates that there was no error in the rulings of the committing magistrate. The opinion in the Roviaro case is discussed at some length in my concurring and dissenting opinion in People v. McShann, 330 P.2d 38, this day filed, and such discussion need not be repeated here.

In conclusion, I desire to make one further observation concerning this proceeding. The evidence hereinabove summarized showed without contradiction that petitioner had committed, and was committing, the felony of possession of narcotics at the time of his arrest. I am therefore of the opinion that his arrest was lawful, as "A peace officer may * * * without a warrant, arrest a person: * * * 2. When a person arrested has committed a felony, although not in his presence." Pen.Code, § 836. I am further of the opinion that the search which produced the narcotics was a reasonable search as an incident of such lawful arrest. My views on this subject are set forth at some length in my dissenting opinion in Badillo v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 269, at pages 273-278, 294 P.2d 23 at pages 25-28. I adhere to those views and believe that this court should re-examine the decision in that case. Under the circumstances before us, the question of where the arresting officer here may have obtained his information is wholly immaterial in determining that the arrest was lawful, and that the search was reasonable as an incident of such lawful arrest.

The majority express the fear that any contrary holding here "would destroy the exclusionary rule." I cannot agree. This court has committed itself to the task of establishing "workable rules" to supplement the exclusionary rule and to the avoidance of "needless refinements and distinctions" and "needless limitations on the right to conduct reasonable searches and seizures." People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 450-451, 282 P.2d at page 915, 50 A.L.R.2d 513. In my view, the majority opinions in this case and in the Badillo case fall short of that commitment, and on the contrary, contain within themselves the seeds of the destruction of the exclusionary rule. The rules set forth in said opinions appear to me to have the effect of defeating rather than promoting the ends of justice, and thus inviting the destruction of the exclusionary rule through legislative nullification.

In summary, and without regard to any questions of the desirability of re-examining the decision in Badillo v. Superior Court, supra, I am of the opinion that, even assuming error in the challenged rulings, no constitutional or jurisdictional question is presented here; that under the decision in Roviaro v. United States, supra, there was no error in the rulings of the committing magistrate; that there was competent, uncontradicted evidence to sustain the order holding the petitioner to answer; and that the superior court has jurisdiction to proceed with the trial.

I would therefore deny the petition for a writ of prohibition.

COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO,
Respondent.
S. F. 19704.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.
Oct. 1, 1958.

Informations charging defendant with the possession and sale of heroin and maintenance of a place for sale of narcotics. Defendant's motion to set aside the informations were denied and they seek a writ of prohibition to prevent their trial. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that where it did not appear that disclosure of names of informers was demanded to enable defendants to discredit the prosecution's evidence at the preliminary hearing or that they wished to use the informers as witnesses at that hearing and there was competent evidence to justify committing the defendants and disclosure of names of the informers could be obtained at trial, defendants were not prejudiced by the error in failing to disclose the name of the informers or deprived of any substantial right.

Alternative writ discharged and peremptory writ denied.

1. Witnesses ⇨216

A defendant is entitled at his trial to ascertain on cross-examination the name

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Informations charged defendants with possession of heroin, two sales of heroin and maintenance of a place for the sale of narcotics in violation of Health and Safety Code, sections 11500 and 11557. Their motions to set aside the informations on the ground that they had not been legally committed by a magistrate (Pen.Code, § 995) were denied and they now seek a writ of prohibition to prevent their trial.

Evidence at the preliminary hearing showed that police officers received information from two informers that defendants were selling narcotics in their apartment. The officers searched the two informers and removed all articles from their clothing. Each of the informers was given $20 in bills dusted with fluorescent powder. The serial numbers of the bills were recorded. The officers escorted the informers to defendants' apartment. The informers entered the apartment separately and in a few minutes returned separately. They were then searched. The bills were gone and each informer had a bundle of heroin. The officers waited in front of the apartment door for about 10 or 15 minutes. Defendant Mitchell opened the door and was immediately placed under arrest. She dropped a package of heroin to the floor. The officers arrested defendant Flynn in the bedroom and found four bindles of heroin on his person. The officers found the bills given to one informer behind one of the dresser drawers, but they did not find the bills given to the other informer. There was fluorescent powder on both of Mitchell's hands and on Flynn's finger-tips and shirt. On cross-examination the magistrate sustained objections to defendants' questions seeking to ascertain the names of the informers.

We have concluded that it was error to deny defendants disclosure of the names of the two informers at the preliminary hearing on their cross-examination of the officer who testified to the participation of the informers but that prohibition does not lie to restrain the trial of defendants.

at the trial also require disclosure at the preliminary hearing, for the defendant has the right at such hearing to cross-examine the prosecution's witnesses (Pen.Code, § 865) and to produce witnesses in his own behalf (Pen.Code, §§ 864, 866). The exercise of these rights at the preliminary hearing may enable the defendant to show that there is no reasonable cause to commit him for trial and thus to avoid the degradation and expense of a criminal trial.

[3,4] Prohibition does not lie to review rulings of the magistrate on the admissibility of evidence at the preliminary hearing unless the commitment is based entirely on incompetent evidence. Rogers v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 3, 7-8, 291 P.2d 929. Defendants do not contend that as a result of the magistrate's error there is no competent evidence to support a finding of reasonable cause to commit them for trial. Cf. Priestly v. Superior Court, Cal.Sup., 330 P.2d 33. It is contended, however, that denial of the right of cross-examination at the preliminary hearing is not only a ruling on the admissibility of evidence but the denial of a constitutional right. It is unnecessary to resolve this contention, for there was not such an interference with the right of cross-examination in this case as to justify a writ of prohibition. It does not appear that disclosure of the names of the informers was demanded to enable defendants to discredit the prosecution's evidence at the preliminary hearing or that they wished to use the informers as witnesses at that hearing. Indeed, defendants' brief indicates otherwise: "The defendants did not present a defense other than cross-examination in the preliminary hearing. They were not required so to do and this Honorable Court is aware that not only is it rarely done, but would be a foolhardy thing to do." The value to defendants of disclosure is that it might enable them to obtain information useful in their defense at the trial. It cannot be presumed that the superior court will erroneously deny disclosure at the trial or fail to grant a continuance if it is necessary to enable defendants to locate and interview the informers in the preparation of their defense. Although the delay incident to such a continuance would have been obviated had the magistrate ruled correctly, his erroneous ruling on the admissibility of evidence does not raise a jurisdictional issue. Rogers v. Superior Court, supra, 46 Cal.2d at pages 6-7, 291 P.2d at page 930. Since there was competent evidence to justify committing defendants and disclosure of the names of the informers can be obtained at the trial, defendants were not prejudiced by the error or deprived of any substantial right. See Pen.Code, § 1404.

The alternative writ is discharged and the peremptory writ is denied.

GIBSON, C. J., and SCHAUER, J., concur.

CARTER, Justice.

I concur in the views expressed in the opinion prepared by Mr. Justice TRAYNOR. In Priestly v. Superior Court, 330 P.2d 44, I have expressed my views somewhat at length on the right of a defendant in a criminal case to cross examine a witness on a material issue.

Defendant contends that the denial of the right of cross-examination in this case was a denial of a constitutional right. In the Priestly case I concluded that in the preliminary hearing the accused was denied a constitutional right of a fair hearing where the magistrate denied him the right of cross-examination on a disputed factual issue and on which the outcome of the proceedings hinged. The factual issue disputed in the Priestly case was the presence of probable cause for the arrest and search. In this case defendant does not dispute that there was probable cause for the arrest and seizure, but only desires to know the informants' identities to better prepare his defense at the trial. This is precisely what defendant will receive. However, it is readily apparent that the testimony of the police officers relating the information given by the informants is not crucial to the issue of whether there is any competent evidence to hold defendant. It cannot be said, therefore, that the denial of defendant's right of cross-examination amounted to a denial of a fair hearing or to deprivation of his liberty without due process of law.

McCOMB, Justice (concurring).

I concur in the order discharging the alternative writ of prohibition and denying a peremptory writ, for the following reasons:

This is a petition for a writ of prohibition restraining the superior court from trying petitioners on a charge of violating section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code (possession of heroin) and section 11557 of the Health and Safety Code (maintaining a place for the sale of narcotics).

At the preliminary examination police officers testified to being informed by two reliable informants that petitioners were selling narcotics in their apartment. After stripping and searching the informants and removing all articles of their clothing, the officers gave each of them $20 in bills, the serial numbers of which were recorded, and escorted the informants to petitioners' apartment.

The bills were dusted with fluorescent powder invisible to the naked eye. Separately, the informants entered the apartment and in a few minutes returned. They were then searched. The bills were gone, and each had a bundle of heroin.

The officers then waited in front of the apartment door for approximately ten or fifteen minutes. It was opened by petitioner Mitchell, who was immediately placed under arrest. She dropped a package from her hand to the floor, which package contained heroin. In the bedroom they arrested petitioner Flynn. Four bindles were found on his person. Behind one of the dresser drawers the officers found the bills given to the first informant. They did not find those given the second informant. With a black box they observed fluorescent powder on both hands of petitioner Mitchell and on the finger tips and shirt of petitioner Flynn. On cross-examination the officers refused to divulge the names of the informant-participants.

Petitioners' sole contention is that they were illegally committed because the magistrate, during the preliminary examination, refused to allow them to ask the prosecuting witnesses the names of the two informant-participants.

Thus the question is presented: Will a writ of prohibition lie to review the ruling of a committing magistrate upon the admission or exclusion of evidence at a preliminary examination?

No. The rule is settled that the sole province of the writ of prohibition is to arrest proceedings of a tribunal or person exercising judicial functions when acting without or in excess of jurisdiction. 40 Cal.Jur.2d (1958), Prohibition, § 64, p. 226; Code Civ.Proc. § 1102;<sup>1</sup> County of Sutter v. Superior Court, 188 Cal. 292, 295 [4], 204 P. 849; Rebstock v. Superior Court, 146 Cal. 308, 310, 80 P. 65.

If the court has jurisdiction over both the crime and the person of the defendant, prohibition is not available to restrain or correct mere errors in procedure, such as rulings upon the admissibility of evidence, since such errors can be corrected on appeal. Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal, 17 Cal.2d 280, 287, 109 P.2d 942, 132 A.L.R. 715; McGinis v. Justice's Court, 28 Cal.App. 680, 682, 153 P. 728; State ex rel. Pardeeville Electric Light Co. v. Sachtjen, 245 Wis. 26, 13 N.W.2d 538; 73 C.J.S. (1951) Prohibition § 12, p. 70.

In Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal, supra, a case involving the question as to the propriety of this court's issuing a writ of prohibition, it was said at page 286 of 17 Cal.2d, at page 946 of 109 P.2d:

judicial functions, when such proceedings are without or in excess of the jurisdiction of such tribunal, corporation, board, or person."

1. Section 1102 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads: "The writ of prohibition arrests the proceedings of any tribunal, corporation, board, or person exercising

"1. "Lack of jurisdiction" as a basis for writ of prohibition.

"The first inquiry in this case must, of course, be as to the nature and meaning of "jurisdiction"; and here three possible sources of confusion must be eliminated.

* * * * *

"Second is the nature of a writ of prohibition, which never issues to restrain a lower tribunal from committing mere error in deciding a question properly before it. If the lower court has power to make a correct determination of a particular issue, it clearly has power to make an incorrect decision, subject only to appellate review and not to restraint by prohibition. Hence, in examining the authorities, we must conclude that in those situations in which a writ of prohibition was issued, the particular action restrained was one beyond the jurisdiction of the court to take."

The foregoing statement as applicable to the instant case may be paraphrased as follows:

"A writ of prohibition never issues to restrain a lower tribunal from committing mere error in deciding a question properly before it. The committing magistrate in the present case had power to make a correct determination of the particular issue presented to it. It clearly had power to make an incorrect decision, subject only to appellate review and not to restraint by prohibition. Hence, we must conclude that in this case a writ of prohibition will not issue because the particular action attempted to be restrained was one within the jurisdiction of the committing magistrate."

To the same effect is the holding of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin in State ex rel. Pardeeville Electric Light Co., supra, where at page 540 of 13 N.W.2d the court said: "Petitioner further contends that certain evidence which it offered on the trial before Judge Hoppmann was improperly excluded, and that if the same testimony were offered again, before the present presiding judge, the court might admit same. It is not the function of a writ of prohibition to determine the admissibility of evidence on the trial of an action in the circuit court. At present we are only concerned with the question of the power and jurisdiction of the sitting judge. The merits of the litigation are not before us." (Italics added.)

The authority to hear and determine involves the power to decide incorrectly as well as correctly in a given case or controversy within the jurisdiction of the committing magistrate and does not depend upon the regularity of the exercise of that power or upon the rightfulness of the decision there made. A writ of prohibition is not employed as a means of correcting errors of an inferior tribunal on matters of procedure where, as in the instant case, such alleged errors may be reviewed on appeal from an adverse judgment.

If the rule were otherwise, in every ordinary action a defendant whenever he chose could halt the proceeding in the trial court by applying for a writ of prohibition to stop the ordinary progress of the action toward a judgment until a reviewing tribunal passed upon an intermediate question that had arisen. If such were the rule, reviewing courts would in innumerable cases be converted from appellate courts to nisi prius tribunals.

It is clear that the committing magistrate had jurisdiction over both the crime charged and the persons of petitioners in the present case. It is likewise evident that there was substantial evidence to support the committing magistrate's finding that there was probable cause to believe that petitioners were guilty of the offenses with which they were charged.

Supporting this view is the statement in petitioners' brief: "The defendants did not present a defense other than cross-examination in the preliminary hearing. They were not required so to do and this Honorable Court is aware that not only is it rarely done, but would be a foolhardy thing to do."

Since petitioners' sole contention is directed to an error in procedure, to wit, improper exclusion of evidence, which error under the rule set forth above will not be considered on a petition for a writ of prohibition, the alternative writ is properly discharged and the peremptory writ is correctly denied.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
Sept. 26, 1958.

Action by firms engaged in wholesale produce business against union to enjoin same from striking against employers for allegedly illegal purpose. The Superior Court, San Diego County, C. M. Monroe, J., entered judgment for union and employers appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Coughlin, J. pro tem., held that evidence sustained finding that purpose of strike was in furtherance of conspiracy between union and other wholesale produce producers to drive plaintiff employers out of business and such action was in violation of Cartwright Act and case would be remanded for further findings.

Reversed and remanded for new trial.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨879

Parties who have not appealed cannot attack the findings and errors affecting such parties will not be reviewed on appeal.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨931(1)

In determining sufficiency of evidence to sustain questioned finding, appellate court must accept as true all evidence and all inferences which reasonably may be drawn therefrom tending to support finding.

3. Conspiracy ⇨19

Unless one of the conspirators confesses, no direct evidence of an agreement is available and consequently as a general rule conspiracy can be established only by circumstantial evidence.

4. Conspiracy ⇨19

In order to prove a conspiracy it is not necessary to show that parties met and actually agreed to undertake performance of unlawful acts.

5. Labor Relations ⇨945

In action by plaintiff produce handlers to enjoin union from striking against plaintiffs, evidence sustained finding that strike for announced purpose of seeking some 60¢ per hour increase over prevailing wages, was in fact called pursuant to conspiracy between union and other produce dealers to render competition with such produce dealers by plaintiffs unprofitable. Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, § 1 et seq.; 29 U.S.C.A. § 141 et seq.; National Labor Relations Act, § 1 et seq. as amended by Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, 29 U.S.C.A. § 151 et seq.; Sherman Anti-Trust Act, § 1 et seq. as amended 15 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.; West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 16720, 16726, 16750.

6. Monopolies ⇨12(9)

Action of union in calling a strike against two of the wholesale produce dealers for purpose of seeking increased wages in order to force produce dealers out of business, which action was result of agreement with other produce dealers, constituted violation of statute declaring unlawful any combination for purpose of creating or carrying out restrictions in trade or commerce or to prevent competition. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 16720, 16726, 16750.

7. Monopolies $\S$ 24(7), 28(1)

Violation of Cartwright Act may be basis of action to recover damages for injuries sustained as a result thereof and for injunctive relief. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720, 16726, 16750.

8. Monopolies $\S$ 12(1.2), 24(7), 28(1)

Prohibited combination under act declaring unlawful any combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons for purpose of preventing competition, comes into being by agreement of two or more persons for purpose of restraining trade or preventing competition, and conduct used to effectuate agreement may result in actionable damages or be subject of an injunction even though conduct used to effect agreement would be lawful. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 16720, 16726, 16750.

9. Labor Relations $\S$ 332, 831

Strike may be lawful or unlawful depending upon whether primary objective or purpose for calling strike is lawful or unlawful, and in those instances where primary purpose of strike is to restrain trade, even though working conditions of striking employees may be advanced as incident to accomplishment of primary purpose, strike will be enjoined as unlawful.

10. Labor Relations $\S$ 948

In actions by wholesale produce dealers to enjoin union from striking as result of alleged conspiracy with other produce dealers to demand such a wage differential from plaintiff produce dealers as would drive plaintiffs out of business, question of primary purpose of strike presented an issue of fact.

11. Labor Relations $\S$ 510

If Labor Management Relations Act applies state court has no jurisdiction in premises except as the facts may establish a cause of action under state law for damages based on a tort. Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, 29 U.S.C.A. § 151 et seq.

12. Labor Relations $\S$ 395, 883

Where union called strike in pursuance of agreement with certain produce dealers to drive plaintiff dealers out of business, controversy in plaintiffs' action for injunction did not involve a labor dispute, unfair labor practice, or an activity of employees for purpose of mutual aid and protection.

13. Labor Relations $\S$ 329

Labor Management Relations Act neither prohibits nor protects activity of union in aiding and abetting a nonlabor group to destroy its competitor. National Labor Relations Act, § 7 as amended by Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, 29 U.S.C.A. § 157.

14. Monopolies $\S$ 12(9)

An agreement between union and certain employers to have union call strike against certain other employers for purpose of driving such struck employers out of business, was not protected by exclusionary provisions of federal antitrust laws which applied to union engaged in labor activities, nor was union, by federal law, guaranteed right to effect purpose of that combination. Clayton Act, § 20, 29 U.S.C.A. § 52; Norris-LaGuardia Act, §§ 1, 4, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 101, 104; Sherman Anti-Trust Act, § 1 et seq. as amended 15 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.

15. Commerce $\S$ 16

Even though a company is engaged in interstate commerce a particular activity or part of its business may be intrastate in character, not concurring or substantially affecting interstate commerce within realm of federal antitrust laws. Sherman Anti-Trust Act, § 1 et seq. as amended 15 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.; U.S.C.A. Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 3.

16. Commerce $\S$ 8(2)

Fact that Congress has acted to prevent restraints on trade in interstate commerce of itself does not invalidate legislation by state effecting substantially the same result and fundamental inquiry in such instances is whether state legislation is in conflict with national policy. U.S.C.A. Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 3.

17. Labor Relations ⇐510

Although congressional action has pre-empted jurisdiction of state court to grant equitable relief in solution of labor disputes that does not foreclose such a court from asserting jurisdiction in action for damages resulting from tortious conduct of those engaged in the dispute.

18. Commerce ⇐55

Cartwright Act prohibiting combinations in restraint of trade merely articulates in greater detail public policy against restraint of trade that has long been recognized at common law and is within the tradition of the usual law powers of the state and is not in conflict with federal policy. Action for injunction and damages.

Alfred M. Lewis, Inc., and Rideout Produce Co., corporations, are produce dealers in San Diego, California. Alfred M. Lewis, Inc., is engaged in interstate business, operating grocery stores in many states.

Shortly before May 3, 1956, the Rideout company agreed to service certain produce accounts of the Lewis company. At this time the Rideout company, together with other corporations and individuals engaged in the wholesale produce business, were members of an unincorporated association known as the San Diego Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Dealers Association (hereinafter referred to as the "Association"). Among other things, the purpose of the Association was to act as a collective bargaining unit on behalf of its members with labor organizations, including the Warehousemen, Teamsters, Chauffeurs and Helpers Local Union No. 542 (hereinafter referred to as the "Union"). This Union was an unincorporated association affiliated with the International Teamsters Brotherhood of America. As a bargaining unit, the Association concerned itself with the negotiation of contracts respecting wages and hours of persons employed by its members in order to effect a uniformity of agreements between them concerning these matters.

When the Lewis company and the Rideout company joined forces they entered into competition with the other members of the Association, who became apprehensive and, by reason thereof, the Association "entered into an understanding and arrangement with the Union and its * * * officers, wherein and whereby * * * Rideout Produce Co. was to be excluded from the collective bargaining arrangement theretofore existing" and the "Union was to demand from" the Lewis company and the Rideout company an "increase in wages sufficient to render competition with" the Association's "produce dealers unprofitable". Thereupon, the Rideout company was excluded from the mutual wage agreement in which it had participated with the other members of the Association and the Union demanded that it execute an agreement for the payment of higher wages. This demand was met and an agreement executed accordingly, which, with some modification, continued until April 1, 1957. In the meantime, the Rideout and Lewis companies had changed their agreement, to the end that the former rented a portion of its facilities and equipment to the latter, which also took over a number of the Rideout company's employees.

In April, 1957, in furtherance of its agreement with the Association, the Union demanded that the Lewis and Rideout companies execute contracts for wages sufficiently in excess of those paid by the Association's produce dealers as to render competition with those dealers unprofitable, and, upon refusal of this demand, declared a strike and placed a picket line around the Rideout company's place of business, which was the same place of business for the Lewis company. Thereupon, the two companies brought this action against the Union and the Association to enjoin the strike and the picketing and to recover damages allegedly sustained as a result thereof.

Joined as defendants were certain specifically named officers and agents of the Union, specifically named members of the Association, and a great number of fictitiously named individuals, partners and corporations. The complaint alleges that the Union has numerous members; that it is impracticable to bring all of said members into the action as defendants; that most of their names are unknown; and that, for these reasons, the individual members of the Union are made parties defendant and charged with defending the action for the benefit of all other members of the Union. The answers on file, together with the recitals in the findings and judgment, indicate that only those defendants specifically named in the complaint appeared in this action.

The case was tried by the court without a jury. The facts heretofore set forth appear in the findings prepared and signed by the trial judge. In addition, the court specifically found: "That the agreement and arrangement between defendant Local 542 and its defendant officers and defendant produce dealers and the acts done pursuant thereto as aforesaid, were for the purpose of intending to affect and restrict competition in the distribution of fresh fruits and produce in the city of San Diego and the immediately surrounding area."

From the facts as found the court concluded that the agreement between the defendants "would be in violation of the anti-trust laws of the State of California if involving local businesses not engaged in interstate commerce or which affected interstate commerce"; that "jurisdiction of the controversies involved between the plaintiffs and the defendants is vested solely in the National Labor Relations Board"; that "under the National Labor Relations Act the right to strike is guaranteed to defendant labor union * * * and the right thus made legal by the laws of the United States may not be made illegal by the anti-trust laws of the State of California"; that the agreement between the defendants "being not unlawful under the laws of the United States" does not constitute a conspiracy; and that "judgment should be rendered against the plaintiffs".

A judgment in favor of the defendants and against the plaintiffs was rendered accordingly, from which the plaintiff Alfred M. Lewis, Inc. appealed on the judgment roll alone, although after the filing of the clerk's transcript on appeal, pursuant to stipulation of all parties, a reporter's transcript was prepared and, after petition for permission to do so, was filed in this court. From a statement contained in the brief on file it appears that following entry of judgment, the plaintiff Rideout Produce Co. dismissed its action with prejudice.

Appellant contends that the trial court erred in drawing the conclusions of law heretofore noted from the facts as found.

Respondents contend that the evidence does not support the trial court's finding of an agreement between them in restraint of trade; that the trial court did not have jurisdiction over any dispute involving either of them; that the Labor Management Relations Act, the National Labor Relations Act, the Sherman Antitrust Act, and other federal legislation has pre-empted the field of law governing any of the controversies in this case; and that the trial court failed to find upon material issues presented by the pleadings.

tack the findings' " (Henigson v. Bank of America, 32 Cal.2d 240, 244, 195 P.2d 777, 779), and that errors affecting such parties will not be reviewed on appeal (Salter v. Ulrich, 22 Cal.2d 263, 268, 138 P.2d 7, 146 A.L.R. 1344), nevertheless, under the authority of Mott v. Horstmann, 36 Cal.2d 388, 393, 224 P.2d 11, the respondents urge this court to affirm the judgment on the ground that there is no evidence to sustain the finding that they entered into an agreement to force appellant out of business; that the judgment is proper because there is no valid finding to support a contrary judgment; and "that an erroneous reason should be disregarded if the decision is correct." Mott v. Horstmann, supra, 36 Cal.2d 388, 393, 224 P.2d 11, 14.

[2] In determining the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a questioned finding, the appellate court must accept as true all evidence and all inferences which reasonably may be drawn therefrom tending to support that finding. Burke v. Chrostowski, 46 Cal.2d 444, 296 P.2d 545.

There is no direct evidence of an agreement between the Union and the Association to restrict competition, as set forth in the findings in this case.

[3,4] The courts have recognized the difficulty attendant upon proof of this kind of an agreement, which the parties in their briefs refer to as a conspiracy. Johnstone v. Morris, 210 Cal. 580, 590, 292 P. 970. Unless one of the conspirators confesses, no direct evidence of such an agreement is available. Consequently, "As a general rule, a conspiracy can only be established by circumstantial evidence." (People v. Steccone, 36 Cal.2d 234, 237-238, 223 P.2d 17, 19; People v. Osslo, 50 Cal.2d 75, 323 P.2d 397), and "it is not necessary to show that the parties met and actually agreed to undertake the performance of the unlawful acts." People v. Sampsell, 104 Cal.App. 431, 438-439, 286 P. 434, 437; People v. Sorrentino, 146 Cal.App.2d 149, 159, 303 P.2d 859.

ences drawn by the trial court respecting the existence and purpose of the agreement in question.

For a number of years the Rideout company and other members of the Association operated from places of business located in an area centering around Sixth Street in San Diego. For this reason the dealers were referred to as "The Street". In 1954 the Rideout company moved into more commodious and efficient quarters at another location. This move, however, did not change the relationship existing between this company and other members of "The Street". In 1955, as in previous years, a contract had been negotiated between the Union and the Association acting on behalf of its members, including the Rideout company. As heretofore noted, the primary purpose of the Association was to assure the same wage scale for each member, which was agreed upon by a majority vote. The 1955 contract covered a term of one year and expired April 1, 1956. At this time the members of the Association, including the Rideout company, agreed to stand together respecting a new contract, so that the wage scale applicable to each of them would be the same.

On May 3, 1956, the Rideout company commenced operations under an agreement with the Lewis company, which is a capital structure, to service the accounts of a co-operative venture known as Orange Empire, sponsored by Lewis. The stores which participated in this "co-op" are independent of the Lewis company and are not required to purchase from or through that company or the "co-op"; but if a profit is made by the "co-op" they will share therein. The Rideout company serviced the Orange Empire accounts on a percentage basis without any change in its operation; it conducted the same kind of business theretofore conducted; its agreement with the Lewis company meant only the acquisition of some additional accounts. Nevertheless, on May 5, 1956, two days after the Rideout company started its new operations, a representative of the respondent Union advised Mr. Rideout, president of the company, that because it was handling some business for the Orange Empire "co-op" it would be treated separately from other members of the Association; that it no longer could be a member of that Association; and demanded a substantial wage increase. Under threat of a strike called for May 10th and the probable loss of $50,000 worth of fresh fruits and vegetables then on hand, the Rideout company acquiesced in the Union's demands and agreed to pay in accordance with a wage scale half way between that in effect on "The Street" and that in effect with the grocery industry of San Diego.

The Safeway stores in San Diego operated under an agreement whereby it paid its produce truck drivers according to the grocery industry scale. During the course of subsequent negotiations the Union and various members of the Association contended that the Rideout and Lewis companies had "captive accounts", such as did Safeway stores and, for this reason, should be treated differently than the dealers on "The Street". However, neither appellant Lewis company nor the Rideout company had any "captive accounts". A "captive account" is a customer which has no choice but to accept merchandise from the dealer as offered regardless of quality, amount or need. At times, stores that were members of the Orange Empire "co-op" purchased produce from dealers on "The Street" and not through the "co-op".

Shortly after his discussion with the Union representative, Mr. Rideout was advised by the president of the Association, as well as some of its members, that the matter had been discussed quite thoroughly by the members of "The Street" and the Union; that the membership was in accord with the Union because Rideout had taken on the Orange Empire produce business; and that Lewis should not have been allowed to go into the produce business.

In July, 1956, the agreement between the Rideout company and the Lewis company was changed. Instead of servicing the Orange Empire "co-op" stores, Rideout rented part of its equipment and plant to the Lewis company, which, in turn, serviced these accounts. The Lewis company continued to employ some of the Rideout company's employees at the wages agreed upon by the latter company. On several occasions after this, Rideout had discussions with different members of the Association who stated that they would not stand behind him but would side with the Union. In January, 1957, one of the members asked Rideout if there was anything he, Rideout, could do to get Orange Empire produce out of business in San Diego and suggested that he dispose of his building to some other industry which would deprive Orange Empire of those facilities.

Some time prior to April 1, 1957, the Union and the Rideout and Lewis companies entered into negotiations concerning a wage contract for that year. Rideout had asked the Association to represent him but this request was refused, even though he was considered a member of the Association. The Union demanded that the two companies pay the same scale as Safeway stores upon the ground that both of them and Safeway stores had "captive accounts". The president of the respondent Association was in accord with the differentiation made by the Union for the same reason. The only difference between the operation of the dealers on "The Street" and that of the Rideout and Lewis companies, which was advanced as a reason for a difference in their classification for wage paying purposes, was the alleged "captive account" difference, which did not exist.

On April 1, which was the renewal date for the contracts under consideration, the dealers on "The Street" were paying \$1.80 per hour to their employees. The Union demanded \$2.39 $\frac{1}{4}$  per hour from the Rideout and Lewis companies for their employees. This demand was rejected; a strike was called and a picket line established. Although the Union representative and members of the Association had stated that a 20¢ an hour increase was being demanded from the dealers on "The Street", no new contract was entered into by them and no strike was called.

In a conference between Mr. Lewis, president of appellant company, Mr. Glore, president of the respondent Association, and Mr. Mercurio, president of Growers Marketing Co., Inc., a member of the Association, it was suggested that Lewis buy out Growers Marketing Company; that if he did so, his troubles with the Union would be over. Lewis accused those present of putting the "tag" on him and they agreed that such was the fact. During the course of the foregoing conversation, in response to a statement by Mr. Mercurio that relations with the Union were peaceful until Lewis came into San Diego, the latter made this accusation: "You're the birds that did this. We didn't." Neither Mr. Mercurio nor Mr. Glore made any reply.

The evidence justifies the conclusion that the Rideout or Lewis companies cannot compete with respondent dealers if required to operate under the differential in wage scale demanded by the Union, which controls the labor market essential to their operations.

The foregoing facts legally sustain the trial court's conclusion that respondents entered into an agreement to restrict competition by establishing a wage differential between appellant and respondent dealers which would make it unprofitable for appellant to compete with those dealers.

[6] By this agreement, and the circumstances attendant thereupon, appellant had the choice either to accept the Union's demands made pursuant thereto, pay the higher wages and be forced out of the produce business by losses and lack of profit; or to refuse to pay the higher wages and be forced out of business by a lack of labor and other detrimental consequences resulting from the Union's strike and picketing. The agreement and the conduct of respondents pursuant thereto was in violation of the Cartwright Act which declares unlawful any "combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons" (including associations and corporations) for "The purpose of creating or carrying out restrictions in trade or commerce" or "to prevent competition" in the "sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or any commodity." Bus. & Prof.Code, Secs. 16720, 16726; Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters, 29 Cal.2d 34, 40-42, 172 P.2d 867; Caruso v. Abbott, 133 Cal.App.2d 304, 307, 284 P.2d 113; Alpha Beta Markets v. Amalgamated Meat Cutters, etc., 147 Cal.App.2d 343, 305 P.2d 163; Kold Kist, Inc., v. Amalgamated Meat Cutters, etc., 99 Cal.App.2d 191, 201, 221 P.2d 724.

In People v. Sacramento Butchers' Protective Ass'n, 12 Cal.App. 471, 481, 107 P. 712, 717, where an association of meat dealers and a meat distributing company were charged with entering into a combination to destroy competition in the retail meat business, in violation of the Cartwright Act, because they had agreed to require a named meat dealer to pay a higher price for meat than was required of members of the association, the court said:

"* * * [t]he object of the statute is to prevent such combinations or conspiracies between persons engaged in a particular line of business as will destroy free competition therein, and if the purpose of such combination is to restrict trade or destroy competition in the sale and purchase of 'merchandise, produce, or any commodity,' or if such combination tends to restrict trade or to prevent competition therein, such combination is against the letter and paramount object of the law."

If Lewis were forced out of the San Diego produce market, obviously any advantage in price or service which that company might offer buyers in that market would be eliminated.

[7] A violation of the Cartwright Act may be the basis of an action to recover damages for injury sustained as a result thereof and for injunctive relief. Bus. & Prof.Code, Sec. 16750; Kold Kist, Inc., v. Amalgamated Meat Cutters, etc., supra, 99 Cal.App.2d 191, 221 P.2d 724; O'Shea v. Tile Layers Union, 155 Cal.App.2d 373, 318 P.2d 102.

The trial court determined, as expressed in its conclusions of law, that the agreement in question would have been in violation of the Cartwright Act if it involved "local businesses not engaged in interstate trade or which affected interstate commerce", but that because appellant was engaged in interstate commerce, the laws of the United States apply; that under those laws the agreement was not unlawful and, consequently, did not constitute a conspiracy. Integrant to this conclusion is the belief of the trial judge, as expressed in his summation at the conclusion of the trial, that an actionable conspiracy involves an agreement to do an unlawful act resulting in damage; that, unless the act resulting in damage is unlawful, independent of the conspiracy, no cause of action exists, even though the purpose of the conspiracy was to effect such damage; that the damage of which appellant complains resulted from the strike and the picketing invoked by the Union; that, as expressed in his conclusions of law, "under the National Labor Relations Act the right to strike is guaranteed to defendant labor union" and "the right thus made legal by the laws of the United States may not be made illegal by the antitrust laws of the State of California"; consequently, the conspiracy in question was not actionable.

Under the Cartwright Act and similar antitrust legislation, the combination for a particular purpose constitutes the unlawful act. People v. Sacramento Butchers' Protective Ass'n, supra, 12 Cal.App. 471, 484, 107 P. 712; Nash v. United States, 229 U.S. 373, 33 S.Ct. 780, 782, 57 L.Ed. 1232; United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U.S. 392, 402, 47 S.Ct. 377, 381, 71 L.Ed. 700.

[8] The prohibited combination comes into being through an agreement of two or more persons for the purpose of restraining trade or preventing competition. Conduct used to effect such an agreement may result in actionable damages or be the subject of an injunction, even though such conduct if not used to effect the agreement would be lawful.

[9, 10] In the field of labor litigation it has been recognized that a strike may be lawful or unlawful, depending upon whether the primary objective or purpose for calling the strike is lawful or unlawful. As a consequence, in those instances where the primary purpose of a strike is to restrain trade, even though the working conditions of striking employees may be advanced as an incident to the accomplishment of the primary purpose, the strike will be enjoined as unlawful. Giboney v. Empire Storage & Ice Co., 336 U.S. 490, 69 S.Ct. 684, 93 L.Ed. 834; Kold Kist, Inc., v. Amalgamated Meat Cutters, etc., supra, 99 Cal.App.2d 191, 221 P.2d 724. "(t)he real test in a particular case is the primary purpose of the agreement or combination in question." Schweizer v. Local Joint Executive Board, etc., 121 Cal.App. 2d 45, 53, 262 P.2d 568, 572. Under circumstances such as those in the case at bar, the determination of the primary purpose of such an agreement is a question of fact. The findings in this case establish that the purpose of the strike in question was to effect an agreement to destroy competition.

The Union contends that, as the trial court did not find the strike was called only for the purpose of effecting the agreement to destroy competition, a coincident labor purpose must be assumed because of the demand for an increase in wages. A reasonable interpretation of the findings does not justify this assumption. The court found that the agreement between respondents "and the acts done pursuant thereto as aforesaid, were for the purpose of intending to affect and restrict competition in the distribution of fresh fruits and produce in the city of San Diego." To accept respondents' contention would require a trial court to negate all facts which might limit the inclusive nature of a positive finding. This is unreasonable. "(i)f the findings of fact made by the trial court leave some issue or material fact undetermined, such issue of fact will be regarded as not proved by the party having the burden of proof" (53 Am.Jur.

796), unless such fact be implied in the findings made. Haigler v. Donnelly, 18 Cal.2d 674, 678, 117 P.2d 331. The contention advanced must be rejected.

The conclusions of law drawn by the trial court focus attention upon the application of federal legislation to this case. Interrelated, and equally pertinent, are inquiries concerning the jurisdiction of the state court, the legality of the transaction under consideration, whether it primarily involves a labor dispute or a restraint of trade, the interstate nature thereof, and its effect upon the Cartwright Act.

[11, 12] If the Labor Management Relations Act applies, the state court has no jurisdiction in the premises, except as the facts may establish a cause of action under state law for damages based upon a tort. San Diego Building Trades Council v. Garmon, 353 U.S. 26, 77 S.Ct. 607, 1 L.Ed.2d 618; Garmon v. San Diego Building Trades Council, 49 Cal.2d 595, 320 P.2d 473.

The Labor Management Relations Act, which includes the National Labor Relations Act, governs labor disputes, unfair labor practices, and the concerted activity of employees for their mutual aid or protection affecting interstate commerce. Under the findings of the trial court, the controversy in this case does not involve a labor dispute, an unfair labor practice, or an activity of the employees for the purpose of mutual aid and protection. Any labor objective present was incidental to the accomplishment of respondents' primary purpose, which was to eliminate appellant's competition with other produce dealers. If the Union had agreed to forbid its members to work for appellant, in order to effect the purpose of the combination under consideration, the nonapplicability of the Labor Management Relations Act would be unquestioned. The method used to effect such purpose, by demanding a prohibitive wage rate, calling a strike, and invoking a picket line, while more subtle, although no less effective, did not change the fundamental nature of the transaction. Likewise, if the Lewis company had acquiesced in the Union's demand, accepted the higher wage scale, determined that the venture was unprofitable, went out of business, and then sued for damages, no labor dispute, unfair labor practice, or mutual aid and protection activity would be an issue in such an action. These examples are used merely to point up the primary purpose of the conduct in question, which was to prevent competition, not to obtain a higher wage scale.

The numerous arguments advanced by respondent Union categorize the charges made against it within well defined unfair labor practices; relate facets of the negotiations and the contentions between it and the Rideout and Lewis companies to acceptable definitions of a labor dispute; advance investigative and administrative reasons for placing exclusive jurisdiction over these matters in the National Labor Relations Board; and urge that employees are given rights by section 7 of the Labor Management Relations Act which should not be taken from them in an action such as the one at law. 29 U.S.C.A. Sec. 157. In each instance, these arguments omit any consideration of the trial court's finding that the activities in question were engaged in "pursuant to" an agreement prohibited by the Cartwright Act, "in furtherance thereof", and "for the purpose" of eliminating appellant as a competitor of respondent dealers.

[13] The Labor Management Relations Act neither prohibits nor protects the activity of a union in aiding and abetting a non-labor group to destroy its competitor. See generally Weber v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 348 U.S. 468, 75 S.Ct. 480, 99 L.Ed. 546.

[14] The combination between respondents was not protected by the exclusionary provisions of the federal antitrust laws which apply to a union engaged in labor activities; nor was the Union, by federal law, "guaranteed" the right to strike to effect the purpose of that combination. Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union No.

In Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union No. 3, etc., supra, 325 U.S. 797, 808, 65 S.Ct. 1533, 1539, the court said that “* * Congress never intended that unions could, consistently with the Sherman Act, aid non-labor groups to create business monopolies and to control the marketing of goods and services.”

Consequently, when a union combines with a non-labor group in restraint of trade its activities are subject to the same federal antitrust laws as are those of the non-labor group, even though in so doing, its purpose is to further the interest of their members as wage earners. Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union No. 3, etc., supra, 325 U.S. 797, 65 S.Ct. 1533; United Brotherhood, etc. v. United States, 330 U.S. 395, 400, 67 S.Ct. 775, 778, 91 L.Ed. 973; Las Vegas Merchant Plumbers Ass'n v. United States, 9 Cir., 210 F.2d 732, 751.

The trial court's conclusion of law that “the right to strike is guaranteed to defendant labor union” undoubtedly refers to the statutory expression of the anti-injunction policy of the federal government concerning strikes contained in the Clayton, and Norris-LaGuardia Acts (29 U.S.C.A. Secs. 52, 101, 104), or the “right which Congress had guaranteed under § 7 of the Taft-Hartley Act—the right to strike peacefully to enforce union demands for wages, hours and working conditions.” Weber v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., supra, 348 U.S. 468, 475, 75 S.Ct. 480, 485. As heretofore noted, the activity protected by this legislation does not extend to combinations between labor and non-labor groups in restraint of trade.

The National Labor Relations Act does not guarantee a right to strike. The provisions of this statute simply direct that nothing therein contained “except as specifically provided for herein, shall be construed as either to interfere with or impede or diminish in any way the right to strike, or to affect the limitations or qualifications on that right.” 29 U.S.C.A. Sec. 163.

It is our conclusion that the Union's conduct in question was not a subject of federal legislation; the state law governs; and the determination of the trial court to the contrary was error.

Nothing in this opinion should be taken as indicating that the trial court had jurisdiction to enjoin the respondent union from calling a strike or invoking a picket line for the primary purpose of attaining a lawful labor objective, as distinguished from calling such strike or enjoining such picket line for the primary purpose of effecting the unlawful agreement between it and respondent dealers to destroy competition. Caution must be exercised in defining the scope of any such injunction. Park & Tilford Import Corp. v. International Brotherhood of Teamsters, etc., 27 Cal.2d 599, 607, 165 P.2d 891, 162 A.L.R. 1426; O'Shea v. Tile Layers Union, supra, 155 Cal.App. 2d 373, 378, 318 P.2d 102.

Besides contending that the case at bar is one concerning a labor activity subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Board, it also is contended that the federal government has pre-empted the field of legislation respecting transactions involving restraints on trade in interstate commerce; that the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.; Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 12 et seq.; and Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 41 et seq. are controlling; and that any relief thereunder must be sought in the federal courts or other federal agency. The federal acts in question together implement a policy against restraints on trade.

[15] The record discloses that although appellant's grocery business involved interstate commerce, consisting in the operation of grocery stores in several states, the only produce business it operated was in San Diego. Whether the activities under consideration in this case occurred in or substantially affected interstate commerce was a question of fact not covered by the general finding that appellant “is engaged in interstate commerce”. Even though a company is engaged in interstate commerce, a particular activity or part of its business may be intrastate in character, not occurring in or substantially affecting commerce within the realm of the federal antitrust laws. United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Ass'n, 322 U.S. 533, 548, 64 S.Ct. 1162, 1171, 88 L.Ed. 1440; Chas. H. Benton, Inc., v. Painters Local Union No. 333, 45 Cal.2d 677, 682-683, 291 P.2d 13. See also Las Vegas Merchant Plumbers Ass'n v. United States, supra, 9 Cir., 210 F.2d 732. However, for the purposes of this discussion it will be assumed that the activities in question are within the sphere of the commerce clause of the federal constitution, art. 1, § 8, cl. 3.

[16] The fact that Congress has acted to prevent restraints on trade in interstate commerce, of itself, does not invalidate legislation by a state effecting substantially the same result. The fundamental inquiry in such instances is whether the state legislation is in conflict with national policy. People of State of California v. Zook, 336 U.S. 725, 729, 69 S.Ct. 841, 843, 93 L.Ed. 1005.

In Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters, supra, 29 Cal.2d 34, 49-50, 172 P.2d 867, the application of the Cartwright Act to interstate insurance transactions was sustained. The court said, 29 Cal.2d at page 51, 172 P.2d at page 877:

"The fact that the Sherman Act is applicable to such practices (i. e. restraints of competition involving boycott, coercion or intimidation) does not mean that the state law concerning restraints of commerce in the insurance trade is invalidated as to such activities and agreements involving such practices. * * * Since there is no conflict between the law of this state and the Sherman Act, plaintiff may invoke the state law even if interstate commerce is involved."

The opinion in the foregoing case refers to a general rule expressed by the Supreme Court of the United States that "State laws are not invalid under the Commerce Clause unless they actually discriminate against interstate commerce or conflict with a regulation enacted by congress.'" Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters, supra, 29 Cal.2d 34, 50, 172 P.2d 867, 877.

[17] In the field of labor management relations affecting interstate commerce, although congressional action has pre-empted the jurisdiction of a state court "to grant equitable relief in the solution of labor disputes", it has not foreclosed such a court "from asserting jurisdiction in an action for damages resulting from the tortious conduct of those engaged in the dispute." Garmon v. San Diego Building Trades Council, supra, 49 Cal.2d 595, 602, 320 P.2d 473, 477; San Diego Building Trades Council v. Garmon, supra, 353 U.S. 26, 77 S.Ct. 607. In Weber v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., supra, 348 U.S. 468, 476, 75 S.Ct. 480, 486, the Supreme Court refers to a number of instances where the courts held that the federal enactments had not exclusively absorbed the authority of the State with respect to labor activities.

"In those cases where the Supreme Court has held that exclusive jurisdiction is vested in the National Labor Relations Board it appears without question that the basis of the decisions is the desirability of avoiding such a conflict between state and federal policies and procedural remedies as would result in an interference with uniform enforcement of federal act." Garmon v. San Diego Building Trades Council, supra, 49 Cal.2d 595, 603, 320 P.2d 473, 477. No need for federal legislation appears in order to effect uniformity of policy or enforcement thereof against restraints on trade.

The validity of a state statute regulating interstate transportation, containing provisions substantially the same as those of a federal act, was upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States, even though the conduct prohibited by such laws might be punishable as an offense against both the federal and state governments. People of State of California v. Zook, supra, 336 U.S. 725, 69 S.Ct. 841. The court said (336 U.S. at page 730, 69 S.Ct. at page 844):

"If State laws on commerce are identical with those of Congress, the Court may find congressional motive to exclude the States * * * But the fact of identity does not mean the automatic invalidity of State measures. Coincidence is only one factor in a complicated pattern of facts guiding us to congressional intent."

"The question is whether Congress intended to override State laws identical with its own when it, through the Interstate Commerce Commission, regulated share-expense passenger automobile transportation, or whether it intended to let State laws stand. While the statute says nothing expressly on this point and we are aided by no legislative history directly in point, we know that normally congressional purpose to displace local laws must be clearly manifested. (Citing cases.)"

[18] "The Cartwright Act merely articulates in greater detail a public policy against restraint of trade that has long been recognized at common law." Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters, supra, 29 Cal.2d 34, 44, 172 P.2d 867, 873. Such a legislative enactment is within the tradition of the "usual police powers" of the state, referred to in the Zook case as an aid in determining congressional intent. People of State of California v. Zook, supra, 336 U.S. 725, 734, 69 S.Ct. 841, 846. The Act is not in conflict with federal policy or law. To the contrary, in this area, the objective of each entity of government is the same. The state seeks to protect its citizens and the national government seeks to protect interstate commerce from a long recognized unlawful activity.

In Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 367, 63 S.Ct. 307, 321, 87 L.Ed. 315, the validity of the California Agricultural Prorate Act was under consideration. The program sponsored by the act "was not aimed at nor did it discriminate against interstate commerce, although it undoubtedly affected the commerce by increasing the interstate price of raisins and curtailing interstate shipments to some undetermined extent." The court said (317 U.S. at page 368, 63 S.Ct. at page 322):

"It thus appears that whatever effect the operation of the California program may have on interstate commerce, it is one which has been the policy of Congress to aid and encourage through federal agencies * * * Hence we cannot say that the effect of the state program in interstate commerce is one which conflicts with Congressional policy or is such as to preclude the state from this exercise of its reserved power to regulate domestic agricultural production."

Although the court was not considering a situation where similar legislation had been enacted by Congress, the principles advanced in considering the validity of the state statute, even though it affected interstate commerce, are pertinent to a consideration of the factual situation at bar.

As there is no conflict between the state and federal policies encompassed by the legislation under consideration; no conflict between the state and federal acts; no need for a single statute to effect uniformity of policy or procedure; the local law is within the tradition of "the usual police powers" of the state; and Congress has not indicated its intent to pre-empt the field, it is our opinion that the Cartwright Act may be applied to the situation at bar in the state courts.

Respondent union has made various contentions concerning the lack of findings with respect to alleged material facts. These come within the rule heretofore noted, that claims of error affecting parties who have not appealed will not be reviewed. Upon a retrial of the issues in this case the trial court may consider these contentions according to the law and the facts in the premises.

The judgment is reversed and the case is remanded for a new trial.

Marie A. LE PLEUX (Py), Appellant,
v.

Ethel APPELATE, Respondent.
No. 17284.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.
Oct. 3, 1958.

Hearing Denied Nov. 26, 1958.

Proceeding to establish fact of death of joint tenant and to terminate joint tenancy, wherein judgment was entered and prior owner of property filed petition for order to show cause seeking to set aside joint tenancy on ground that property was taken from her by fraud. The Superior Court, County of Alameda, Allen G. Norris, J., discharged order to show cause, and prior owner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that if so-called order to show cause were assumed to be a request for intervention, it was properly discharged in view of fact that only function of decree was to establish fact of death and prior owner had no interest in such determination and that prior owner sought to broaden scope of proceeding.

1. Parties ⇨40(2)

An interest entitling a person to intervention must be an interest in the matter in litigation in suit as originally brought, and of such a present, direct and immediate character that intervenor will either gain or lose by direct effect of judgment, and an intervenor cannot be permitted to broaden scope or function of such special proceeding by urging claims or contentions which have their proper forum elsewhere.

2. Parties ⇨40(2)

Where judgment establishing fact of death of joint tenant and terminating any interest he had in property was entered, if prior owner's so-called petition for order to show cause, which alleged that property was taken from her by fraud and which asked that joint tenancy be set aside, were assumed to be a request for intervention, it was properly discharged in view of fact that the only function of decree was to establish fact of death of joint tenant and that prior owner sought to broaden scope of proceeding. West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 1170 et seq.; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 387; West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 1(a).

3. Appeal and Error ⇨82(1)

To be appealable, a special order after final judgment must affect the judgment in some manner or bear some relation to it either by way of enforcing it or staying its execution. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 963, subd. 2.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨82(1)

Where judgment establishing fact of death of joint tenant and terminating joint tenancy was entered and prior owner of property filed petition for order to show cause seeking to set aside joint tenancy on ground that property was taken from her by fraud, trial court's order discharging order to show cause was a special order after final judgment, but was not appealable in view of fact that it did not affect decree which had as its only function the establishing fact of death. West's Ann. Prob.Code, § 1170 et seq.; West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 963, subd. 2.

Marie A. LePleux (Py), in pro. per.

Russell P. Studebaker, Oakland, for respondent.

BRAY, Justice.

This is an appeal by Marie A. LePleux (Py) from an order discharging an order to show cause to set aside a joint tenancy.

The appellant obtained title to the subject property on the death of her mother in 1938. She failed to make payments on a promissory note secured by a deed of trust which was on the property. As a result, the property was sold by a foreclosure or trustee's sale on July 28, 1943. Subsequently, the appellant sought to set aside the sale. Judgment against her was affirmed in Py v. Pleitner, 1945, 70 Cal.App.2d 576, 161 P.2d 393.

Sometime later the Applegates (Donald and Ethel) became owners of the property or a portion of it in joint tenancy. Upon the death of Mr. Applegate, a proceeding was instituted by Mrs. Applegate, in June of 1954, to establish the fact of death and to terminate the joint tenancy under Probate Code, § 1170 et seq. A judgment in that proceeding establishing the fact of death of Donald Applegate and terminating any interest he had in the property was entered on June 11, 1954. On August 5, 1954, appellant filed an "Order on Motion & Order on Motion to Argue and Show Cause Joint Tenancy deed." That document alleges title in appellant; that the property was taken from her by fraud, by collusive action of a great number of people, and asks that the joint tenancy be set aside and the property be vacated and the proceeding transferred to the United States Supreme Court.

Mrs. Applegate filed a motion, on September 8, 1954, to dismiss the "petition to set aside joint tenancy and decree" on the ground that the petition was in the nature of a proceeding to try title, for which the probate court does not have jurisdiction.

There were subsequent pleadings filed, all referring to the proceeding to establish death, which are unintelligible. At any rate, on March 23, 1956, the order to show cause was heard. The minute order of that date states: "Plaintiff orally moves the Court to re-open the matter of transferral of the matter to the United States Supreme Court * * * The matter is submitted, and the Court orders that the Order to Show Cause and Notice to set matter for trial be and the same is hereby discharged." Appellant has apparently filed a notice of appeal from that order. Under the liberal rules of construction, the notice of appeal is probably sufficient. Rule 1(a), Rules on Appeal; 3 Cal.Jur.2d §§ 181, 182, pp. 667-669.

The order discharging the order to show cause should be sustained. "A judgment establishing the fact of death in a proceeding under sections 1170 and 1175 of the Probate Code is not an adjudication of title. Under section 1174 it is only prima facie evidence of the fact of the death. It is not a judgment from which an appeal may be taken under section 1240 of the Probate Code." In re Estate of Basso, 1945, 68 Cal.App.2d 294, 299, 156 P.2d 476, 478. Moreover, no appeal was taken from the decree establishing death.

[1, 2] If the so-called order to show cause is assumed to be a request for intervention (Code Civ.Proc. § 387), the determination of the trial court was correct. An interest entitling a person to intervention must be an interest in the matter in litigation in the suit as originally brought, and of such a present, direct and immediate character that the intervener will either gain or lose by the direct effect of the judgment. An intervener cannot be permitted to broaden the scope or function of such special proceeding by urging claims or contentions which have their proper forum elsewhere. Bernheimer v. Bernheimer, 1948, 87 Cal.App.2d 242, 196 P.2d 813.

[3,4] The order made by the trial court technically is a special order after final judgment. Code Civ.Proc. § 963, subd. 2. However, an appeal from it does not lie, for to be appealable under the code such order must affect the judgment in some manner or bear some relation to it either by way of enforcing it or staying its execution. Hixson v. Hixson, 1956, 146 Cal.App.2d 204, 206, 303 P.2d 607. It is obvious that the order here does not and could not affect the decree whose only function was to establish the fact of death.

The appeal is dismissed.

Nolan WASHINGTON, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 3499.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 17, 1958.

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court, Alameda County, Marvin Sherwin, J., for unlawful possession of marijuana, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, St. Clair, J. pro tem, held that it had been error to refuse to grant continuance necessary to give defense an opportunity to meet prosecution's case by allowing defense chemist to examine alleged marijuana that People had put in on rebuttal, and held that such error had not been cured by permitting defense chemist to give, on motion for new trial, evidence which cast doubt upon People's chemist's positive identification of scrapings taken from defendant's pocket; and held that since all of evidence, except that of defendant's companion and the scrapings, was as consistent with such companion's having had possession of cigarette found near defendant's automobile as with defendant's having had such possession, error would require reversal.

Judgment reversed for new trial.

1. Arrest $\S$ 63(4)

Under circumstances disclosed, in prosecution for unlawful possession of marijuana and for unlawfully furnishing marijuana to a minor, there was reasonable cause for arrest of defendant. West's Ann. Pen.Code,  $\S$  836.

2. Searches and Seizures $\S$ 1

To merely observe that which is patent and open is not to "search."

3. Criminal Law $\S$ 698(1)

Where no objection was made, in prosecution for unlawful possession of marijuana, to admission of cardboard crutch (used to prolong utility of marijuana cigarette) and contents thereof on ground that they were products of an illegal search and seizure, any objection on that ground was waived.

4. Searches and Seizures $\S$ 7(27)

Question of consent is one of fact; and on conflicting evidence presented, in prosecution for unlawful possession of marijuana and for furnishing narcotic to minor, trial court properly found that minor had consented to search of her purse which produced match cover from which paper crutch (used to prolong utility of marijuana cigarette), had been made. West's Ann.Pen.Code,  $\S$  836.

5. Criminal Law $\S$ 680(1), 698(1)

Order of proof is matter for discretion of trial court, and where no objection to admission of scrapings from defendant's trouser pocket, on ground that such evidence was not proper rebuttal, was made, in prosecution for unlawful possession of marijuana, any objection on that ground was waived.

6. Criminal Law $\S$ 649(2), 1166½(1)

In prosecution for unlawful possession of marijuana, it was error to refuse to grant continuance necessary to give defense an opportunity to meet prosecution's case by allowing defense chemist to examine alleged marijuana that People had put in on rebuttal, and such error was not cured by permitting defense chemist to give, on motion for new trial, evidence which cast doubt upon People's chemist's positive identification of scrapings taken from defendant's pocket; and since all of evidence, except that of defendant's companion and the scrapings, was as consistent with her having had possession of cigarette found near defendant's automobile as with defendant's having had such possession, error would require reversal. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code,  $\S\S$  11500, 11714.

7. Criminal Law $\S$ 1162

In considering whether or not error was prejudicial, rule is that it must be reasonably probable that result more favorable to appealing party would have been reached in absence of error.

Thomas Francis Lyons, Oakland, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., Peter T. Kennedy, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

ST. CLAIR, Justice pro tem.

Appellant was charged in the first count, with violating section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code, possession of marijuana; and in the second count with violating section 11714 of the same code, unlawfully offering to sell, furnish and give a narcotic to a minor. The complaint set out four prior narcotic convictions, all misdemeanors, and a felony forgery conviction. All prior convictions were admitted. The jury found the appellant guilty on the first count and not guilty on the second count.

The nature of the points raised by appellant on appeal is such as to require a rather detailed statement of the facts. The points are:

I. There was no reasonable or probable cause for the original arrest of the appellant.

II. There was no reasonable or probable cause for the search of the appellant's automobile, or there was no reasonable relationship between the arrest and the search.

III. It was error for the trial court to admit certain evidence seized in violation of the rights of a third party.

IV. The People committed error in introducing, in rebuttal, evidence linking the appellant to possession of the very marijuana which was the basis of the proof of the violation proved in the case in chief.

V. The court erred in denying a motion for a continuance or other extension of time to permit the appellant to submit the rebuttal evidence to his own chemist for analysis.

VI. The errors were prejudicial.

Statement of Facts

At 2:00 a. m. on August 20, 1957, a police officer approached a car parked in the vicinity of DeFremery Park in Oakland, California. The appellant and a 17 year old girl named Mrs. Charissetta Cross were sitting in the car. The officer could see both of their heads. As he approached the car, he saw the appellant make an arm motion in or towards the back seat. The officer approached the car on the passenger side where Mrs. Cross was seated. The officer asked the girl if everything was all right, to which she replied in the affirmative.

The officer asked for and was shown appellant's driver's license and then checked the registration. Appellant having stated the car was his, a discrepancy arose as the car was registered to another Washington. In addition, the appellant's license carried a notation that he was not permitted to own a car. The officer ordered the appellant to descend from the car, which he did. As he descended the officer recognized the appellant as an ex-convict but could not remember the crime of which he had been convicted.

The officer requested the appellant to turn his back so that he, the officer, "could pat him down for weapons." The appellant was also requested to place his hands on the automobile so that the officer could determine whether or not he was armed. Appellant refused to co-operate in either way. Thereupon the officer handcuffed the appellant and radioed for help.

One of the answering officers found the remains of a marijuana cigarette wrapped in a cardboard "crutch" next to the car. (The theory of a "crutch" apparently being that by wrapping it around a cigarette one could smoke it down to a shorter length than otherwise.) The crutch matched and came from a torn matchbook discovered in the girl's purse.

The torn matchbook had been discovered in the girl's purse under circumstances which the appellant claimed shows that she was coerced into showing the contents to the police. At the trial admission of the matchbook was challenged on various grounds, including illegal search. After examination on voir dire by appellant's counsel and by the court, the court made a finding that the showing of the contents of the purse was voluntary on the part of the girl.

The girl's testimony definitely linked the appellant to the marijuana and to the crutch and its use by him.

Mrs. Cross testified that she had joined the appellant at about 9:30 on the evening of the 19th. After a series of excursions to a hamburger place, to Union Street near her house, to a restaurant and bar, and to some "projects," they arrived at DeFre-mery Park. While they were parked and conversing, appellant asked her "did [she] want to get loaded," holding up a brown cigarette. She declined. Appellant lit the cigarette with a match borrowed from Mrs. Cross and smoked it. Later appellant asked for the matchbook again. He wrapped the cigarette in part of the matchbook. The police arrived shortly thereafter. The matchbook had been placed on the dashboard and Mrs. Cross put it in her purse.

The police minutely searched the automobile but found no contraband, nor did they at any time find any on the appellant.

At the start of the trial the court ordered "the marijuana evidence that will be introduced" to be made available that same day to a defense chemist to be appointed by the court. The material found in the crutch alongside of the car was turned over to the defense chemist. At the trial the prosecution's chemist testified that the material in the crutch was marijuana. The defense chemist did not testify. By stipulation his report went into evidence and was read or exhibited to the jury. The defense chemist agreed that the contents of the crutch were marijuana and further stated that colored stains on the brown paper surrounding the marijuana were lipstick. The girl had testified that neither she nor the appellant had on any lipstick on the night in question.

Appellant went on the stand. On cross-examination the People examined him at length concerning the trousers that he had on the night of his arrest. He identified them and denied that he had ever carried any marijuana in these trousers. On rebuttal, the People produced evidence to the effect that 14 days before the trial a police officer had scraped the dust and lint out of each pocket in the clothes of the appellant and had turned the scrapings over to the prosecution chemist. The prosecution chemist testified that by microscopic examination he could come to the conclusion that the tracings contained marijuana. Photographs were introduced of the alleged tracings of the scrapings in the pocket.

The appellant's counsel claimed surprise but did not object on the grounds of illegal search. He did request that the tracings be submitted to the defense chemist. On the alleged grounds of pressure of time the court denied this motion. The case was sent to the jury and before the verdict the jury came back in and requested that they have read to them certain testimony concerning the trousers. The jury found the appellant guilty of the possession of marijuana as charged in the first count but not guilty of giving marijuana to a minor, as was alleged in the second count.

On the motion for a new trial the defense chemist testified that the tracings from the pocket had been made available to him, that there was not sufficient quantity to make a determination by microscopic examination, that the photographs could be that of either marijuana or other vegetable material and that with such a small amount the only positive test would be a chemical test. The court denied a motion for a new trial.

I

Was there reasonable or probable cause for the arrest of the appellant?

The appellant relies on California Penal Code, section 836, which lays down the rule for officers making an arrest without a warrant. The section reads as follows:

"A peace officer may make an arrest in obedience to a warrant, or may, without a warrant, arrest a person:

"1. Whenever he has reasonable cause to believe that the person to be arrested has committed a public offense in his presence.

"2. When a person arrested has committed a felony, although not in his presence.

"3. Whenever he has reasonable cause to believe that the person to be arrested has committed a felony, whether or not a felony has in fact been committed."

Appellant cites and relies on People v. Simon, 45 Cal.2d 645, 290 P.2d 531, holding that arrest and search is not justified merely because appellant was parked in an automobile with a woman at late and unusual hours, and People v. Sanders, 46 Cal.2d 247, 294 P.2d 10, holding that the fact that a person is a past offender is not probable cause to arrest him. Also, People v. Gale, 46 Cal.2d 253, 294 P.2d 13, where the original stopping of the defendant who was driving an automobile was proper and when the questions of the officer brought replies consistent with innocence, no probable cause was established to arrest the defendant and search his car.

The vice of the appellant's position is that he ignores the sequence of events. The original answers of the appellant to the officer's first question developed inconsistencies, as did the fact that appellant's claimed ownership of the car was not consistent with the registration card in the car. The officer asked the appellant to step out of the car which he did, apparently voluntarily.

On brief, the respondent refers to the appellant's actions as "the appellant resisted arrest"; "resistance by the appellant"; and "the appellant became argumentative to a degree so as to necessitate handcuffing him." Appellant, on brief, states, "The defendant was arrested * * * He was handcuffed. * * *"

It is not clear whether the parties considered the order to descend from the car as the arrest or whether it was the handcuffing. Both appear to agree that the arrest was completed upon the handcuffing.

There have been many cases construing section 836 of the Penal Code. In People v. Jaurequi, 142 Cal.App.2d 555, at pages 559-560, 298 P.2d 896, at page 899, the following language, quoted and approved in People v. West, 144 Cal.App.2d 214, 300 P.2d 729, was used: "'The term, reasonable or probable cause, has been defined: 'By 'reasonable or probable cause' is meant such a state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary caution or prudence to believe, and conscientiously entertain a strong suspicion, that the person accused is guilty.'" In re McCarty, 140 Cal.App. 473, 474, 35 P.2d 568.

"The term, 'probable,' has been defined as meaning 'having more evidence for than against; supported by evidence which inclines the mind to believe, but leaves some room for doubt.'" Ex parte Heacock, 8 Cal.App. 420, 421, 97 P. 77.' People v. Novell, 54 Cal.App.2d 621, 623-624, 129 P.2d 453, 454.

"It was stated in People v. Brite, 9 Cal.2d 666, at page 687, 72 P.2d 122, 133: "'Probable cause is a suspicion founded upon circumstances sufficiently strong to warrant a reasonable man in the belief that the charge is true.'" (Citing cases.) Reasonable or probable cause is a question of law, where there is no conflict to be decided by the court. (Citing cases.)'

"There is no formula for the determination of reasonableness. Each case is to be decided on its own facts and circumstances. Go-Bart Importing Co. v. United States, 282 U.S. 344, 357, 51 S.Ct. 153, 75 L.Ed. 374."

The officer testified as follows: "As I got him out of the car I recognized him as a past offender. I didn't remember exactly what his offense was, but I asked him to turn around so I could pat him down for weapons, at which time he refused to turn around. I took him away from the car door of his car and took him to the rear of my car, again asked him to put his hands on the rear deck of the car so I could pat him down for a weapon. He refused. He kept turning around. So I put the handcuffs on him, at which time I put him in the rear of my car, hit the radio and asked for assistance."

The appellant's testimony was substantially the same except his version of the events after he got out of the car was that he did turn around and the officer did pat him down, i. e. feel him for weapons.

[1] There would seem to have been sufficient grounds for the actual arrest, under the circumstances.

II

Was there reasonable and probable cause for the search of the appellant's automobile?

Preliminarily it should be noted that the search of the car and the appellant's person did not turn up any marijuana.

[2] To observe that which is patent and open is not a search. People v. Jaurequi, 142 Cal.App.2d 555, 298 P.2d 896, supra; People v. Martin, 45 Cal.2d 755, 290 P.2d 855.

[3] The search of the automobile was not occasioned by the facts surrounding the actual arrest of appellant but by the discovery of the crutch and the marijuana alongside of the car, still warm. The first officer to approach the car had also seen the motion of the appellant's arm; the torn matchbook cover that fitted the crutch was found in Mrs. Cross' purse before the search. No objection was made to the admission of the crutch and the contents thereof on the ground that they were the products of an illegal search and seizure; hence any objection on that ground has been waived.

We hold that under the circumstances in question the original arrest of the appellant and the subsequent search were reasonable and proper under the circumstances.

III

Was it error for the trial court to admit the torn matchbook cover found in Mrs. Cross' purse?

The appellant objected to its admission on the ground of an illegal search and seizure. The People relied upon Mrs. Cross' consent. During Mrs. Cross' cross-examination about the emptying of her purse on the seat of the car, she was asked if this was at the officer's request and whether it was done voluntarily. She answered yes to both questions. An objection was made to the second question on the ground that it was asking for an opinion and conclusion. This was overruled. Mrs. Cross was then asked whether Exhibit 2 was similar to the matchbook she gave the appellant that night. Defense counsel then stated he would ask her questions "as to whether or not she did give her consent to the search." The court then stated that Mrs. Cross was the one to make the objection as to the legality of the search.

Defense counsel stated he thought there was authority for his position. A 20-minute recess was taken and after the recess defense counsel cited People v. Mills, 148 Cal.App.2d 392, 409, 306 P.2d 1005, to the court, to which the court responded, "Yes. You might add People versus Martin [45 Cal.2d 755, 290 P.2d 855] to your list."

After a witness was called out of order, defense counsel examined Mrs. Cross on voir dire. At the conclusion of this examination, the court asked, "In other words, you didn't have anything in your purse that you objected to showing him? A. I didn't think so."

Shortly thereafter, defense counsel made the objection to the introduction of the match cover, which the court overruled.

Although the court's initial ruling was that defendant was not the proper person to object to an illegal search of Mrs. Cross, after authority was produced, the court agreed with defense counsel, even supplying a citation to a Supreme Court case in point, People v. Martin, 45 Cal.

2d 755, 290 P.2d 855. Defense counsel was allowed to conduct the voir dire examination. From the court's own questions, it is apparent that the issue of consent was considered by the court.

[4] The question of consent being one of fact (People v. Gorg, 45 Cal.2d 776, 291 P.2d 469), we hold that the trial court, on conflicting evidence, properly held that Mrs. Cross consented.

IV

[5] Was it error, or abuse of discretion for the trial court to permit the admission of the scrapings from appellant's trouser pocket to be put in evidence on rebuttal?

The tracings were linked to the watch pocket of the trousers that appellant wore the night of his arrest. It would appear that they were offered as part of the proof of the possession of marijuana. It is difficult to understand in the light of the value of this evidence why the People did not make it available to the appellant under the original order of the court.

It is certainly true that the order of proof is well within the discretion of the trial court. Appellant relies on People v. Carter, 48 Cal.2d 737, 312 P.2d 665; People v. Avery, 35 Cal.2d 487, 218 P.2d 527, and People v. Cunha, 107 Cal.App.2d 382, 237 P.2d 12, for the rule that an abuse of discretion may well result from allowing a district attorney by way of rebuttal to bring in evidence that should have been in the prosecution's case in chief. When the trousers were first inquired about during appellant's cross-examination, an objection of immateriality was made. This was overruled, and there do not appear to be any further objections to the introduction of the scrapings or testimony concerning their character on the ground that the evidence was not proper rebuttal. Appellant's briefs do not point out such an objection. It would appear that the appellant has waived any objection on this ground.

V

Was it error for the court to refuse the defendant a continuance so his chemist could examine the alleged marijuana that the People put in on rebuttal?

The appellant when confronted with the testimony concerning the scrapings from the pocket made a timely motion for the tracings to be made available to him for turning over to the defense chemist for analysis. This was denied.

The importance of the testimony concerning the scrapings is shown by the fact that the jury came back in and requested the reading to them of certain testimony concerning the trousers. It should be noted here that these scrapings were the only evidence outside of the girl's testimony that squarely connected the appellant with the marijuana. The only evidence concerning the second count, to wit, the offering of the marijuana to a minor, was in the girl's testimony, which testimony was repudiated by the jury in finding the appellant not guilty thereof. At the time that defense counsel asked that the court-appointed chemist be allowed to examine the scrapings, the court inquired whether otherwise the case could go to the jury in the afternoon, and upon being assured that it could, the court denied the motion, saying: "Well, I think I'll make the same determination as I did in the Bradford case; namely, that in the event of an adverse verdict as far as the defendant is concerned, and he wants to renew his motion, the Court will have the testimony of Mr. Thiesen [the prosecution chemist] verified by Mr. Bradford [the defense chemist] on motion for new trial, so that if there is any reason for doubting the testimony of Mr. Thiesen, why, the Court would be in the position of a 13th juror in passing upon that question. But our calendar is in a condition that the defendants are waiting to be tried, and they're entitled to be tried within 60 days, and I don't like to delay this case an extra day."

On the motion for new trial, Mr. Bradford testified that if the material subjected to examination contained enough of the component parts of the marijuana plant to get an over-all picture, identification could be made microscopically, but if less than this was available, it was necessary to make a test known as the Dukuenois Reaction, since the appearance of small portions of the plant is similar to that of certain other plants. In his experience, an initial identification of tracings under the microscope had proved incorrect. He testified that the photograph of the tracings was consistent with the presence of marijuana but the sample was too small to determine conclusively whether it was marijuana by microscopic test alone.

The court denied the motion for the new trial, on the ground that the result would not "have been a bit different if Mr. Bradford had testified during the trial, instead of testifying here the other day."

Mr. Bradford's testimony at least throws some doubt upon Mr. Thiesen's positive identification of the scrapings as containing at least three particles of marijuana in view of his further testimony that he subjected the material only to a microscopic examination. Clearly if Mr. Bradford's testimony had been offered and rejected at the trial, this would have been error. It would seem to be as much error to refuse the defense an opportunity to meet the prosecution's case by allowing examination of the scrapings as it would to refuse the actual testimony. There was a time pressure present, but this was produced by allowing the prosecution to introduce the evidence at the close of the trial, and the request was rejected.

As indicated above, the learned trial judge stated that at the motion for a new trial he would sit as the 13th juror. The Supreme Court, in People v. Robarge, 41 Cal.2d 628, 262 P.2d 14, 17, has referred to the sometimes unfortunate use of that phrase. Citing People v. Sarazzawski, 27 Cal.2d 7, 161 P.2d 934 (a 13th juror case) and People v. Cesena, 18 Cal.App.2d 727, 64 P.2d 732; at page 633, 262 P.2d 714, at page 17, the court said: "It has been stated that a defendant is entitled to two decisions on the evidence, one by the jury and the other by the court on motion for a new trial."

It is obvious that the appellant did not have the advantage referred to in the last quotation, inasmuch as the jury never heard Mr. Bradford's testimony. Whatever effect this may have had on the verdict, a reading of the proceedings on the motion for a new trial conclusively shows that the trial judge did not do as he described, to wit, sit as a 13th juror. To the contrary, he did just what the court in the Robarge case said he should do (and was not done in the Robarge case) when, at page 634 of 41 Cal.2d, at page 17 of 262 P.2d, it said: "As we have seen, it is the province of the trial judge to see that the jury intelligently and justly performs its duty and, in the exercise of a proper legal discretion, to determine whether there is sufficient credible evidence to sustain the verdict."

[6,7] It would appear to be error now to permit the defendant to bring before the jury the evidence casting doubt on the nature of the scrapings found in his pocket and to allow him only to submit it to the judge on the motion for a new trial.

VI

Was the error prejudicial?

In considering whether or not the above error constituted prejudicial error, the rule is that it must be reasonably probable that a result more favorable to the appealing party would have been reached in the absence of the error. People v. Watson, 46 Cal.2d 818, 299 P.2d 243. In People v. Avery, 35 Cal.2d 487, 218 P.2d 527, supra, it should be noted on the rebuttal point that the court refused to reverse on the ground that the defendant had been given an opportunity to meet the surprise rebuttal testimony. Several other cases which follow the Avery case take the same position that the error is cured when the defendant is given an opportunity to meet the surprise rebuttal. Here, the defendant was not given such an opportunity.

The question of prejudice is a difficult one. The result could have been different had Mr. Bradford's evidence gone before the jury. The scrapings were the only evidence linking defendant to the possession of the marijuana cigarette not dependent upon the testimony of Mrs. Cross. That the jury did not put full credence in her testimony is indicated by defendant's acquittal on the second count of the information. She herself testified that she had smoked marijuana cigarettes, "more than four or five," as lately as April, 1957, seven months before the trial. The defendant testified that she left the car and joined some people in another car while they were at DeFremery Park. The marijuana cigarette contained traces of lipstick. Defendant testified that the car of the other people was in the place where he later parked, and even the girl testified that a car had pulled out of that same parking place before they moved in. This is consistent with her testimony that she asked him to go by the place to see if her friend was still there. All the evidence, except that of Mrs. Cross and the scrapings, is as consistent with her having had possession of the cigarette as defendant's having had such possession. In this situation, it cannot be said that impeachment of the prosecution chemist's conclusion concerning the scrapings could not have influenced the result in the case.

The failure to permit the appellant's chemist to have access to the tracings and have his findings before the jury was clearly error. The permitting of the using of the tracings in rebuttal may or may not have been error, inasmuch as no timely objection was made on that ground. However, that ruling was an integral part of the refusal to permit the appellant to have access to the tracings, as was the refusal by respondent to comply with the court's original order and make the scrapings available to appellant at the start of the trial.

The trial court's otherwise proper review of the evidence on the motion for new trial could not cure the fact that the jury was not permitted to hear testimony vital to the defendant's defense.

The conviction depends basically on weighing the evidence of the witness Cross against the evidence of the appellant. The fact that the jury came back in to have reread to it some of the testimony concerning the trousers from which the tracings were taken and refused to convict appellant of the second count emphasizes the closeness of the case to the jury. We are satisfied that in a close case of this nature the error discussed may well have tipped the scales in the balance and hence was in fact prejudicial.

Judgment reversed for a new trial.

District Court of Appeal of California.
Fourth District.

Oct. 2, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 27, 1958.

Hearing Denied Nov. 26, 1958.

Action brought by city of San Diego to condemn land for Mission Bay Park project. The Superior Court of San Diego County. Joe L. Shell, J., rendered the judgment challenged by plaintiff's appeal. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held, inter alia, that requested instruction, failing to state judicially-announced rule as to other sales and excluding consideration of other sales which took place after city first fixed boundaries of park for public improvement, had been properly rejected.

Affirmed.

I. Stipulations ⇨14(10)

Trial ⇨260(10)

In action to condemn land for park purposes, any error in excluding evidence which would have tended to show that property in question had been, from beginning, certain to be taken for park project and in refusing requested instruction to exclude, in determining fair market value, any enhancement in value of property due to development of property, could not have been prejudicial in view of stipulation that subject property was within boundaries of park and within boundaries of original condemnation case and in view of instruction that improvement was not a factor to be considered in determining market value.

2. Eminent Domain ⇨221

In action to condemn land for public park purposes, it was, on record presented, for jury to determine whether flood control channel was an integral part of park project and itself such an improvement that any benefit accruing therefrom to subject property should be excluded by jury in computation of fair market value.

3. Evidence ⇨142(3)

In condemnation action, filed June 29, 1954, it was not an abuse of discretion to refuse to permit condemnor to introduce evidence of comparable sales in 1940-1945 era, notwithstanding condemnor's contention that property involved had been earmarked for condemnation for project in 1945, and that any enhancement in market value of property thereafter was attributable to and anticipated actual development of project.

4. Eminent Domain ⇨222(4)

In action brought by city of San Diego to condemn land for Mission Bay Park project, requested instruction, failing to state judicially-announced rule as to other sales and excluding consideration of other sales which took place after city first fixed boundaries of park for public improvement, was properly rejected.

MUSSELL, Justice.

This is a condemnation action, filed June 29, 1954, in which the city of San Diego seeks to acquire for a public park and recreation purposes real property owned by defendant Martha May Rogers, near Mission Bay, and described as Block 12, Electric Line Addition in said city. A jury awarded said defendant the sum of $53,750 for her property and the city appeals from the judgment thereupon entered, claiming that the trial court erred in admitting and excluding evidence and in its refusal to give certain offered instructions.

Prior to 1945 Mission Bay was owned by the state as a part of the state's park lands and in that year the State Legislature granted to the city of San Diego all of the tidelands and submerged lands in and around Mission Bay, upon condition that the property be developed and used for park and recreation purposes. On April 17, 1945, a municipal bond election was held and the city was authorized to issue bonds for the acquisition and construction of municipal improvements for park and recreation purposes in and around Mission Bay. On December 14, 1945, the city filed an action (City of San Diego v. Della Adams, et al.) to acquire certain properties adjacent to Mission Bay for park and recreation purposes. The complaint in this action, No. 130137, listed over 900 separate parcels of property, including the parcel here involved and owned by the defendant Martha May Rogers. However, this action was dismissed by the city on January 22, 1952. In 1946 the Congress of the United States authorized the improvement of the San Diego River and Mission Bay in accordance with a report of the Chief of Engineers, recommending that the flood control project for the San Diego River, as authorized, be extended to include a multiple-purpose project for flood control of said river and small boat navigation on Mission Bay; that the United States pay for the actual construction of the flood control channel and that local public interests pay for the development of the Mission Bay area and purchase and hold in the public interest the lands between the flood control channel and Mission Bay west of highway U. S. 101.

On January 6, 1948, the city adopted a resolution, No. 88026, in which it agreed to fulfill the conditions set forth in said act of Congress in the acquisition and construction of the multiple-purpose project for flood control on the San Diego River and small boat navigation on Mission Bay and to provide at its own expense necessary bulkheading and all necessary lands and rights of way. The city further agreed to make all necessary alterations to highway bridges, utilities and side drainage structures and to purchase and hold in its name for public interest and benefit the lands between the flood control channel and Mission Bay west of highway U. S. 101. The resolution further provided that the city will complete certain improvements in the area and will provide adequate facilities for storage, maintenance and supplying of small craft in Mission Bay and maintain and operate the entire project, except maintenance of jetties and stone revetment constructed by the United States. Bond issues were authorized in 1950 and 1956 and the proceeds therefrom were and are used for the development of the Mission Bay Park project.

While the real property here involved and owned by defendant Martha May Rogers was included in the property sought to be acquired by the city in the action filed against Della Adams, et al., supra, this action was dismissed before said defendant's property was so acquired and the present action was filed by the city on June 29, 1954.

It is the basic contention of appellant that the property involved was earmarked for condemnation for the Mission Bay Park project in 1945 and that any enhancement in the market value of the subject property which is attributable to either the anticipated or actual development of the Mission Bay Park project is not compensable to the extent of such enhancement. In support of this contention appellant cites Nichols on Eminent Domain, Volume 4, pages 122-126, stating that the general rule is that any enhancement in value which is brought about in anticipation of and by reason of a proposed improvement is to be excluded in determining the market value of such land; that if it is known from the very beginning exactly where the improvement will be located if it is constructed at all, the property that will be required for its use will not participate in the rise or fall in values, and that the enhancement of price to the public improvement, if based on the reasonable expectation that the lands may be held by the private owner with the added advantages of adjacency to the land improved by the public is legitimate; but when this expectation is destroyed by the practical certainty as distinguished from the legal certainty that the lands are not to continue in private ownership adjacent to the public lands, then the reason for allowing such enhancement fails. United States v. Miller, 317 U.S. 369, 63 S.Ct. 276, 87 L.Ed. 336, is cited as holding that where the public project includes the taking of several tracts, but only one is taken in the first instance, the owners of the other tracts, when they are ultimately taken, should not be allowed an increased value resulting from the public improvement.

In County of Los Angeles v. Hoe, 138 Cal. App.2d 74, at page 78, 291 P.2d 98, 100 (also cited by appellant) the court said:

"It is the law, as stated by appellant, that in arriving at a determination of the market value of land which is the subject of a condemnation action, it is not proper to consider the increase, if any, in the value of such land by reason of the proposed improvement which is to be made on the land by the condemnor. (See San Diego Land etc. Co. v. Neale, 78 Cal. 63, 75, 20 P. 372, 3 L.R.A. 83; United States v. Miller, 317 U.S. 369, 63 S.Ct. 276, 87 L.Ed. 336, 345, 147 A.L.R. 55.)"

The respondent takes no exception to the law as stated in the foregoing text and cases but contends that it does not indicate that the trial court erred in its rulings on the introduction of evidence or in its instructions to the jury.

[1] Appellant first argues that the trial court erred in excluding evidence offered by the appellant which would have tended to show that the subject property was from the beginning of the Mission Bay Park project in 1945 certain to be taken for this purpose. However, respondent stipulated that the subject property was within the boundaries of the park and within the boundaries of the original condemnation case filed in 1945. Appellant offered the witness Schwob for the purpose of showing that the general boundaries of the park as they were initially determined included the subject property and that it was practically certain that the subject property would be taken for the project as early as 1945 and that appellant, through the expenditure of city funds, was responsible for certain of the public improvements. We find no reversible error in the court's ruling sustaining an objection to the admission of this evidence in view of the said stipulation and the following instruction given to the jury:

"You are instructed that it is improper for you to base your award in this case on any increase in value arising from the improvement proposed by the plaintiff, the City of San Diego.

"The condemnation project or improvement as a city park project is not a factor to be considered by the jury in determining the reasonable market value of the subject property."

In this connection appellant argues that the court erred in refusing to give the following instruction:

"You are instructed that if you find that it was practically certain on December 14, 1945, that the subject property would be included in the public project known as Mission Bay Park, then you must exclude in your determination of fair market value, any enhancement in its value which may be due to the development of the park."

Since the court instructed the jury to the effect that it should not consider in fixing its award any increase in value to the subject property arising from the improvement proposed by plaintiff, it was not prejudicial error to refuse this offered instruction.

[2] Error is claimed by appellant in the refusal of the court to instruct the jury as follows:

"In your determination of the fair market value of the subject property, you are instructed that as a matter of law you are not to consider as compensable any enhancement of its value which may be attributable to the development of the public improvement for which the land is sought to be acquired, in this case, Mission Bay Park, including the construction of the San Diego River Flood Control Channel."

In this instruction the appellant included reference to the San Diego River flood control channel and asked the court to instruct the jury that as a matter of law the flood control channel was an integral part of the park project and itself such an improvement that any benefit accruing therefrom to the subject property must necessarily and as a matter of law be excluded by the jury in the computation of fair market value. The question of whether the flood control channel was an integral part of the city's Mission Bay project was a question of fact for the jury. The record shows that the construction of the flood control channel was a federal undertaking to stabilize the flow of the San Diego River, resulting in benefits to lands within the potential flood area of the river, including lands within the Mission Bay project of the city. Under these circumstances it was not error to refuse the last offered instruction.

Appellant argues that the trial court erred in refusing to strike the testimony of the defendant's witness, Stallard, as to the market value of the subject property. Stallard, who was a realtor and well qualified appraiser, testified that the fair market value of the subject property, at the time of trial, was the sum of $57,500; that in fixing the value which he placed upon the property he did not take into consideration the effect of the development of the Mission Bay project and that the price which he assigned to the subject property as a market price was aside from and divorced from any enhancement by virtue of the surrounding park; that the value which he fixed was based entirely upon the assumption that the subject property was available to be developed to a motel use and there existed a demand for that use in the vicinity of the property; that it would be a successful operation if carried through to completion and had nothing to do with the influence of the bay as it was to be developed. He testified that in 1955 there was an offer made for the subject property in the sum of $50,000; that an escrow was opened to consummate this transaction but the sale was precluded by court action. Stallard also testified that in fixing the fair market value he considered other sales transactions and appellant argues that in these sales there was some increment of value which was attributable solely to the fact that the properties were situate proximate to the Mission Bay project; that this fact rendered the evidence of such other sales inadmissible. However, the motion to strike was based upon the claim that Stallard's valuation was as to a partial extent at least based upon taking into consideration an increment in value attributable to the Mission Bay park development. As heretofore stated, the court instructed the jury that it was improper to base an award on any increase in value arising from the improvement proposed by plaintiff, and in view of Stallard's testimony that he did not base his value on such enhancement, we find no error in the refusal to strike his testimony.

Appellant further contends that the court erred in refusing to permit appellant to introduce evidence of comparable sales in the 1940-1945 era which would tend to show what the current fair market value of the subject property would be exclusive of the increment in value attributable to the public improvement for which the property is being taken.

In County of Los Angeles v. Faus, 48 Cal.2d 672, 678, 312 P.2d 680, 684, it is held that evidence of prices paid on other sales of real property in condemnation proceedings is admissible under the following safeguards: "The sales of the other tracts must have been sufficiently near in time, and the other land must be located sufficiently near the land to be valued, and must be sufficiently alike in respect to character, situation, usability, and improvements, to make it clear that the two tracts are comparable in value and that the price realized for the other land may fairly be considered as shedding light on the value of the land in question. Manifestly, the trial judge in applying so vague a standard must be granted wide discretion."

[3] We cannot here hold as a matter of law that there was an abuse of discretion in the trial court's ruling in this connection.

[4] Appellant contends that the court erred in refusing to give the following instruction:

"You are instructed to disregard evidence tending to prove the prices actually paid on sales of property similar to that included in the public improvement for which the subject property is sought to be taken, in this case, Mission Bay Park, and so situated as to adjoin it or to be within its immediate vicinity, when such sales have taken place since the City of San Diego first fixed the boundaries of Mission Bay Park and certain lands, including the subject property, for this particular public improvement."

This instruction is objectionable in that it does not state the rule set forth in County of Los Angeles v. Faus, supra, as to other sales and excludes the consideration of other sales which took place since the city of San Diego first fixed the boundaries of the park for public improvement.

Judgment affirmed.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment entered upon a jury's verdict which found appellant guilty of a violation of Section 288 of the Penal Code.

The lewd and lascivious acts of which appellant was convicted were committed upon the body of a ten-year-old girl. Appellant was a friend of her mother and stepfather and was a frequent visitor at their home. He often accompanied the family on fishing and swimming trips and took her and her brothers and sisters to shows. On the night in question, appellant came home with the girl's stepfather and went to bed in a room in which she and her two sisters were sleeping. She testified that she awakened in the night and found appellant leaning over her and feeling her "privacy", but that he returned to his bed when her stepfather, in an adjoining room, muttered or talked in his sleep. Twice thereafter, according to her testimony, appellant returned to the side of her bed. The second time he repeated the same acts and she said that while feeling her "privacy" he also placed her hand upon his penis and began moving his body back and forth; that she took her hand away and he replaced it and that she then "punched" him and he went away. The third time he did not molest her. According to her testimony, he picked up her smaller sister but put her back without further molesting her. She also said that after the third occurrence, and after she gotten out of bed and gone into the living room where her 13-year-old brother was sleeping, that appellant went to the bathroom and on his return tried to get her to go into the bathroom with him, which she refused to do. She said that when she went to her brother's bed, she told him that appellant had "tried to play nasty with me three times" and the brother corroborated this testimony. While there was other testimony such as that of the child's mother that two days after the nocturnal occurrences the child had complained to her and told her substantially the same story as she told on the stand, this evidence being introduced without objection, it is unnecessary to further state the testimony except to say that appellant took the stand and wholly denied all of the charges made by the girl. Substantially, the entire case rested on the girl's assertions and the appellant's denials.

[1] Appellant's first contention is that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict, but there is no merit in this contention and the foregoing statement of the evidence is sufficient refutation.

[2] Appellant points out an obvious error in an instruction addressed to the subject of falsus in uno and the error is a serious one. As given by the court the instruction reads as follows, in material part:

"A witness wilfully false in one part of his or her testimony is to be distrusted in others; that is to say, the jury may reject the whole of the testimony of a witness who has wilfully sworn falsely as to a material point; and the jury being convinced that a witness has stated what was untrue, not as the result of mistake or inadvertence, but wilfully and with design to deceive, must treat all of his or her testimony with distrust and suspicion, and reject all unless they shall be convinced, notwithstanding the base character of the witness, that he or she has in other particulars sworn to the truth."

The first part of the instruction is correct. The statement that a witness wilfully false in one part of his or her testimony is to be distrusted in others is in the language of the code section. The next statement that the jury may reject the whole of the testimony of the witness who has wilfully sworn falsely to a material point is likewise a correct statement of the law. The error occurs in the balance of the instruction where the jury are told that if they are convinced that a witness has stated what was untrue, not as the result of mistake or inadvertence, but wilfully and with design to deceive, then the jury must treat all of his or her testimony with distrust and suspicion and must reject all unless they shall be convinced, notwithstanding the base character of the witness, that he or she has in other particulars sworn to the truth. The permissive "may" is supplanted by the mandatory "must". It is not true that a jury, convinced of falsity in the testimony of a witness, must reject all of that witness' testimony until they shall be convinced that in other particulars the witness has testified truly. The respondent does not contend that there was not error in the instruction, but insists that reversible error has not been committed. We are persuaded somewhat reluctantly that this contention is sound; that the faulty instruction did not result in the denial of a fair trial and that this is a proper case to apply the well known constitutional direction that judgments are not to be reversed unless from the whole record the reviewing court is of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. In our opinion, the error here did not result in a miscarriage of justice and does not justify a reversal.

There are no other contentions of error which we think it necessary to treat.

For the reasons given, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 17, 1958.

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court, Sacramento County, Raymond T. Coughlin, J., for second degree burglary and he appealed. The Third District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that it is notice of offense with which he is charged, and not particular circumstances thereof, to which defendant is entitled; and held that absent showing that transcript of testimony upon which information was founded failed to furnish details which defendant contended had been omitted from information, it could not be said that he had suffered prejudicially even if information, under which he was convicted for second degree burglary, failed to allege that he had entered store building in question with "intent to commit grand or petit larceny or any felony."

PEEK, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of second degree burglary following a trial before the court sitting without a jury. He contends that (1) the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment; (2) the trial court improperly admitted an out-of-court statement; (3) the information fails to state a public offense; and (4) the trial court had no jurisdiction to try the case.

The record shows that an employee of the Myshoppe in North Sacramento heard clothes hangers rattling in a stock room in the back of the store. She investigated and found a man, later identified as the defendant, with an armload of merchandise retreating through the hallway at the rear of the shop which led to the street. The witness followed the defendant, saw him throw the clothes into a waiting car and get into the driver's seat. She called the store owner who ran to the car and recognized the clothes as merchandise from her store. The defendant, being unable to start the car, fled as the owner screamed for assistance. At that point another man got into the car and also fled when he too was unable to start the motor. Both men were arrested within a matter of minutes approximately a block from the store. Following his arrest the defendant stated to police that he had recently come to North Sacramento after being told of a quick way to make money; that he entered the store through the back entrance, took the clothes out of the rear of the store and put them in the car. When asked what he proposed to do with the clothes, the defendant replied, "Sell them, I guess."

[1] We find no merit in defendant's first attack upon the sufficiency of the evidence. He was first seen in the rear of the store with merchandise from its stock. He was not seen to enter through the front door, nor was he seen at any time in the front part of the store where business was conducted. He was seen putting merchandise from the store into a waiting car in which he was attempting to flee, and failing to start the car he fled on foot. Such facts were amply sufficient to establish the elements of the offense and sustain the judgment of the trial court.

[3, 4] He next contends that the information failed to state a public offense in that it failed to allege that he entered the store building with "intent to commit grand or petit larceny or any felony." Penal Code, sec. 459. Under the provisions of Penal Code, section 950, an accusatory pleading must contain a statement charging the commission of a public offense, the purpose being to inform the defendant of the charge

he must meet at the trial. It is the notice of the offense with which he is charged, not the particular circumstances thereof, to which a defendant is entitled. The details are furnished him by the transcript of the testimony upon which the information was founded. People v. Beesly, 119 Cal.App. 82, 87, 6 P.2d 114, 970 [cited with approval in People v. Pierce, 14 Cal.2d 639, 645-646, 96 P.2d 784]. Certainly under the circumstances as disclosed by the record herein, and in the absence of any showing that the transcript of the evidence taken at the preliminary hearing failed to furnish the details which he now contends were omitted from the information, it cannot be said that he has suffered prejudicially thereby. Moreover a judgment will not be reversed because of an error in the form of the information unless after an examination of the entire case, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. People v. Schoeller, 96 Cal.App.2d 61, 64, 214 P.2d 565; People v. Gordon, 71 Cal.App.2d 606, 611, 163 P.2d 110. "Even where an indictment or information is so defective that a demurrer thereto should have been sustained, still, if upon the trial the crime sought to be charged is fully proved, the case falls within the saving grace of section 4½ of article VI of the California Constitution, and of section 960 of the Penal Code, relating to errors in matters of pleading, and the error is not prejudicial." People v. Schoeller, supra, 96 Cal.App.2d at page 64, 214 P.2d at page 568.

Since the final contention of defendant is dependent upon an affirmative answer to his contention above discussed, it becomes unnecessary to consider the same.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appellants appeal from a judgment of $13,123.14 in favor of respondent in the action brought by respondent and holding that appellants take nothing in the action brought by them.

Questions Involved.

1. Was the court's finding as to the contract erroneous?

1. A pallet is a wooden base to pile cartons on in loading ships.

2. This expression meant exactly 6 feet

2. Did the court err in striking parol evidence of the meaning of the contract?

3. Was Edwards in default?

4. Damages: (a) Was Edwards' breach the proximate cause? (b) Uncertainty and alleged improper allowance.

5. Alleged error in permitting witness to refresh his recollection.

6. Did the award exceed the prayer of the complaint?

Record.

Appellants are copartners doing business under the name of Edwards Lumber and Manufacturing Company. They will be referred to as Edwards. Respondent does business under the name of Campbell Construction and Equipment Company, and will be referred to as Campbell. Edwards sued Campbell for $22,778.45 for lumber sold by the former to the latter pursuant to a contract and for $4,578.80 damages from loss of profits. Campbell sued Edwards for failure to deliver lumber under said contract for $11,087.53 damages. During the trial this amount was increased to $30,079.96 by amendment to the complaint.

Evidence.

In June, 1953, Campbell had a contract with the United States Government to build 21,127 wooden pallets.<sup>1</sup> Negotiations between the parties resulted in a purchase order signed by Campbell being sent to Edwards. It stated: "Furnish and deliver, FOB Jobsite . . . 252,000 pcs-2" x 6" x 6' DF S4S . . . All lumber to be certified No. 2 and better and to be precision cut to length.<sup>2</sup> . . . Delivery to start on June 29, 1953 and to continue at the rate of 45,000 MBF per working day until completed." On July 1, 1953, Edwards wrote Campbell a letter stating: "Confirming our telephone conversation, we acknowledge receipt of the above order and accept same in all particulars except delivery is to commence at once and be completed within 90 days. We will endeavor to remain as close to your schedule as possible but cannot guarantee 45,000' per each working day. Hoping this will be satisfactory, we are * * *." This letter was delivered by Israel Sr. who stated that he could not guarantee delivery of 45,000 board feet per day but felt that he could deliver the entire amount in the stipulated time. Mincey, Campbell's general superintendent, told him to do the best he possibly could. Mincey informed Israel of the job requirements schedule and the operation. The job was set up to produce 500 pallets a day. Under the purchase order Edwards could deliver green lumber. Campbell was going to "stick" the lumber to dry it. "Stick" means stacking the lumber with lathing in between so that the air can circulate around each piece separately. It was estimated that it would take three weeks to 30 days for drying and it was expected that Campbell would start to build pallets on August 1, 1953. The lumber ordered from Edwards would be all the lumber necessary for the pallets and it was not contemplated that any other would be bought.<sup>3</sup>

From July 1 to August 1 Edwards delivered 5 loads totalling 81,958 board feet. Campbell was constantly complaining about the lack of delivery and about August 3 handed Edwards a written protest stating that the deliveries were deficient in amount and grade and were not precision cut; that the situation was "intolerable" and that unless Edwards started to comply with the purchase order in 48 hours Campbell would buy lumber when and where possible and would charge Edwards with any excess costs. Mincey complained to Israel about once a week and Israel would reply that the lumber was coming. In August Edwards delivered 12 loads totalling 224,851 board feet and one load in September of 15,030 board feet. There were a number of rejects being pieces too short or warped or otherwise unusable. The rejects were either taken away by Edwards or sent back. They amounted to about 16,000-19,000 board feet. August 19 a letter was sent Edwards to the effect that the 48 hour period of grace mentioned in the previous letter had expired and that Campbell was proceeding to purchase material where and as possible. Any excess cost would be charged to Edwards' account. However, Campbell would accept such deliveries as Edwards could make.

It was stipulated that the amount of lumber delivered by Edwards for which Edwards received credit was of the gross amount of $22,778.45 less credits for rejects and back charges, or a net balance of $19,812.49.

1. The Contract.

[1,2] The court found that the purchase order and the letter of July 1 constituted the entire contract between the parties and that there were no ambiguities in it. Edwards contends that the order was merely an offer and that the letter was a qualified acceptance which in turn became a new proposal which was never accepted, so that there was no contract. See section 1585, Civil Code, requiring an acceptance to be absolute and unqualified and stating that a qualified acceptance is a new proposal. See also Four Oil Co. v. United Oil Producers, 145 Cal. 623, 79 P. 366, 68 L.R.A. 226; May Hosiery Mills v. G. C. Hall & Son, 77 Cal.App. 291, 246 P. 332. However, here there was an acceptance of the counteroffer. It was not exactly expressed in words but the actions of both parties show that they considered a contract as expressed in the two writings was entered into, modified to the extent that delivery of said lumber was to be made over the 90 day period with delivery as near to 45,000 board feet per working day as possible. Edwards' complaint alleges that the parties entered into a written agreement in which Edwards agreed to sell and Campbell to buy certain lumber "delivery to be made within 90 days." The quantity and price are set forth the same as in the purchase order.

3. However, as appears later, the amount of lumber ordered was short by 11,176 board feet of the footage necessary to make the pallets required by the government contract.

However, the finding that the entire contract between the parties consisted of the purchase order and the letter of July 1, 1953, is incorrect. It should have stated that these two writings and an oral acceptance agreeing to the modification above mentioned constituted the entire agreement between the parties. In another finding the court, in effect so found. It stated that "it was the clear understanding of said parties that said contract provided that delivery of said lumber should be made over the ninety day period mentioned in said contract, with delivery as near to 45,000 ft. per working day as possible." This court has power to, and hereby does correct the findings as hereinabove set forth.

2. Parol Evidence.

[3] Israel testified that in negotiating with Mincey, Israel stated that if Edwards could furnish "shorts" (pieces of lumber under 8 feet in length) the price would be considerably lower, that when he presented the July 1 letter to Mincey he recalled to Mincey that Edwards was to accumulate the material from mill shorts and he could not understand Campbell's request for 45,000 board feet per working day, that Mincey then told him that he understood the situation and that Israel should do the best he could. On the theory that the contract was not ambiguous, the court, on motion, struck out Israel's testimony concerning the shorts. Israel testified that he understood the contract to require delivery to be made within 90 days and in such manner as to conform as nearly as possible to the 45,000 board feet per day and that 90 days was a normal period for delivery of that volume of lumber. There was no ambiguity in the length of the lumber to be delivered. The contract specifically set forth the length. Assuming that the evidence should not have been stricken, no prejudice is shown as that evidence could not have changed the court's interpretation of the contract.

3. Default.

4. This contention is made in spite of the allegation in their complaint that the writ-

[4] Appellants contend that at no time was Edwards in default, first, because the court's construction of the time limit of the contract was wrong.<sup>4</sup> As we have shown, the court correctly construed the contract. Secondly, they contend that a statement made by Campbell to Israel at the time the letter demanding compliance within 48 hours was delivered, "Don't take this letter too seriously," off-set the effect of the letter and prevented a default. However, according to Israel's own testimony the statement of Campbell above quoted was immediately followed by "We want to put ourselves on record, but the main thing is we want the lumber in there, and you take care of it and everything will be all right." At that time Campbell agreed to accept four carloads of 2" x 6" in 12 foot lengths which Israel said he could ship immediately and which Campbell was to cut to 6 foot lengths at Edwards' expense. These carloads were shipped and used. However, at least once a week during August, Mincey was demanding increased deliveries and Israel would state that the lumber was coming. On August 10 Campbell sent Edwards another letter expressing the requirement of urgency and stating that Campbell would find it necessary to buy lumber elsewhere. At a conference on August 25 Mincey discussed with Israel the failure to deliver precision cut lumber. Israel said he would have it resawed at his own expense. Even when default was finally declared Campbell notified Edwards that it would receive such deliveries as Edwards could make. The first purchase from another source made by Campbell was on September 4. The next was on September 22. During this period Edwards only made delivery of one load. The completion date of the government contract was October 13, which fact was known to Edwards. Campbell's pallet plant was ready about the first of August and was set up to produce about 500 pallets per day, which would have required about 45,000 board feet per day. Due to lack of lumber only 250 pallets were built in any day and only 2500 in September. Actually Edwards only delivered 298,272 board feet out of 1,848,000 promised. Although respondent had some difficulty in getting the government to agree to accept No. 2 lumber, that fact did not excuse appellants' default. If appellants had delivered as agreed, no controversy could have arisen between the parties. It was no concern of appellants what the government prescribed. Moreover, the government permitted No. 2 lumber to be used, and that was the kind that respondent obtained from other sources. The evidence amply supports the finding of default of Edwards. Appellants make other contentions that Campbell waived the delay in delivery, based upon appellants' version of conflicting testimony. One of these was Israel's testimony that he informed Campbell that the government inspector was not going to accept the lumber and thereupon delivery was waived by Campbell. The trial court resolved that conflict against appellants.

Appellants claim that Campbell was in default because it did not pay for the deliveries actually made in 10 days. As required by the contract, Campbell paid for the first delivery, but thereafter held back payment because many difficulties of arriving at the amount due arose because the lumber was improperly cut and back charges for the cost of remedying the defects which Edwards agreed to pay were not settled and were in dispute. Campbell was not in default. Some of the first shipments were accepted under protest and pending acceptance by the government. This did not amount to a default by Campbell, for when Edwards objected to such acceptance Mincey admitted it was a mistake.

Appellants contend that the contract was that appellants only agreed to do the best they could to deliver lumber and that there is no evidence that they did not do so and that the evidence shows that they did. As pointed out before, this was not the contract.

4. Damages. (a) Proximate cause.

[5] Appellants contend that the Edwards breach did not damage respondent but the real cause resulted from the difference in the lumber grade specifications in the government contract and those in the Edwards contract. Appellants contend that as a result of this difference there was a loss of lumber in regrading and cutting to meet the government regulations. These items were not charged to Edwards under Campbell's method of accounting which was to take the gross cost of all lumber and deduct from it as a credit to Edwards the amount of scrap and rejects. Therefore Edwards was only charged with the cost of lumber actually used for making pallets. It was Edwards' failure to deliver as required by the contract that compelled Campbell to buy lumber wherever it could. Under the exigencies of its contract with the government, Campbell was forced to purchase mostly rough random pieces which had to be cut to size. The court allowed Campbell the difference in the cost of the lumber between the Edwards contract price and that Campbell was forced to pay plus the cost of cutting to size. This total amount was the damage proximately suffered by reason of Edwards' default.

(b) Uncertainty and Alleged Improper Allowance.

[6, 7] Appellants contend that applicable to this case is the rule of Austin v. Roberts, 1933, 130 Cal.App. 328, 333, 20 P.2d 97, that where there is evidence as to damages from various causes, as to a portion of which the defendant cannot be held responsible, and not evidence as to the portion of the damage resulting from the separate causes, the proof is too uncertain to permit the court to apportion a part or all of the proved damages to the acts for which the defendant is responsible. This rule is not applicable here. Respondent's damages came from only one source, namely, appellant's default. If there is some slight uncertainty as to the amount of the damage, then the rule of Allen v. Gardner, 1954, 126 Cal.App.2d 335, 272 P.2d 99, applies: "Appellants have misconceived the law applicable to this situation. They stand before the court as violators of their contract. Their acts caused damage, serious damage, to Gardner. Those facts were proved definitely and with certainty. * * * Uncertainty as to the fact of damage, that is, as to the nature, existence or cause of the damage, is fatal. But the same certainty as to the amount of the damage is not required. An innocent party damaged by the acts of a contract violator will not be denied recovery simply because precise proof of the amount of damage is not available. The law only requires that some reasonable basis of computation be used, and will allow damages so computed even if the result reached is only an approximation." 126 Cal.App.2d at page 340, 272 P.2d at page 102.

[8] This brings us to the items of damage which appellants claim were improperly allowed. (a) The contract price was $71.50 per thousand board feet. Campbell purchased the lumber from other sources at $68.16 per thousand board feet. Appellants contend they are entitled to a credit of the difference between these two prices. They are not entitled to such credit for the reason that the contract price was for precision cut lumber, while the lumber respondent was forced to buy was rough lumber which respondent had to cut. The court in determining respondent's damages added the cost of processing to the price respondent had to pay for the rough lumber. This was a proper method. The measure of damages in a situation of this kind is not the difference in market value where goods are readily available on the market, but the value to contractee of the performance of the contract as against the damage occasioned to him by reason of nonperformance, in our case, the cost to Campbell of obtaining lumber in the condition it would have been supplied under the contract, less $8388.48 "salvage from rejected lumber" subtracted from what the contract cost would have been to respondent had it been performed. This was a proper deduction as the actual cost to Campbell of performance by Edwards would have been that much less than the contract price. Particularly is this so when the court in determining what the actual cost to Campbell of Edwards' failure to perform was, deducted from the overall price of lumber purchased by Campbell, the salvage from all rejected lumber including the said $8388.48 salvage.

(b) Cost of Handling.

In this regard there was clear evidence that a separate five man operation had to be set up to handle and saw the repurchased lumber. And there was expert testimony that the cost is $5 per thousand board feet. This charge did not include the handling costs for any of the precision cut lumber which was purchased in that state, nor did it include cost of handling any lumber which respondent would have had to handle under the Edwards contract. This was sufficient proof to support the fact of damage and the amount of damage. Therefore, as no charges for handling material which would have been handled if Edwards had performed were included in this sum, this amount was properly included in respondent's damages.

(c) Additional lift truck rental.

The evidence established that it was necessary to rent additional lift trucks for the sawing or resawing operation. This item was not included in the costs of handling. Therefore the fact of damage resulting from the breach was established. The total rental for all lift trucks came to $3175. Appellants were charged with $1975. This was a sufficient approximation to prove the amount of damage. The trial court was not in error in awarding it.

(d) Additional superintendent and clerk time and property rental.

It took approximately five weeks to dismantle the plant. Edwards could not be charged for the cost of dismantling, as such cost would have been incurred by respondent had Edwards performed its contract. The evidence shows that the charges for "additional superintendent time" and "additional clerk time" were for additional time required of these persons due to Edwards' nonperformance but did not include the dismantling time. There was some confusion concerning the clerk's pay between take home pay and actual pay. The amount found by the court was his actual pay. Respondent charged rental for the period October 15 to December 14, totaling $850. Respondent concedes that had Edwards completed its contract it would have taken respondent the approximately 5 weeks to dismantle which it actually took. Therefore respondent is not entitled to damages for that 5 week period. This left only one month chargeable to Edwards' default. The rental was at the rate of $425 per month. Thus, the amount of respondent's damages for rental was only $425 instead of $850, and the judgment should be reduced accordingly.

(e) Loss of efficiency.

This item represents the difference in payroll costs on the basis of cost per pallet manufactured at a time when precision lumber was used and at a time when respondent had to start the process with rough repurchase lumber.

In Burrell v. Southern California Canning Co., 1917, 35 Cal.App. 162, 169 P. 405, damages were sought for the nonuse of a plant because of delivery of defective machinery to be used therein. The damage was determined by taking two-thirds of 10 per cent of the value of the plant investment. The court held that it was not a proper item of damage because it was remote and speculative and not contemplated by the parties. However, in Kenyon v. Goodall, 1853, 3 Cal. 257, it was held that the loss of time, value of services and wages of employees, caused by failure of a party to delivery machinery, are damages which are not remote but are proximate and immediate. And in Allen v. Gardner, supra, 126 Cal.App.2d 335, 272 P.2d 99, Gardner was allowed as damage a percentage of his overhead costs in the operation of the mixing of concrete, where this operation was commenced after Allen refused to deliver the special concrete ordered under the contract. It would seem that the latter two cases would permit the respondent to recover for this item. This item can be distinguished from the Burrell case on the basis of proof. There the estimation was made only on the basis of the rental value of the plant which was taken to be 10 per cent of the investment; whereas, here there is actual proof of such loss of efficiency through the computation of costs of manufacture.

(f) Appellants claim that in the figures accepted by the court no credit was given appellants for lumber which was purchased by respondent from another source and used in the construction of pallets additional to those which the amount of lumber purchased from appellants would have constructed. However, appellants did receive credit therefor, it being included in the figure of $1,151.43 "Cost of 183 additional pallets."

(g) In arriving at respondent's damage respondent and the court deducted from the total adjusted gross cost of materials purchased from all sources the sum of $144,887.47 as the total adjusted cost to respondent if appellants had performed as agreed. In this latter figure was a credit to appellants of the sum of $19,992.52 being "Cost of lumber to cover rejected lumber." In arriving at $19,992.52 as the value of rejected lumber, respondent took 15 per cent of the total amount purchased, claiming this to be a percentage arrived at by experience. Appellants claim that this amount should be 23 per cent of a portion and 20 per cent of another portion of the total amount purchased. This contention is based upon a letter written by respondent to the government in which respondent estimated that its loss in this respect was 23 per cent before a certain change order was issued and 20 per cent thereafter. These latter percentages dealt with estimated cost of lumber rejected in connection with pallets delivered to the government. Respondent's figures were the actual cost of rejected lumber in connection with all lumber purchased by respondent. The actual figures of the amount of rejected lumber showed a figure slightly in excess of the 15 per cent. The court accepted respondent's 15 per cent figure, rather than the estimates in the letter. As that percentage is proved correct by the actual figures we see no error in the court's action.

Contrary to appellant's contention the court's figures do not charge Edwards for lumber delivered by Edwards within the specifications of the contract but rejected by the government as not being within its specifications.

5. Refreshing Recollection.

On rebuttal Mincey denied certain conversations in which Israel had testified Mincey consented to the delay by Edwards in performing the contract. Respondent then asked him if there was any fact which refreshed his memory in that connection. He stated that it was a letter written by Campbell to Edwards cancelling the order for nondelivery, and which was not sent because of the witness' request that it be not sent. Appellants moved to strike out the witness' answer. Considerable discussion between court and counsel resulted as to whether or not the letter was admissible in evidence. Finally the court ruled that the letter was not admissible but that the witness' answer might stand, and that his reference to the letter was solely for the purpose of refreshing his memory. The limitation placed upon the answer by the court was such that the witness' statement as to what was in the letter was no proof of the facts therein stated. We see no error in the court's ruling.

6. Award and Prayer.

[9-12] Campbell's complaint originally prayed for $11,087.53 damages. Campbell was permitted to amend to conform to the proof and to pray for $30,079.96 damages.

The court awarded Campbell $13,123.14 and denied Edwards recovery on its complaint which prayed for $27,357.25. In arriving at the figure of $13,123.14 the court found that the gross figure that Edwards owed Campbell was $36,691.76 but that Edwards was entitled to a set-off of $23,568.62. Appellants contend that thereby respondent recovered judgment in excess of the $30,079.96 prayed for and that the court should have given appellants judgment for $23,568.62 on its complaint and respondent judgment for $36,691.76 on its complaint. This is a rather involved and far fetched contention. It would have been ridiculous for the court to grant two judgments in this case. Where actions are consolidated there should be only one set of findings and conclusions of law and one judgment. Even if there were two sets this court would consider them as one. See Wolfson v. Beatty, 1953, 118 Cal.App.2d 392, 257 P.2d 1017; Clinton v. Hogan, 1947, 80 Cal.App.2d 815, 183 P.2d 50. Issues between the same parties should not be decided piecemeal in the same litigation but should be settled in one finding and one judgment. Blume v. MacGregor, 1944, 64 Cal.App.2d 244, 249, 148 P.2d 656 (cross-complaint). Moreover, the trial court could not have given judgment in favor of each party as each one charged the other with breach of the same contract. Appellants' right to a judgment could have been based only upon a finding that respondent breached the contract. The court found to the contrary; hence, appellants' rights were limited to offsets and not to damages. The procedure contended for by appellants would result in contradictory findings and judgments.

The judgment is affirmed in the sum of $12,698.14. Respondent will recover costs.

Hearing Denied Dec. 3, 1958.

Child, by his guardian ad litem, brought action under the Public Liability Act against city for injuries sustained in fall from pipeline on side of bridge, which had no pedestrian walkway, when child was allegedly endeavoring to disentangle himself from barbed wire barricade in center of pipeline. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Fred Miller, J., entered judgment in favor of the child, and the city appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that evidence sustained the verdict and that Superior Court did not err in refusing city's requested instructions that child was a licensee or trespasser, as a matter of law, and that duty owed by city to child was only the duty owed to a licensee or trespasser, since measure of care to be exercised by owners of private property is not the measure of care required by the Public Liability Act.

Judgment affirmed.

Walhfred Jacobson, City Atty., Long Beach, John R. Nimocks, Deputy City Atty., Palo Alto, for appellant.

Wise, Kilpatrick & Pulley, George E. Wise, Long Beach, for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Defendant City of Long Beach appeals from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, Daniel Claude Gallipo, a minor, by his guardian ad litem, Claude W. Gallipo, who is also his father.

The action was occasioned by injuries to plaintiff, including permanent brain damage, suffered because of his fall from the defendant's California Street Bridge when he was eight years old. A former trial resulted in a nonsuit and judgment for defendant, which was reversed on appeal. 146 Cal.App.2d 520, 304 P.2d 106. Hearing was denied by the Supreme Court.

The instant appeal is upon two grounds: (1) Insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict; and (2) Error of the court in refusing requested instructions.

Appellant, in its opening brief, states that "At pages 523-525 of the former decision [146 Cal.App.2d 520, 304 P.2d 106] is a fairly complete statement of the facts presented on the first trial. * * * Additional testimony of witnesses was presented herein." Appellant's contention is that the additional testimony at the second trial as to plaintiff's position after his fall materially changes the facts from those before the court at the first trial.

For purposes of clarity in our consideration of appellant's contention as to the effect of such additional evidence, we will first review the facts stated on the former appeal and so approved by appellant. The following excerpts are quoted from pages 523-525 of Gallipo v. City of Long Beach, 146 Cal.App.2d 520, 304 P.2d 107:

"* * * The vehicular highway is a paved street which narrows down at the bridge entrance. The bridge spans a railroad right of way, with a drop of about 25 feet to the ground below at its highest point. There is a wooden railing on each side of the vehicular portion of the bridge. The roadway approaching the bridge has no sidewalks, nor is there any pedestrian passageway along the bridge. Adjacent to the lower railing on the west side of the bridge, and running parallel to and almost horizontal with it over the railroad right of way, is a pipeline about one foot in diameter. This pipeline, which is just outside the bridge railing, is attached to the bridge by a supporting structure, a part of which consists of two horizontal planks, one on each side of the pipe. The plank nearest the roadway extends the full length of the bridge; the outer plank extends from the south end of the bridge northward about three-fourths the length of the bridge. There is no barrier at either end of the approaches to the bridge or pipeline to prevent pedestrians from walking upon the pipeline or the two beams flanking it and attempting to cross over in that manner. The grass alongside the bridge has been flattened and beaten into what appears to be a defined path leading up to the pipeline structure. However, near the center of the bridge and outside the west railing there are two parallel 2" x 4" beams about 5 feet apart which connect the bridge and pipeline structure. The beams slant across the pipeline to form an obstacle to passage. They are attached at one end to the outer wooden beam beside the pipeline and at the other near the top of the bridge railing. Several strands of barbed wire were loosely strung between the two boards and dangled over the edges.

"* * * The defendant city has operated and maintained the bridge and its appurtenances since 1924. The roadway portion of the bridge, which is approximately 20 feet wide, constitutes a two-lane arterial street used by north-south vehicular traffic, and carries several thousand vehicles daily.

"Mr. Gilkerson, defendant's City Engineer, testified that the bridge in question is the only one in the city upon which no provision has been made for pedestrian crossing. He stated that he had personally seen children on the bridge 'quite frequently,' but not on the pipeline. * * * Asked whether, at the time of the accident, he regarded the bridge as dangerous or defective for pedestrians, he replied: 'Only to the extent that it was narrow, and it would be necessary or desirable certainly for pedestrians not to attempt to cross with the vehicles.' * * *

" * * * Asked whether the bridge was a hazard to pedestrians, Mr. Dier (defendant's traffic engineer) responded: 'I would say it would depend on the pedestrians and the motor vehicles approaching, I would say that it might be safe for a person to cross. It would depend on certain conditions and on the actions of both the pedestrian and the motorist.'"

The additional testimony given at the second trial, and relied upon by defendant as such a material change in the factual situation as to preclude the application of the doctrine of the law of the case, was given by Mr. Gallipo and Mr. Pickler.

Mr. Gallipo, the plaintiff's father, testified that the boy's position on the ground was 6 feet south of the southernmost rail of the tracks and 13 feet to the west of the pipe alongside the bridge from which he fell. Mr. Pickler, a member of the train crew who came upon the scene shortly after the accident, and who went to plaintiff's house and brought his father to the scene, testified that the boy's position on the ground was 5-6 feet south of the south rail and 12-14 feet west of the pipeline. He further testified that the boy had not been moved after he came upon the scene. Neither Mr. Gallipo or Mr. Pickler was a witness at the first trial.

It is appellant's contention that this new evidence so places the boy after the fall that it is physically impossible that he could have fallen while trying to disentangle his trousers cuff from the barbed wire barricade near the center of the bridge. Bobby Sims, plaintiff's nephew who was five at the time of the accident, testified at both trials that he saw plaintiff so entangled in the barbed wire just before his fall. Appellant urges on this appeal that Bobby's testimony as to the place from which plaintiff fell is not sufficient to support a finding that plaintiff's injury was occasioned by defendant's negligence in maintaining the barbed wire barrier at the center of the bridge for the reason that Bobby's testimony is inherently improbable and contrary to the "undisputed physical facts",—the plaintiff's position when seen by the witnesses Gallipo and Pickler. This contention is based on the theory that had plaintiff fallen from the spot where Bobby testified that he saw plaintiff trying to untangle his pants from the barbed wire he could not have landed where the witnesses Gallipo and Pickler saw plaintiff after the accident. It is appellant's contention that plaintiff must have fallen from a point on the pipeline some 10 or 12 feet short of the barbed wire where he was seen by Steven Hunter, a seven-year-old friend; and that plaintiff, falling from that spot, "struck the bank and rolled down the bank to the position where he was" when seen by the witnesses Gallipo and Pickler.

Plaintiff's memory of the fall was blacked out by his head injury. There is in the record no testimony of any witness who saw where he landed when he fell. Steven, Bobby and another child were there. None saw plaintiff fall and none saw him hit the ground. No witness testified that he watched plaintiff from the time he hit the ground until the witnesses Pickler and Gallipo saw him at the spot located on the photographic exhibits. After plaintiff's fall, the children heard the train coming and ran to meet it and stop it because they feared the side of the train would bump the plaintiff. When Pickler, a trainman, saw plaintiff he had Bobby show him where plaintiff lived and then came back to the spot with Mr. Gallipo and Bobby. Mr. Pickler did not believe plaintiff had been moved.

[1,2] Where the evidence is conflicting as in the instant action, the jury was warranted in believing, as they probably did, the testimony of Bobby that just before his fall plaintiff was trying to untangle his pants cuff from the barbed wire. Plaintiff could have landed in the spot where he would have fallen from the barbed wire barricade, and either crawled, rolled, or been moved to the place where the witnesses Pickler and Gallipo later saw him. Moving uphill is not as easy as downhill, but it can be done. From the evidence adduced at the trial we are persuaded it cannot be said that an inference that Dannie fell while trying to release his pants from the barbed wire can be characterized as either improbable or unlikely. Nor can such a stricture be justly applied to the deduction that Dannie moved or was moved from the particular spot upon which he landed. When any testimony believed by the trier of the facts relates events which are not completely contrary to human experience or would seem physically possible, the judgment cannot be reversed on appeal on the ground that such testimony is inherently unbelievable. Kircher v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 32 Cal.2d 176, 183, 184, 195 P.2d 427.

[3] The remaining ground urged by appellant for reversal is that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury either that plaintiff was a licensee or trespasser as a matter of law, and what duty was owed by defendant to plaintiff as such; or, at the minimum, the status of the plaintiff as trespasser or licensee should have been submitted to the jury under proper instructions for their determination as a question of fact. It is their contention that, while most of the decisions involving the requested instructions to the jury involve the private ownership of the land upon which the injury occurred, the duty of the landowner "differs in no respect whether the landowner is a private one or a public body". As authority for the last statement, appellant cites Demmer v. City of Eureka, 78 Cal.App.2d 708, 178 P.2d 472, and Van Winkle v. City of King, 149 Cal.App.2d 500, 308 P.2d 512.

The decision in Demmer v. City of Eureka, supra, affirmed a judgment for defendants after the sustaining of a general demurrer to the complaint and plaintiff's failure to amend.

There three children, 9 and 10 years of age, were walking along Buhne Street. During a storm a few days before, a large portion of the fill which was Buhne Street had fallen off, clogged the drain beneath the fill, and caused the storm waters to form a pond 30 feet deep covering the portion of Buhne Street from which the fill had fallen and the adjoining property. A log 3 feet in diameter and about 6 feet long was floating on the portion of the pond in the street. The children climbed from the street onto the log, and paddled out over the adjoining property, where the minor son of the plaintiff fell off and drowned.

It was there stated that the child was not a trespasser while on Buhne Street; that he was not injured while using Buhne Street in the customary manner; that he left the highway upon which he had been walking and used the pond as a plaything; that a pond is not an attractive nuisance; and that the log in the pond did not make it one. The city was not liable to plaintiff for the death of his minor son for the reason that " * * * the Legislature intended to limit the liability of the city for damages resulting from defective streets, works, or property to damages suffered in the ordinary, usual, and customary use thereof." 78 Cal.App.2d at page 713, 178 P.2d at page 475.

In the instant action there was testimony that the property for many years before the accident had been in the same condition, that both adults and children had crossed the bridge on the pipeline for some years prior to plaintiff's accident, that such crossings had worn a path in the grass or weeds connecting with both ends of the pipeline, that the bridge had no pedestrian walkway, that it was so narrow as to be unsafe for pedestrians when automobiles were using it, and that thousands of automobiles and many pedestrians crossed it daily. Plaintiff's use of the public property in the instant action was neither extraordinary or unusual as was the use of the street by the decedent in the Demmer case, supra.

Van Winkle v. City of King, supra, reversed a judgment after verdict and orders denying motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Plaintiff-respondent's son, Philip, who was then 2 years 10 months of age, went with larger children to the defendant's sewage disposal plant, went onto one of the rock filter beds, threw rocks from it into the nearby pools, then fell into a pool and drowned. It was there said that the child was a trespasser, that the sewage disposal plant was not intended to be used by the public, that defendant was not aware that either sightseers or children ever visited the plant, that pools of water are not attractive nuisances, and that a ladder, boat or springboard in a pool does not make it an attractive nuisance. No defective condition of public property was there involved.

In the instant action, at the request of both plaintiff and defendant, the jury was instructed that "Plaintiff's cause of action, if any he has, against the defendant, City of Long Beach, is based upon and must meet the requirements of a law of this state known as the Public Liability Act * * *."

[4] It has heretofore been decided that the measure of care to be exercised by owners of private property is not the measure of care required by the Public Liability Act (Govt.Code, Sec. 53050 et seq.). Gibson v. County of Mendocino, 16 Cal.2d 80, 84, 85, 105 P.2d 105, 107. As was said in the case just cited, quoting from the case of Castro v. Sutter Creek Union High School District, 25 Cal.App.2d 372, 377, 77 P.2d 509: "* * * the provisions of the section [Public Liability Act, supra] 'base liability upon any act which leaves a place or condition dangerous or defective and liable to cause some injury to the general public'". The act is designed not for the safety, particularly, either of licensees or invitees.

[5] One crossing a public bridge for any personal or private purpose is entitled to find the bridge in the same condition as is one crossing the bridge to perform a public duty. Gibson v. County of Mendocino, supra, 16 Cal.2d at pages 84, 85, 105 P.2d at page 107.

The judgment is affirmed.

Prosecution for robbery and conspiracy to rob. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, C. Harold Caulfield, J., rendered judgment convicting defendant as an habitual criminal, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that where defendant's conviction as an habitual criminal depended upon proof of the nature of foreign convictions, sentence as an habitual criminal was improper where documents concerning foreign convictions were not properly authenticated and were merely presented to the trial judge at the time of sentencing, without giving defendant an opportunity to question the correctness or legal competence of the authentication of the documents.

Judgment reversed in part and cause remanded with directions.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

Convicted of first degree robbery, committed while armed with a deadly weapon, and of conspiracy to commit robbery, with four prior convictions, (one in Oklahoma in 1947 and three in California in 1951),<sup>1</sup> defendant was found by the trial court to be "a habitual criminal." Defendant questions this finding.

It is true that the indictment charged the Oklahoma conviction and the defendant admitted "as true the prior conviction of Felony of the date of September 4, 1947, as charged * * *." However, it does not appear from the charge itself whether he was convicted of a crime which is specified by section 644 as one which is used as a basis for determining that a person is "a habitual criminal"; especially in view of the fact that the Oklahoma statute includes in its definition of burglary the doing of certain acts which would not constitute burglary in California under our statutes.

[1] For example, Oklahoma defines burglary as breaking into and entering a dwelling house in which there is at the time some human being "with intent to commit some crime therein"; burglary in the second degree as doing this in the day time, or in the night time, breaking an inner door or part of the house after entering lawfully or through an aperture not made by the defendant "with intent to commit any crime" or breaking and entering into certain other buildings "with intent to steal therein or to commit any felony." 21 Okl. St. Ann. §§ 1431, 1432, 1433, 1434, 1435. Accordingly, such an entry for the purpose of committing a mere misdemeanor, any misdemeanor, would amount to burglary in Oklahoma; whereas, under California law, "petit larceny" is the only misdemeanor included in such a category. Pen.Code, § 459.

[2] Accordingly, proof of the nature of this particular conviction (for example, whether or not it involved an entry for the purpose of committing a misdemeanor other than petit larceny) was necessary as a predicate to determination that defendant is a habitual criminal. The record indicates that such proof was tendered in this case by means of certain documents which the district attorney presented to

1. The three prior California priors were tried together. Only one qualifies as a prior conviction "upon charges separately

the trial judge. They consisted of certified photostatic copies of informations and commitment papers, guilty pleas of the defendant to those charges, and his commitment to the Oklahoma state penitentiary; also, a letter from the county attorney of Tulsa county, Oklahoma, to the district attorney of San Francisco outlining the details of the Oklahoma crimes. From these documents it would appear that each of the Oklahoma burglaries would have been a burglary under section 459 if committed in California. The entry in each case was for the purpose of stealing "certain personal property of value." That, at least, was a charge of an entry for the purpose of committing petit larceny.

[3] However, these documents were not authenticated in the manner prescribed by section 1905, Code of Civil Procedure, nor by production of the originals as sanctioned by People v. Wilson, 100 Cal.App. 397, 400, 280 P. 137, nor by authenticated copies of the judgments and testimony identifying the defendant (People v. Wilson, 103 Cal. App. 420, 423-424, 284 P. 988), nor in the manner provided by section 969, subdivision b, Penal Code. The respondent argues that section 969, subdivision b, has been satisfied, because the documents include a copy of the warden's receipt. The receipt is not a certification.

Moreover, the documents were merely presented to the trial judge by the district attorney at the time of sentencing. There is no indication in the record that defendant was at any time given an opportunity to question the correctness or legal competence of the authentication of the documents mentioned. Such an opportunity should have been afforded him.

Respondent says that because defendant admitted the Oklahoma priors as charged, there was no place during the trial where the admission of these documents in evidence would have been pertinent; indeed, their admission would have been prejudicially erroneous, citing Penal Code, sections 1025 and 1093.<sup>2</sup> Accordingly, says respondent, "what else could the trial judge do but accept the documents as he did in this case, inspect them to make sure the defendant was convicted of a crime which if committed in California would have been burglary under the laws of * * * California." That is not the production of evidence nor is it confrontation of the defendant with the purported "evidence" tendered, upon an issue of pivotal importance in the case. The habitual criminal, under the circumstances of this case, would be sentenced to imprisonment for life. Pen. Code, § 644. People v. Morton, 41 Cal.2d 536, 541-545, 261 P.2d 523, demonstrates that here we are not dealing with some trivial, inconsequential detail of procedure; instead, it is a matter of such great import, a formal adjudication is required.

[4] In such a case the established procedure is to reverse the judgment in part and remand for retrial of issues limited to those which pertain to the question whether or not defendant is a habitual criminal. People v. Taylor, 155 Cal.App. 2d 26, 317 P.2d 167; hearing by Supreme Court denied.

[5] We note in passing that if the retrial results in a determination that defendant is a habitual criminal and a life sentence is imposed, all other terms should run concurrently with the life term, not consecutively as heretofore adjudged herein. Pen.Code, § 669; People v. Tucker, 127 Cal.App.2d 436, 437, 273 P.2d 934.

The part of the judgment adjudging defendant a habitual criminal and imposing sentence is reversed and the cause is remanded with directions to resentence defendant after the conclusion of the limited new trial on the issue of the challenged prior convictions.

PETERS, P. J., and BRAY, J., concur.

2. Such evidence is not to be presented to the jury but only to the judge at or prior to the time of fixing sentence.

v.

Louis F. CHIODO, Chiodo Candy Co., a corporation, et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 17704.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 31, 1958.

Action for specific performance of alleged contract to sell real estate. The Superior Court, County of Alameda, Richard H. Chamberlain, J., entered judgment for defendant and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that where plaintiff gave broker written offer in form of a standard deposit receipt and agent acknowledged deposit by agreement that offer was subject to a net net net lease for a period of 25 years at a net net rent of so much per annum and addendum was attached to the deposit receipt providing that it was mutually understood that the validity of proposed agreement was subject to and conditioned upon parties agreeing and reducing to writing all terms and conditions necessary and incidental to validity of proposed agreement, there was no final contract subject to specific performance.

Whether writing constitutes a final agreement or merely an agreement to make an agreement depends primarily upon the intention of the parties and in absence of ambiguity this must be determined by construction of the instrument taken as a whole.

2. Contracts ⇨32

Where all essential terms of agreement are definitely agreed upon in writing, there is a binding contract even though there is an intention that a formal writing will be executed later.

3. Contracts ⇨32

Where any of the terms are left for future determination or where there is manifest intention that formal agreement is not to be complete until reduced to a formal writing to be executed, there is no binding contract until this is done.

4. Vendor and Purchaser ⇨21

Where written standard form of deposit receipt for money given in connection with written offer to purchase realty recited that the "validity" of the proposed agreement was subject to and conditioned upon parties agreeing upon and reducing to writing all terms and conditions necessary, by use of term validity, it would appear that parties plainly indicated that agreement was not to be legally effective until reduced to formal writing.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Validity".

5. Specific Performance ⇨31

Where owner of realty employed broker to sell same subject to lease back to owner and broker contacted prospective purchaser who gave a written offer in the form of a standard deposit receipt but before offer was accepted by owner an addendum was attached to receipt stating that it was mutually understood and agreed by and between the parties that the validity of proposed agreement would be subject to, and conditioned upon parties agreeing upon and reducing to writing all terms and conditions necessary and incidental to validity of proposed agreement, there was no final contract of sale upon which prospective purchaser was entitled to specific performance. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 2956.

Lewis P. May, Andrew P. Costelli, Russell W. Federspiel, Oakland, for respondents.

BRAY, Justice.

In this appeal by plaintiff from an adverse judgment in an action (1) for specific performance, or, in the alternative, damages, and (2) for declaratory relief, plaintiff raises many questions which, however, become moot if the trial court's finding to the effect that there was no final contract between the parties is supported. This question, in turn, depends upon whether the purported contract shows on its face that it was not intended to be a final contract.

The Undisputed Facts.

Defendant Chido Candy Company, a corporation, owns the property in question. To raise additional capital it decided to offer the real property for sale subject to a lease back to it. In May, 1955, defendant Louis Chido, president, director and general manager of the company, admittedly acting with authority, employed real estate brokers McLean and Korematsu to sell the property. The sale price, which included "equipment and chattels as per inventory to come," was $550,000, all cash or "Cash and trade acceptable to Seller." "No sale shall be made unless the Seller completes a satisfactory lease back * * * on terms and conditions acceptable to Seller." The brokers called in a third broker, Jacobson, to help find a purchaser. Jacobson brought the property to plaintiff's attention. Plaintiff gave Jacobson a written offer dated June 16, 1955, in the form of a standard deposit receipt. In it Jacobson, "agent," acknowledged receipt from plaintiff of $2500 as a deposit on account of the purchase price of $250,000 for the real property alone, balance to be paid within 60 days from date of acceptance by seller. "This offer is subject to a net net net lease for a period of twenty-five (25) years by sellers at a net net rent of $27,500.00 per annum * * *." (Emphasis added.) The lease was to be secured by a chattel mortgage on personal property used in the operation of the plant. "This offer is subject to satisfactory financing to be obtained by the purchaser at his own cost, effort and expense." It was stipulated that Jacobson was plaintiff's agent for the purpose of submitting the offer. Plaintiff gave Jacobson a $2,500 check payable to California Pacific Title Company as a deposit. Jacobson retained the check and still retains it. He testified that it is customary on sales of industrial property for the broker to retain the deposit check until the offer is accepted. It is then placed in escrow with the seller's escrow instructions.

Before Chido accepted the offer the following addendum was attached to it: "It is further mutually understood and agreed by and between the parties to this agreement that the validity of said proposed agreement is subject and conditioned upon the parties agreeing upon and reducing to writing all terms and conditions necessary and incidental to the validity of said proposed agreement; and that seller shall pay total real estate commission of 5% upon completion of said sale." Plaintiff signed the addendum. Thereafter negotiations between the parties continued in relation to the price for the property and the security for the lease. A higher price with a correspondingly higher rent was suggested, as well as a cash deposit or bond in lieu of the chattel mortgage since there already was a chattel mortgage on the plant equipment. Eventually Chido notified plaintiff that the property was being taken off the market. Plaintiff notified defendants that he was ready, able and willing to complete the purchase, and then filed suit.

Was There a Final Contract?

The court found that the deposit receipt was not intended by the parties to be an expression of the meeting of their minds and was but one step in negotiations which ultimately failed; that the receipt is not sufficiently definite or certain to be capable of specific performance, and that it does not specify all the terms of the lease and chattel mortgage which the parties thereto intended be established before either party would be obligated; that its terms are not shown by the evidence to be capable of being established by custom or by reference to any other document. These findings are supported (1) by the document itself, and (2) by the fact that if the receipt does not show on its face that it was not final, then it is ambiguous, parol evidence was admissible to explain it, and such evidence although it might support conclusions to the contrary, fully supports the court's conclusions.

The Receipt Itself.

[1-3] It provides that the offer is subject to a "net net net" lease and that the "validity of said proposed agreement is subject and conditioned upon the parties agreeing upon and reducing to writing all terms and conditions necessary and incidental to the validity of said proposed agreement * * *." Whether a writing constitutes a final agreement or merely an agreement to make an agreement depends primarily upon the intention of the parties. In the absence of ambiguity this must be determined by a construction of the instrument taken as a whole. See Pacific Improvement Co. v. Jones, 1912, 164 Cal. 260, 263, 128 P. 404; Gavina v. Smith, 25 Cal.2d 501, 503, 154 P.2d 681. Where all of the essential terms of an agreement are definitely agreed upon in the writing there is a binding contract even though there is an intention that a formal writing will be executed later. See Pacific Improvement Co. v. Jones, supra; Gavina v. Smith, supra. The intent of the parties is to be determined by an objective standard and not by the unexpressed state of mind of the parties. King v. Stanley, 1948, 32 Cal. 2d 584, 591, 197 P.2d 321. Where any of the terms are left for future determination or there is a manifest intention that the formal agreement is not to be complete until reduced to a formal writing to be executed, there is no binding contract until this is done. Store Properties, Inc., v. Neal, 1945, 72 Cal.App.2d 112, 116, 164 P.2d 38.

Having in mind these rules, the receipt, were it not for the addendum, probably shows mutual assent to all the essential elements necessary for a valid contract.<sup>1</sup> There are primarily three parts to the agreement, namely purchase and sale of real property, lease back and chattel mortgage. The portion dealing with the real property contained all the necessary elements. See King v. Stanley, supra, 32 Cal. 2d 584, 197 P.2d 321. The portion dealing with the lease, with the exception of the "net net net" and "net net" references, probably embodied the essential terms of a lease as prescribed in Levin v. Saroff, 54 Cal.App. 285, 289, 201 P. 961.<sup>2</sup>

[4, 5] As to the "net net" references, we will assume for the moment that they were well understood terms. The portion dealing with the chattel mortgage contains the names of the proposed mortgagor and mortgagee, the description of the property to be mortgaged and a description of the obligation secured (the performance of the lease by lessee). This probably was a sufficient description of the proposed mortgage. See Civ.Code, § 2956; 10 Cal.Jur.2d § 20, p. 296. Therefore, if the addendum shows no more than an intent to further reduce the informal writing to a more formal one, there may have been a binding agreement and plaintiff might have been entitled, if not to specific performance, to damages. However, in construing the receipt and the addendum as a whole (and

1. It did not set forth all the incidental matters which necessarily would have been included in the final document.

2. As to the above mentioned references, plaintiff contends that the third "net" was merely a clerical error, and that the parties understood that "net net" meant that the tenant pays rent plus taxes, insurance and maintenance. But the Bank of America representative testified it is a common term. Defendants' auditor testified that prior to the signing of the receipt by defendant Chiodo broker McLean explained to Chiodo that the term was used in standard real estate practice and meant as contended by plaintiff. On the other hand, the auditor stated that broker Korematsu, in the same conversation, told Chiodo that he thought the term did not include maintenance.

they are but one document) it appears that it was not intended to be and was not a binding agreement. It is only necessary to quote the language of the addendum to show that the parties intended and agreed not to be bound until a formal written contract was executed. It states "\ * * the validity of said proposed agreement is subject and conditioned upon the parties agreeing upon and reducing to writing all terms and conditions necessary and incidental to the validity of said proposed agreement * * **" (Emphasis added.) Plaintiff contends that the word "validity" was used to mean not repugnant to some statute or public policy rather than to mean not binding. However, this narrow meaning is contrary to the general meaning. Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary, 2d Ed., defines "valid" as "Founded on truth of fact; capable of being justified, supported, or defended; well-grounded; sound. Efficient; effective. Having legal strength or force." Black's Law Dictionary, 4th Ed., states: "Having legal strength or force, executed with proper formalities, incapable of being rightfully overthrown or set aside. Of binding force; legally sufficient or efficacious; authorized by law. Good or sufficient in point of law; sustainable and effective in law, as distinguished from that which exists or took place in fact or appearance, but has not the requisites to enable it to be recognized and enforced by law." It would seem, therefore, that the use of the term plainly indicates that the agreement was not to be legally effective. And "all terms and conditions necessary and incidental" which were to be reduced to writing clearly shows that it was intended that a formal contract had to be executed before the parties became bound. Even though the informal agreement might have contained all the essential elements of a contract, the addendum conditioned validity on a formal document which would contain all the incidental terms.

The terms of the addendum showing that regardless of what had been agreed upon in the receipt, there was to be no binding agreement until the later agreement was agreed upon and reduced to writing, distinguishes this case from those like Pacific Improvement Co. v. Jones, supra, 164 Cal. 260, 128 P. 404; Fly v. Cline, 49 Cal.App. 414, 193 P. 615; Levin v. Saroff, supra, 54 Cal.App. 285, 201 P. 961, and Gavina v. Smith, supra, 25 Cal.2d 501, 154 P.2d 681, cited by plaintiff and which held that the mere fact that a formal writing was to follow, did not make the first agreement not binding where in it all essential terms had been agreed upon. Here it was expressly provided that the agreement could not be binding until even the "incidental" matters which the courts have held need not in the absence of such an agreement be inserted in the first writing, were agreed upon.

As the agreement in the absence of explanation shows that it was not intended to be the complete agreement of the parties, we deem it unnecessary to consider the claimed errors in the admission of evidence to explain the agreement except to say that most of the evidence now objected to was either brought out by plaintiff or not objected to by him.

Again, as there was no agreement it is unnecessary to determine whether the court's findings on the following subjects were supported: (1) that broker Jacobson was plaintiff's agent alone; (2) that no escrow was opened; (3) that plaintiff was not ready, able and willing to perform; (4) that there was a lack of mutuality; (5) findings on the question of damages including the finding that defendants did not act in bad faith.

Harry A. Jackson, Jr., San Francisco, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., Raymond M. Momboise, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Defendant James Bates was charged and convicted, after a trial before the court without a jury, of illegal possession of heroin. Defendant appeals from the judgment of conviction. His basic contention is that the uncontradicted evidence of his guilt was secured by an illegal search and seizure and was therefore inadmissible against him. There is no merit in the contention.

On and prior to September 16, 1957, one George Kostrikin had been under surveillance by the federal and county narcotic officers. Shortly before noon on September 16, 1957, the police observed defendant sitting in an automobile with one Swinger in front of a bowling alley on Mission Street, in San Francisco. Kostrikin entered the Swinger car, and that automobile was then driven about a block from the bowling alley and Kostrikin got out, walked back to his car and drove away. Bates and Swinger then also drove away. Later that afternoon Kostrikin was arrested for a narcotics offense.

The police knew where Kostrikin was living with one Nancy Francis. On the evening of September 16, 1957, four police officers proceeded to that apartment. One of the inspectors, Kerrigan by name, knew Miss Francis, and, when she came to the door, Kerrigan introduced her to the other officers and told her that they wanted to talk with her. Miss Francis invited the officers into the apartment. There was another unidentified young lady there.

It should be mentioned that Kerrigan was not a witness at the trial, but Daniel Casey and James Steffensen, narcotic agents, were. Casey testified that Kerrigan told the officers, in the presence of Miss Francis, that he had known her for several years, that she had cooperated with the police department in the past, and that her services had proven very reliable. The other officers, with the exception of Kerrigan, had had no prior experience with Miss Francis.

Both Casey and Steffensen testified that after the officers entered the apartment Miss Francis cooperated wholeheartedly with the police, and that no force or compulsion was used against her. Miss Francis was not placed under arrest.

Casey testified that he and Officer Kerrigan went into the kitchen of the apartment with Miss Francis. Kerrigan told her that Kostrikin had been arrested for a narcotic violation, and asked her if she would tell them what she knew about Kostrikin and his associates. Miss Francis stated that she would cooperate. In response to questions from the officers she stated that she knew James Bates, and knew that he was a runner or peddler for Kostrikin. She said that Kostrikin would give Bates narcotics on consignment and, after Bates sold them, he would bring the money to Kostrikin. She then stated that she knew that that very morning Bates had been given some narcotics by Kostrikin on Mission Street in front of the Sportsman's Bowl. This was the very transaction observed by the officers earlier that day. Miss Francis also told the officers that Bates customarily kept the narcotics on his person and did not usually leave them at his residence. She did not know where Bates lived, but she did know that he spent a lot of time at Ray Swinger's house. She agreed to introduce an undercover agent to Bates in an attempt to develop a case against him.

At about this stage of the conversation the telephone in the apartment rang. Miss Francis answered it and agent Steffenson monitored the call by listening at the earpiece held by Miss Francis. Steffensen heard the voice at the other end of the line say: "This is Bates. I understand George has been busted. I have got stuff on me. What will I do with it?" The person also stated that he was calling from Swinger's house. At the direction of the officers Miss Francis told Bates to stay where he was and that she would call him back. At this time two additional officers had arrived, so that there were six officers in the apartment.

Bates testified and admitted that he had telephoned to Kostrikin's apartment that day and had talked with Nancy. He stated that he had learned that Kostrikin had been arrested and called to ask about him. He testified that Nancy told him that George was then out and would be right back. Bates asked Nancy to have George call Ray's house when he returned. He did not tell Nancy that he had some "stuff."

Miss Francis, who did not testify, had a police record and had been an addict.

The police officers then proceeded to Ray Swinger's house, the address of which was known to them. Mrs. Swinger came to the door and admitted them. From the door the officers could see Bates seated in a chair. The police came in and placed Bates under arrest. The chair in which he was sitting was searched and an envelope containing a hypodermic outfit and 19 bindles of heroin were found. Bates then stated: "I don't want to get these other people in trouble. That stuff is mine."

The officers did not have a warrant to arrest Bates or a warrant to search the Swingers' premises.

[1,2] Appellant challenges the validity of his arrest and search, contending that the information gained from Nancy Francis was not a sufficient basis to constitute reasonable cause for the arrest without a warrant. Under Penal Code section 836, subdivision 3, an officer may lawfully arrest a person without a warrant when the officer has reasonable cause* to believe that the person has committed a felony. In the instant case we think the finding that reasonable cause existed is amply supported.

[3-6] In the first place, it is now settled law that reasonable cause to justify an arrest or search may consist of information gained from others, and is not limited to evidence that would be admissible at the trial on the issue of guilt. People v. King, 140 Cal.App.2d 1, 294 P.2d 972; Willson v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 291, 294 P.2d 36.

The test is, did the officer have reasonable cause to make the arrest—would a reasonable man, possessing the information possessed by the officer, reasonably believe that the person involved had committed a felony? This information may be, and usually is, evidence that would be hearsay on the issue of guilt. It may consist of information obtained from an informant known to the officer to be reliable and whom the officer in good faith believes to be trustworthy. People v. Rixner, 157 Cal.App.2d 387, 321 P.2d 91, and cases there cited. In most cases the informant must not only be known to the officer, but the officer must have had sufficient dealings with the informant to give him reasonable cause to believe that the informant is reliable and that the information given by him is truthful. It is only in the case of a pressing emergency that an arrest or search without warrants may be justified based upon information secured from an anonymous informant, or from an informant not known to the officer to be reliable. Willson v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 291, 294 P.2d 36.

These rules are well settled. It is also well settled that in the absence of a pressing emergency, the officer may not properly arrest or search a person based upon information gained from an informant not known to the arresting officer, or, if known, not known from past experience to have been a source of tested reliable information. People v. Dewson, 150 Cal.App.2d 119, 310 P.2d 162. It is this rule that the appellant seeks to apply here. He correctly points out that the arresting officers, or at least those who testified, were Casey and Steffensen, and that they admitted that until they met Miss Francis in the apartment they did not know her nor had they any prior experiences with her. Appellant also correctly points out that there was no pressing emergency. Hence, it is argued, the arresting officers had no reasonable grounds to make the arrest and search without a warrant.

The argument is unsound. The evidence shows that Officer Kerrigan had known Miss Francis for several years, and that he knew her to be a person who had been cooperative with the police in the past and who, on numerous occasions, had given information which had proved to be reliable. Officer Kerrigan, who was one of the officers present in the apartment and one of the arresting party, told these facts to Casey and Steffensen in the Kostrikin apartment in the presence of Miss Francis. Of course, had Kerrigan made the arrest based upon his knowledge and experience with Miss Francis, there could be little doubt that the trial court could have found that Miss Francis was a reliable informant. The facts that Kerrigan was not called as a witness, and that Casey and Steffensen, who did testify, did not know Miss Francis, are immaterial. As long as the informer was known to one of the officers of the arresting party to be reliable, or as long as he communicated the knowledge he had to the other officers in the official line of duty, the rule of the Dewson case is satisfied.

[7] It should also be pointed out that the reliability of the informant may be shown not only by past experience with the informant but also may be substantiated by the proven accuracy of the information given by the informant and which the officers from other sources know is accurate. Willson v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 291, 294 P.2d 36; People v. Holguin, 145 Cal. App.2d 520, 302 P.2d 635. In the instant case Miss Francis not only told the police that appellant was a runner for Kostrikin, but also that Kostrikin had made a delivery to appellant that very morning in front of the named bowling alley on Mission Street. That very morning these officers had observed appellant sitting in Swinger's car in front of that bowling alley, and they had seen Kostrikin enter that car, drive with the other two a short distance and then park, and had seen Kostrikin emerge from the car and go back to his own car, and then had seen both cars drive away. Miss Francis also told the officers that appellant could be found at Swinger's house. Appellant was found there. Thus, much of the information given by Miss Francis was corroborated by this information known by the officers to be correct. Thus, this is not a case like People v. Goodo, 147 Cal.App.2d 7, 304 P.2d 776, relied upon by appellant, where none of the officers had any previous experience with the informer, and where the only actions of the defendant observed by the officers were non-suspicious actions. In the instant case the informant was known to one of the arresting officers to be reliable and that fact was communicated to the other officers, and several of the basic facts given by the informer were known by the arresting officers to be accurate from other sources of information.

It is also contended that under any rational interpretation of the evidence, it must be held that Miss Francis did not voluntarily give the information to the officers. It is pointed out that four officers arrived at her apartment, and shortly thereafter two other officers arrived, so that there were six officers in the apartment when she gave the officers the information. It is pointed out that Miss Francis was not produced as a witness. It is argued that the very presence of six officers in the apartment amounted to coercion.

[8,9] Of course, coercion practiced on an informer is a factor affecting the credibility of the informer, but the present record supports the implied finding of the court that no coercion was practiced on her. The evidence is to the effect that Miss Francis, after being told of the arrest of Kostrikin, freely cooperated with the officers. She went into the kitchen with two of the officers and gave them the information upon which they acted. There is no evidence, or no inference from the evidence, except the fact of the presence of six officers, that Miss Francis was coerced. There is no evidence that she was threatened, placed under arrest, or promised leniency. All of the evidence is to the effect that she voluntarily and freely cooperated. Her name was divulged to the defense. So far as the record shows, the defense made no effort to produce her.

[10,11] The only other point urged by appellant is that some of the information secured by the officers was illegally secured by the officers by monitoring the telephone call from appellant to Miss Francis. It is urged that information so obtained was inadmissible because illegally secured in violation of section 640 of the Penal Code and section 605 of the Federal Communications Act of 1934. (U.S.C.A., Title 47, § 605.) These sections are not applicable where at least one of the participants to the telephone call consents to the overhearing it by the police. People v. Malotte, 46 Cal.2d 59, 292 P.2d 517. In the present case it is a reasonable inference from the evidence that Miss Francis voluntarily consented to the officers monitoring the call. Certainly there is no evidence to the contrary. Thus, the ruling of the trial court that the contents of the conversation were admissible is supported by the record.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 27, 1958.

Hearing Denied Nov. 26, 1958.

Action by personal representatives of lessee and sublessee of sawmill against lessor to recover balance of deposit from which rent was paid under lease, wherein lessor filed cross-complaint to recover damages for breach of covenant of lease to deliver possession of property in same condition as when received. The Superior Court, El Dorado County, Robert E. Roberts, J., entered judgment for representatives of lessees, lessor was denied recovery on his cross-complaint and lessor appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Warne, J. pro tem., held that where lease obligated lessee to pay as rent for mill $3 per 1,000 board feet for all lumber cut and to deposit $10,000 with lessor to apply on rent and to deposit another $5,000 with lessor as soon as the deposit had been reduced to $5,000, the deposit was not intended as prepaid rent but only as security, lessor was obligated to refund any unused portion thereof when no further rent could accrue, either by virtue of expiration of term of lease or destruction of premises.

1. Landlord and Tenant ⇨184(2), 210

Under lease which obligated lessee to pay as rent for mill $3 per 1,000 board feet for all lumber cut and to deposit $10,000 with lessor to apply on rent and to deposit another $5,000 with lessor as soon as the deposit had been reduced to $5,000, the deposit was not intended as prepaid rent but only as security, lessor was obligated to refund any unused portion thereof when no further rent could accrue, either by virtue of expiration of term of lease or destruction of premises and the rule that in absence of a qualifying provision in lease, rent paid in advance will not be apportioned on surrender or termination of lease was not applicable, notwithstanding provision of lease that in event of failure of lessee to cut 250,000 board feet of lumber per week lessee was to pay lessor difference between amount cut and 250,000 board feet at rate of $3 per thousand.

2. Landlord and Tenant ⇨200

Requirement of contract, entered into by lessor and lessee of sawmill, that in event of failure of lessee to cut 250,000 board feet of lumber per week, lessee was to pay lessor difference between amount cut and 250,000 board feet at rate of $3 per thousand, did not contemplate destruction of mill by fire.

3. Landlord and Tenant ⇨160(2)

Provision of lease that lessee shall deliver up possession of mill, all property used in connection therewith and all machinery, equipment and tools in accordance with inventory attached, in same condition as when he received same, and if he fails to do so he shall pay lessor reasonable value of any personal property not delivered up by him as aforesaid and shall pay for any property damaged by him or delivered up in damaged or excessively worn condition, did not make lessee insurer of property.

4. Landlord and Tenant ⇨160(2)

Covenant to deliver up premises in same condition as when received, subject to ordinary and reasonable use and wear and tear and to pay for property not delivered up at end of term, did not contemplate nor include covenant to pay for structure wholly destroyed by fire without fault of lessee.

5. Executors and Administrators ⇨222(1)

Lessor who filed cross complaint to recover rent from destruction of premises by fire to end of term provided for in lease was not entitled to relief against the estate of sublessee where no claim had been presented for allowance to decedent's estate.

6. Executors and Administrators ⇨224

A claim for rent due under a lease is of such nature that it must be presented for allowance to decedent's estate.

7. Appeal and Error ⇨347(2)

Formal entry of judgment of nonsuit elsewhere than in the minutes is not required and time for taking of appeal therefrom begins to run from date of minute order. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 581c.

8. Appeal and Error ⇨356

Where lessor's appeal from judgment in favor of lessee in action to recover balance of deposit from which rent was paid under lease made no reference to order granting nonsuit on cross complaint and time within which lessor could have appealed from said order had expired, appellate court was required to dismiss purported appeal from order.

Forrest E. Macomber and Gordan J. Aulik, Stockton, for appellant.

Brandenburger, White & Dillon, Sacramento, for respondents Dicker & Margolis.

E. R. Vaughn, Sacramento, for respondent Wagner.

Lewis, Lewis & Lewis, Sacramento, for respondent Caplan.

WARNE, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a money judgment in favor of respondents in an action brought to recover the balance of a deposit from which rent was paid under a lease, and also (1) an appeal from the judgment in so far as it denies appellant any relief on his cross-complaint to recover rent from and after the destruction of the premises to the end of the term provided in said lease, and, (2) damages for respondents' alleged breach of a covenant of the lease to deliver possession of the leased premises in the same condition as when they were received, subject to ordinary and reasonable use and wear, though destroyed by fire without fault of the tenant.

On May 29, 1950, appellant leased a sawmill and machinery and equipment to the deceased Ben Caplan for a term commencing on the date of the lease and terminating at the close of the 1952 logging season. The lease provided:

"As rental for said Mill, machinery and equipment, Caplan shall pay unto West the sum of Three and no/100 ($3.00) Dollars per thousand board feet for all lumber cut by him in said Mill, * * * Caplan shall, upon the execution of this Agreement of Lease, deposit the sum of Ten Thousand and no/100 ($10,000.00) Dollars with West, which Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00) shall apply on the rental of said sawmill, as herein set forth. As soon as said sawyer's lists aggregate the sum of Five Thousand and no/100 ($5,000.00) Dollars, calculated at the rate of Three ($3.00) Dollars per thousand board feet, Caplan shall immediately and forthwith deposit another Five Thousand and no/100 ($5,000.00) Dollars with West, to the end that West shall have a deposit of Ten Thousand and no/100 ($10,000.00) Dollars in advance on account of the rental due on said sawmill."

Pursuant to the terms of the lease, Caplan deposited $10,000 with West and took possession of the demised premises. Thereafter, the lessee, Caplan, with West's consent, assigned the lease to Louis Novick, now deceased, who operated the mill under the fictitious name of Lake Mill Lumber Company until it was destroyed by fire on August 17, 1951. Subsequently, in an action to which appellant was not a party, the Superior Court in and for the County of Sacramento entered judgment decreeing the proportionate interests of the respondents in the assets of the Lake Mill Lumber Company, including any claims against appellant arising out of this lease to the deceased, Ben Caplan. Thereafter, respondents brought this action to recover $3,971.26, the balance of the deposit of the prepaid rent at the time of the destruction of the mill and by cross-complaint appellant sought to recover damages for respondents' breach of the covenant of the lease to deliver possession of the property in the same condition as it was when received. The court found that the covenant did not make the lessee an insurer against destruction by fire which was caused other than by want of his ordinary care. The court further found that the lease was terminated by operation of law on August 17, 1951, that is, as of the date of the fire. Judgment in the amount of $3,971.26 was entered in favor of respondents, and appellant was denied recovery on his cross-complaint.

[1] Appellant takes the position that the $10,000 deposit required by the terms of the lease was prepaid rent, and that the trial court erred in allowing the respondents to recover the proportionate unused portion thereof.

As stated in Friedman v. Isenbruck, 111 Cal.App.2d 326, 335, 244 P.2d 718, 723:

"It is a harsh but well settled rule that, in the absence of a qualifying provision in the lease, rent will not be apportioned, that is, where rent is paid in advance, a lawful surrender or termination during the prepaid period does not entitle the lessee to a proportional rebate. Rent does not accrue from day to day, but accrues on the day it is payable. [Citing cases.] This rule applies where the premises have been destroyed and the lease is thus terminated. C. M. Staub Shoe Co. v. Byrne, 169 Cal. 122, 145 P. 1032."

We do not agree with appellant's contention that the trial court erred in not applying the above rule to the instant case.

It is our opinion that the $10,000 advance deposit required by the terms of the lease was not contemplated as prepaid rent but only as a fund deposited for the security of the lessor out of which the rent was to be paid as it accrued from day to day. Hence the rule that, in the absence of a qualifying provision in the lease, rent paid in advance will not be apportioned upon surrender or termination of the lease is not applicable to this case. Here, the amount of rent was to be computed on the daily output of the mill. It was to be computed by West from the sawyer's lists of the lumber cut which Caplan was required to furnish him each day. It was computed at the rate of $3 per thousand board feet of lumber cut in the mill. It was West's duty to compute the amount of the rent and invoice Caplan for the amount thereon on the first and fifteenth of each month. The deposit was applied against the accrued rent and when the deposit was depleted to the sum of $5,000, Caplan was required to deposit an additional $5,000 so as to bring it up to the original $10,000. Since we hold that these moneys were not intended as prepaid rent, but only as security for the payment of the rent, West was obligated to refund any unused portion thereof when no further rent could accrue, either by virtue of the expiration of the term of the lease or destruction of the premises.

[2] Nor do we feel that the following provision in the lease in any way militates against our conclusion that the $10,000 was intended as surety for the lessor and not as prepaid rent:

"It is Agreed that during the logging seasons of 1950, 1951 and 1952, Caplan shall cut not less than two hundred fifty thousand (250,000) board feet of timber per week in said Mill, or, in the event Caplan fails to do so, he shall pay West the difference between the number of board feet of timber actually cut by him in the said Mill and said minimum of 250,000 board feet, at the rate set forth in said Lease."

This was merely a covenant whereby the lessee obligated himself to cut 250,000 board feet of lumber per week and in the event of his failure to do so, lessee was to pay West the difference between the cut and the minimum of 250,000 board feet at the rate of $3 per thousand. This provision was obviously written into the lease to assure prompt performance by the lessee. The mill having been destroyed by fire, it was no longer possible for respondents to comply with the terms thereof. The total amount of rent and the requirement for additional deposits of $5,000 depended solely upon the amount of lumber cut, except in the event that lessees fail to cut the required weekly 250,000 board feet of timber. Of course, this requirement did not contemplate the destruction of the mill.

[3] The lease also provides:

"Said Caplan shall be entitled to the possession of said Mill from the time of the execution of this Lease until the close of the logging season of 1952, at which time Caplan shall deliver up possession of said Mill, mill property, all property used in connection therewith, and all machinery, equipment and tools in accordance with the inventory attached hereto, in the same condition as when he received the same, subject to ordinary and reasonable use and wear and tear, and if he fails to do so, he shall pay West the reasonable value of any personal property not delivered up by him as aforesaid and shall pay West for any property damaged by him or delivered up in a damaged or excessively worn condition."

Appellant contends that, under this provision, Caplan not only agreed to keep the premises in good condition and repair, but also agreed to pay West the reasonable value of any of the leased property which he did not deliver up to West at the end of the term. He urges that this provision, in effect, made the lessee an insurer of the property. There is no merit in such contention.

"While it is true that at common law and in some states an unqualified covenant to repair was interpreted to impose upon the lessee the duty to rebuild a structure which was destroyed without the fault of the lessee, see annotations, 45 A.L.R. 12, 39; 106 A.L.R. 1358, 1364, and while that was perhaps the early rule in California, Polack v. Pioche, 35 Cal. 416 [95 Am.Dec. 115], this state no longer follows that harsh and unrealistic doctrine. In Realty & Rebuilding Co. v. Rea, 184 Cal. 565, 194 P. 1024, the Polack case was distinguished and the more enlightened and modern rule adopted that a covenant to repair does not include an obligation to rebuild a structure destroyed through no fault of the lessee. There the structures involved were destroyed by an accidental fire. The court stated, 184 Cal. at page 576, 194 P. at page 1029: 'To repair' means to mend an old thing, not to make a new thing; to restore to a sound state something which has become partially dilapidated, not to create something which has no existence. [Citing a case.] When we speak of repairing a thing, the very expression presupposes a thing in existence to be repaired. If a workman undertakes to repair an article, he obviously contemplates making whole an existing article and not the manufacture of something new.' After elaborating on these arguments at some length, the court concluded, 184 Cal. at page 578, 194 P. at page 1029: 'It follows that the agreements to keep the premises in good repair and, at the end of the term, to surrender them in as good condition as they were in at the beginning of or during the term are not, and do not include, a covenant to replace a structure totally destroyed by fire without the fault of the tenant. [Citing cases.]'"

[4] In the instant case, it was alleged in the complaint and admitted by the answer that the mill was totally destroyed by fire. In his cross-complaint, appellant also alleged that the mill was totally destroyed by fire and the court found that the fire was caused other than by want of ordinary care on the part of the lessee. Hence, applying the rule concerning a covenant to repair as stated in the Friedman and Realty & Rebuilding Co. cases, it follows by the same token that covenants to deliver up the premises "in the same condition as when he received the same, subject to ordinary and reasonable use and wear and tear" and to pay for property "not delivered up by him" at the end of the term do not contemplate nor include a covenant to pay for a structure wholly destroyed by fire without the fault of the lessee.

[5] Further, in so far as the appellant's cross-complaint is founded on an alleged claim for rent claimed to have accrued to the end of the term provided in the lease, no relief could have been granted him against the Estate of Novick since he failed to present such claim to said estate. The trial court found that no claim or claims for cross-complainant's demands as set forth in his cross-complaint were ever presented to Albert L. Wagner as executor of the last will and testament of said decedent, nor was any claim filed with the clerk of the court where said estate is pending administration, or at all.

[6] A claim for rent due under a lease is of such a nature that it must be presented for allowance to the decedent's estate. Lesser v. Pomin, 3 Cal.App.2d 117, 39 P.2d 451; also see Executors and Administrators, 20 Cal.Jur.2d, p. 783.

During the pendency of this appeal a motion was made by the respondent Herbert P. Caplan, as executor of the last will and testament of Ben Caplan, deceased, to dismiss the appeal against said respondent on the ground that no appeal had been taken from the order granting nonsuit in favor of said respondent.

The minute order appearing in the clerk's minutes of May 13, 1957, reads: "Cross-defendant Caplan's motion for nonsuit is granted, and cross-complaint is dismissed."

Section 581c of the Code of Civil Procedure provides in part:

"* * * If the motion is granted, unless the court in its order for judgment of nonsuit otherwise specifies, such judgment operates as an adjudication upon the merits."

[7] Formal entry of such judgment elsewhere than in the minutes is not required and time for the taking of an appeal therefrom begins to run from the date of the minute order. Costa v. Regents of University of California, 103 Cal.App.2d 491, 229 P.2d 867.

[8] In the instant case, the minute order was entered May 13, 1957. The purported appeal filed by appellant herein is "from the Judgment * * * entered * * * on the 10th day of July, 1957, in favor of Plaintiffs in said action, and against said Defendant and Cross-Complainant, and from the whole thereof." It makes no reference to the order granting nonsuit, nor does it purport to appeal from said order. Therefore, since the time within which appellant could have appealed from said order had expired, the purported appeal must be dismissed.

We do not deem it necessary to discuss other points raised upon this appeal.

The purported appeal from the nonsuit as to Caplan is dismissed. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Mandamus proceeding to compel trial court and judge thereof to vacate a nunc pro tunc minute order, to grant petitioner an opportunity to be heard in opposition to changes made in resettlement of reporter's transcript and for transmittal of complete copy of transcripts of resettlement proceedings to the Governor. The Supreme Court, Schauer, J., held that although making of 90 changes in corrected reporter's transcript on appeal may have been but the exercise of inherent power of the court to correct clerical errors not affecting defendant's substantial rights, court could not properly, without notice to defendant, amend such determinations when it was not entirely clear from record that changes involved no judicial determinations, and defendant was entitled to opportunity to appear and be heard, in person or by counsel, as to changes.

Application for writ of mandamus granted in part and denied in part.

1. Witnesses ⇨34

Where nunc pro tunc minute order appointing reporter, who had transcribed undictated notes of deceased trial reporter, an expert witness in proceedings for resettlement of reporter's transcript had no bearing on merits of resettlement proceedings and no effect upon any right of defendant and order was made for sole purpose of enabling judge to direct that witness be compensated out of county treasury as a court-appointed expert rather than be paid ordinary witness fees, defendant had no standing to attack the order. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 1871.

Although making of 90 changes in corrected reporter's transcript on appeal may have been but exercise of inherent power of court to correct clerical errors not affecting defendant's substantial rights, court could not properly, without notice to defendant, amend such determinations when it was not entirely clear from record that changes involved no judicial determinations, and defendant was entitled to be afforded opportunity to appear and be heard, in person or by counsel, as to the changes.

3. Criminal Law ⇨1110(1)

Where proceedings for resettlement of reporter's transcript of trial involving a judgment of death related to the content of the trial transcript, it was proper to direct transmittal to Governor of copies of transcripts of the resettlement proceedings but it was not necessary that the transcripts be accompanied by photostatic copies of exhibits. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1218; West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 33.

Caryl Chessman, in pro. per.

No appearance for respondents on real party in interest.

SCHAUER, Justice.

Petitioner seeks a writ of mandate directing respondent court to take the following action in connection with proceedings before it which resulted in the resettlement of a reporter's transcript on appeal in People v. Chessman (Crim. No. 5006 in the files of this court):

"1. To vacate * * * its March 13, 1958 nunc pro tunc minute 'order' appointing Stanley Fraser an expert under § 1871 of the Code of Civil Procedure<sup>1</sup> * * *

1. Section 1871 provides for appointment of expert witnesses by the court and for their compensation.

with instructions that if it again wishes to attempt to make such an order (assuming this Court finds it has the power to do so under any circumstances) it must put Chessman on notice, produce him and allow him to be heard in opposition;

"2. To recall the record on appeal in Crim. 5006 from this Court and grant Chessman a hearing and an opportunity to be personally heard in opposition to its informal action in making changes and corrections, ninety in number, in the changes and corrections it had finally ordered in the original trial transcript, and to resolve this matter in accordance with the controlling principles of procedural due process required by Chessman v. Teets, 354 U.S. 156, 77 S.Ct. 1127, 1 L.Ed. 1253; and

"3. To order, under § 1218 of the Penal Code,<sup>2</sup> preparation and transmittal to the Governor of California [of] a complete and properly authenticated copy of the Clerk's and Reporter's Transcripts of the Settlement Proceedings, along with photostatic copies of the exhibits received in evidence (excepting court records)."

We have concluded:

[1] 1. Petitioner cannot attack the nunc pro tunc order because that order had no bearing on the merits of the resettlement proceedings and no effect upon any right of petitioner.

2. It well may be that no hearing as to the 90 changes was necessary because they were made in the exercise of the court's inherent power to correct clerical misprisions which are apparent on the face of the record and which do not affect petitioner's substantial rights. However, to expedite ultimate disposition of this matter, petitioner should be expressly afforded the opportunity to appear before respondent court, in person or by counsel, and to be heard as to such changes.

3. Section 1218 of the Penal Code does not contemplate transmittal to the governor of copies of exhibits or of transcripts of mesne proceedings for settlement of the reporter's transcript on appeal from the judgments of conviction. However, in the circumstances of this case, petitioner's request will be granted in respect to the transcripts of the mesne proceedings, but not in respect to copies of exhibits.

There is now pending before us an appeal in Crim. No. 5006. In disposing of that appeal we will, in the exercise of our inherent power to pass upon all questions as to preparation of the record on appeal (see Cross v. Superior Court (1951), 104 Cal. App.2d 594, 595-596 [3]), 232 P.2d 255, review the resettlement proceedings. Therefore, petitioner could advance his present contentions on appeal. However, we agree with petitioner that ultimate disposition of that appeal may be facilitated if those contentions are considered at this time.

The following circumstances led to this mandate proceeding:

Petitioner appealed from judgments of conviction of 17 felonies, including two judgments of death. The official court reporter, Mr. Ernest Perry, died before he had completed dictating his notes of the trial. Another official reporter, Mr. Stanley Fraser, under court order prepared a transcript of the balance of Mr. Perry's notes. Petitioner, who was confined in San Quentin State Prison under the 17 sentences, requested and was granted a hearing in respondent court on the questions whether Perry's notes were legible, whether Fraser could read them, and whether the transcript was "usable"; at this hearing petitioner also presented some proposed specific changes in the transcript. Petitioner was not personally present at the hearing because he was not permitted to leave the prison in which he was confined. He was not and did not ask to be represented by counsel, but participated in the hearing by the filing of documents in propria persona.

2. Section 1218 provides that the judge of the court in which a judgment of death is had must transmit to the governor "a statement of the conviction and judgment, and of the testimony given at the trial."

The judge rejected petitioner's general complaints as to the transcript, allowed some proposed specific changes, and settled and certified the transcript.

In People v. Chessman (1950), 35 Cal.2d 455, 218 P.2d 769, 19 A.L.R.2d 1084, petitioner by motions in this court attacked the reporter's transcript and the proceedings by which it was produced. At his request, this court's appointment of counsel to represent him before us was terminated and he conducted his case in propria persona by written documents. We held that (at page 462 [11] of 35 Cal.2d, at page 773 of 218 P.2d) "Examination of the record in the light of defendant's claims discloses that it is adequate to permit us to ascertain whether there has been a fair trial and whether there has been any miscarriage of justice"; that (at page 467 [15] of 35 Cal.2d, at page 776 of 218 P.2d) because petitioner was lawfully imprisoned he was not entitled to appear personally in the courtroom in settlement proceedings; and that because prior to his conviction he had repeatedly been offered and refused counsel in the trial court and because he had persisted in this court in his refusal to appear by counsel, he could not complain that he was prejudiced by the fact that since his conviction he had not been allowed to leave the prison to appear personally in court.

In People v. Chessman (1951), 38 Cal.2d 166, 172, 238 P.2d 1001, we again considered and rejected petitioner's arguments as to the reporter's transcript and affirmed the judgments of conviction.

After federal and state courts had rejected many attacks by petitioner upon the reporter's transcript and the proceedings which produced it, the United States Supreme Court held, in Chessman v. Teets (1957), 354 U.S. 156, 162, 77 S.Ct. 1127, 1130, 1 L.Ed.2d 1253, that "the ex parte settlement of this state court record violated petitioner's constitutional right to procedural due process. * * * If California chose to deny petitioner's request to appear in those proceedings in propria persona, it then became incumbent on the State to appoint counsel for him."

Pursuant to the quoted holding of the supreme federal court and ensuing orders of the United States District Court (August 14, 1957) and of this court (August 29, 1957) obedient thereto, new hearings directed to the adequacy and correctness of the reporter's transcript were had in respondent court (Judge Walter R. Evans, assigned). At these hearings petitioner was allowed to leave the prison, to appear personally and actively represent himself, and to be actively represented by counsel of record whenever he so desired.

Among the witnesses for the People at the resettlement hearings was Stanley Fraser, the reporter who had transcribed the undictated notes of the deceased reporter Perry.

On February 28, 1958, with petitioner and his counsel present, respondent court by minute order denied a motion of petitioner which asked, among other things, that the court "reject the present reporter's transcript" and "find that no usable or adequate reporter's transcript can be prepared from Ernest R. Perry's shorthand notes." Further, by written order filed on February 28, 1958, respondent court found "that the shorthand notes of Mr. Perry were decipherable and that Mr. Frazier [sic] was competent and qualified to transcribe and did so transcribe those notes fairly and in a substantially accurate manner"; attached to and made a part of the order is a list of about 2,000 "changes to be made by the Clerk of this Court" in the 2,102 pages of the original reporter's transcript. The changes appear both in the 646 pages of transcript which were dictated by Perry and in the portion of the transcript which was prepared by Fraser. The court found that these changes "in no way change the substance and nature of either the People's case or the defendant's defense."

On March 11, 1958, petitioner was returned to San Quentin. On March 13, 1958, Judge Evans, without notice or hearing, made the order which nunc pro tunc appointed Fraser "to testify as an expert witness in Pittmanic [sic] Shorthand."

A corrected reporter's transcript on appeal was prepared. In this transcript there are 90 changes, made without notice or hearing and without any order appearing in the record before us, in the changes which were set forth in the order of February 28, 1958. On May 1, 1958, Judge Evans certified the corrected reporter's transcript.

Petitioner, acting in propria persona, forwarded to respondent court "Objections, Proposed Corrections, and Application for a Hearing." This document asks relief in the three respects as to which petitioner now seeks mandate. On June 16, 1958, Judge Evans denied such relief.

The Nunc Pro Tunc Order. The minute order of March 13, 1958, made without notice or hearing, is as follows: "The minute order of November 27, 1957, [is] amended nunc pro tunc as of that date to add to said minute order the following terminology: 'Stanley Fraser is appointed under the provisions of Section 1871, Code of Civil Procedure to testify as an expert witness in Pittmanic [sic] Shorthand', it being the intention of the Court to have made the above appointment to be included in the minute order of November 27, 1957." November 27 was the second day on which Fraser testified in the resettlement proceedings.

Section 1871 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the court or judge may appoint experts to investigate and testify and may fix reasonable compensation for services, if any, rendered by them in addition to their services as witnesses; that in criminal proceedings such compensation shall be paid out of the county treasury; that expert witnesses called by a party and not appointed by the court are entitled to "ordinary witness fees only"; and that a court-appointed expert may be called as a witness by any party or by the court itself.

The order of March 13, 1958, was manifestly made for the sole purpose of enabling the judge, under the authority of section 1871, to order (as he did on March 21, 1958) that Fraser be compensated out of the county treasury as a court-appointed expert rather than be paid "ordinary [$4.00 a day] witness fees only." (See Pen.Code, § 1329.) Such order has no relation to and could not affect the determination of the merits of the resettlement proceedings.

Petitioner's claims that the nunc pro tunc order prejudicially affects him are based on his mistaken assumptions that Fraser did not testify as an expert and that the nunc pro tunc order purports retroactively to confer expertness upon Fraser and to give his testimony an effect which it did not have at the time he testified. However, petitioner and his counsel expressly recognized at the resettlement hearings that Fraser was produced as an expert and cross-examined him as to his qualifications and bias in that regard. Obviously the nunc pro tunc order has no application to the effect to be accorded Fraser's testimony, and this court on its review of the resettlement proceedings will not give it any such application. Therefore, since petitioner is not aggrieved by the order, he has no standing to attack it.

[2] The 90 Changes, Made without Notice, Hearing or Order of Record, in the Changes which Appear in the Order of February 28, 1958. Because of obvious clerical errors in the list of changes ordered on February 28, 90 of such changes either could not be made in accord with the language of the order of February 28 or, if they had been so made, would have been unintelligible or obviously incorrect. In the corrected reporter's transcript, some of these 90 changes were not made and some were made in a manner different from that specified in the order. The 90 respects in which the corrected reporter's transcript does not conform to the language of the order of February 28, 1958, are listed on the first page of each volume of such transcript and (pursuant to order of June 16, 1958) are entitled "Corrections and Changes Ordered and Made Subsequent to the Order of February 28, 1958 and Prior to Final Approval by the Court."

Regardless of whether the 90 changes could in any way affect this court's consideration and disposition of the appeal from the judgments of conviction, we assume for the purpose of expediting disposition of this proceeding (but without so holding) that in view of the language of the order and the opinion pursuant to which this case has been returned to us (see Chessman v. Teets (1957), supra, 354 U.S. 156, 164, note 12, 77 S.Ct. 1127, 1 L.Ed.2d 1253), lack of a hearing as to the 90 changes cannot be excused upon the basis of a determination that such changes are immaterial.

The making of the 90 changes may have been but the exercise of the inherent power of respondent court, without notice or hearing, to correct obvious clerical errors which did not affect petitioner's substantial rights (see In re Estate of Hultin (1947), 29 Cal.2d 825, 829-830 [1, 2], 178 P.2d 756), and it may be that such a procedure did not transgress the decision of the United States Supreme Court that Chessman was entitled to be represented throughout the settlement proceedings in person or by counsel (Chessman v. Teets (1957), supra, 354 U.S. 156, 162, 77 S.Ct. 1127, 1 L.Ed.2d 1253). However, it is not entirely clear from the record before us that the 90 changes involved no judicial determinations. Respondent court could not properly, without notice, amend such determinations. (Beyerbach v. Juno Oil Co. (1954), 42 Cal.2d 11, 28 [21], 265 P.2d 1.) In the circumstances it appears proper that Chessman be afforded the opportunity to appear and be heard, in person or by counsel, as to all the 90 changes.

The new hearing will result in a new order. It is therefore unnecessary to discuss the effect of the absence from the record now before us of an order directing such 90 changes.

[3] The Refusal to Send the Governor a Copy of the Record of the Resettle- ment Proceedings. Petitioner urges that "in the unique circumstances of this case" section 1218 of the Penal Code requires that the judge before whom the resettlement proceedings were had transmit to the governor copies of the clerk's and reporter's transcripts of the resettlement proceedings and photostatic copies of the exhibits received in evidence at those proceedings (except court records).

Section 1218 of the Penal Code provides, "The judge of the court at which a conviction requiring judgment of death is had, must, immediately after the conviction, transmit to the governor * * * a statement of the conviction and judgment, and of the testimony given at the trial."

Certainly by its language the above quoted section does not purport to require that any transcript of mesne proceedings to settle the trial transcript shall be forwarded to the governor. But it is to be recognized that the mesne proceedings do relate to the content of the trial transcript. Petitioner appears to believe that it might be important to him to have a copy of the transcript of the mesne proceedings in the hands of the governor. It has been said that "Exacting as the state may be in ultimately bringing retribution to those who violate its highest laws, it is at least equally solicitous that those who are prosecuted shall be accorded full measure of every legal right." (People v. Gilbert (1944), 25 Cal.2d 422, 442 [12], 154 P.2d 657, 667.) It is also the policy of California (see, e. g., People v. Stuart (1956), 47 Cal.2d 167, 175 [7], 302 P.2d 5, 55 A.L.R.2d 705) to construe and apply penal statutes as favorably to the defendant as the language of the statute and the circumstances of its application may reasonably permit. Under all the circumstances of the case at bar we conclude that it is proper to direct transmittal to the governor of copies of the transcripts of the resettlement proceedings. As has been stated, petitioner also asks that the above mentioned transcripts be accompanied by photostatic copies of exhibits "excepting court records." The exhibits in the resettlement proceedings "excepting court records" include more than 89 books, papers, and documents. Section 1218 of the Penal Code does not, as we understand it, contemplate transmission of copies of exhibits to the governor. It is not the practice of this court to require, and the Rules on Appeal (see Rule 33) do not provide for, the inclusion of copies of exhibits in the transcript. When examination of exhibits appears to be necessary or desirable in the determination of an issue before us, we have such exhibits transmitted to us. No doubt if it became material in any application to the governor for him to examine an exhibit or exhibits, arrangements to that end could easily be made. In any event it is unnecessary that copies of the exhibits be made and included with the transcripts to be sent to the governor at this time.

For the reasons above stated it is ordered as follows:

1. The application for an order requiring respondent court to vacate its March 13, 1958, minute order and for instructions to respondent court pertaining to such matter is denied.

2. The application for an order directing transmittal to the governor of photostatic copies of exhibits is denied.

3. The original reporter's transcript and the corrected reporter's transcript on appeal from the judgments of conviction in Crim. No. 5006 are returned to respondent court.

4. Let a peremptory writ of mandate issue directing respondent court to explicitly grant petitioner an opportunity to be heard in person or by counsel in opposition to its action with respect to its changes in the "Order re Hearing on Objections" filed February 28, 1958, which changes are described in the corrected reporter's transcript as "Corrections and Changes Ordered and Made Subsequent to the Order of February 28, 1958 and Prior to Final Approval by the Court." The order determining petitioner's objections to such "Corrections and Changes" shall be made, and the making of the corrections and changes pursuant thereto shall be accomplished, in the presence of petitioner or his counsel, or after express notice and opportunity given them to be present. When petitioner's objections to such "Corrections and Changes" have been heard and determined, and the corrections and changes as ordered have been actually made, respondent court shall certify the corrected reporter's transcript.

Such peremptory writ of mandate shall also direct respondent court to transmit to the governor of California complete, authenticated copies of the clerk's and reporter's transcripts of the resettlement proceedings.

This order is final forthwith.

Judgment affirmed.

PATROSSO, Justice pro tem.

Defendants, husband and wife, appeal from a judgment forfeiting to the State a 1954 Oldsmobile of which they were the registered co-owners upon the ground that it was used unlawfully to transport narcotics. Health & Safety Code, § 11610.

The trial court found that the vehicle was used by the defendant Mrs. Medaris to unlawfully carry and transport isonipocaine (Demerol), a narcotic, and that such narcotic was unlawfully in her possession while she was an occupant of the vehicle. The defendants contend that this finding is not supported by the evidence. We find no merit in this claim and accordingly are affirming the judgment.

The evidence is undisputed. On March 30, 1957, the defendant Mrs. Medaris presented to P. Melvin Knoll, a pharmacist employed by the Temple City Professional Pharmacy in Temple City, a prescription for 30 ccs. of Demerol with 100 milligrams per 2 ccs. Mr. Knoll obtained from the pharmacy stock a sealed vial containing 30 ccs. of Demerol; removed therefrom the manufacturer's label; placed thereon the label of the pharmacy and delivered the same to Mrs. Medaris, who thereupon proceeded directly to the automobile in question, entered the same and drove away. The prescription which Mrs. Medaris delivered to the pharmacist had been written by her and she had forged thereto the name of a Dr. Morris.

[1] In support of their contention as to the insufficiency of the evidence the appellants first argue that there is no proof that the vial delivered to Mrs. Medaris in fact contained Demerol. This argument is predicated upon the testimony of the pharmacist that Demerol is water white in color as a result of which its identity may not be ascertained by visual inspection, and that the only basis for his testimony that the product contained in the sealed vial was Demerol is the fact that it was so labeled by the manufacturer. The defendants adduced no evidence that the vial did not in fact contain Demerol. From the proof that it was in a sealed vial, labeled by the manufacturer as such and that it was delivered to Mrs. Medaris upon a prescription presented by her calling for the drug the trial court was fully warranted in concluding that the vial contained Demerol.

[2] The defendants next assert that there is no evidence that the narcotic was ever in the automobile and further that there is no showing that there was a place-to-place movement which would warrant a finding of transportation of the narcotic. The fact, however, that after receiving the drug Mrs. Medaris immediately proceeded to her automobile and drove away justified the trial court in concluding that she had the drug in her possession when she entered the automobile and drove away in it. Moreover, the fact that she had the drug in her possession when she entered the automobile is sufficient to support the judgment without proof of transportation, for section 11610, Health & Safety Code, provides that "A vehicle * * * in which any narcotic is unlawfully kept, deposited or concealed, * * * or in which any narcotic is unlawfully possessed by an occupant thereof, * * * shall be forfeited to the State."

In view of the foregoing it is unnecessary to consider appellants' final contention that the trial court's further finding that the vehicle was used "to facilitate the transportation" of the narcotic is unsupported by the evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Oct. 14, 1958.

Proceeding wherein natural born children sought determination that they were pretermitted heirs of testator entitled to succeed to portion of his estate. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Clyde Triplett, J., entered decree determining that natural born children were not pretermitted heirs and children appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Patrosso, J. pro tem., held that where will provided that testator was widower and had no children, that, except as otherwise in will specified, he intentionally and with full knowledge, and not as result of any accident, mistake or inadvertence, omitted to provide for any other of his heirs living at time of his demise, and that if any person who would be entitled to share in estate of testator if he had died intestate should contest will, then such person was bequeathed one dollar, will evidenced testator's intention to disinherit all of his heirs including his children.

Affirmed.

1. Descent and Distribution ⇨48

Paragraph of will providing that if any person who would be entitled to share in estate of testator if testator had died intestate should contest will, then such person was bequeathed one dollar, effectively operated to disinherit natural born children of testator. West's Ann.Prob. Code, § 90.

2. Descent and Distribution ⇨48

Where will provided that testator was widower and had no children, that testator, except as otherwise in will specified, intentionally and with full knowledge, and not as result of any accident, mistake or inadvertence, omitted to provide for any other of testator's heirs living at time of his demise and that, if any person who would be entitled to share in estate of testator if he had died intestate should contest will, then such person was bequeathed one dollar, will evidenced testator's intention to disinherit all of his heirs including his children. West's Ann. Prob.Code, § 90.

David M. Richman, Beverly Hills, for appellants.

Rose, Klein & Marias, Los Angeles, for respondent.

PATROSSO, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal by four natural children of the above named decedent from a decree determining that they were not pretermitted heirs and hence not entitled as such to succeed to any portion of his estate.

By his last will and testament the decedent devised and bequeathed the whole of his estate to Grace Milner and appointed her executrix thereof. The other relevant provisions of the will are the following:

"Second: I declare that I am a widower, and that I have no children.

"Fourth: I have, except as otherwise in this Will specified, intentionally and with full knowledge, and not as a result of any accident, mistake or inadvertence, omitted to provide for any other of my heirs living at the time of my demise.

"Fifth: If any person * * * who, if I died intestate, would be entitled to share in my estate, shall, in any manner whatsoever, directly or indirectly, contest this Will or attack, oppose or seek to impair, or invalidate any provision hereof, * * * then I hereby bequeath to each such person the sum of One Dollar ($1.00) only, * * *."

Appellants contend that the foregoing provisions of the will are insufficient to establish that the failure of the testator to provide for his children was intentional within the meaning of section 90 of the Probate Code. Their argument is that the statement in paragraph second quoted above that the testator had no children, demonstrates that the testator did not have his children in mind when he executed the will. A like contention was advanced with respect to a will containing substantially the same language as that which appears in paragraphs second and fourth of the will in the instant case in the In re Estate of Fernstrom, 1958, 157 Cal.App.2d 380, 321 P.2d 25, 27 in which a hearing by the Supreme Court was denied. There the will stated, in part, that the testator "had no children" and added "I have, except as otherwise provided in this Will, intentionally and with full knowledge omitted to provide for my heirs who may be living at the time of my death." In holding that this language was sufficient to establish that the omission to provide for his daughter was intentional, the court said (157 Cal.App.2d at page 383, 321 P.2d at page 27):

"The courts of California have held repeatedly and consistently that a testator's declaration in his will that he has intentionally omitted to provide for his heirs is a sufficient expression of his intentional omission of provision for children. In re Estate of Hassell, 168 Cal. 287, 142 P. 838; In re Estate of Lindsay, 176 Cal. 238, 168 P. 113; In re Estate of Lombard, 16 Cal.App.2d 526, 60 P.2d 1000; In re Estate of Doell, 113 Cal.App.2d 37, 247 P.2d 580.

"In a number of California cases it has been held that nominal testamentary provisions for 'heirs' were effective to preclude children from taking as pretermitted heirs, even though such children were not named. Van Strien v. Jones, 46 Cal. 2d 705, 299 P.2d 1; In re Estate of Lindsay, supra; In re Estate of Minear, 180 Cal. 239, 180 P. 535; In re Estate of Talmage, 114 Cal.App.2d 18, 249 P.2d 345; In re Estate of Allmaras, 24 Cal.App.2d 457, 75 P.2d 557. As stated in the recent decision of Van Strien v. Jones, supra, 46 Cal.2d at page 707, 299 P.2d at page 2: 'It is well settled that where in a will a testator's child is intentionally omitted or given $1 or any other sum, section 90 of the Probate Code is satisfied although the child is not mentioned by name.'"

Appellants seek to distinguish the foregoing case from that at bar by the argument that inasmuch as the testator left surviving two sisters, the use of the words "any other of my heirs" in paragraph fourth must be construed as referring to heirs other than his children. Substantially the same argument was advanced by the appellant daughter in the Fernstrom case and rejected, the court saying (157 Cal.App.2d at pages 385, 386, 321 P.2d at page 28):

"Again, proceeding upon the hypothesis that the testator was unaware of appellant's existence, appellant argues that by the use of the word 'heirs' in article XI, testator must have referred only to his brothers and sister. The essence of appellant's argument is that under testator's conception of his family situation as revealed by his will the term 'heirs,' used in a legal sense, could refer only to the brothers and sister.

"The fallacy in this argument is easily demonstrated. Indeed, the cutting edge of the sword which appellant has thus raised is against her. The skilled attorney who drafted the Fernstrom will presumably was aware of the law that no declaration of intention is necessary to effectuate a disinheritance of brothers and sisters not mentioned or provided for. The attorney presumably was aware, also, of the law that a declaration of intent to disinherit 'heirs' would not effectively bar the claim of a person claiming to have been married to the testator subsequent to the execution of the will.

"It follows that article XI can be given legal effect only by applying it to appellant who, assuming the truth of her allegation that she is a daughter, is a member of the only class of heirs legally subject to the effect of such a clause, to wit lineal descendants."

Substantially identical provisions were contained in the will involved in the In re Estate of Lombard, supra, 1936, 16 Cal. App.2d 526, at page 528, 60 P.2d 1000, at page 1001, where the court in concluding that the children of the testator were expressly and effectively disinherited thereby said:

"It is argued by petitioners that the language of section eight of the will to the effect that the testator had 'intentionally and with full knowledge omitted to provide for my heirs living at the time of my demise' should not be construed to mean and to include the testator's children, since if he had intended to exclude his children he would have used the precise word. We cannot put such a strained construction upon the word 'heirs'. 'At law, while the word may include others, it always includes the children of a decedent.' In re Estate of Hassell, supra."

To the same effect are the following: In re Estate of Doell, supra, 113 Cal.App. 2d 37, 247 P.2d 580; In re Estate of Hassell, supra, 168 Cal. 287, 142 P. 838; In re Estate of Lindsay, supra, 176 Cal. 238, 168 P. 113.

[1] Moreover, if we entirely disregard paragraphs second and fourth of the will paragraph fifth thereof quoted above effectively operates to disinherit the appellants. In Van Strien v. Jones, supra, 1956, 46 Cal.2d 705, 299 P.2d 1, the question presented was whether the following provision of the will disinherited the plaintiff, a daughter of the testator, who was not provided for or otherwise mentioned therein, in terms sufficient to satisfy section 90 of the Probate Code (46 Cal.2d at pages 706-707, 299 P.2d at page 2):

"If any person who is, or claims under or through, a devisee, legatee, or beneficiary under this Will, or any person who if I died intestate would be entitled to share in my estate, shall, in any manner whatsoever, directly or indirectly contest this Will * * * then I hereby bequeath to each such person the sum of One Dollar ($1.00) only * * *." (Emphasis added.)

It will be noted that the language of the will there was substantially identical with that contained in paragraph fifth of the will in the instant case. Said the court (46 Cal.2d at pages 707-708, 299 P. 2d at page 3):

"In the present case the will, in addition to providing generally for 'any person' who claims under the will, also provides that if 'any person who if I died intestate would be entitled to share in my estate' should contest the will he bequeaths to such person the sum of $1.

In In re Estate of Kurtz, 190 Cal. 146, 210 P. 959, 960, the testator provided; 'I * * * disinherit each and all persons whatsoever claiming to be, and who may be, my heirs at law * * * and if any of such parties or such heirs, or any person whomsoever who, if I died intestate, would be entitled to any part of my estate * * * seek or establish or assert any claim to my estate * * * I hereby give and bequeath to said person or persons the sum of one ($1.00) dollar * * *.' The portions of that will which have been emphasized are almost identical with the clause in the will in the present case. In Re Estate of Dixon, 28 Cal.App.2d 598, 83 P.2d 98, 99, the will also 'contained a clause almost identical with the will of the decedent in' the Kurtz case. See also In re Estate of Lindsay, supra, 176 Cal. 238, 168 P. 113; In re Estate of Hassell, supra, 168 Cal. 287, 142 P. 838; In re Estate of Lombard, 16 Cal.App.2d 526, 60 P.2d 1000. In all of the foregoing cases it was held that children or grandchildren of the testator were not pretermitted where the wills referred to them only as 'heirs not herein mentioned,' or 'persons claiming to be heirs,' or as in the present case, 'persons who if I died intestate would be entitled to any part of my estate.' Those cases support the conclusion of the trial court in sustaining the demurrer."

[2] In light of the foregoing the trial court correctly concluded that by the terms of his will the testator evidenced his intention to disinherit all of his heirs including his children, the appellants herein.

CITY OF SAN DIEGO, a Municipal Corporation, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 5895.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Oct. 14, 1958.

Hearing Denied Dec. 10, 1958.

Action by tax holder and resident seeking a declaration that charter provision, ordinances, and rules were invalid because they conflicted with general law and were an unreasonable exercise of police power. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court, San Diego County, L. N. Turrentine, J., the taxpayer appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Coughlin, J. pro tem., held that even if provision of charter and ordinance of chartered city authorizing use of sewer service revenues for cost and expense of extending, reconstructing or improving city sewer system conflicted with general statute providing that such revenue should not be used for acquisition of any new local street sewers or laterals, such charter provision, ordinances and regulations concerned "municipal affairs" and they were not subject to limitation by general law, and any conflict therewith did not render them invalid.

Judgment affirmed.

Action for declaratory relief.

This is an appeal from a judgment, in an action for declaratory relief, upholding the validity of charter provisions of the City of San Diego, of ordinances enacted thereunder, and of a resolution prescribing rules of interpretation and procedure.

[1] The City of San Diego operates under a charter, adopted in 1931 pursuant to the provisions of Article XI, section 6, of the California Constitution (Stats.1931, Sen.Con.Res.No. 34, p. 2838). Section 90.2 was added to the charter by amendment in 1956 and, among other things, authorizes the city council to establish charges for sewer services; permits the billing and collection of these charges along with those for water as one item; and directs that the sewer service charges be paid into a fund used only for sewer system purposes, including "paying all or any part of the cost and expense of extending, reconstructing or improving the sewer system of the City or any part thereof". St.1957, p. 4221. The city council has adopted ordinances adding sections to the San Diego Municipal Code fixing sewer service charges; providing for their collection; and creating a sewer revenue fund. Section 64.31 of the Municipal Code provides that the sewer service charges shall be paid into this fund and shall be used only for the purposes therein designated, which include "paying all or any part of the cost and expense of extending, constructing, reconstructing or improving the sewer system, or any part thereof". Subsequently, the council adopted a resolution establishing rules of interpretation and procedure to be used in connection with the administration of the sewer service charges theretofore fixed.

Appellant, a citizen and taxpayer of San Diego, owning real property therein, had been charged for sewer services in accord with the foregoing Municipal Code provisions and rules of interpretation. He brought this action seeking a declaration that the charter provisions, the ordinances, and the rules in question are invalid under Article XI, section 11, of the California Constitution because they conflict with the general law, and also in that they constitute an unreasonable exercise of the police power.

Amongst other things, section 5471 of the Health and Safety Code empowers cities to prescribe charges for sewer services; permits the collection of such charges together with those for any other utility service by a single billing; and directs that the revenue so obtained "shall be used only for the acquisition, construction, reconstruction, maintenance and operation of * * * sewer facilities; * * * provided, however, that such revenue shall not be used for the acquisition or construction of any local street sewers or laterals as distinguished from main trunk, interceptor and outfall sewers".

Appellant adopts the premise that the authority of the City of San Diego respecting the acquisition, construction, maintenance and operation of a sewer system is limited by Article XI, section 11, of the California Constitution, which provides that "Any * * * city * * * may make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws."; contends that the San Diego charter provisions, ordinances and rules under consideration are in conflict with section 5471 of the Health and Safety Code, a general law; and concludes that those charter provisions, ordinances and rules are invalid.

[2] For the purposes of this decision it may be assumed that the provisions of the charter and ordinances in question authorizing the use of sewer service revenue for the "cost and expense of extending, reconstructing or improving" the city sewer system conflict with the provisions of the Health and Safety Code that such revenue shall not be used for "the acquisition * * * of new local street sewers or laterals". However, the limitation of authority relied upon by appellant, which is expressed in Article XI, section 11, of the Constitution, does not apply to regulations concerning municipal affairs by a city chartered pursuant to Article XI, section 6, of the Constitution. A charter adopted thereunder is "absolutely controlling and free from impairment by general laws of the state, as to all 'municipal affairs'. * * * In so far as such a charter makes provision relative to any 'municipal affair,' it is the supreme law, paramount to any law enacted by the State Legislature, and general laws enacted by the Legislature in regard thereto can have no application". Loop Lumber Co. v. Van Loben Sels, 173 Cal. 228, 232, 159 P. 600, 602; West Coast Advertising Co. v. City and County of San Francisco, 14 Cal.2d 516, 521, 95 P.2d 138; City of Pasadena v. Charleville, 215 Cal. 384, 388, 10 P.2d 745.

Where there is a conflict between state and local regulations the principle of law applicable is that stated in Natural Milk Producers Ass'n of California v. City and County of San Francisco, 20 Cal.2d 101, 108, 124 P.2d 25, 29, as follows:

"It is true, as a general rule, that when there is a conflict between the local police regulations and the general police regulations of the state, the former is invalid if passed after the general law or is superseded if followed by the latter. In either case the result is the same, the local law has no effective force. There is of course the qualification with respect to chartered cities in regard to local laws dealing with purely municipal affairs, * * * then the local law prevails."

[3] The acquisition, construction, improvement, extension, maintenance, operation and financing of a sewer system are "municipal affairs" concerning which a chartered city is not subject to general law, except as its charter may provide. Loop Lumber Co. v. Van Loben Sels, supra, 173 Cal. 228, 159 P. 600; City of Glendale v. Trondsen, 48 Cal.2d 93, 99, 308 P.2d 1; City of Grass Valley v. Walkinshaw, 34 Cal.2d 595, 598, 599, 212 P.2d 894; Mefford v. City of Tulare, 102 Cal. App.2d 919, 923, 924, 228 P.2d 847.

[4] The efficient operation of such a system necessarily includes the determination and implementation of fiscal policies and procedures, including the imposition and collection of charges for services rendered, and the use of revenue obtained therefrom for sewer system purposes. These, likewise, are "municipal affairs".

In support of his contention that the City of San Diego is not authorized to use revenues from sewer service charges to extend or improve its system, appellant cites City of Madera v. Black, 181 Cal. 306, 184 P. 397, which declared invalid the sewer service charge there under consideration. However, two factors obviously distinguish the cited case from the one at bar: (1) In the former, the revenue obtained from sewer service charges was used for general municipal purposes; not for the extension or improvement of the sewer system; (2) The City of Madera was not a chartered city; its only authority came from general law which did not permit charges against sewer users as a means of raising revenue for general purposes.

As the charter provisions, ordinances and regulations in question concern "municipal affairs", they are not subject to limitation by general law, and any conflict therewith does not render them invalid.

[5] Appellant further contends that these enactments are unreasonable and therefore are void. Objection is made to the use of sewer service charges to extend or improve the system. In this regard our attention is not directed to the infringement or denial of any right protected by the Constitution. None appears to be involved. City of Glendale v. Trondsen, supra, 48 Cal.2d 93, 102, 308 P.2d 1. The only citation submitted is to the general proposition that the exercise of the police power must be reasonable (18 Cal. Jur. 823-824). The arguments advanced in support of the contention concern the economic and administrative propriety and wisdom of legislation which would permit, although it does not require, the cost of extending or improving the sewer system to be paid from service charges levied against those owners using the same.

From a legal standpoint the charter provisions and ordinances under consideration are not unreasonable. To consider the sewer system in its entirety, just as a water system, transportation system, electric light and power system, or any utility, is not unreasonable. The making of additions or improvements to such a system, or of reconstructing outmoded or deteriorated parts thereof, both of which are in the nature of capital investments, may be financed in a number of different ways. A bond issue, assessment proceedings, general ad valorem tax, a charge against subdivisions as a condition precedent to acceptance into the system, as well as a fund created by allocating thereto a part of the charges made for service rendered, are some of the methods which have been used. The selection of the method of financing is an administrative matter, the exercise of which is within the legal discretion of the city.

In Sands v. Manistee River Imp. Co., 123 U.S. 288, 8 S.Ct. 113, 116, 31 L.Ed. 149, where the constitutionality of a toll charge for the use of a waterway was questioned, because improvements were made from the toll charges collected, the court said:

"* * * [t]o meet the cost of such improvements, the states may levy a general tax or lay a toll upon all who use the rivers and harbors as improved. The improvements are, in that respect, like wharves and docks constructed to facilitate commerce * * * Regulations of tolls or charges in such cases are mere matters of administration, under the entire control of the state."

Sewer service charges for the purpose of defraying costs of constructing additions or improvements to the system, as well as of operation and maintenance, have been approved in Morse v. Wise, 37 Wash. 2d 806, 226 P.2d 214; City of Maryville v. Cushman, 363 Mo. 87, 249 S.W.2d 347; and Waterworks and Sanitary Sewer Board v. Dean, 260 Ala. 221, 69 So.2d 704, 708.

The contention of appellant is not well taken.

FOX, Presiding Justice.

Defendant was charged with forgery in violation of Penal Code, section 470. It was also alleged that he had suffered a prior felony conviction for attempted grand larceny, second degree, in the state of New York, for which he had served a term in the state prison. Defendant entered a plea of guilty but denied the prior conviction. He waived a jury trial on the issue of the prior conviction. The court found the allegation of a prior conviction to be true. Probation was denied and defendant was sentenced to the state prison. He has appealed from the judgment.

[1] Defendant attempts to raise the issue of illegal search and seizure because, upon searching defendant, the police assertedly found $564 on his person which he claims they took from him without giving him a receipt. It is plain that there is no issue of illegal search and seizure here since there is no showing that any evidence obtained by search and seizure was used in the trial. He entered a plea of guilty; hence there was no issue as to the admission or exclusion of any evidence. Defendant does not dispute the reasonableness of the arrest or the search. His incidental complaint that the police did not give him a receipt for this money finds no support in the record. And, in any event, such a matter would not be appropriate for consideration on this appeal.

[2] Defendant's claim that he "at no time waived his right to a jury trial," can be quickly disposed of. He entered a plea of guilty to the charge of forgery. On the issue of the alleged prior conviction, the record shows that the defendant personally waived a jury trial on this issue and the waiver was joined in by his attorney and the prosecutor.

Defendant's claim that he was erroneously advised by his counsel, particularly with respect to entering his plea and receiving probation with the first year in the county jail, finds no support whatever in the record.

[3,4] There is likewise no merit in defendant's contention that he should have been granted probation. The granting or withholding of probation is a matter that rests in the sound discretion of the trial court. Pen.Code, § 1203; People v. Jackson, 89 Cal.App.2d 181, 182, 200 P.2d 204. Probation is not an absolute right to which a defendant is entitled, but is an act of grace and clemency which may be granted to a seemingly deserving defendant. People v. Wiley, 33 Cal.App.2d 424, 429, 91 P.2d 907; People v. Hainline, 219 Cal. 532, 534, 28 P.2d 16.

[5] The court was clearly justified in denying probation to defendant. He had a prior felony conviction and the probation report, according to the judge, discloses that he had "quite an impressive record" of other offenses.

The judgment is affirmed.

Thomas W. Martin, Sacramento, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., by Lloyd Hinkelman, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment and order denying motion for new trial after a jury's verdict found appellant guilty of robbery.

We will first consider appellant's contention that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict of the jury. There was evidence as follows: On October 4, 1956, appellant received possession of one

Mary Todd's 1950 green Chevrolet to perform engine repairs. About 7 P.M. on that day appellant and one John Sanders, a codefendant with appellant herein, began using Mary Todd's car to drive around the Sacramento area. They called at the home of appellant's sister in Carmichael, then at the residence of appellant's girl friend in Sacramento, and then drove into the western part of the city where a third man entered the car. The three drove around town for about an hour, then parked the car across the street from a service station. Sanders crossed the street and entered the station, where at knife-point he compelled the attendant to give him approximately $100. This happened about 10:30 to 11 o'clock P.M. The three drove from the scene of the robbery and to Land Park, where the attendant followed them in his own car. He was able to obtain the license number of Mary Todd's car. This he communicated to the police upon his return to the service station. The three men proceeded to Franklin and Fruitridge Boulevards, where Sanders and the stranger left the car. Appellant parked the car in the service station where he was employed as a mechanic. While there he encountered one Jack Hudson, who accompanied him to a bar located across the street from the station. In the bar, appellant told Hudson that he had "just pulled a job on the Lucky Market." He also told Hudson that a man had followed him from the scene of the robbery and had obtained his license number. Later appellant met Sanders and the third man at the apartment occupied by appellant and Sanders and there the three men divided the money obtained in the robbery. The third man received $20, Sanders $25 or $30, and appellant $35 at that time, and $15 at a later date. The foregoing recital of the evidence in the record makes it obvious that appellant's contention as to the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the jury's verdict is without merit.

[1,2] Appellant contends that he was denied his rights in that he did not receive a fair and speedy trial. The record reveals that the information charging appellant with armed robbery and three prior felony convictions was filed November 7, 1956. Appellant entered his plea of not guilty on November 21st, following. At that time the court ordered the matter set for trial on January 9, 1957, sixty-three days from the filing of the information. Appellant was tried January 9th, 10th and 11th. Forty-nine days elapsed from the entry of plea to the beginning of the trial. Appellant asserts that the three days beyond the sixty-day provision of Section 1382 of the Penal Code and the nineteen days beyond the thirty-day provision provided by Section 1050 of that code constituted the denial of a speedy trial as required by the statutes. This record is silent with respect to the reasons for the delays. It equally is destitute of any record of objections raised by appellant as to delay. On such a record we must presume that no objection was raised and that any postponement was with the sanction of the appellant. People v. Lamb, 133 Cal.App. 2d 179, 283 P.2d 727. It is for the appellant to present a record which discloses error. The right to a speedy trial guaranteed by the Constitution and implemented by the statutes is a right that may be waived. People v. Tenedor, 107 Cal.App. 2d 581, 237 P.2d 679. The record discloses that appellant and his counsel were present when the orders were made and raised no objection. Under such circumstances it is presumed that there was a waiver of any right to an earlier trial. People v. Anderson, 126 Cal.App.2d 702, 704, 272 P.2d 805.

[3] Appellant contends that he was denied a substantial right by the trial court's refusal to refer his case to the probation officer for report and recommendations. Appellant had admitted the commission of three prior felony convictions. He was not eligible to probation. Section 1203 of the Penal Code, provides, in effect: A defendant previously convicted of two felonies committed in this state or of two offenses which would have been felonies if committed in California, is ineligible for probation; further, that a person previously convicted of a single felony in California or of a single offense which would have been a felony if committed in this state, is barred from probation when convicted in California of robbery of the first degree.

It, therefore, appears from the record herein that appellant was not entitled to probation and in such a situation Section 1203 of the Penal Code provides only that the judge may, in his discretion, refer the matter to the probation officer for an investigation of the facts relevant to sentence. The trial court acted within its rights in refusing to refer appellant's case to the probation officer.

[4] Appellant contends that the trial court committed prejudicial error when, on a certain occasion, the court called counsel to the bench to discuss a matter outside of appellant's hearing. The record discloses the following: Appellant's accomplice in the crime, Sanders, was testifying for the prosecution. When asked to relate where he went and what he did on the evening of the robbery, he stated he would like to ask the judge a question, and further stated that he would rather not say anything at the time if his silence was agreeable to the court. A considerable colloquy followed between the court and counsel, and the attorney who had been defending Sanders was called in to advise Sanders if necessary. This attorney took the position that his work was through and that he ought, therefore, not to claim or assume any right to represent the witness. The attorney informed the court that he had already told the witness to do what he thought was right concerning being a witness in the cause and that he felt he had no legal right to tell him what to do or not to do. The court then ordered the witness to answer questions and the witness proceeded to do so for a time until interrupted by an objection from counsel for the prosecution. His former attorney thereupon asked that the jury be excused, saying that he would like to make a statement to the court. The court did not excuse the jury, but told counsel that they could come up to the bench. Just what happened then, the record does not show, but at the end of whatever conversation was held the court ordered the trial to proceed and it did proceed without any objection from anyone and the witness continued his testimony. It is apparent that the conference, whatever it was, concerned the witness Sanders and his right to refuse to answer questions. No objection was made by appellant or his counsel at the time that anything was being said out of the hearing of appellant. His own counsel took part in the conversation at the bench. Therefore this record does not disclose a situation where in any practical sense appellant was not present at all times during the trial. It is for the appellant to show prejudice. People v. Isby, 30 Cal.2d 879, 189 P.2d 405. This record fails signally to meet that requirement.

[5] Appellant contends the court was guilty of misconduct in questioning witnesses. It is unnecessary to quote those portions of the record referred to by appellant in support of this contention. We have examined them with care and find therein no instance wherein the trial court went beyond the proper performance of its duty to examine witnesses if necessary or appropriate in order to elicit facts material to a just determination of the case. People v. Corrigan, 48 Cal.2d 551, 559, 310 P.2d 953. Moreover, no objection was made to the questions asked, no motion to strike the answers given, and it is settled that a judge's examination of a witness may not be assigned as error on appeal where no objection was made when the questioning occurred. People v. Corrigan, supra, 48 Cal.2d at page 556, 310 P.2d at page 955.

[6] The contentions of error we have been discussing appear in appellant's brief filed in propria persona. After it was filed he requested this court to appoint counsel to assist him. This was done and a supplemental brief was filed by the appointed counsel. Therein it is urged that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict of the jury without the testimony of the witness Sanders; and that his testimony, since he was not corroborated, cannot be considered. It clearly appears from the record that Sanders was an accomplice and it results that his testimony must have been corroborated if it was to be considered. Sec. 1111, Penal Code. Excluding from consideration the testimony of Sanders, the record discloses the following: On October 4, 1956, Mary Todd, the owner of a 1950 green Chevrolet automobile with license number ASL 472, turned said vehicle over to one Earl Butts and appellant for engine repairs. Appellant, who was employed by Butts as a mechanic at Norwalk service station in Sacramento, drove the vehicle to the station and proceeded to repair it. Sometime around 7 o'clock on that evening the appellant and John Sanders, appellant's roommate, drove Mary Todd's vehicle to the home of appellant's sister in Carmichael. Around 8 o'clock the two men left her home and drove to the home of one Bertha Lawrence in Sacramento. Between 10:30 and 11 P. M. one Charles R. Wallace, an employee at the College Chevron service station in Sacramento, was held up at knife point by Sanders. Sanders ran from the scene of the robbery to a parked vehicle where two men were waiting for him. The three men got into the vehicle and drove south on Freeport Boulevard. Wallace followed the vehicle into Land Park where he overtook it and was able to ascertain that it was a 1950 green Chevrolet with license number ASL 472. At about 11 P.M. appellant was seen driving the getaway vehicle into the Norwalk station at Franklin and Fruitridge Boulevards. He was seen to back the vehicle into the tune-up bay of the station and park it. After parking the automobile he met one Jack Hudson, a fellow employee, and together they went across the street to a bar about half a block from the station. While there appellant told Hudson that he had "just pulled a job on the Lucky Market". He also told Hudson that a man had followed him and had obtained his license number. After his arrest he was questioned by the police and made several inconsistent statements with respect to his activities on October 4th. We thus have appellant in custody of the car used in the robbery, we have him driving that car in the company of his roommate Sanders between the hours of 7 and 9 P.M., we have him driving the same car shortly after the robbery, during which time he was followed by Wallace, the victim of the robbery, we have appellant's statement to Hudson that he was in trouble because he had pulled a job "on the Lucky Market" and that someone had followed him and gotten his license number. That is enough. He had told Hudson he had pulled a job; that someone had followed him from that job and gotten his license number. The fact that he said the job was on the Lucky Market, rather than the service station, does not preclude the inference that this was mere concealment. In testing the sufficiency of corroboration, the trier of fact could determine that his statement he had pulled a job and been followed so closely that the follower had gotten his license number, together with the testimony as to Wallace's pursuit of the getaway car was sufficient to connect him with the crime so as to permit consideration of the testimony of the accomplice.

[7] Appellant next contends that the court committed prejudicial error in instructing the jury as to accomplices. It was the theory of the prosecution and the implied finding of the jury that appellant had waited in the getaway car while Sanders went into the station and committed the actual robbery at knife point. This theory was borne out by the evidence and it may, therefore, be said as a matter of law that Sanders was appellant's accomplice. But appellant complains that the court in one instruction submitted the issue of Sanders' complicity to the jury as a question of fact and in another instruction told them that he was an accomplice as a matter of law. The court first gave the usual instructions defining an accomplice and telling the jury that it was for them to decide under the evidence whether or not Sanders qualified as such. Shortly thereafter, the court told them that as a matter of law under the evidence in the case he was an accomplice and that they should consider him as such in considering whether or not he had been sufficiently corroborated and in weighing his testimony if they found that he had been. We think no prejudice could have been suffered from these instructions.

[8] The court told the jury that all persons concerned in the commission of a crime who either directly and actively committed the act constituting the offense or who knowingly and with criminal intent aided and abetted in its commission were regarded in law as principals; that a conviction, however, could not be had upon the testimony of an accomplice unless it be corroborated with such evidence as should tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; that an accomplice is one who is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant on trial; that in determining corroboration the jury should examine all other evidence in the case other than that of the accomplice with a view of determining if there was therein any inculpatory evidence, that is, evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime; that if such other evidence did do that then the testimony of the accomplice was corroborated and that if it did not then there was no corroboration, although the accomplice might be corroborated in regard to any number of facts sworn to by him. Both appellant and the prosecution had requested the giving by the court of CALJIC No. 822, but the requests were refused on the ground that the matter had already been covered. It is noted that the requested instruction contains the following: "The corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice required by the law is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or some or all of the circumstances thereof, or if it does no more than raise a suspicion of the guilt of the defendant." The requested instruction was proper and it might well have been given since the additional discussion it contains of the sufficiency of corroboration is well calculated to make that matter clearer to the jury than to tell them simply that evidence of corroboration was not sufficient unless it tended to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime. However, we cannot predicate prejudicial error upon this failure to give the explanatory instruction. We have already discussed the quantum of evidence connecting the defendant with the commission of the crime with which he was charged and, in view of its ample and substantial character, we do not believe that had the additional instruction requested been given any different result would have followed.

[9] Appellant contends that the court committed prejudicial error in denying appellant's requested instruction on accessories. Appellant was charged and prosecuted as a principal in the commission of the crime. It was the theory of the prosecution, supported by ample testimony and reflected in the verdict of the jury, that appellant was an active participant before the commission of the crime. All persons concerned in the commission of a crime are principals. Every person who, after a felony has been committed, harbors, conceals, or aids a principal with the intent that said principal may avoid or escape from arrest, trial, conviction or punishment, having knowledge that said principal has committed such felony, or has been charged with such felony, or convicted thereof, is an accessory to such felony. Penal Code, secs. 31, 32. Appellant points to evidence of acts upon his part committed after Sanders had robbed Wallace which he argues would have justified the jury in finding him guilty of the crime of being an accessory. However, he was not prosecuted as such. The crime of being an accessory is not a necessarily included offense in the principal crime. People v. Brown, 131 Cal.App.2d 643, 658, 281 P.2d 319. Appellant, therefore, could not have been convicted as an accessory and hence it was not error to refuse to instruct as to accessories after the fact, for such an instruction would not have been responsive to any issue before the court. People v. Brown, supra.

No further assignments of error merit consideration.

The judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

v.

Albert HOLLINS, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 6143.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 15, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of unlawful possession of narcotics. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Herbert V. Walker, J., rendered judgment, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that it was duty of defendant, who alleged that he was deprived of his constitutional right to have an issue raised at preliminary hearing through entry of plea to complaint and that court exceeded its jurisdiction in hearing evidence without taking a plea from him, to present a record on appeal affirmatively disclosing any error or denial of rights of which he complained, and where record was silent on subject of arraignment it would be presumed that proceedings were proper.

Affirmed.

It was duty of defendant, who alleged that he was deprived of his constitutional right to have an issue raised at preliminary hearing through entry of plea to complaint and that court exceeded its jurisdiction in hearing evidence without taking a plea from him, to present a record on appeal affirmatively disclosing any error or denial of rights of which he complained, and where record was silent on subject of arraignment it would be presumed that proceedings were proper. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 8.

2. Criminal Law ⇨245

Where defendant did not make motion to set aside information upon ground that before filing thereof he had not been legally committed by magistrate, he waived objection. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 995, 996.

3. Criminal Law ⇨1186(4)

Where alleged errors in criminal proceeding were insufficient to warrant a reversal under law which prevailed prior to enactment of section of constitution providing that no judgment should be set aside or new trial granted for error as to matter of procedure, unless error results in miscarriage of justice, constitutional provision would not be applied. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

4. Criminal Law ⇨1186(1)

Even if it were assumed that certain inconsistencies in testimony of police officer who changed his testimony on cross-examination amounted to perjury, reversal was not required, where there was no showing that prosecuting officials knew that any of assertedly perjurious evidence was false.

5. Criminal Law ⇨1166½(1)

Allegation that defendant was ineffectively represented by counsel of his own choice on ground that counsel failed in his duty to court as well as to defendant to diligently pursue and timely raise objections necessary to protect fundamental rights of accused was not ground for reversal in absence of showing that counsel displayed such a lack of diligence and competence as to reduce trial to a farce or sham.

Where defendant in response to officer's knock on door invited officer in, a search was made of defendant's person and his room, and defendant was arrested upon suspicion of unlawful possession of narcotics, but nothing in way of narcotics was found, the search, even though unlawful, could have had no prejudicial effect upon defendant's trial. West's Ann. Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

7. Criminal Law §1166½(1)

Where police officer who was on call as defense witness, did not appear, but defendant's counsel stated that he would try to get along without him, court suggested continuance of one week, but attorneys made stipulation concerning identification of a certain diagram and certain photographs which satisfied defense counsel and matter was dropped, defendant was not entitled to reversal on ground that his counsel improperly waived defendant's right to have process of court to compel attendance of witnesses.

Albert Hollins, in pro. per.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Convicted of unlawful possession of narcotics (Health & Safety Code, § 11500), with a prior conviction of a like offense found to be true, defendant appeals from the judgment, appearing in propria persona. He makes various contentions, none of which is meritorious.

[1] It is argued that appellant, who was tried upon an information, was deprived of his constitutional right to have an issue raised at the preliminary hearing through entry of a plea to the complaint; that the court exceeded its jurisdiction in hearing evidence without having taken a plea from defendant. Reliance is placed upon that portion of § 8, Article I, of the State Constitution, which reads: "If the felony charged is not punishable with death, the magistrate shall immediately upon the appearance of counsel for the defendant read the complaint to the defendant and ask him whether he pleads guilty or not guilty to the offense charged therein." There is no basis in the record for this argument. There is before us only the transcript of the hearing before the magistrate and that of the trial in the superior court, which included by stipulation the transcript of the preliminary hearing. The record is silent on the subject of arraignment and hence the presumption is against appellant, whose duty it was to present a record affirmatively disclosing any error or denial of rights of which he complains. People v. Lane, 144 Cal.App.2d 87, 90, 300 P.2d 321, 323, is in point. It says: "Defendant, in propria persona, first contends that he is entitled to a reversal of the judgment 'because he had no preliminary hearing on the charge for which he was sent to prison.' The record does not bear out this contention and in the absence of proof to the contrary, it must be presumed on appeal that the proceedings in the court below were proper and in accordance with the law and that the court was acting in the lawful exercise of its jurisdiction." Also declaring and applying that presumption are People v. Hinshaw, 194 Cal. 1, 10, 227 P. 156; People v. Jackson, 138 Cal. 462, 463, 71 P. 566; People v. Denne, 141 Cal.App.2d 499, 514, 297 P.2d 451; People v. Goldberg, 152 Cal.App.2d 562, 576, 314 P.2d 151.

[2] Section 995, Penal Code, provides that an information must be set aside upon motion of defendant upon a showing that "before the filing thereof the defendant had not been legally committed by a magistrate." Appellant claims that that is the situation here, but the record discloses no such motion made by him. Section 996, Penal Code, says: "If the motion to set aside the indictment or information is not made, the defendant is precluded from afterwards taking the objections mentioned in the last section." Such waiver has been enforced frequently by the courts. "Complaint is also made of a number of asserted irregularities in connection with petitioner's arrest and preliminary examination, including the claim of lack of sufficient evidence to warrant holding him for trial, but none of them furnish ground for release on habeas corpus after trial and conviction. All of these objections relate to the legality of the commitment by the magistrate, and petitioner's remedy was by motion pursuant to section 995 of the Penal Code to set aside the information. No such motion was made and, accordingly, any invalidity in the proceedings prior to the commitment is deemed waived under section 996. In re Tedford, 31 Cal.2d 693, 694, 192 P.2d 3; People v. Harris, 219 Cal. 727, 729-730, 28 P.2d 906; People v. Coates, 95 Cal.App.2d 78, [80], 212 P.2d 263; In re Heinze, 116 Cal.App. 286, 288-289, 2 P.2d 561; In re Northcott, 71 Cal.App. 281, 283, 235 P. 458." In re Razutis, 35 Cal.2d 532, 534, 219 P.2d 15, 16; People v. Lane, supra, 144 Cal.App.2d 87, 90, 300 P.2d 321, is to the same effect.

[3] Next it is argued that § 4½ of Article VI of the California Constitution cannot be applied to this case in such manner as to deprive appellant of due process or equal protection of the laws as guaranteed by the Federal Constitution, Amend. 14. Granted. But there is no occasion to apply § 4½ to the instant case. The alleged errors are insufficient to warrant a reversal under the law which prevailed prior to enactment of § 4½. There is no prejudicial error shown at bar. Moreover, § 4½ has been held not vulnerable to the attack now made by appellant. See Sampsel v. People of State of California, 9 Cir., 191 F.2d 721, 726; People v. Cowan, 44 Cal.App.2d 155, 159, 112 P.2d 62.

[4] The contention that the prosecutor knowingly used perjured testimony as a means of securing appellant's conviction is without substance. Appellant relies upon certain inconsistencies in the testimony of Police Officer Campillo who in two instances changed his testimony on cross-examination in respects which were and are inconsequential. The changes well may be considered as corrections of statements made inadvertently upon direct examination. Moreover, there is not an iota of evidence to indicate that the prosecuting officials knew that any of the assertedly perjurious evidence was false. In re Allen, 47 Cal.2d 55, 59, 301 P.2d 577, 580, is apposite: "But even if we were to assume, as petitioners contend, that Biersdorff did testify falsely, there has been a failure to prove sufficient facts to warrant relief in a habeas corpus proceeding. Petitioners have the burden of showing, not only that they were convicted by perjured testimony, but also that the prosecuting officials suffered the testimony to be introduced knowing that it was perjured. [Citations.] Here there is a complete lack of evidence that the prosecuting officials knew that the testimony was false." "The petitioner must show by a preponderance of substantial, credible evidence that perjured testimony was knowingly presented by the prosecution, In re Mooney, 10 Cal.2d 1, 15, 73 P.2d 554, and that such testimony established an essential element of her conviction." In re Mitchell, 35 Cal.2d 849, 856, 221 P.2d 689, 693.

[5] Appellant says that he was "ineffectively represented by counsel of his own choice" who "failed in his duty to the court as well as the defendant to diligently pursue and timely raise the objections necessary to protect the fundamental rights of the accused." The Supreme Court recently said, concerning the claim of inadequate representation by counsel: "But even if we concede that defendant's attorney may not have used the best of strategy in handling the voir dire examination and in failing to challenge some of the prosecutor's remarks, defendant still has not made that type of showing which alone would compel us to conclude that he was deprived of due process within the meaning of the constitutional guarantees. U.S.Const. 14th Amend. § 1. The handling of the defense by counsel of the accused's own choice will not be declared inadequate except in those rare cases where his counsel displays such a lack of diligence and competence as to reduce the trial to a 'farce or a sham.' Lunce v.

Overlade, 7 Cir., 244 F.2d 108, 110; see also Taylor v. United States, 9 Cir., 238 F.2d 409, 413-414, certiorari denied, 353 U.S. 938, 77 S.Ct. 817, 1 L.Ed.2d 761; United States ex rel. Feeley v. Ragen, 7 Cir., 166 F.2d 976, 980-981; Hendrickson v. Overlade, D.C.N.D.Ind., 131 F.Supp. 561, 562-564. The record in this case does not even remotely approach such a situation. Defendant's sole defense lay in his claim that his identification by the victims was incorrect. His counsel vigorously cross-examined the prosecution's witnesses to test their memories, and assiduously attempted to establish an alibi and to show defendant's good character. He at most committed what in retrospect may be claimed to be mistakes in judgment by following certain strategy employed. Such mistakes, if any, do not constitute a denial of due process. United States ex rel. Darcy v. Handy, 3 Cir., 203 F.2d 407, 426, certiorari denied sub nom. Maroney v. United States ex rel. Darcy, 346 U.S. 865, 74 S.Ct. 103, 98 L.Ed. 375." People v. Wein, 50 Cal.2d 383, 326 P.2d 457, 473. Appellant's assignments do not approach fulfillment of the test prescribed by the Wein case.

He claims there is in the reporter's transcript an answer of a forensic chemist which required vigorous cross-examination by defense counsel and that the matter was not properly pursued. This is an effort to capitalize an obvious error in transcription.<sup>1</sup> The attorney had ceased to represent appellant before the transcript was prepared. Appellant filed the notice of appeal in propria persona on November 18, 1957 and the reporter's transcript was not certified by the court reporter until December 11, 1957, or by the judge until December 27, 1957. So far as the record shows defendant's former counsel could not have had anything to do with the correction or settlement of the transcript.

[6] Appellant says his counsel should have moved to dismiss because the arresting officer made an illegal search. Appellant was arrested when he opened the door in response to the officer's knock; told that he was arrested upon "suspicion of narcotics," he invited the officer in and a search was then made of appellant's person and his room. But nothing in the way of narcotics was found. Hence the search, even if unlawful, could have no prejudicial effect upon his trial.

It is also said that counsel did not properly capitalize by cross-examination, objection or motion to dismiss, alleged hearsay and inconsistent statements in Officer Campillo's testimony. People v. Wein, supra, fully answers this contention.

[7] Again it is argued that defense counsel improperly waived defendant's right to have the process of the court to compel the attendance of witnesses and the right of defendant to confront the witnesses against him. This contention grows out of the fact that Officer Campillo was on call as a defense witness when the superior court trial opened but he did not appear at that time. Defendant's counsel said: "I know Officer Campillo very, very well. I feel the only thing that kept him from getting here is something unavoidable. I

A. The total weight would be approximately 221 grains."

In his argument to the trial judge (there being no jury) counsel for defendant said:

"I submit to the Court that this defendant has nothing in his possession, he has completely denied any knowledge of the articles found there, and the only testimony we have is that of the officer that this particular defendant buried something in a patch of asphalt out there and that later on they dug it up and found it to be a package containing heroin."

will try to get along without him." The court suggested a continuance of one week but the attorneys made a stipulation concerning identification of a certain diagram and certain photographs which satisfied defense counsel and the matter was dropped. Obviously the argument is without merit.

Appellant has shown no prejudicial error. The judgment is affirmed.

Joseph P. Henneberry, San Anselmo, for appellant.

Shirley, Saroyan, Calvert & Peterson, J. Francis Shirley, San Francisco, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

[1] Dorothy Henneberry brought this action against William Henneberry, alleging that she is the owner of an undivided one-half interest in certain real property in San Francisco, that William is wrongfully in possession of the property against her will, and demanding restitution of the property to her. By answer, William denied that plaintiff owns any interest in the property. The trial court found that plaintiff is not the owner of any interest in the property in that the deed under which she claims is void because of lack of delivery. From the judgment so declaring, plaintiff appeals.

The case involves an unpleasant squabble between members of a family over property. The building involved is a pair of flats. In 1941 Thomas and Michael Henneberry, brothers, held title to the property in joint tenancy. There were two other brothers, Joseph and William. Dorothy Henneberry, the plaintiff, is the wife of Joseph. At the time of trial in 1956 Michael was confined in a state hospital as a mentally ill person and had been so confined for over ten years. He had no guardian. Thomas, the other joint tenant, from 1949 until his death in 1955, was a very sick man, spending most of his time in hospitals or institutions.

The gift deed through which Dorothy Henneberry claims was executed on April 25, 1950. It is a gift deed purporting to convey all of the right, title and interest of Thomas in the property to Joseph. On this date Thomas was a patient in the San Francisco Hospital and had just undergone a serious operation. The deed was prepared by Joseph, who is an attorney. Why it was prepared, and at whose request, does not appear in the evidence. It was not recorded until several months after the death of Thomas, which occurred in 1955.

At the trial, in explanation of why he had not recorded the deed until after Thomas' death, and in describing the circumstances under which it was executed, Joseph testified that "the thought uppermost in my mind when I made that deed, I thought my brother was going to blow his top, I thought he would really go insane and the tormenting that that young fellow was going through—but as far as making it in contemplation of death, it probably was a secondary motive; but the primary motive that I had the deed made was, I thought Tom might blow his top."

Joseph testified that on the date the deed was executed he and Mrs. William Henneberry and the notary were in the room with Thomas; that he, Joseph, told Thomas that he had a deed to the property; that Mrs.

William Henneberry vigorously objected; that Thomas reached over and grabbed the deed, took a pen from the notary public, and signed the deed; that the notary informed Thomas that the deed was a gift deed, and that he was there to notarize it; that after Thomas signed the deed he handed it to Joseph without comment. According to Joseph, all of this occurred without Thomas uttering one word.

After the physical delivery of the deed, Joseph took it to the notary's office where a notary's seal was affixed, and then took it home and put it in a safe deposit box where it remained until several months after Thomas' death, when it was recorded. Joseph testified that "In fact, I was never going to record it, if he did the right thing with the property."

The testimony is to the effect that, after the deed was signed and physically delivered, both Joseph and Thomas intended that the property remain the property of Thomas, and both considered that Thomas was the owner of it until the time of his death. Joseph stated that he did not want to assert ownership because he wanted Thomas to have a place to come to after he got out of the hospital. Thomas always insisted that it was his property and that no one was going to get it away from him. Joseph testified that even if he had recorded the deed during the lifetime of Thomas, he would have considered Thomas as the owner. It is conceded that Joseph asserted no ownership over the house until after the death of Thomas, made no improvements, paid no taxes, even when he knew they were delinquent, did not collect the rents, did not pay any insurance premiums, and filed no gift tax return on the property.

In 1948 William Henneberry and his family moved into one of the flats at Thomas' request and upon Thomas' promise that if William would move in and take care of Thomas, William would have a home for the rest of his life. William and his family moved in, and, until Thomas' death, took care of Thomas when he was home. Thomas, during most of this period, was incapacitated and needed help, care and attention. William's wife acted as a nurse for Thomas, cooked for him, and fed and waited on him. When Thomas was in the hospital William or his wife visited him every visiting day. William collected the $25 a month rent for the other flat and bought things for Thomas that practically consumed the entire $25. In addition, William paid the taxes, insurance and maintenance costs.

On this evidence the trial court found that the plaintiff was not the owner of an undivided interest in the property for the reason that the gift deed to Joseph "is void and of no legal effect because of the lack of valid legal delivery thereof with intent to presently pass the title of Thomas A. Henneberry in the property described. In executing said deed Thomas A. Henneberry, grantor, did not intend to presently divest himself of his title in said property and Joseph P. Henneberry, grantee, did not intend to presently receive and accept a title or ownership in said property." Judgment was entered accordingly and plaintiff appeals, challenging the correctness of the quoted finding.

The challenged finding is amply supported. Appellant seems to argue that because Thomas admittedly signed the deed, admittedly handed it to Joseph, and because Joseph admittedly recorded it, a valid legal delivery was shown as a matter of law, which can be attacked only on the grounds of fraud and undue influence. Such is not the law.

[2] The rules applicable to a delivery of a deed are well settled. In addition to physical delivery, and an acceptance by the grantee, to constitute a valid delivery there must exist a mutual intention on the part of the parties, and particularly on the part of the grantor, to pass title to the property immediately. In other words, to be a valid delivery, the instrument must be meant by the grantor to be presently operative as a deed, that is, there must be the intent on the part of the grantor to divest himself presently of the title. Even if the document is manually delivered, but the evidence shows that the parties or the grantor intended the document to become operative only upon death, the document is testamentary in character and void as a deed.

[3-5] In determining this fundamental issue of intent, various presumptions and inferences arise in favor of the validity of the delivery because of due execution, manual transfer, possession of the document by the grantee, its acknowledgment and recordation. But these presumptions and inferences are all rebuttable. Declarations and acts of the grantor before and after the alleged delivery, and of the grantee afterwards, are admissible on this issue. Fundamentally, the question of intent is one of fact to be determined by the trier of the facts on all the evidence. For a general discussion of these principles see 15 Cal. Jur.2d p. 477, § 79 et seq.; see also Kelly v. Bank of America, 112 Cal.App.2d 388, 246 P.2d 92, 34 A.L.R.2d 578.

In the present proceeding a prima facie case of a valid delivery was established by the evidence that Thomas signed the deed and handed it to Joseph, that the deed was acknowledged and recorded, and was in the possession of the grantee. But that prima facie case was rebutted by Joseph's own testimony and by the testimony produced by William. Joseph admitted that after the date of the alleged delivery Thomas always considered that the property was his and frequently stated that no one would take it from him as long as he lived. Joseph also testified that he agreed with Thomas, and that he always wanted Thomas to have the place as his home as long as he lived. He did not consider that the property was his until after Thomas' death. Joseph filed no gift tax return, he paid no taxes, insurance premiums or maintenance expenses. He collected no rents and did not object to William's occupancy until after Thomas' death. Not one act of dominion over the property was performed by Joseph until after Thomas' death. Joseph stated that he always considered that the place was Thomas' as long as he was alive, and that he intended to record the deed only upon Thomas' death, or if he became insane. On the other hand, the evidence shows that after the date of the alleged delivery, Thomas, through the agency of William, continued to exercise complete dominion over the property and not only acted as if the property was his, but so stated. This evidence amply rebuts the prima facie case of delivery and amply supports the finding that the document was not to take effect until the death of the grantor and was, therefore, an attempt at testamentary disposition.

There are many cases in the books discussing these principles. But one needs to be mentioned. In Counter v. Counter, 104 Cal. App.2d 786, 232 P.2d 551, a gift deed was signed by the plaintiff and his wife and manually transferred to their son Richard. Nine years later the wife died, and Richard, who had possession of the deed, recorded it. The father brought an action to cancel the deed. He testified that after the deed had been signed he told Richard not to record it unless something happened to him. He testified that at all times after the alleged delivery he considered the property his, managed it, collected the rents, paid income tax on the sums so received, paid the cost of insurance, taxes and upkeep. Richard knew of these facts. Richard, prior to his father's remarriage after his mother's death, had never asserted any claim to the property, never attempted to collect the rents, or never offered to pay any of the expenses. Two days after his father remarried he recorded the deed. The trial court found that the deed had never been delivered. In affirming this finding this court stated (104 Cal.App.2d at page 789, 232 P.2d at page 553): "Defendant's main contention is that the physical delivery of the deed to defendant vested title in the grantee subject only to a life estate in the grantors, regardless of the circumstances of the delivery. He contends that such delivery bars any claim that the intention of the grantors was otherwise. This contention disregards one of the most important matters in connection with the delivery of a deed, which is, what was the intention of the grantors? 'The delivery of a deed is not effected by a mere manual tradition of the instrument, unless the act "be accompanied with the intent that the deed shall become operative as such" [citation]; i. e., that it shall presently pass title, without the reservation of any right of revocation or recall. [Citation.] * * * Physical delivery raises an inference that the grantors are immediately parting with the title. But that inference may be overcome by evidence showing that such was not the intention of the grantors. Here, while the circumstances were such as to support a conclusion, had the trial court made it, that the grantors intended to vest title reserving to themselves only a life estate, such a conclusion is not compelled. A very reasonable conclusion is the one drawn by the court, namely, that the grantors did not intend to part with the title but merely intended the deed as a testamentary disposition to take effect upon their death." The reasoning of this case is conclusive here.

[6] Appellant next contends that under section 13642 of the Revenue and Taxation Code, since the gift deed was made and physically delivered some five years before the death of the transferor, it must be determined, as a matter of law, that it was not made in contemplation of death and it must be conclusively assumed that the delivery was a valid and legal one. The section requires no such result. It provides:

"A transfer conforming to Section 13641 and made in contemplation of the death of the transferor is a transfer subject to this part, but no such transfer shall be deemed or held to have been made in contemplation of death if made more than three years prior to the death of the transferor.

"'Contemplation of death' includes that expectancy of death which actuates the mind of a person on the execution of his will. The term is not restricted to that expectancy of death which actuates the mind of a person making a gift causa mortis."

[7] It is quite apparent that this quoted section, and section 13644 of the Revenue and Taxation Code, also referred to by appellant, do not purport to define what is or is not a valid delivery, but relate to the taxation of transfers without consideration, and that their purpose is to prevent the evasion of taxes. See § 13648 of the Rev. & Tax. Code. The tests set forth in the relied upon sections to determine whether a gift deed is or is not taxable are applied only after it has been established that there has been a valid delivery of the deed. The sections do not attempt to determine whether a valid delivery has taken place. See 24 Cal.Jur.2d p. 31, § 17.

[8] Appellant places considerable reliance on the fact that the deed to Joseph was recorded, and seems to contend that such admitted fact raises a conclusive presumption in favor of delivery. The fact of recordation is important, but the presumption raised by it is rebuttable, not conclusive. The evidence in the record clearly rebutted that presumption. See Rousseau v. Hurtado, 122 Cal.App.2d 705, 265 P.2d 580.

[9] Appellant refers to other presumptions and inferences that she claims support her case. Thus, she contends that under the provisions of section 1962, subd. 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure "The truth of the facts recited, from the recital in a written instrument between the parties thereto, or their successors in interest by a subsequent title" must be conclusively presumed. This, indeed, is a conclusive presumption, but it obviously is not applicable to this case where the action is not against a party to the deed.

Other presumptions or inferences relied upon are either not applicable to the facts or are rebuttable. As already pointed out, all the rebuttable presumptions and the inferences in favor of appellant were rebutted by the evidence.

The other points raised do not require discussion.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Robert F. MINNEY, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.

CITY OF AZUSA, a municipal corporation,
Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 22896.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 3, 1958.

Hearing Denied Dec. 1, 1958.

Action by church attacking denial of variance in City of Azusa comprehensive zoning ordinance for purpose of permitting construction of church in residential zone. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Kenneth C. Newell, J., entered judgment sustaining demurrer to complaint and church appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that where party sought variance in zoning ordinance, party could not attack validity of ordinance itself and there was no showing of an abuse of discretion in denying variance to zoning ordinance to permit erection of church in residential area.

Affirmed.

1. Municipal Corporations ⇨601(7)

A zoning ordinance can lawfully exclude churches from a residential district. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 65853; St.1883, p. 93.

2. Municipal Corporations ⇨601(7)

Zoning ordinance which excludes churches from residential zone and in consequence classifies them in relation to other activities is valid unless it discriminates against churches upon its face or is so administered as to accomplish that result.

3. Municipal Corporations ⇨122(2)

Burden rests upon him who asserts invalidity of zoning ordinance to show such an abuse of discretion on part of zoning authorities as would justify court in concluding as a matter of law that ordinance is unduly oppressive and not reasonably necessary to promote general welfare of people.

4. Municipal Corporations ⇨122(2), 601(18)

Every intendment favors a valid exercise of police power with respect to enactment of zoning ordinance, and any zoning plan must be viewed as a whole and court will not search out individual cases of discrimination or hardship.

5. Municipal Corporations ⇨601(5)

Effect of particular zoning upon surrounding properties is to be considered by the zoning authorities as are existing conditions and probabilities of future developments in the area under consideration.

6. Municipal Corporations ⇨63(2)

Wisdom of zoning ordinance is not a matter for the courts unless there is a manifestly unreasonable classification.

7. Municipal Corporations ⇨601(7)

Comprehensive zoning ordinance forbidding erection of churches in residential zone open to single family residences and also to agriculture, horticulture, flower and vegetable gardens, etc., was not manifestly unreasonable classification. St.1883, p. 93.

8. Pleading ⇨312

Where action was brought attacking validity of zoning ordinance and it was claimed that ordinance excluding churches from 90% of area of city was unreasonable because remaining locations were undesirable because of obnoxious fumes, noise, etc., and case came before District Court of Appeal as result of sustaining of demurrer to complaint to which were attached or incorporated by reference zoning ordinances and maps, allegations of complaint must yield to the showing of exhibits which it undertook to interpret.

9. Municipal Corporations ⇨122(2)

Burden rests upon party attacking ordinance to establish invalidity of same in its application to property involved and failure to sustain burden raises presumption of existence of such facts as are sufficient to sustain ordinance.

10. Municipal Corporations ⇨621.13

Since a variance presupposes reasonableness of zoning regulations as a whole, where party applies for a variance in zoning ordinance he precludes himself from arguing that zoning board has no power because of invalidity of ordinance to grant concession.

11. Municipal Corporations Ⓒ621.41

Where record disclosed that party seeking variance in zoning ordinance to enable him to erect church in residential zone had never acquired title to property covered by application but had entered into arrangement with owner by which he had agreed to purchase lot provided he was able to secure a variance for construction of church thereon, applicant was not the "owner" within purview of ordinance making ownership criterion of right to file petition for variance.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Owner".

12. Municipal Corporations Ⓒ621.13

One who purchases property in anticipation of procuring a variance to enable him to use it for purpose forbidden at time of sale cannot complain of hardship ensuing from denial of desired variance.

13. Municipal Corporations Ⓒ621.55

In action attacking denial by zoning board of variance to permit party to erect a church in residential district, notwithstanding the prior grant of variances to allow erections of churches in the area, evidence disclosed that commission and council had not discriminated against churches as such.

Prior exceptions granted by adjustment board in zoning ordinance are not in themselves controlling since ill-advised or illegal variances do not furnish grounds for repetition of the wrong.

15. Municipal Corporations Ⓒ621.55

In action by church attacking denial of variance in zoning ordinance which would enable church to erect a church in a residential area, evidence failed to disclose any prejudice against the particular church which controlled the decision of zoning authorities.

16. Municipal Corporations Ⓒ621.50

Averments of complaint in action attacking legality of denial of variance in zoning ordinance could not fill any hiatus in proof before commission and city council, since court had no jurisdiction to grant hearing de novo.

17. Municipal Corporations Ⓒ621.52, 621.53

A clear showing of abuse of discretion is essential to a successful attack upon granting or denial of a variance, and there is presumption that necessary facts have been ascertained and found by zoning commission.

18. Municipal Corporations Ⓒ591

Power to hear arguments for and against granting of variance in zoning ordinance and to give recommendations thereon may be validly delegated to zoning commission by city council. St.1883, p. 93.

19. Municipal Corporations Ⓒ625

Reasonably definite standards must be prescribed as a basis for zoning board's action in recommending the grant or denial of variance in zoning ordinance, but degree of definiteness must be treated according to the inherent uncertainties in the subject matter.

20. Municipal Corporations Ⓒ621.55

In action by party attacking legality of denial of variance in zoning ordinance to enable party to erect church in residential area, record failed to disclose that arbitrary power was conferred upon zoning commission by city council or that power delegated to it was arbitrarily exercised. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 65853.

Birnbaum & Hemmerling, Los Angeles, Hayden C. Covington, Brooklyn, N. Y., for appellant.

Tscharner & Tscharner, Azusa, for respondent.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Reverend Robert F. Minney, acting as congregation servant and presiding minister of Azusa Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses (a religious organization), appeals from a judgment which upholds the denial of a variance sought by him under the city's Comprehensive Zoning Ordinance for the purpose of constructing within the R-1 or residential zone a church or "Kingdom Hall" for use of said congregation. The basic claim is denial of religious liberty and violation of the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

The city of Azusa is a municipal corporation organized in 1898 under the General Municipal Act of 1883, St.1883, p. 93, and has a population of about 15,000. Its Comprehensive Zoning Ordinance No. 409 was passed in 1949 and defines numerous zones ranging from single family residential (R-1) to general manufacturing (M-2). It was amended before plaintiff's application for a variance was made, first by Ordinance No. 441 on January 7, 1952, and then by Ordinance No. 455 on August 4, 1952. As thus amended the ordinance provided at the time of plaintiff's application (in August, 1954) that the uses permitted in the R-1 or single family residence zone should be "(a) A one-family dwelling of a permanent character, placed in a permanent location and used by but one family; (b) Agriculture and horticulture, flower and vegetable gardening, nurseries and greenhouses used only for purposes of propagation and culture and not including any sale at retail from the premises nor any signs or displays; * * * (d) Libraries, museums, parks, playgrounds, public schools, and community buildings owned and controlled by the municipality or school district * * *." (Quotations are from § 5.1 of Ordinance No. 455.) Other portions of the section are not material to the present problem. Section 7.1, covering zone R-3 or multiple family residence zones, authorizes "(a) Any use permitted in Zones R-1 and R-2. (b) Any flat building, apartment house, or bungalow court, together with the out-buildings necessary to such use, located on the same lot or parcel of land. (c) Churches and/or parochial schools." (Quotation from Ordinance No. 441.) Section 8.1(b) of Ordinance No. 409 (not later amended) also permits churches in the R-4 or apartment house zone.

Appellant brought this action attacking the ordinance as discriminatory on its face and in its administrative application to his congregation through denial of a variance which would permit erection of a church in the R-1 zone. His second amended complaint, to which a demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, seeks mandamus, injunction, declaratory relief, certiorari and prohibition. Having been denied any relief he appeals from the judgment.

[1] The pleading presents first the fundamental issue whether a zoning ordinance can lawfully exclude churches from a residential district. This question is settled in the affirmative so far as California law is concerned. Corporation of the Presiding Bishop of Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints v. City of Porterville, 90 Cal. App.2d 656, 203 P.2d 823, arose under the zoning ordinance of the city of Porterville which established an R-1 zone wherein buildings were restricted to single family residences. Churches were included in the R-4 or "unlimited residence" zone. The Mormon Church, through its Presiding Bishop, sought mandamus to compel the city authorities to issue a permit for construction of a church upon property owned by plaintiff within the R-1 zone. Demurrer having been sustained without leave to amend, plaintiff appealed from the judgment. "Plaintiff's contention is that the zoning ordinance as applied to plaintiff to prevent its construction of a church for religious worship upon its property is invalid because, as so applied, it bears no substantial relation to the public health, safety, morals and general welfare and thus is beyond the police power of the State to enact, and further, because the application of the ordinance to petitioner results in a restriction of religious worship in the absence of any grave or imminent danger justifying such a restriction." 90 Cal.App.2d at page 658, 203 P.2d at page 824. The court said, 90 Cal.App.2d at pages 659-660, 203 P.2d at page 825: "A single family residence may be much more desirable when not in an apartment house neighborhood or adjacent to a public building such as a church. The municipal legislative body may require that church buildings be erected to conform to health and safety regulations as provided in its building code and we see no reason to hold that churches may be erected in a single family residential area when a duplex, triplex, or other multiple dwelling can lawfully be excluded therefrom. The provision in the ordinance for a single family residential area affords an opportunity and inducement for the acquisition and occupation of private homes where the owners thereof may live in comparative peace, comfort and quiet. Such a zoning regulation bears a substantial relation to the public health, safety, morals and general welfare because it tends to promote and perpetuate the American home and protect its civic and social values.

"We find no merit in plaintiff's contention that the application of the ordinance to the plaintiff results in an unwarranted restriction of religious worship. * * * The denial of a building permit did not prohibit anyone from religious worship and there is nothing in the record before us to indicate that the church building could not be erected if located in the area zoned for that purpose.

"The petition fails to state a cause of action in that the facts alleged do not show that the ordinance in question is unreasonable and void as applied to plaintiff." At page 661 of 90 Cal.App.2d, at page 826 of 203 P.2d: "The burden is upon the plaintiff to allege and prove physical facts from which the court could conclude as a matter of law that the ordinance was unreasonable and invalid. Wilkins v. City of San Bernardino, supra, 29 Cal.2d 332, at page 338, 175 P.2d 542.

"In enacting zoning ordinances, the municipality performs a legislative function and every intendment is in favor of the validity of such ordinances. Jardine v. City of Pasadena, 199 Cal. 64, 72-73, 248 P. 225, 48 A.L.R. 509. It is presumed that the enactment as a whole is justified under the police power and adapted to promote the public health, safety, morals, and general welfare. Lockard v. City of Los Angeles, 33 Cal.2d 453, 460, 202 P.2d 38.

"There is reasonable justification for the action of the defendant city in prescribing the buildings which may be erected and constructed in the zone established for single family residences and in such cases the wisdom of the prohibitions and restrictions is a matter for legislative determination. Lockard v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 33 Cal.2d at page 461, 202 P.2d 38." Our Supreme Court denied a hearing. The United States Supreme Court dismissed an appeal from the judgment "for want of a substantial federal question" (338 U.S. 805, 70 S.Ct. 78, 94 L.Ed. 487) and denied a rehearing (338 U.S. 939, 70 S.Ct. 342, 94 L.Ed. 579). It later explained the philosophy of the ruling as follows: "When the effect of a statute or ordinance upon the exercise of First Amendment freedoms is relatively small and the public interest to be protected is substantial, it is obvious that a rigid test requiring a showing of imminent danger to the security of the Nation is an absurdity. We recently dismissed for want of substantiality an appeal in which a church group contended that its First Amendment rights were violated by a municipal zoning ordinance preventing the building of churches in certain residential areas. Corporation of Presiding Bishop, C. J. C. L. D. S. v. Porterville, 1949, 338 U.S. 805, 70 S.Ct. 78." American Communications Ass'n v. Douds, 339 U.S. 382, 397, 70 S.Ct. 674, 683, 94 L.Ed. 925.

The Porterville decision was followed in City of Chico v. First Ave. Baptist Church, 108 Cal.App.2d 297, 301, 238 P.2d 587, a case involving the validity of a zoning ordinance requiring the obtaining of a use permit before devoting to church uses property located in the residential zone. The Supreme Court recently recognized Porterville as good law, saying in Roman Catholic Welfare Corp. v. City of Piedmont, 45 Cal.2d 325, 334, 289 P.2d 438, 443: "Respondents place reliance upon the case of Corporation of Presiding Bishop v. City of Porter- ville, 90 Cal.App.2d 656, 203 P.2d 823, in which it was held that by ordinance the city could prohibit all churches in a residential area. That case is distinguishable from the one under consideration. Here, only private schools are excluded—not all schools as were all churches in the Porterville case.”

Although it did not follow the Porterville doctrine, the Supreme Court of Washington in State ex rel. Wenatchee Cong. etc. v. City of Wenatchee, 50 Wash.2d 378, 312 P.2d 195, 197, made pertinent observations concerning the weight of authority and the California ruling: “Generally, zoning ordinances which wholly exclude churches in residential districts have been held to be unconstitutional. * * * However, in Corporation of Presiding Bishop of Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints v. City of Porterville, 90 Cal.App.2d 656, 203 P.2d 823, the California court expressed a view contrary to the prevailing weight of authority. The essence of the reasoning of the California Court seems to be that zoning legislation which prospectively treats all religious groups alike, i. e., prohibits prospectively all churches in certain zones, if otherwise reasonable, may be a valid and a proper non-discriminatory, non-arbitrary exercise of state police power. This viewpoint rejects the reasoning of the weight of authority that churches may be excluded or zoned out of particular areas only on the basis of traffic or other hazards substantially related to public health or safety. The viewpoint of the weight of authority may be an extreme one. It ignores the basic premise of modern day zoning legislation which emphasizes the best and most reasonable land utilization possible, considering the best interests of the entire community. It permits any church group, absent the factor of traffic hazards, substantially related to public health and safety, to acquire land and to establish a church, irrespective of other factors which may be of significant public interest, and normally considered and emphasized in present day community land use planning programs.”

The Porterville case is but a recognition and application of the concept that there can be no absolutes even in the field of personal freedoms, and that this is and must be a nation of ordered liberties if the fundamental guarantees of the First and Fourteenth Amendments are to survive. Mr. Chief Justice Hughes thus stated the matter in Cox v. New Hampshire, 312 U.S. 569, 61 S.Ct. 762, 85 L.Ed. 1049 (a case which holds that Jehovah's Witnesses were not entitled to conduct a street parade without first procuring the statutorily required special license): “Civil liberties, as guaranteed by the Constitution, imply the existence of an organized society maintaining public order without which liberty itself would be lost in the excesses of unrestrained abuses. The authority of a municipality to impose regulations in order to assure the safety and convenience of the people in the use of public highways has never been regarded as inconsistent with civil liberties but rather as one of the means of safeguarding the good order upon which they ultimately depend.” 312 U.S. at page 574, 61 S.Ct. at page 765. Also: “The argument as to freedom of worship is also beside the point. No interference with religious worship or the practice of religion in any proper sense is shown, but only the exercise of local control over the use of streets for parades and processions.” 312 U.S. at page 578, 61 S.Ct. at page 767.

In Gospel Army v. City of Los Angeles, 27 Cal.2d 232, 242, 163 P.2d 704, 711, the court said: “‘If there is any fixed star in our constitutional constellation, it is that no official, high or petty, can prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religion, or other matters of opinion or force citizens to confess by word [of mouth] or act their faith therein.’ West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 642, 63 S.Ct. 1178, 1187, 87 L.Ed. 1628, 147 A.L.R. 674. It does not follow, however, that religious organizations enjoy unlimited freedom in carrying on all activities related to their religious program.” On page 243 of 27 Cal.2d, on page 711 of 163 P.2d it quoted a portion of the above passage from Cox v. New Hampshire, supra. The case upheld a city ordinance requiring plaintiff to procure a secondhand dealer's license to conduct its salvage activities through sale in a secondhand goods store operated by it; this notwithstanding that plaintiff was found to be "engaged exclusively in the promulgation, by literature and word of mouth, of its religious beliefs, by and through its auxiliaries, and in the procuring of donations in the form of money and articles of value in the prosecution and furtherance of its religious activities." 27 Cal.2d at page 233, 163 P.2d at page 706.

In Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 60 S.Ct. 900, 84 L.Ed. 1213 (upholding the right of Jehovah's Witnesses to solicit from door to door without first procuring a license as required by statute), the court said: "No one would contest the proposition that a state may not, by statute, wholly deny the right to preach or to disseminate religious views. Plainly such a previous and absolute restraint would violate the terms of the guarantee. It is equally clear that a state may by general and non-discriminatory legislation regulate the times, the places, and the manner of soliciting upon its streets, and of holding meetings thereon; and may in other respects safeguard the peace, good order and comfort of the community, without unconstitutionally invading the liberties protected by the Fourteenth Amendment." 310 U.S. at page 304, 60 S.Ct. at page 903. Effect was given to this idea of permissible regulation of "the times, the places, and the manner of soliciting upon its streets" by the ruling in Rescue Army v. Municipal Court, 28 Cal.2d 460, 171 P.2d 8. The Los Angeles Charities and Relief Ordinance in § 44.09(a) required persons soliciting contributions for charity by means of receptacles in certain specified public places to secure express written permission from the Board of Social Service Commissioners, 28 Cal.2d at page 469, 171 P.2d 8. Upholding this requirement the court said, 28 Cal.2d at page 470, 171 P.2d at page 15: "There can be no question, therefore, that a person is free to hold whatever belief his conscience dictates, but when he translates his belief into action he may be required to conform to reasonable regulations which are applicable to all persons and are designed to accomplish a permissible objective. Gospel Army v. City of Los Angeles, supra." Explaining that reliance upon Cantwell v. Connecticut, supra, was misplaced, it further remarked: "It is clear, however, from what has been said before that the right to the permit required in subdivision (a) of section 44.09 does not depend upon a religious test. * * * As before stated, the authority of the board is limited to regulating the issuance of permits for the solicitation of funds in the designated publicly owned or controlled places by means of receptacles for the sole purpose of preventing fraudulent practices and protecting the safety and convenience of the public. * * "The general regulation, in the public interest, of solicitation, which does not involve any religious test and does not unreasonably obstruct or delay the collection of funds, is not open to any constitutional objection, even though the collection be for a religious purpose. Such regulation would not constitute a prohibited previous restraint on the free exercise of religion or interpose an inadmissible obstacle to its exercise." 310 U.S. 304, 305, 60 S.Ct. 903.<sup>1</sup> * * * We conclude, therefore, that the provisions of the ordinance underlying the charges against Murdock are constitutional, and that in the absence of admitted or proven facts showing that the ordinance is being unconstitutionally applied, the alternative writ must be discharged and the peremptory writ must be denied." 28 Cal.2d at pages 472, 473, 171 P.2d at page 16.

Murdock v. Pennsylvania, 319 U.S. 105, 63 S.Ct. 870, 87 L.Ed. 1292, referring to Cox v. New Hampshire, supra, and Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, 315 U.S. 568, 62 S.Ct. 766, 86 L.Ed. 1031, says: "But that merely illustrates that the rights with which we are dealing are not absolutes." 319 U.S. at page 110, 63 S.Ct. at page 873. Also: "Jehovah's Witnesses are not 'above the law'. But the present ordinance is not directed to the problems with which the police power of the

"Although the central issue in determining the validity of an ordinance excluding churches from a zoned area would seem to be whether the restriction interferes with the first-amendment guarantee of freedom of religion as incorporated in the fourteenth, none of the decisions invalidating these ordinances has explicitly rested on this ground. Although the Supreme Court has been strict in its prohibition of prior restraints on freedom of religion or speech, it has held that reasonable regulations of time and place are valid. Whether a zoning ordinance restricting the location of churches is such a reasonable regulation should turn on whether the interference with the free exercise of religion is outweighed by the public interest in restriction. A highly relevant consideration would be the availability to the church of alternative locations." (70 Harv.L.Rev. 1436.)

Appellant's briefs finally come to rest upon the proposition that churches are subject to zoning regulations so long as same are not discriminatory on their face or in their administration. "Appellant admits that churches must comply with the law. This is not gainsaid. But because churches must comply with regulatory, procedural provisions of the zoning law, this does not give unlimited discretion to the administrators so that they can violate the constitutional rights of churches." "It is said on page 2 of the [respondent's] brief that appellant has a 'theory' that zoning laws, as applied to churches, are unconstitutional per se. This is not the contention of the appellant. It is the contention of the appellant that this particular zoning law, on its face and especially as enforced, is unconstitutional. * * * The statement in the middle of page 23 that churches are subject to reasonable zoning regulations is admitted."

[2] Our discussion must proceed from this point upon the assumption that an ordinance which excludes churches from residence zones and in consequence classifies them in relation to other activities is valid unless it discriminates against churches upon its face or is so administered as to accomplish that result.

Appellant argues that the Azusa ordinance is discriminatory upon its face because churches are excluded from zone R-1 which is open not only to single family residences but also to agriculture, horticulture, flower and vegetable gardens, nurseries and greenhouses used only for purposes of propagation and not for sale at retail; also, libraries, museums, parks, playgrounds, public schools and community buildings owned and controlled by the municipality or school district (Ordinance No. 455, § 5.1). Churches are included in zone R-3 which also embraces flat buildings, apartment houses, bungalow courts and parochial schools (Ordinance No. 441, § 7.1).

It being established law that churches can be excluded legally from a residential zone and that they are subject to reasonable zoning regulations, appellant stands, with respect to this claim of unreasonable classification or discrimination on the face of the ordinance, in the same position as any other litigant who raises that issue. In other words, proposed use of property for religious purposes does not give it per se a title to any particular zone; a church, like any other property owner, is to be considered on its merits as fitting into the general scheme of a comprehensive zoning, entitled to no preference and subject to no adverse discrimination.

[3-6] The burden rests upon him who asserts invalidity of the zoning ordinance to show "such an abuse of discretion on the part of the zoning authorities as would justify the court in concluding as a matter of law that the ordinance is unduly oppressive and not reasonably necessary to promote the general welfare of the people of the community." Lockard v. City of Los Angeles, 33 Cal.2d 453, 467, 202 P.2d 38, 46, 7 A.L.R.2d 990. See, also, Wilkins v. City of San Bernardino, 29 Cal.2d 332, 338, 175 P.2d 542; Beverly Oil Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 40 Cal.2d 552, 559, 254 P.2d 865; Acker v. Baldwin, 18

Cal.2d 341, 344-345, 115 P.2d 455; Otis v. City of Los Angeles, 52 Cal.App.2d 605, 614-615, 126 P.2d 954. Every intendment favors a valid exercise of the police power in this respect. (Idem.) Any "zoning plan must be viewed as a whole and the court will not search out individual cases of discrimination or hardship." Acker v. Baldwin, supra, 18 Cal.2d 341, 345, 115 P.2d 457. Effect of a particular zoning upon surrounding properties is to be considered by the zoning authorities. Lockard v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 33 Cal.2d at page 464, 202 P.2d 38; Robinson v. City of Los Angeles, 146 Cal.App.2d 810, 816, 304 P.2d 814), as are existing conditions and probabilities of future developments in the area under consideration. Acker v. Baldwin, supra, 18 Cal.2d at page 346, 115 P.2d 455; Lockard v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 33 Cal.2d at page 464, 202 P.2d 38. All this adds up to an ultimate rule that the wisdom of the ordinance is not a matter for the courts unless there is apparent a manifestly unreasonable classification. Lockard v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 33 Cal.2d at pages 461-462, 202 P.2d 38; McCarthy v. City of Manhattan Beach, 41 Cal.2d 879, 886, 264 P.2d 932; Schumm v. Board of Supervisors, 140 Cal.App.2d 874, 880, 295 P.2d 934; Otis v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 52 Cal.App.2d at pages 605, 613-614, 126 P.2d 954.

[7] Though we might have included churches in the R-1 zone had we drafted the ordinance, that fact alone would not now justify interference with the results achieved by the public body charged with that duty. "The wisdom of the prohibitions and restrictions is a matter for legislative determination, and even though a court may not agree with that determination, it will not substitute its judgment for that of the zoning authorities if there is any reasonable justification for their action." Lockard v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 33 Cal.2d 453, 461, 202 P.2d 38, 43. "As stated in Clemons v. City of Los Angeles, 36 Cal.2d 95, 222 P.2d 439, 441, a zoning ordinance enacted pursuant to a comprehensive plan of community development, 'when reasonable in object and not arbitrary in operation,' will be sustained as a proper exercise of the police power; every intendment is in favor of its validity, and a court will not, 'except in a clear case of oppressive and arbitrary limitation,' interfere with the legislative discretion; it is presumed to be adapted to promotion of the public health, safety, morals and general welfare; and though the court may differ with the zoning authorities as to the 'necessity or propriety' of the regulation so long as it remains a 'question upon which reasonable minds might differ,' there will be no judicial interference with the municipality's determination of policy." McCarthy v. City of Manhattan Beach, supra, 41 Cal.2d 879, 885, 264 P.2d 932, 935.

That these principles are equally applicable to a claim of discrimination when raised by a religious society is attested by Corp. Presiding Bishop v. City of Porterville, supra, 90 Cal.App.2d 656, 203 P.2d 823 (see language quoted above); also by Roman Catholic Welfare Corp. v. City of Piedmont, supra, 45 Cal.2d 325, 326, 289 P.2d 438. "The courts will, of course, inquire as to whether the scheme of classification and districting is arbitrary or unreasonable, but the decision of the zoning authorities as to matters of opinion and policy will not be set aside or disregarded by the courts unless the regulations have no reasonable relation to the public welfare or unless the physical facts show that there has been an unreasonable, oppressive, or unwarranted interference with property rights in the exercise of the police power." Lockard v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 33 Cal.2d at page 461, 202 P.2d at page 42.

Appellant, in arguing unreasonable classification, contends that a church as such is entitled to come within the R-1 zone if libraries, museums, playgrounds and public schools and other buildings owned and controlled by the city or school district are included. He relies somewhat upon Roman Catholic Welfare Corp. v. City of Piedmont, supra, 45 Cal.2d 325, 289 P.2d 438, but the case does not fortify his position. That was a matter of discrimination between school and school,—public and private. It was there said, 45 Cal.2d at page 333, 289 P.2d at page 443: "Each case must be decided on its facts, and before us we have only the question of a private school to be located adjacent to a Catholic Church in the area where public schools are found." At page 334 of 45 Cal.2d at page 443, of 289 P.2d, distinguishing the Porterville case, supra: "That case is distinguishable from the one under consideration. Here, only private schools are excluded—not all schools as were all churches in the Porterville case." All churches are excluded from R-1 by the Azusa ordinance and hence the Piedmont case, supra, does not apply here. Likewise, the many decisions which appellant cites to the effect that churches cannot be excluded from residential zones are of no assistance to his cause for the California law is to the contrary.

[8] It is asserted and asseverated that the ordinance excludes churches from ninety per cent of the area of the city of Azusa and, as more than half of the other ten per cent is now devoted to other uses, the result is that less than five per cent of the total area of the city is actually available for church purposes, that much of that five per cent is located along Santa Fe and Pacific Electric rights of way or adjacent to industrial sites, and therefore "undesirable" for church locations because of obnoxious fumes, noise, smoke and the like. This case comes up as the result of sustaining of demurrer to the second amended complaint; attached thereto or incorporated by reference are the zoning ordinances and map, but they do not show the truth of the asserted facts; so it cannot be said that the face of the ordinance shows the alleged discrimination. In this aspect of the matter the allegation of the complaint must yield to the showing of the exhibits which it undertakes to interpret (39 Cal. Jur.2d, § 62, p. 93). The averment if true is immaterial, for we are now dealing with discrimination and unreasonableness upon the face of the ordinance. When we reach the matter of a variance the question of truth of these allegations becomes pertinent and it will then appear that there was no substantial proof of the truth of same.

[9] Without attempting to divine and justify the reasoning underlying the Azusa ordinance (not the business of this court), we find no showing on plaintiff's part that good reason did not exist for the classification found in the subject ordinance. "The burden rests upon the plaintiff to establish the invalidity of the ordinance in its application to the property involved. The plaintiff's failure to sustain this burden raises a presumption of the existence of such facts as are sufficient to sustain the ordinance. Pacific States Box & Basket Co. v. White, 296 U.S. 176, 56 S.Ct. 159, 80 L.Ed. 138 [101 A.L.R. 853]." Beverly Oil Co. v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 40 Cal.2d 552, 559, 254 P.2d 865, 869. Accord: Safeway Stores v. City Council, San Mateo, 86 Cal.App.2d 277, 284, 194 P.2d 720; Robinson v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 146 Cal. App.2d 810, 818, 304 P.2d 814; De Luca v. Board of Supervisors, 134 Cal.App.2d 606, 610, 286 P.2d 395. The Pacific States case says, 296 U.S. at page 185, 56 S.Ct. at page 163: "The order here in question deals with a subject clearly within the scope of the police power. [Citation.] When such legislative action 'is called in question, if any state of facts reasonably can be conceived that would sustain it, there is a presumption of the existence of that state of facts, and one who assails the classification must carry the burden of showing by a resort to common knowledge, or other matters which may be judicially noticed, or to other legitimate proof, that the action is arbitrary.'" The contention that the instant ordinance contains arbitrary and unreasonable classification must be rejected.

[10] The same result flows from another line of thought. Appellant has proceeded in such manner as to preclude his attacking the constitutionality of the ordinance. "[A] 'variance' presupposes the reasonableness of the zone regulation as a whole." Moriarty v. Pozner, 21 N.J. 199, 121 A.2d 527, 533. The present controversy stems from rejection of an application for a variance. Plaintiff did not initially attempt to compel issuance of a permit to him upon the theory that the ordinance is per se arbitrary and discriminatory. On the contrary, he applied in the first instance for a variance permitting a church in zone R-1. By so doing he precluded himself from arguing that the zoning board (City Planning Commission) has no power (because of invalidity of the ordinance) to grant the concession, the variance which he seeks.

It is so held in Rubin v. Board of Directors, 16 Cal.2d 119, 104 P.2d 1041. The court there said, 16 Cal.2d at pages 124-125, 104 P.2d at page 1043: "Unlike the 'spot zoning' obtained by amendment of the general zoning ordinance, a variance or exception sanctions a deviation from the standard under the dispensing power vested in the administrative body. * * * On the other hand, the grant of dispensation is a matter of grace, and a refusal is not the denial of a conditional statutory right; it merely leaves in operation the statute adopted by the legislative body. People ex rel. Fordham M. R. Church v. Walsh, supra [244 N.Y. 280, 155 N.E. 575].

"The application for a variance necessarily admits the constitutionality of the ordinance under which the city officials charged with the duty of administering a zoning ordinance are asked to exercise a discretion; therefore, an applicant may not challenge its constitutionality before the administrative body. For if an attack on constitutional grounds was successful, the discretionary power of the board would also fall. In a proceeding to review a decision denying a variance, it has been held that 'the sole question before the court is the propriety of the action of the board upon the application addressed to its discretion, and the petitioner will not be heard upon the question of the constitutionality of the act of the Legislature under which the ordinance was enacted.'" Also, 16 Cal.2d at page 126, 104 P.2d at page 1044: "But the finality of the board of directors' termination does not bar the respondents from asserting in a judicial proceeding that the zoning law is unconstitutional as applied to their property. * * * When the board of directors of Pasadena denied petitioners' application for a variance it did not take away a property right, but merely refused to grant a favor. Its action left the petitioners' property subject to the zoning restrictions then in force." This decision was applied in Metcalf v. County of Los Angeles, 24 Cal.2d 267, 272, 148 P.2d 645, and Hadden, Inc., v. City of Inglewood, 101 Cal.App.2d 47, 48, 224 P.2d 913. Upon oral argument counsel for appellant conceded that this line of cases leaves open to him only the claim that the denial of a variance amounted to discriminatory application of the ordinance to appellant's property.

The matter of variances is covered by Article XIX of Ordinance No. 409. Section 19.1 authorizes them in the following language: "When practical difficulties, unnecessary [sic] hardships, or results inconsistent with the general purposes of this Ordinance occur through a strict interpretation of its provisions, the Commission, upon its own motion may or upon the verified application of any property owner or owners, shall in specific cases initiate proceedings for the granting of a variance from the provisions of this Ordinance under such conditions as may be necessary to insure that the spirit and purpose of this Ordinance will be observed, public safety and welfare secured, and substantial justice done. * * *" Section 19.2: "Before any variance may be granted, it shall be affirmatively shown: (a) That there are special circumstances attached to the property referred to in the application or motion, which do not apply generally to other properties in the same District; (b) That the granting of such variance is necessary to do substantial justice, and to avoid practical difficulty, unnecessary hardship, or results inconsistent with the general purpose of this Ordinance; (c) That the granting of the variance will not result in material damage or prejudice to other property in the vicinity, nor be detrimental to the public health, safety, or general welfare." The application must be referred immediately to the Planning Commission for hearing (§ 19.3). Section 19.4 provides that the application shall be accompanied by: "(d) Evidence of the ability and intention of the applicant to proceed with actual construction work in accordance with said plans within ninety (90) days from the date of granting said application." Section 19.5: "The Commission shall cause such investigations of fact bearing on the application to be made as will provide necessary information to insure that the action on each such application is consistent with the intent and purpose of this Ordinance." A public hearing is required and a "verbatim transcript of all testimony offered at a public hearing, together with the names and addresses of all persons testifying shall be recorded and made a part of the permanent files of the case." (§ 19.6.) The commission is required to render "a report and recommendation to the City Council" (§ 19.7) which shall review the same and may confirm, reverse or modify the action of the commission without a hearing after having read the complete verbatim transcript of the commission hearing. The council may also "[s]et the matter for public hearing before itself, make its own findings and grant or deny the application accordingly." (§ 19.8, subd. (3).) "The action of the City Council upon an application for a variance is final and conclusive as to all things involved in the application." (§ 19.8.)

In the present instance there were two hearings, one upon an original application for a variance and the other upon a "verified supplement to petition for variance," which latter document was filed after the commission and the council had denied the original application. The complaint incorporates the complete transcript of each hearing before the commission, also the minutes of the City Council.

[11] A proceeding for a variance is initiated upon motion of the commission or "upon the verified application of any property owner or owners" (§ 19.1). Respondent questions appellant's status as an applicant. The record shows that appellant (who is acting as trustee for the congregation and pursuant to its authority) never acquired title to the property covered by his application. He entered into an arrangement with the owner by which he agreed to purchase the lot provided he was able to secure a variance for construction of a church thereon. He testified before the commission: "Mr. Minney: We bought it with the understanding that if a church could be erected, the lot would be ours. Mr. Teasley: Then actually you will not lose any money? Mr. Minney: No, we will lose nothing except time and a good location for a church." The reply brief says that "appellant would not lose the deposit of money made on the option to purchase" if the variance is not effectuated. The supplement to petition alleges that "the property is now held in escrow." Oral argument indicated that plaintiff held an option to purchase at the time of the first hearing, that the matter had progressed to an escrow at the time of the second, but that plaintiff has never been in danger of losing anything if the deal is frustrated by denial of a variance. The purchase having been made upon condition of a variance being issued, and plaintiff having paid nothing irrevocably, it can hardly be said that he is the owner within the purview of the ordinance which makes ownership the criterion of a right to file a petition. Cf. 1 Yokley on Zoning Law and Practice (2nd Ed.), 1957 Supp., p. 92, § 134; Lee v. Board of Adjustment, 226 N.C. 107, 37 S.E. 2d 128, 131, 168 A.L.R. 1. This question of Rev. Minney's right to file the application for variance is so closely related to that of hardship that it need be pursued no further.

Section 19.1 predicates the granting of a variance upon "practical difficulties, unnecessary hardships, or results inconsistent with the general purposes of this Ordinance." Section 19.2(b) requires an affirmative showing inter alia that a variance is required to avoid unnecessary hardship. It appears that plaintiff did not canvass the area for other church sites but took an option on this one with full knowledge of the zoning and upon condition that he could obtain a variance. Self-induced hardship is not within the purview of the ordinance. Only that type of hardship which inheres in the particular property is recognized,—such as inability to use it for purposes of its existing zoning caused by the prevailing uses of surrounding property. Examples of cognizable hardship are given in Wilkins v. City of San Bernardino, supra, 29 Cal. 2d 332, 340, 175 P.2d 542. "A 'variance' for undue hardship is grounded in conditions peculiar to the particular lot as distinguished from other property in the use district." Beirn v. Morris, 14 N.J. 529, 103 A.2d 361, 364. See, also, Preye v. Board of Adjustment, 22 N.J.Super. 161, 91 A.2d 597, 602; In re Michener's Appeal, 382 Pa. 401, 115 A.2d 367, 371. Subdivision (a) of § 19.2 of the Azusa ordinance so provides: "That there are special circumstances attached to the property referred to in the application or motion, which do not apply generally to other properties in the same District."

[12] One who purchases property in anticipation of procuring a variance to enable him to use it for a purpose forbidden at the time of sale cannot complain of hardship ensuing from a denial of the desired variance. Gleason v. Keswick Improvement Ass'n, 197 Md. 46, 78 A.2d 164, 165-166; Preye v. Board of Adjustment, supra, 91 A.2d at page 604; Union Free School Dist. v. Village of Hewlett Bay Pk., 198 Misc. 932, 102 N.Y.S.2d 81, 83; affirmed, 278 App.Div. 706, 103 N.Y.S.2d 831; Selligman v. Von Ailmen Bros., 297 Ky. 121, 179 S.W.2d 207, 210; Beirn v. Morris, supra, 103 A.2d at page 364; Clark v. Board of Zoning Appeals of Hempstead, 301 N.Y. 86, 92 N.E.2d 903; 1 Rathkopf, The Law of Zoning and Planning, § 3, p. 748.

[13] The burden of appellant's main attack upon the city's denial of a variance is that of alleged discrimination growing out of the fact that other churches have been granted variances permitting them to build in the R-1 zone. The specifications are Concordia Lutheran Church on September 28, 1949; First Christian Church, August 31, 1950; Church of Christ, May 10, 1951; Church of the Nazarene, August 29, 1951; Emanuel Baptist Church, January 7, 1954. The Emanuel parcel lies immediately south of plaintiff's lot; the variance was in effect at the time of the first hearing and denial but had lapsed before hearing was had upon appellant's supplemental application. It also appeared at the hearing that the Catholic, Presbyterian and Friends churches are located outside the R-1 zone, but when they were erected is not shown. That the commission and the council have not discriminated against churches as such is witnessed by the five variances just mentioned.

[14] Appellant centers upon the Emanuel Baptist Church variance for a lot in the same block with plaintiff's and insists that that of itself proves unwarranted discrimination as matter of law. The authorities are to the contrary. "Prior exceptions granted by the adjustment board are not in themselves controlling. Ill-advised or illegal variances do not furnish grounds for a repetition of the wrong. If that were not so, one variation would sustain if it did not compel others, and thus the general regulation eventually would be nullified. The annulment of zoning is a legislative function that is beyond the domain of the zoning board." Potts v. Board of Adjustment, 133 N.J.L. 230, 43 A.2d 850, 854. "The nonconforming uses do not justify the variance sought. If the rule were otherwise, one variation would sustain if it did not compel others, and thus the general regulation would in time be rendered abortive. [Citations.] A variant use of plaintiff's lands would necessarily be the basis for others and thus the disintegrating process would be set in motion." Beirn v. Morris, supra, 14 N.J. 529, 103 A.2d 361, 364. To the same effect are Moriarity v. Pozner, supra, 21 N.J. 199, 121 A.2d 527, 534; Scaduto v. Town of Bloomfield, 127 N.J. 1, 20 A.2d 649, 651; Ventresca v. Exley, 358 Pa. 98, 56 A.2d 210, 212; Chudnov v. Board of Appeals of Town of Bloomfield, 113 Conn. 49, 154 A. 161, 164; Young v. City of Abilene, Tex.Civ.App., 195 S.W.2d 838, 840; Van Meter v. Westgate Oil Co., 168 Okl. 200, 32 P.2d 719, 721-722; Brous v. Town of Hempstead, 272 App.Div. 31, 69 N.Y.S.2d 258, 261; O'Connor v. Mayor and Council of Borough, 1 N.J.Super. 638, 65 A.2d 127, 129; Hay v. Board of Adjustment of Borough of Fort Lee, 37 N.J.Super. 461, 117 A.2d 650, 653; 58 Am. Jur. § 205, p. 1052; Annotation 168 A.L.R. 42. This is also the California Law. "It was not a denial of plaintiffs' constitutional right to the equal protection of the laws for the city of Los Angeles to discriminate against plaintiffs by granting variances to some property owners and refusing a variance grant to plaintiffs in the same district." Otis v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 52 Cal.App.2d 605, 613, 126 P.2d 954, 958. "If an owner could compel the extension of the boundaries of the 'island,' by any such showing, then the next adjoining owner in turn could likewise make the same kind of a showing and obtain another extension of the 'island' to his property, and in a short time there would be an end to the effectiveness of all zoning legislation." Wilkins v. City of San Bernardino, supra, 29 Cal.2d 332, 341, 175 P.2d 542, 549. "The fact that variances may have been granted to some owners and denied to others, however, does not establish unreasonable discrimination. The granting or denial of variances rests largely in the discretion of the body designated by the zoning ordinance for that purpose, and a denial of a variance will not be disturbed in the absence of a clear showing of abuse of discretion." County of San Diego v. McClurken, 37 Cal.2d 683, 691, 234 P.2d 972, 978.

[15] Appellant insistently claims that there was prejudice against Jehovah's Witnesses which controlled the decision of the zoning authorities. The only evidence to which counsel can point is the statement of one objector at the first hearing who testified: "Stemrich: I am not prejudiced, but if people know that there is a Witness church in the neighborhood they would just as soon move out. Hawkins: Would any other church do it? Stemrich: As far as I am concerned all religions are the same but there are some people that have different outlooks." There is nothing in the record to raise an inference that the committee or the city council adopted Stemrich's view. The inference from the hearing record seems plain that petitioner and his associates sought to ride through the hearing upon the emotional issue of prejudice against Jehovah's Witnesses, buttressed by the claim of absolute right of a church to have a variance when and where it desires. Rev. Minney's showing at this original hearing was little more than pro forma.

It consisted of submission of plans and drawings of the proposed church building, simple in design, finished with stucco outside and plaster inside, to occupy 2,500 square feet, and cost approximately $12,000; assurance was given that the portion of the lot not occupied by the building would be blacktopped for off-street parking. Days and hours of customary services were stated, the congregation was said to have as members 70 residents of Azusa, and the meetings were declared to be orderly and not noisy. No evidence was adduced by applicant on the subjects of special circumstances surrounding the particular property, necessity of avoiding practical difficulties, unnecessary hardship or results inconsistent with the purpose of the ordinance; no evidence was presented concerning damage or prejudice to other property in the zone and no attention given orally to the general welfare. All of this seems to have been proffered or omitted upon the assumption of a legal right to a variance for a church. Petitions opposing the variance, signed by 47 residents of the immediate neighborhood, were presented and various persons spoke in opposition to the application, each assigning his own reasons as would be expected. They concern mainly a desire for a quiet neighborhood and objection to increased traffic. The commission was required to make a factual investigation before the hearing and presumptively did so. As the decision had to be reached in the light of the comprehensive zoning plan and of existing and future conditions, the members of the commission necessarily had to supplement the testimonial showing by resort to their own knowledge. (See, 1 Yokley, Zoning Law and Practice (2nd ed.), § 127, p. 308.) The application was denied because of "approximately 47 names being presented in protest and representation in the audience protesting another church in this area." While objections of property owners cannot control the decision they are not to be disregarded. City of Stockton v. Frisbie & Latta, 93 Cal.App. 277, 281, 295, 270 P. 270. On September 7, 1954, the council denied the application: "Due to the number of protests filed with the Council by people in the immediate vicinity."

In January, 1955, appellant filed his "Verified Supplement to Petition for Variance" claiming prejudice against Jehovah's Witnesses and breathing defiance to the zoning authorities. It does pay formal obeisance to constituted authority, saying in paragraph XV: "I am making this application for a variance so as to render 'unto Caesar that which belongs to Caesar', for the purpose of orderliness and complying with the regulations and ordinances of the City of Azusa." It seems unfortunate that that other precept of the Master was not kept in mind: "And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile,<sup>2</sup> go with him twain." (Matthew 5:41.)

Immediately following the sentence above quoted, paragraph XV continues: "I contend, however, under the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of California, that the ordinances of the City of Azusa above quoted, which require a variance for a church to be built in any neighborhood, except in an R-3 zone * * * are void because no city or political subdivision or state authorities thereof have the right to require a variance before a piece of property can be used for a church." Paragraph XIX: "I anticipate that the Planning Commission of the City of Azusa and the City Council will deny this application, as the Planning Commission and the City Council previously denied my application." Paragraph XXX: "Said sections of the code have been enforced by the Planning Commission and the City Council so as to authorize many of the orthodox and popular religions to build church buildings or repair or add additions thereto in the City of Azusa since the passage of said measures, while discriminating against the Jehovah's Witnesses."

This petition was followed by a hearing before the Planning Commission on February 2, 1955, at which additional evidence was taken. It was devoted largely to the traffic question. A new objectors' petition was presented containing some 109 names, and "setting forth various reasons such as depreciation of property values, noise and traffic, improper zoning in that it was all R-1 originally." Concerning this latter point Mr. Stemrich testified: "The only thing that I have against buildings going in that area is that if one is granted then there will be more granted. There is quite a bit of vacant property there and if the variance is granted, more buildings and apartments will be built." Photographs attached to the complaint show this neighborhood to be largely undeveloped. But a "growing residential area is as reasonable an object of protection as one which is fully built up." Jones v. City of Los Angeles, 211 Cal. 304, 309, 295 P. 14, 17.

Plaintiff said that a church would not "devalue" his own residence property within the zone nor would it add to its value. Asked if there were any special circumstances applicable to this property, he said: "Yes, the property next door and then, of course, the church across the street are R-3 and R-4. The land is not generally developed. The street is black topped half the distance." The "property next door" seems to refer to the Baptist parcel, and "the church across the street" is non-existent.

The supplemental application says: "I desire to state, also, that we will plant suitable plants, trees and shrubs, and our congregation is fully prepared to carry the financial burden, and are able to do so, necessary to complete construction." Section 19.4, subdivision (d), requires proof of ability and intention to proceed with actual construction work within 90 days from granting of application. No affirmative evidence to this effect was offered by applicant. When interrogated by the chairman of the board he testified: "Teasley: According to the ordinance you have to start work within 90 days after the ordinance is granted, and you have a right to request an extension of time—can you start your work within 90 days? Minney: We can start before 90 days. Teasley: Can you show us proof that you can? Minney: We are prepared to go ahead with this matter. We can't show you any financial statement but we have the money available. Shier [attorney for petitioner]: There is a party that is going to loan the money to the congregation—it will be paid for completely." The showing went no further. In the first hearing plaintiff testified the building would cost $12,000; in the second he said the cost would be $15,000. The price of the lot (as yet unpaid) was not given. The name of the prospective lender was not disclosed; his ability to perform was not shown; whether he had legally bound himself to make the loan does not appear. Certainly the commission was justified in rejecting this as proof of one of the matters which must be shown affirmatively upon such an application.

As a result of this hearing the commission found that the Baptist permit was no longer outstanding, many protests from residents residing within 300 feet from the property had been received, many residents in the locality had purchased homes because they were situated in an R-1 zone, these homes were built some years before appellant's application for variance was made, the erection of a church in the locality "would be detrimental to and reduce valuation of properties in said vicinity"; also that a variance "would be inconsistent with the general purposes of the ordinance"; that applicant had failed to show that he had the ability to proceed with actual construction within 90 days. It was therefore recommended that the variance be denied. The matter came before the council on February 21st and it denied the application "upon all the ground[s] as set forth in the resolution of the Planning Commission."

[16] At none of the hearings before the commission or council was any proof made in support of the claim that the ordinance excludes churches from 90 per cent of the area of the city, that less than 5 per cent thereof is actually available for church purposes and that much of that 5 per cent is located along railroad rights of way and other industries. This matter was inherent in the issues of practical hardship etc. which the planning commission was required by ordinance to consider at the hearing before it. The ordinance and zoning map do not support the allegation,—not without the aid of oral explanation and application to the city's entire area. Of course, the application for variance is not evidence of the truth of its own averments. The complaint makes these allegations, but averments of the pleading cannot fill any hiatus in the proof before the commission and City Council for the courts have no jurisdiction to grant a hearing de novo. Wheeler v. Gregg, 90 Cal.App.2d 348, 361, 203 P.2d 37; Steiger v. Board of Supervisors, 143 Cal.App.2d 352, 356, 300 P.2d 210.

Cal.2d 552, 559, 254 P.2d 865; Otis v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 52 Cal.App.2d 605, 614, 615, 126 P.2d 954; Steiger v. Board of Supervisors, supra, 143 Cal.App.2d 352, 357, 300 P.2d 210), for every intendment favors a valid exercise of the police power by the zoning authorities (Wilkins v. City of San Bernardino, supra, 29 Cal.2d 338-339, 175 P.2d 542; Lockard v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 33 Cal.2d 453, 461, 467, 202 P.2d 38; Acker v. Baldwin, supra, 18 Cal.2d 341, 344, 115 P.2d 455; Otis v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 52 Cal.App.2d 613, 126 P.2d 954), and there is a presumption that the necessary facts have been ascertained and found by the zoning commission. Bartholomae Oil Corp. v. Seager, 35 Cal.App.2d 77, 80, 94 P.2d 614; Wheeler v. Gregg, supra, 90 Cal.App.2d 348, 360, 203 P.2d 37; Steiger v. Board of Supervisors, supra, 143 Cal.App.2d 356, 300 P.2d 210; North Side Property Owners Ass'n v. County of Los Angeles, 70 Cal.App.2d 598, 608, 161 P.2d 613; Schumm v. Board of Supervisors, supra, 140 Cal.App.2d 874, 880, 295 P.2d 934; Lindell Co. v. Board of Permit Appeals, 23 Cal.2d 303, 323, 144 P.2d 4. Moreover, it is manifest that failure to prove any of the matters required by the ordinance must result in a denial of a variance application. Appellant failed to make the necessary proof under the ordinance and there has been no showing of abuse of discretion on the part of the commission or the City Council.

[18-20] Appellant's attorneys argue, however, that the discretion here exercised was an arbitrary one because the ordinance did not prescribe sufficiently definite standards for the exercise of discretion by the commission. It is apparent from the ordinance that the commission does not decide but merely recommends appropriate action to the City Council. It is settled that such power to hear and recommend may be delegated validly to the commission. Johnston v. Board of Supervisors, 31 Cal.2d 66, 73, 187 P.2d 686; Hopkins v. MacCulloch, 35 Cal.App.2d 442, 450, 95 P.2d 950; Meyers v. Board of Supervisors, 110 Cal.App.2d 623, 630, 243

P.2d 38; Wheeler v. Gregg, supra, 90 Cal. App.2d 348, 363, 203 P.2d 37; Steiger v. Board of Supervisors, supra, 143 Cal.App.2d 352, 355-356, 300 P.2d 210. Of course, reasonably definite standards must be prescribed as a basis for board action, but the degree of definitiveness must be tested according to the inherent uncertainties in the subject matter. "A zoning ordinance places limitations upon the use of land within designated areas in accordance with the general policy adopted by the legislative body. The ordinance may be arbitrary and discriminatory in isolated cases as applied to certain property, and compliance therewith may present unusual difficulties in many other instances. But it is manifestly impracticable, if not impossible, to enumerate in the ordinance itself the varied factual situations to which the ordinance is not applicable because of constitutional objections or other special considerations. Consequently, almost every zoning ordinance, including the one under consideration, contains provisions whereby an owner may apply to an administrative body for permission to put his land to a nonconforming use." Metcalf v. County of Los Angeles, supra, 24 Cal.2d 267, 270, 148 P.2d 645, 647. "The statutory rule of 'unnecessary hardship' as a guide for variances, has been generally upheld as adequate." (20 Law and Contemporary Problems, p. 291.) See, also, 1 Yokley, Zoning Law and Practice (2nd ed.) § 135, p. 327. Standards no more specific than those at bar have been held adequate in Hilton v. Board of Appeals of City of Geneva, Sup., 18 N.Y.S.2d 213, 217; Maxwell v. Klaess, 192 Misc. 939, 82 N.Y.S.2d 588, 590, 592; Bishop v. Board of Zoning Appeals, 133 Conn. 614, 53 A.2d 659, 662; Potts v. Board of Adjustment, 133 N.J.L. 230, 43 A.2d 850, 853-854, supra. See, also, standards prescribed by the Legislature of this State in § 65853, Government Code. This record does not warrant the conclusion that arbitrary power was conferred upon the commission or that the power delegated to it was arbitrarily exercised.

Do all of the foregoing principles fall into the discard when a religious organization asserts a right to a variance? This question has been answered in the negative in West Hartford Meth. Ch. v. Zoning Board of Appeals, 143 Conn. 263, 121 A.2d 640, 643; Galfas v. Ailor, 81 Ga.App. 13, 57 S.E.2d 834, 836; Miami Beach United Lutheran Church of the Epiphany v. City of Miami Beach, Fla., 82 So.2d 880. In the last cited case it is said, at page 882: "It seems that the appellant bought the property with knowledge of the zoning restrictions when, as we understand the record, sites for churches were available in other parts of the city. The restrictions were imposed by an ordinance that was presumptively valid, so the appellant in this suit assumed the 'extraordinary' burden of alleging and proving that the ordinance was invalid. * * * It is commonly known that generally the activities of the present-day churches are wide and varied as, indeed, they should be. The use of church buildings and facilities is not confined to worship periods on Sunday and mid-weekly prayer meetings. They are often used as places of instruction and entertainment. We do not frown upon these activities; on the contrary we think they should be promoted and encouraged. But we do not agree that because of the merits of these activities it can be said that an infringement of the constitutional rights of the owner results if it is not allowed use of the property for such purposes in the midst of a section of the city which has been restricted, and which the appellee in this instance knew had been restricted, primarily to homes to be occupied by individual families." With this we agree.

City of Chico v. First Ave. Baptist Church, supra, 108 Cal.App.2d 297, 238 P.2d 587, involved the assertion of church immunity to an ordinance requirement of obtaining a special use permit for a church in a residential zone, and it was held that "Corporation of Presiding Bishop of the Church of Jesus Christ v. City of Porterville, 90 Cal.App.2d 656, 203 P.2d 823, seems to be a complete answer to appellant's contentions." 108 Cal.App.2d at page 301, 238 P.2d at page 589.

It also appears from the record in the Porterville case, supra, that the litigation actually arose out of the city's denial of a variance requested by the church and the court's ruling necessarily recognized application of the presumptions and other principles therein discussed to a variance proceeding.

It is apparent that the complaint could not be successfully amended and hence the demurrer was properly sustained without leave.

Judgment affirmed.

Civ. 5873.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Oct. 10, 1958.

Action by seller of steel against builders to recover damages for claimed breach of contract. The Superior Court, San Diego County, William P. Mahedy, J., entered judgment for seller and buyers appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, P. J., held that acceptance of contract to furnish steel for construction of building in consideration of stipulated payments, including plans for three story building by reference and subject to possibility that buyers would notify seller within two or three days that two story instead of three story building would be built, established binding contract subject to possible delay of two or three days, and when buyers did not notify seller of change of plans within two or three days and took out building permit in their name and examined plans and specifications for steel work and seller was allowed to proceed with negotiations for purchase of steel without objection, buyers acquiesced in and ratified seller's action in proceeding with fulfillment of contract.

1. Sales ⚡23(3)

Acceptance of contract to furnish steel for construction of building in consideration of stipulated payments, including plans for three-story building by reference and subject to possibility that buyers would notify seller within two or three days that two-story instead of three-story building would be built, established binding contract subject to possible delay of two or three days.

2. Estoppel ⚡90(2)

Where buyers were to notify seller of structural steel within two or three days as to possible change of plans if two-story instead of three-story building was to be erected, but no notification of change was made, buyers took out building permit in their name and examined plans and specifications for steel work and seller was allowed to proceed with negotiations for purchase of steel without objections, buyers acquiesced in and ratified seller's actions in attempting to fulfill contract respecting three-story building.

3. Contracts ⚡22(1)

The conduct of an offeree may constitute acceptance.

4. Contracts ⚡199(1)

If reference in contract to plans and specifications indicate intention to incorporate them generally, they become part of contract for all purposes.

5. Contracts ⚡1

Public policy is subserved by leaving parties and their rights to be measured by terms of their engagements and, although they may have made unfortunate arrangement, when they have entered into it voluntarily they are bound by it in absence of equitable grounds for avoidance and they must be presumed to have contracted with reference to existing conditions known to them.

Mere difficulty or unusual or unexpected expense will not excuse party for failing to comply with terms of his contract, nor is it defense that law had rendered performance difficult or expensive.

7. Contracts ⚡170(1)

Parties to contract, in all fairness, should be bound by construction they themselves have placed upon their agreement, particularly where they have acted thereunder for considerable period of time.

8. Damages ⚡45

Contractor may recover his expenses incurred in part performance as well as his anticipated profit upon completed job basis.

9. Sales ⚡383

In action by seller of steel against buyers to recover damages for claimed breach of contract, where work was not done, but seller had purchased steel and had shown reasonably substantial basis for loss of profit and damage, evidence supported award for loss of profit and damage.

Where seller was to furnish steel for construction of building in return for stipulated payments, but buyers breached contract after seller had entered upon performance, seller's offer to extend time if buyers would pay additional sum of money was not waiver of breach since buyers did not accept offer which did not appear to have been unreasonable.

Edgar B. Hervey and James Edgar Hervey, San Diego, Henry F. Walker, Los Angeles, of counsel, for appellant.

Stickney & Stickney and Edward Strop, San Diego, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff-respondent Standard Iron Works, a corporation (hereinafter referred to as Standard) brought this action for damages against defendants and appellants Globe Jewelry and Loan, Inc., a corporation, (hereinafter referred to as Globe), Globe Properties, and Harold Steckel, for claimed breach of contract. It was stipulated at the trial that in all dealings by defendant Steckel he was acting as agent and as an officer of defendant Globe and Globe Properties, and that said businesses were owned by Steckel and his wife.

Plaintiff corporation is engaged in the structural steel fabricating business in San Diego. Defendants owned unimproved property at the northwest corner of Fifth and Date streets, and in the latter part of 1955 they contemplated constructing a three-story office building thereon. They employed a Mr. Wheeler, an architect, to prepare architectural drawings for such a building, and he in turn employed one Ruskin, a structural engineer, to prepare the structural drawings. In January, 1956, these plans and drawings, providing for a three-story steel frame building with concrete basement were released for bid to certain general contractors, including one C. S. Larsen, who was the lowest bidder. Plaintiff had previously been furnished with the architectural and structural drawings for bidding on the steel work.

On February 10, 1956, when it was still contemplated by defendants that a general construction contract would be let to Larsen, a meeting, wherein Mr. Ruskin, Larsen, Steckel and his wife, one Seltzer, attorney for defendants, and one Dearth, Vice President and representative of plaintiff were present, was held for the purpose of obtaining a contract for the structural steel necessary for the building. At that time there existed a steel shortage, and a threatened strike in the steel plants. Defendant Globe had a lease agreement with an insurance company to lease one-third of the floor space of the building, when completed, with a deadline of June, 1956. Its loaning agency required that at least 70 per cent of all space be leased by that time. Dearth had been requested by Larsen to attend this meeting. Based upon the architectural and structural drawings he was asked to submit two separate prices for the steel contract, one price for three floors and the other for two floors. Expecting that the contract would be entered into with Larsen as general contractor, plaintiff's proposal (Exhibit 1) was originally made out for Larsen's acceptance. At the meeting Dearth then learned that Larsen had not, as yet, been given the general construction contract. Apparently Steckel was reluctant to sign plaintiff's proposal but because of the urgency for commencing construction of the building, and to be assured that the steel would be available as needed, he did, upon the advice of his counsel, sign the proposal at this meeting. Although Dearth claims that after he arrived he heard nothing about uncertainty in securing a loan to finance the entire contract, it appears that the question did arise. The necessity of obtaining the steel for a three-story building was uppermost in their minds and a conversation ensued as to the proper method of obtaining it. Apparently defendants agreed that plaintiff could go into the open market and obtain it at warehouse prices (a higher price) rather than at the mill (at lower prices with considerable delay in filling orders) and that plaintiff was authorized by the agreement signed to do so. The only question which remained in any doubt was a possible oral change in their plans as to whether plaintiff would proceed with the contract on the agreed basis of a three-story building or on the basis of a two-story building, and whether defendants were to notify plaintiff of their election "within a few days" (two or three). There is considerable confusion in the evidence on this subject and it is one of the principal arguments of defendants that the contract was uncertain and indefinite because defendants never informed plaintiff of their election, and that accordingly the contract (Exhibit 1) could not be a basis for a cause of action for claimed breach since its effectiveness was conditioned upon defendants' determining

"within a few days" whether a two-story or a three-story building was to be erected. They cite such authority as Autry v. Republic Productions, Inc., 30 Cal.2d 144, 151, 180 P.2d 888; Avalon Products, Inc., v. Lentini, 98 Cal.App.2d 177, 179, 219 P.2d 485; Talmdge v. Arrowhead Reservoir

The conditions referred to, on the reverse side of the proposal, are:

"This proposal contemplates the furnishing of steelwork in strict accordance with and by the conditions and terms of the specifications and code of standard practice as adopted by the American Institute of Steel Construction.

"All agreements are contingent upon strikes, accidents, delays of carriers and other delays unavoidable or beyond our control. All quotations are made for prompt acceptance and are subject to change without notice.

"When erection is included, the purchaser shall provide adequate foundations of proper height, shall set anchor bolts, and shall establish all levels and datum lines.

"By erection (when included) is meant the setting in place of the Structural Steel proper but does not cover the placing of Lintels or other material weighing less than 500 pounds, nor the setting of wall plates, anchor bolts, pipe railing, work of a similar nature, or other setting of material not stipulated in this proposal.

"Purchaser agrees to notify the seller when the building is to be ready to receive steelwork and also to have the building ready at the time stated.

"This proposal expires in 30 days.

"No charges for labor or material furnished by the purchaser shall be allowed as a credit on this agreement, unless authorized in writing by the Standard Iron Works.

"All payments shall be made as stipulated and are payable at the office of Standard Iron Works. When not so paid, then the entire contract price shall become due and payable.

"This proposal, when signed by the purchaser or his duly authorized representative, implies an acceptance of the above conditions and terms, and the proposal becomes a contract in full force and effect, subject to the approval of the Standard Iron Works."

[1] It should be noted that the contract, instead of being with C. A. Larsen was changed to Globe Properties, Inc., during the meeting, with the consent of the parties because Larsen had not yet been awarded the general contract. It should also be noted that through the advice of defendants' counsel, there was written across the face of it: "The foregoing pre-architectural sheets 1-9 dated 1/11/56; structural sheets S.—S11 dated 1/11/56 prepared by

R. G. Wheeler". These sheets and general plans referred to are in evidence and show a general and detailed plan for a three-story building, and there is no alternative indicated. The acceptance of this contract, which by reference included the accompanying plans, sufficiently established a binding contract in accordance with its terms, subject to the possible delay of two or three days in determining whether it should be a three-story or a two-story structure.

In respect to this subject Dearth testified that at the meeting of February 10 it was "The consensus" of opinion or "it was stipulated" that it would be a three-story building but at the time they left, the information would be that "they would let us know very quickly.—When I say 'they', either through Mr. Wheeler or John Ruskin—and they would let us know as to whether it was going to be a two-story, but in a very few days, because the tooling would have to be started". (Emphasis added.) On cross-examination the witness testified that "they were to let you know within two or three days whether it was to be a two or three-story building", and that he didn't hear from them one way or the other during that time. The evidence clearly shows that defendants instructed Dearth to proceed with the performance of his contract and obtain the steel at once and that a determination would be made immediately as to the necessary amount to be ordered. Shortly after February 10th Larsen obtained a building permit for the proposed three-story building at defendants' request, and the permit was paid for by defendants. Larsen was authorized to clear the lot and erect barricades. Not hearing from defendants plaintiff, in conformity with the contract, started negotiations with Golden Gate Iron Works of San Francisco to obtain and fabricate the steel for a three-story building, in accordance with the plans referred to in the agreement. He went to San Francisco for this purpose with a work sheet for a three-story building, and ordered the necessary steel. On March 16th, he signed a written contract for it. Golden Gate sent form notices to all steel warehouses in an endeavor to locate sufficient steel. They purchased the necessary steel and reserved it for Standard under their contract. Golden Gate's engineers took off their own drawings and estimates of fabricated steel required and sent these drawings and estimates to Standard, who in turn delivered them to Ruskin for examination and appraisal. Some changes were made by Ruskin and they were returned to Golden Gate without his approval because Larsen had not, as yet, been selected as the general contractor. During this time Dearth had endeavored to contact Steckel in reference to the approval of the plans of Golden Gate but was told he was out of the city or not available. A representative of Golden Gate came to San Diego and conversed with Ruskin about the plans. There is testimony by Ruskin that Steckel knew Golden Gate had a subcontract with Standard to furnish and fabricate the required steel for a three-story building which contract was for the price of $42,500, and he was possessed of this knowledge between three weeks to two months after the contract was signed on February 10th. He also testified he discussed this matter with Steckel a dozen times on occasions between said dates. Neither then nor at any time after February 10th did Ruskin or Steckel express any surprise or raise any objections because plaintiff was proceeding in part performance of his contract with defendants pertaining to the fabrication of steel for a three-story building, and no objections were ever made by defendants or their engineers or architect about plaintiff's order being made for a three-story building, as called for therein, and no request was ever made for a two-story building.

It does appear that in the latter part of March 1956, Dearth did finally get Steckel on the telephone and told him of the demands of Golden Gate for further particulars and for the approval of the plans submitted to Ruskin, and the urgency of the situation in reference to completion within the time limit agreed upon for the completion of the building. He said Steckel then, for the first time, indicated he was having some difficulty in obtaining a loan, and suggested that plaintiff obtain two other bids for a one or two story building in lieu of the three-story building planned; that he asked Steckel as to the date he wanted delivery on the steel purchased and Steckel said he would let him know in two or three days and that he never did respond; that thereafter he telephoned to Steckel and told him of the seriousness of the situation in respect to delivery and he agreed to meet with Dearth and Steckel's attorney on a day certain; that Steckel's secretary called and said he was out of town; that he notified Golden Gate of the attitude of Steckel by letter dated April 23, 1956, and suggested dissolution of the original plan and an endeavor to negotiate a new one. About June 1, 1956, defendants' attorney called plaintiff and informed it that defendants were having difficulty with financing and although they hoped to complete the building contemplated, they might not be in a position to do so, and suggested that an amicable settlement could be arrived at by the parties under their obligation. It appears that plaintiff, in response to a request for an extension of time, made an offer to extend the time within which they would proceed upon the condition that plaintiff receive an additional $810 to cover increased labor expenditures. This offer was never accepted.

After some conversations plaintiff Standard was faced with an action for breach of contract by Golden Gate, seeking damages and loss of profit under their contract. The sum sought was $10,754.19, which included $6,504.19 costs and expenses in part performance and for $4,250 loss of anticipated profits. A settlement with that company was effected just before trial for $6,660.

Plaintiff then retained legal counsel to recover damages against defendants for breach of contract. The trial court found generally that the allegations of plaintiff's complaint were true; that plaintiff, on February 10th, agreed to furnish steel framing for a three-story building, erected in place, in accordance with the plans and specifications indicated, for the sum of $56,400, and defendants promised to pay this amount; that in compliance therewith plaintiff commenced upon the performance of said contract and entered into a written subcontract with Golden Gate for the supply, engineering and fabrication of all steel required for $42,500; that without plaintiff's consent and against its wishes, defendants wilfully prevented plaintiff from further performing its contract, which amounted to a material breach; that plaintiff suffered damage for costs and expenses incurred by its subcontractor Golden Gate in the sum of $6,660, and plaintiff's loss of anticipated profits which it would have received if it had been permitted to completely perform said contract, amounting to $7,290. Judgment was entered accordingly.

[2, 3] The trial judge did give particular consideration to the claim that the agreement was not complete nor effective because two or three days delay was orally granted, in which time defendants could inform plaintiff as to whether it would be a three or two-story building. The evidence, when considered as a whole, might be susceptible of the interpretation that they all agreed on February 10th that a three-story building was contemplated by the agreement, and if there was to be any change to a two-story building plaintiff would be so informed within two or three days and that no such information was imparted. The trial judge in his oral decision, after casting some doubt as to the proper interpretation of the evidence, stated, in effect, that if he was in error as to that interpretation, there was no doubt in his conclusion that defendants knew that a three-story building was contemplated and agreed upon by the contract, when considered in connection with the accompanying specifications; that defendants knew that if a two-story building was later contemplated they should have informed plaintiff of that fact and failed to do so; that defendants allowed plaintiff to proceed as if a three-story building had subsequently been agreed upon, by taking out a permit in their name for such a building, by examining plans and specifications for structural steel work furnished by the known subcontractor and by allowing plaintiff to proceed without any objection being made about a three-story structure, and accordingly defendants acquiesced in and ratified plaintiff's action in proceeding, to his detriment, in attempting to fulfill the contract respecting a three-story building. We are in accord with these conclusions. The conduct of an offeree may constitute acceptance. Wood v. Gunther, 89 Cal.App.2d 718, 201 P.2d 874; Beatty v. Oakland Sheet Metal etc. Co., 111 Cal.App.2d 53, 244 P.2d 25; 12 Cal.Jur.2d 208, sec. 18; 12 Cal.Jur.2d 212, sec. 22.

[4] The authorities in California are clear that if the reference in a contract to the plans and specifications indicates an intention to incorporate them generally, they become a part of the contract for all purposes. Valley Construction Co. v. City of Calistoga, 72 Cal.App.2d 839, 841, 165 P.2d 521; 12 Cal.Jur.2d p. 333, sec. 123.

[5-7] The evidence clearly shows that the parties understood they were contracting for steel framing for a three-story building and it was a binding contract to purchase that much steel. It was even offered as a joke at the time of the signing that if defendants did not go ahead with the building defendants would be in the steel business. The facts show defendants clearly authorized plaintiff to proceed with its portion of the building contract at once because of a contemplated steel strike, the rising price of steel, and the urgency to complete the building by June to permit defendants' tenants to take possession. It probably was lack of financial backing that caused defendants to breach the agreement. It is further apparent that plaintiff's proposal to do the job expired in 30 days. Parties should be careful about making contracts, for once made the courts will not relieve them for light or trivial reasons. Public policy is subserved by leaving the parties and their rights to be measured by the terms of their engagements. They may have made an unfortunate arrangement, but when they have entered into it voluntarily they are bound by it in the absence of equitable grounds for avoidance. They must be presumed to have contracted with reference to existing conditions known to them. Mere difficulty or unusual or unexpected expense will not excuse a party for failing to comply with the terms of his contract. Nor is it a defense that the law has rendered performance difficult or expensive. Defendants were surrounded at the time of the making of the contract by their agents and their own attorney who then advised them, and no undue advantage of defendants is indicated. They operated under the contract until the financial question arose. Parties to a contract, in all fairness, should be bound by the construction they themselves have placed upon their agreement, particularly where they have acted thereunder for a considerable period of time. 12 Cal.Jur.2d 343, sec. 131; Weaver v. Grunbaum, 31 Cal.App.2d 42, 87 P.2d 406.

[8,9] As to the element of damages, it is a general rule that a contractor may recover his expenses incurred in part performance as well as his anticipated profit upon a completed job basis. Buxbom v. Smith, 23 Cal.2d 535, 145 P.2d 305; Secs. 1512 and 3300, Civ.Code; 14 Cal.Jur.2d 664, sec. 35. A reasonably substantial basis for such loss of profit and damage was shown and the evidence supports the award. McConnell v. Corona City Water Co., 149 Cal. 60, 85 P. 929, 8 L.R.A.,N.S., 1171; 14 Cal.Jur.2d 665, sec. 35.

[10] The offer of plaintiff to extend the time if defendants would pay an additional $800 cannot be said to be a waiver of the breach since defendants did not accept the offer, and it does not appear to have been unreasonable.

Judgment affirmed.

Divorce proceeding, wherein the Superior Court, Siskiyou County, James M. Allen, J., rendered a decree granting wife a divorce from beneficiary of Illinois spendthrift trust, and from portion of decree imposing a lien upon trust to secure payment of sums allowed as alimony, child support, court costs and attorney fees, the beneficiary and trustee appealed, and from portion of decree holding assignment of trust property by beneficiary to wife invalid, wife cross-appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, Acting P. J., held, inter alia, that court exceeded its jurisdiction in attempting to affect title to land or movables located in and held by trust having its situs in another state by imposing a lien upon trust and that to that extent decree was of no force or effect.

Decree reversed in part and, in all other respects, affirmed.

John G. Robertson, Long Beach, and Tebbe & Correia, Yreka, for plaintiff-appellant.

Eugene D. Hardy, Santa Ana, and George G. Tyler, Yreka, for defendants-appellants.

PEEK, Acting Presiding Justice.

Defendant husband, John C. Hardy, and his father, defendant Eugene D. Hardy, appeal from that portion of a decree of divorce imposing a lien upon an Illinois spendthrift trust to secure payment to plaintiff of certain sums as alimony, child support, court costs and attorney fees. By reason of his status as trustee, Eugene was made a party defendant by amendment to plaintiff's complaint. The plaintiff wife, Marilyn H. Hardy, cross-appeals from that portion of the judgment wherein the court held that the assignment by John to her of certain notes, and his interest in a lease of real property held in trust, were invalid.

The trust was established by the will of John's deceased mother which named John as beneficiary, Eugene as trustee and certain others as contingent beneficiaries. The trust provides that the trustee shall pay to John such sums as are reasonably necessary for his care, support and maintenance, and if the income prove insufficient, the trustee may make such payments from the corpus of the trust. It further provides for periodic disbursements of the corpus to John upon the attainment of certain designated ages. It also contains the customary clauses relative to payment and transfer of money or property by the trustee only to a beneficiary in person and prohibits any assignment or transfer by a beneficiary of his interest in the trust.

None of the issues raised by the appeals of either of the parties concern the marital status as affected by the decree; nor is any question raised concerning the reasonableness of the award for support and maintenance, attorney fees and costs.

[1-3] We are entirely in accord with defendants' first contention that a court of one state cannot directly affect title to land in another. However it is equally true that a court having the parties before it can, in a proper case, through its coercive powers, compel them to act in relation to property not within the territorial jurisdiction of the court. Fall v. Eastin, 215 U.S. 1, 30 S.Ct. 3, 54 L.Ed. 65; Taylor v. Taylor, 192 Cal. 71, 218 P. 756, 51 A.L.R. 1074. In the present case the purported imposition of the lien can in no way be considered other than as an attempt by a court of this state to affect title to land in Illinois. It necessarily follows that the trial court herein acted in excess of its jurisdiction and that the order, at least to that extent, is of no force or effect. Rozan v. Rozan, 49 Cal.2d 322, 317 P.2d 11. And under the facts as shown by the record herein, the enunciated rule is equally applicable to the movables located in and held by the trust in Illinois. 1 Beale, Conflict of Laws, sec. 52.1, pp. 302-03; and sec. 99.1, p. 436.

[4,5] It is defendants' further contention that the court also acted in excess of its jurisdiction in ordering that attorney fees and costs charged to John be paid by Eugene as trustee out of income or if necessary the corpus of the trust. Whether John's interest in the trust may be reached to pay the award of attorney fees is a matter governed by the law of Illinois, the situs of the trust (Century Indemnity Co. v. Woodruff, D.C., 119 F.Supp. 581, 586), and this is true whether the corpus is of land or movables. Restatement, Conflict of Laws, sections 243, 298. In support of their contention that attorney fees may not be paid out of a spendthrift trust, defendants cite and rely exclusively upon McKeown v. Pridmore, 310 Ill.App. 634, 35 N.E.2d 376. That case involved a contingent fee contract which the court held to be an assignment by the beneficiary and hence barred by the spendthrift provisions of the trust. The court did not say that any award of attorney fees and costs would be invalid, but to the contrary specifically held that in a proper case the court could award attorney fees and costs to be paid out of a spendthrift trust.

Neither can we agree with defendants' argument wherein they attempt to distinguish an award for attorney fees from an award for support. As noted in 16 Cal. Jur.2d, Divorce and Separation, sec. 191, page 482, courts make no attempt to distinguish between alimony and attorney fees. While no case, either California or Illinois, has been brought to our attention, it would appear that In re Stewart's Estate, 334 Pa. 356, 5 A.2d 910, is directly in point. There, at page 915 of 5 A.2d, it is stated:

"It is argued that Mrs. Stewart should not be permitted to recover the counsel fees allowed by the Florida Court in the divorce proceeding out of the income of the spendthrift trust. This contention is without merit. Under the circumstances, counsel fees are an essential part of the wife's maintenance and support. To deny her counsel fees would, in many cases, be to render her defenseless and prevent her from asserting her right to support."

The reasoning of the Pennsylvania court applies equally to the award of court costs as it does to the award of attorney fees.

Equally without merit is the further contention of defendants that the trial court had no power to order the sums so charged against John to be paid by Eugene as trustee. As noted in Griswold, Spendthrift Trusts, sec. 334, page 390, the effect of the Illinois cases (Keller v. Keller, 284 Ill.App. 198, 1 N.E.2d 773, and England v. England, 223 Ill.App. 549) is to make the wife and child beneficiaries of the trust estate with direct rights against the trustee.

[6,7] Turning now to the appeal of Marilyn, it is her contention that certain notes, constituting a part of the res of the trust, were validly assigned to her by John, as was his interest in a lease of real property, also a part of the trust. This she says is true since the documents evidencing such transactions had been distributed to John, and therefore he could validly assign the same. The trial court, however, found on substantial evidence there had been no delivery to him; that the property remained a part of the corpus of the trust, and therefore under the spendthrift provisions thereof, the purported assignment by John was void. These holdings of the trial court must be sustained. Congress Hotel Co. v. Martin, 312 Ill. 318, 143 N.E. 838, 33 A.L.R. 562.

[8] It is further contended by Marilyn that even though the assignments were invalid, they were sufficient to transfer to her an equitable interest in the properties assigned; that the notes should not be allowed to be retained in Illinois; and that the trustee should be ordered to bring the same within the jurisdiction of this court. What may be the best solution of the domestic and financial problems of the parties is not for this court to determine, but rather is one essentially within the province of the trial court under the facts of the particular case.

That portion of the decree purporting to impress a lien on the property of the trust estate in Illinois to secure payment of the sums so awarded is reversed. In all other respects the judgment is affirmed. The parties shall bear their own costs.

Divorce proceedings against beneficiary of Illinois spendthrift trust. From an order of the Superior Court, Siskiyou County, James M. Allen, J., awarding to plaintiff attorney fees and costs on appeal to be paid by trustee from beneficiary's interest in trust estate, the trustee appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, Acting P. J., held that trial court had jurisdiction to order that attorney fees and costs on appeal be paid from beneficiary's interest in trust estate and that under West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 956a, any modification of order necessary to make such fees and costs payable by trustee as such, and not individually, could be made by District Court of Appeal.

Order modified in accordance with opinion and, as modified, affirmed.

I. Trusts ☞152

Where trustee of Illinois spendthrift trust was made a party defendant and was before the court in divorce suit against beneficiary, trial court had jurisdiction to award to plaintiff, to be paid by trustee out of beneficiary's interest in trust estate, attorney fees and costs on appeal from portion of divorce decree imposing a lien upon trust to secure payment of sums allowed as alimony, child support, court costs and attorney fees.

2. Divorce ⚡186

Where trustee of spendthrift trust appeared only in his capacity as trustee and not individually in divorce suit against trust beneficiary, any modification of order of trial court necessary to make attorney fees and costs on appeal from divorce decree payable by trustee as such, and not individually, could be made by District Court of Appeal under statute relating to its appellate jurisdiction in cases in which trial by jury is not a matter of right or has been waived. PEEK, Acting Presiding Justice.

The facts and circumstances out of which this appeal arises are set forth in detail in Hardy v. Hardy, Cal.App., 330 P. 2d 278, and hence it is unnecessary to restate the same.

[1] The first contention of defendant, Eugene D. Hardy, who alone appeals, is that it was beyond the jurisdiction of the trial court to award attorney fees and costs to plaintiff on appeal. In the prior appeal we held that the order of the trial court awarding attorney fees and costs to plaintiff to be paid by Eugene as trustee out of John's interest in the trust estate was reasonable and proper. The rationale of our conclusion in the prior appeal relative to attorney fees and costs in the divorce proceeding is likewise applicable to the question of such fees and costs on appeal.

[2] Defendant makes one further contention—that in any event the order of the trial court was against Eugene as an individual and hence improper. There can be no question that Eugene appeared in all of the proceedings only in his capacity as trustee and not individually. If it be necessary to modify the judgment as entered, then it would appear that this is a proper case for the application of section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It is therefore ordered that the order heretofore entered by the trial court be modified by adding the words, "as Trustee under the Will of Mary C. Hardy, Deceased," following the name Hardy as it appears on page 54, line 5, of the clerk's transcript on appeal. As so modified, the order is affirmed. The plaintiff is to recover costs.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, Los Angeles, and Robert A. Von Esch, Jr., Deputy County Counsel, Whittier, for appellant.

Hodge L. Dolle and Thomas G. Baggot, Los Angeles, for respondents.

VALLÉE, Justice.

The city of Long Beach brought this proceeding to condemn several parcels of realty. Defendants Victor K. Hart, F. Walter Bergmann, and John Gerald Quirk each owned in fee one of the parcels sought to be condemned. The County of Los Angeles was named a defendant as it claimed that by reason of liens for taxes for the tax years 1955-56, 1956-57, and 1957-58 it had an interest in various parcels, including those of Hart, Bergmann, and Quirk. An interlocutory judgment was entered on June 5, 1957 and the award was deposited in court. Final order of condemnation was entered July 10, 1957.

The issue here is the amount, if any, the County of Los Angeles is entitled to receive from the award for taxes.

On December 22, 1955, an order was made authorizing plaintiff to take immediate possession and use of the Hart parcel. On February 28, 1956, plaintiff took actual possession of that parcel, demolished all improvements on the property, and immediately thereafter constructed extensive public improvements thereon. Hart paid the first installment of taxes for 1955-56, consisting of half the amount levied for that fiscal year. No taxes were paid for the second half of 1955-56 or for 1956-57 or 1957-58. The trial court apportioned the second installment for 1955-56 to February 28, 1956, the date plaintiff took possession, and denied the county's claim for the tax years 1956-57 and 1957-58. The judgment provides that the county shall receive from the award that part of the second installment of 1955-56 taxes that the period of time from January 1, 1956, to February 28, 1956 (the date of actual possession by plaintiff), bears to the period of time from January 1, 1956, to June 30, 1956, and that no taxes shall be deducted from the award for the fiscal years 1956-57 and 1957-58.

On April 29, 1955, pursuant to the court's order of that date, plaintiff took actual possession of the Bergmann parcel and removed or demolished all improvements on the property and immediately thereafter constructed extensive public improvements thereon. No taxes were paid for the tax years 1955-56, 1956-57, or 1957-58. The trial court denied the claims of the county for taxes for those years for the reason that plaintiff went into possession prior to the beginning of the 1955-56 fiscal year.

On March 9, 1956, pursuant to order therefor, plaintiff took actual possession of the Quirk parcel and immediately removed or demolished all improvements on the property and immediately thereafter constructed extensive public improvements thereon. Quirk paid the first installment of the taxes for 1955-56. The second installment was not paid. No taxes were paid for the tax years 1956-57 or for 1957-58. The trial court apportioned the second installment of taxes for the tax year 1955-56 and denied the county's claim for the tax years 1956-57 and 1957-58. The judgment provides that the county shall receive from the award that part of the second installment of 1955-56 taxes that the period of time from January 1, 1956, to March 9, 1956 (the date of actual possession by plaintiff), bears to the period of time from January 1, 1956, to June 30, 1956, and that no taxes shall be deducted from the award for the fiscal years 1956-57 and 1957-58.

On the first Monday in March 1955, 1956 and 1957 taxes of the County of Los Angeles for the fiscal years 1955-56, 1956-57, and 1957-58, respectively, became a lien on the properties of defendants Hart, Bergmann, and Quirk. By November 1 of 1955, 1956, and 1957 assessment of the properties had been made and the taxes for each fiscal year had been levied.

The county appeals from those parts of the interlocutory judgment which in effect deny its claims for all the unpaid taxes for the fiscal years 1955-56, 1956-57, and 1957-58.

The questions are these:

1. In a proceeding in eminent domain where the condemner is a tax-exempt public corporation, does the taking of possession by the condemner prior to the date of attachment of tax liens render such property tax-exempt?

2. In a proceeding in eminent domain where the condemner is a tax-exempt public corporation, may real property taxes be apportioned to the date of taking of possession by the condemner when such taxes became a lien on the property prior to the date of taking possession?

The county asserts that in all proceedings in eminent domain by a tax-exempt public corporation it is the date of actual passage of title to the condemner, and not the date of taking of possession, which determines the tax status of the property. Section 1253 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the property condemned shall vest in the plaintiff on the filing of a copy of the final order of condemnation in the office of the recorder of the county.

In all cases of taxation of realty a lien attaches annually as of noon on the first Monday in March preceding the fiscal year for which the taxes are levied. Rev. & Tax. Code, §§ 2187, 2192. Between the lien date and the first Monday in July the assessor must assess all taxable property. Rev. & Tax. Code, § 405. Subsequently the taxes are levied against the property. The levy usually occurs in September of each year. The first installment of such taxes is due on November 1 following the levy, and the second installment is due on February 1 of the year following. Rev. & Tax. Code, §§ 2605, 2606.

[1] When a condemner obtains an order for possession of property sought to be condemned prior to judgment and actually takes possession of the property, evicting the owners therefrom, such action constitutes a "taking" as of the date the condemner goes into actual possession. In People v. Joerger, 12 Cal.App.2d 665, 55 P.2d 1269, quoted from with approval in People By and Through Department of Public Works v. Peninsula Title Guaranty Co., 47 Cal.2d 29, 32, 301 P.2d 1, the condemner went into possession pursuant to an order therefor prior to judgment and performed extensive work upon the premises. The Joergers were the owners at the time the condemner went into possession, but at the time the final order of condemnation was entered the purchaser at a trustees' sale was the owner. The trial court ordered the award which the condemner had paid into court to be paid over to the purchaser at the trustees' sale. Reversing, with directions that the award be paid to the Joergers, the court stated (12 Cal.App. 2d at page 670, 55 P.2d at page 1272):

"In the ordinary proceeding the property is not 'taken' until the final decree is entered. Code Civ.Proc. § 1253. It is the divesting of the title of the owner and the vesting of the title in the condemnor which constitutes the 'taking' in such cases. But where, as under our Constitution, provision is made for a 'taking' prior to the divestiture of title, the party who owns the property at the time of such 'taking' is entitled to the compensation, under the universal rule found in Corpus Juris, and to which we have referred.

"It thus appears that where there is no prior physical 'taking' the property is deemed to have been 'taken' when title is divested, as possession follows the title. Where there has been a prior physical 'taking,' the subsequent divestiture of title is merely a confirmation of the original 'taking'. The effect of the constitutional amendment was merely to accelerate the 'taking'. To hold otherwise would, in effect, nullify that provision of the Constitution which provides that 'private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having been first made or paid into court for the owner'. As appellants were the owners of the property when it was so 'taken', they are entitled to the award."

We are of the opinion that People By and Through Department of Public Works v. Peninsula Title Guaranty Co., supra, 47 Cal.2d 29, 301 P.2d 1, is decisive of the first question. In a proceeding in eminent domain the state acquired for highway purposes a parcel of realty in San Mateo which had been owned by the defendants Arthur. The judgment awarded $25,500 to the Arthurs and to the tax collector of San Mateo "as their interests may appear." The state paid the full amount into court. Later the court ordered that $612.20 be paid from this fund to the city to satisfy a claimed assessment lien against the property. The proceeding, which culminated in the assessment lien asserted against the Arthurs' property, was commenced by San Mateo in 1952 pursuant to the Municipal Improvement Act of 1913 (Sts. & Hy. Code, § 10000 et seq.) for the purpose of completing a drainage project affecting and benefiting the lands involved. The assessment was a special benefit assessment. On April 20, 1953, an order was made authorizing the state to take immediate possession. On June 21, 1953, the owners were required to vacate, and the state commenced the removal of buildings and the construction of an overpass thereon. On August 19, 1953, San Mateo recorded its special benefit assessment lien against the property. Judgment was entered on December 2, 1953. Holding that the assessment lien became effective after the Arthurs were deemed to have been divested of their rights in the property and that they were entitled to compensation without reduction on account of the assessment lien, the court stated (47 Cal.2d at page 31, 301 P.2d at page 3):

"The theory on which the trial court ordered payment of the city's assessment out of the award was that such an assessment is a levy on the interest of the owner; that title to the property does not pass in a condemnation proceeding until judgment is entered and recorded (§ 1253, Code Civ.Proc.); that the mere taking of possession of land prior to judgment pursuant to the provisions of article I, § 14 of the Constitution does not accelerate the passing of title; that the title was therefore in the Arthurs at the time the assessment was levied, and that the lien attached to the award in condemnation. * * *

"[47 Cal.2d at page 32, 301 P.2d at page 3.] In situations where it can be said that in addition to a mere taking of possession by the condemnor there is also such a substantial change in the status of the land taken and the condemnee's relation to it as to constitute, in effect, a divestiture for all practical purposes of all of the former owners' interest, the strict rule should not apply. * * *

"[47 Cal.2d at page 33, 301 P.2d at page 4.] It should be clear from the foregoing that a distinction is drawn between the legal effect of passage of title and the 'taking' of the property involved. There is no passage of title in condemnation proceedings until an award has been made and the final judgment in condemnation filed in the office of the county recorder. § 1253, Code Civ.Proc.; Metropolitan Water Dist. [of Southern California] v. Adams, 16 Cal.2d 676, 107 P.2d 618. However, as an exception to the strict application of the law, it is recognized that a 'taking' of sufficient consequences is deemed to have the same effect of finality of transfer for specific purposes as does the passage of title. * * *

"[47 Cal.2d at page 34, 301 P.2d at page 4.] It is also claimed by the city that here the acts of appropriation of the land by the state were not final and conclusive; that the state could restore the lands to their original status which would not have been possible in the Joerger case. In the present case it appears from an agreed statement of facts that pursuant to the order for possession the state 'acting through the Department of Public Works took possession of the real property * * * and required the appellants to remove themselves from the premises. Immediately thereafter the State removed the buildings which had belonged to the appellants and started construction on additions to Bayshore Highway.'

"There is no justification for a holding that the test of 'taking' is whether the lands thereafter may be restored to their original condition. In Steinhart v. Superior Court, supra, 137 Cal. 575, 70 P. 629 [59 L.R.A. 404], the court held that there would be a taking where the condemnor exercised a right to 'take possession of and use the land and premises sought to be condemned, during the pendency and until the final conclusion of the proceedings.' In any event it appears in the present case that the dispossession of the defendants and the acts of appropriation, destruction and damage brought about by the state prior to judgment constitute a 'taking' as contemplated by the constitutional provision."<sup>1</sup>

[2] The county seeks to distinguish the Peninsula case from the present one on the ground the lien in that case was for a special assessment rather than for general taxes. There is no difference in result between a lien on property for a special assessment benefit which cannot be enjoyed and a lien for general taxes on property which likewise cannot be enjoyed. It is well settled in this state that liens for general taxes and liens for special assessments stand on an equal footing before the law. Elbert, Ltd. v. Nolan, 32 Cal.2d 610, 613, 197 P.2d 537.

In the case at hand, in addition to a mere taking of possession by the condemnor, there was also such a substantial change in the status of the land taken and the condemnees' relation to it as to constitute, in effect, a divestiture for all practical purposes of all of the former owners' interest. The takings in each instance were of sufficient consequences to be deemed to have the same effect of finality of transfer for specific purposes as does the passage of title. The lands condemned were improved with substantial buildings and other improvements. Immediately on the taking of possession the city of Long Beach in each instance commenced to, and did, demolish and remove all of those improvements and immediately thereafter constructed extensive public improvements thereon.

[3] It will be noted that in Peninsula the assessment lien became effective after the condemnees were deemed to have been divested of their rights in the property by the taking of possession by the condemnor and that as a consequence the condemnees were entitled to compensation without deduction on account of the assessment lien. Thus, Peninsula disposes of the county's contention with respect to the instances at bar in which the liens for taxes became effective after the condemnor took possession. The tax lien on the Hart and Bergmann properties with respect to the fiscal years 1956-57 and 1957-58 became effective after they are deemed to have been divested of their interests in the properties, and they were entitled to compensation without deduction on account of taxes for those years. The tax lien on the Quirk property with respect to the fiscal year 1957-58 became effective after he is deemed to have been divested of his interest in the property, and he was entitled to compensation without deduction on account of the taxes for that year.

[4] There remains the question whether taxes which became a lien prior to the date the condemnor took possession are to be deducted from the compensation awarded. We are cited to numerous authorities expounding various theories on the question.

In some jurisdictions it is held that the lien is not effective until the levy is made, and that if title passes in eminent domain before the levy the property is not subject to taxation.<sup>2</sup> Some authorities hold that passage of title is deemed to occur on the filing of the petition to condemn on the theory that title, when vesting, relates back to the time of the filing of the petition.<sup>3</sup> Other authorities hold that a grantor-grantee relation exists between the condemnee and the condemner, and the law has been applied accordingly in determining rights with respect to apportioning real property taxes.<sup>4</sup>

In a few cases the question has arisen as to whether real property taxes for the year in which the property was taken should be apportioned, with the award or the condemnee liable for the taxes in the ratio that the part of the year passing prior to the vesting of title bore to the whole year, but not for the whole year's taxes. Under some statutes it has been held that taxes should be thus apportioned.<sup>5</sup> Many other cases hold that the taxes may not be apportioned so as to make the award liable only for that proportion of the tax year which preceded the date title passed or was deemed to have passed.<sup>6</sup>

It is the general rule that the subjection of the award in a proceeding in eminent domain to the payment of real property taxes depends on whether such taxes became a lien prior or subsequent to the time title passed or is deemed to have passed. See cases collected 45 A.L.R.2d 529, 555. The majority view is that where the taxes became a lien prior to the passage of title or prior to the time title is deemed to have passed to the condemner, they are to be deducted from the award. Annotation, 45 A.L.R.2d 529, 555.

The variations reached in different jurisdictions seem to be due in large part to the variances in the applicable statutes. The answer to the second question at bar depends on the effect of the California statutes.

"Generally the statutes [in this state] regulating eminent domain procedure make it evident that the lienholder's interest should be protected in some manner." Wilson v. Beville, 47 Cal.2d 852, 855, 306 P.2d 789, 790. Revenue and Taxation Code, section 2186, reads:

"Every tax has the effect of a judgment against the person."

Section 2187 reads:

"Every tax on real property is a lien against the property assessed."

As we have seen, all tax liens attach annually as of noon on the first Monday in March preceding the fiscal year for which the taxes are levied. Rev. & Tax.Code, § 2192. Section 2193 reads:

"Every lien created by this division has the effect of an execution duly levied against the property subject to the lien."

Section 2194 reads:

"Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, the judgment is satisfied and the lien removed when, but not before,

"(a) the tax is paid or legally canceled or,

"(b) for nonpayment of any taxes, the property is sold to a private purchaser or deeded to the State."

[5-7] The lien attaches on the first Monday of March regardless of the date the assessment is made; the later fixation of the amount of taxes by levy and assessment is but a step in the enforcement of an already established lien. County of San Diego v. County of Riverside, 125 Cal. 495, 500, 58 P. 81; Couts v. Cornell, 147 Cal. 560, 564, 82 P. 194; In re Knox-Powell-Stockton Co., 9 Cir., 100 F.2d 979, 983. In City of Santa Monica v. Los Angeles County, 15 Cal.App. 710, 115 P. 945, the court held that property acquired by the city after the lien date but prior to the levy and assessment was not exempt from taxation as the lien attached on the first Monday in March. The court stated (15 Cal.App. at page 712, 115 P. at page 946):

"[A] lien declared by positive statute is not dependent for its existence upon subsequent acts requisite to its enforcement."

In County of San Diego v. County of Riverside, 125 Cal. 495, 58 P. 81, the court held that although the right of the county of San Diego to the payment of certain taxes assessed on railroad tracks did not accrue until a valid assessment had been made, the right to taxes arose on the lien date. The court stated (125 Cal. at page 500, 58 P. at page 83):

"The lien for the taxes justly leviable upon the property of a railroad company attaches on the first Monday of March in each year, and the obligation to pay necessarily accrues at the same time, if not earlier. Payment is not due, of course, until the assessment has been made; but when that has been done, and the amount of the tax ascertained, it is payable to the county in which the roadbed was included at the time when the lien attached."

same proceeding to determine the respective rights of the defendants having divided interests in the property and to apportion the award accordingly. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1246.1, 1247(3).

We have no law which authorizes the division of the annual lump-sum taxes where the lien attaches prior to the date title passes or is deemed to pass. Section 1248(1) of the Code of Civil Procedure provides in part that the court must ascertain and assess the value of each and every separate estate or interest in the property sought to be condemned. Section 1246.1 directs the court to apportion the award in accordance with the "respective rights" therein. Also see Code Civ. Proc. § 1248 (8). The effect of the statutes, mandatory in their terms, is to direct payment to a lienor from the award of the full value of his separate estate or interest in the property condemned.

The statutory scheme would seem to leave no doubt that it was the intention of the Legislature to prevent a lien which attached on the first Monday in March of any year from being extinguished by reason of the fact that after the lien has attached title to the property passes or is deemed to pass to a tax-exempt public corporation in a proceeding in eminent domain. The obligation to pay the taxes accrues the date the lien attaches. The lien has the effect of a judgment and of an execution duly levied. The judgment is not satisfied or the lien removed until the tax is paid or legally canceled. The lien attaches to the award in the proceeding in eminent domain. A levy of an execution results in the creation of a legal right to subject the debtor's interest in the property to the satisfaction of the debt of his judgment creditor, to the exclusion of others whose rights are inferior. 19 Cal. Jur.2d 449, § 81. The purpose sought to be accomplished by the Legislature is clear and we must give effect to it.

Respondents cite Yara Engineering Corporation v. City of Newark, 136 N.J.Eq. 453, 42 A.2d 632, and Fishel v. City and County of Denver, 106 Colo. 576, 108 P.2d 236, in support of their claim that the court properly apportioned the taxes which became a lien prior to the time title is deemed to have passed. These are two of the few cases holding that the taxes should be apportioned from the date the condemner takes possession.

Respondents contend that between the condemnee and the taxing agency the taxes which were a lien prior to the time title is deemed to have passed should be considered canceled under section 4986 of the Revenue and Taxation Code.<sup>7</sup> The contention is without merit. The procedure prescribed by the statute was not followed. No application for cancellation was ever filed. County of San Diego v. United States, 9 Cir., 251 F.2d 534, cited by respondents, is not in point. In that case the condemner applied for cancellation. The application was denied. The county of San Diego then sought to satisfy its tax lien from the award in condemnation. The court held the taxes were in fact canceled; that application to cancel having been made, the board of supervisors and the district attorney had no alternative but to can-

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Oct. 9, 1958.

Hearing Granted Dec. 3, 1958.

Action to recover taxes paid under an alleged illegal assessment. The Superior Court of San Diego County, Arthur L. Mundo, J., rendered judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Coughlin, J. pro tem., held that any title to, rights in, control over, or use of real property of Reconstruction Finance Corporation had been subject to termination, transfer, regulation or limitation by whatsoever method Congress designated, and held that whatever had been left after that corporation declared, pursuant to federal legislation, that property was "surplus," did not constitute "real property of the corporation," within statute making such property subject to state, territorial, county, municipal or local taxation; and held that even though such corporation had never executed deed transferring title to surplus property to War Assets Administration and even though General Services Administrator purported to act for such corporation in making lease of surplus property, county and city could not assess such property for taxation.

Judgment reversed with directions.

COUGHLIN, Justice pro tem.

This is an action to recover taxes paid by appellant, Rohr Aircraft Corporation, to the respondents, County of San Diego and City of Chula Vista, under an alleged illegal assessment.

During the years 1951 to 1955, inclusive, appellant occupied certain land and improvements, adjoining its plant in Chula Vista, under a written lease dated September 1, 1949, between "Reconstruction Finance Corporation * * * and the United States of America, both acting by and through the General Services Administrator" as lessor, and said Rohr Aircraft Corporation, as lessee. By the provisions of this lease the lessee agreed to pay "all taxes, assessments and similar charges * * * taxed, assessed or imposed upon lessor or lessee with respect to or upon the leased premises." For the fiscal years 1951-1952, through 1954-1955, the Rohr Aircraft Corporation paid taxes levied by respondents upon the leased premises, pursuant to assessments thereon against Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which was a federal agency.

Thereafter, Rohr Aircraft Corporation duly presented to the proper authorities claims for a refund of the amounts so paid, contending that the taxes levied against the property were illegal and void; the claims were denied; this action was instituted to recover the payments; judgment denying recovery was rendered; and from this judgment the corporation has appealed.

This case does not involve the taxation of the possessory interest of the lessee under the aforesaid lease. At the trial it was stipulated that any refund would be subject to an offset for taxes against such possessory interest, in accord with a formula agreed upon by the parties.

[1] Appellant contends that the taxes in question were illegal and void under the general rule that, lands owned by the United States of America, or its corporate instrumentalities, are immune from State or local taxes. McCulloch v. State of Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L.Ed. 579; Van Brocklin v. Anderson, 117 U.S. 151, 6 S.Ct. 670, 29 L.Ed. 845; Clallam County, Wash. v. United States, 263 U.S. 341, 44 S.Ct. 121, 68 L.Ed. 328; Gottstein v. Adams, 202 Cal. 581, 584, 262 P. 314. Excepted from this immunity are those lands which Congress has consented may be subject to such taxation. Western Lithograph Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization, 11 Cal.2d 156, 158, 78 P.2d 731, 117 A.L.R. 838. Respondents contend that the property in question comes within the exception; that it was owned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act expressly subjects it to local taxation (Act Jan. 22, 1932, sec. 8, as amended, 47 Stat. 10, 15 U.S.C.A. § 607); and that it was legally taxed. Art. XIII, Sec. 1, Calif. Const.; Boeing Aircraft Co. v. Reconstruction Finance Corp., 25 Wash.2d 652, 171 P.2d 838, 842, 845, 168 A.L.R. 539.

The congressional waiver of immunity in question was expressed in the following terms: "\ * * any real property of the Corporation shall be subject to * * county, municipal, or local taxation to the same extent according to its value as other real property is taxed.*" Act Jan. 22, 1932, sec. 8, 47 Stat. 8 as amended, 15 U.S.C.A. § 607. (Italics ours.)

The issue for determination on appeal is whether the premises described in the aforesaid lease constituted real property "of the" Reconstruction Finance Corporation, within the meaning of said section 8 of the Act, during the time the taxes in question were levied. A decision upon this issue necessitates a consideration of the factual and legal background involved.

In 1942 and 1943, a former Rohr Aircraft Corporation, the predecessor of appellant, by grant deeds, conveyed the real property in question to the Defense Plant Corporation, a federal agency. This agency improved the property and leased it to the grantor corporation for use during World War II. In June, 1945, the Defense Plant Corporation was dissolved and all of its assets were transferred to Reconstruction Finance Corporation, another federal agency. Joint Resolution June 30, 1945, c. 215, 59 Stat. 310, 15 U.S.C.A. § 611 note. It does not appear that the transfer of title to the real property was effected by the execution of a deed. On October 15, 1945, the lease by Defense Plant Corporation to Rohr Aircraft Corporation was terminated; the premises were vacated by the lessor; and the property was turned over to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. On May 29, 1946, the latter corporation declared the premises to be surplus property under the Surplus Property Act of 1944. Act October 3, 1944, c. 479, 58 Stat. 765, 50 U.S.C.A. Appendix, § 1611 et seq. In the latter part of the same year the War Assets Administration, a federal instrumentality designated as a disposal agency to accept property declared to be surplus under that Act, took possession of the premises and thereafter used them as a storage facility and sales center for surplus property. No deed was executed transferring title.

The declaration by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and acceptance of the property by War Assets Administration were done pursuant to the provisions of the Surplus Property Act of 1944, as amended and then existing, under which that corporation, and similar government agencies, had "the duty and responsibility continuously to survey the property in its control and to determine which of such property (was) surplus to its needs and responsibilities" (Act October 3, 1944, c. 479, sec. 11, 58 Stat. 769, 50 U.S.C.A. Appendix, § 1620); and was required to promptly report to the War Assets Administration, which then was the appointed disposal agency, all such surplus property in its control not disposed of under a specific authorization inapplicable to the present situation. 50 U.S.C.A. Appendix, § 1620(c). The report in question was filed on a prescribed form entitled "Declaration of Surplus Real Property." When any surplus property was so reported the disposal agency had the "responsibility and authority for the disposition of such property, and for the care and handling of such property pending its disposition, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the War Assets Administrator." 50 U.S.C.A. Appendix, § 1620(d). The statute also provided that the "disposal agency may execute such documents for the transfer of title or other interest in property or take such other action as it deems necessary or proper to transfer or dispose of property or otherwise to carry out the provisions of this Act, and, in the case of surplus property, shall do so to the extent required by the regulations of the War Assets Administrator". Act October 3, 1944, c. 479, sec. 15, 58 Stat. 772, as amended, 50 U.S.C.A. Appendix, § 1624(b).

The War Assets Administration occupied the premises in question exclusively during the year 1947 and the first part of 1948. The Rohr Aircraft Corporation did not occupy the property from October 15, 1945, when its lease with Defense Plant Corporation was terminated, until May, 1948, when it began renting parts thereof on a month to month basis. Subsequent negotiations with the War Assets Administration resulted in extending the areas of occupancy from time to time, and the execution of interim leases on a month to month basis, to cover such extensions. Further negotiations with War Assets Administration culminated in the execution of the lease of the whole property to appellant, the present Rohr Aircraft Corporation, by the General Services Administrator acting for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the United States of America. This is the lease of September 1, 1949, under which the tax payments in question were made.

In the meantime Congress had repealed parts of the Surplus Property Act of 1944, and enacted the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (Act June 30, 1949, c. 288, 63 Stat. 378, 41 U.S.C.A. § 201 et seq., which, in 1950, were transferred to titles 5 and 40 U.S.C.A. and renumbered) which created a General Services Administration and an Administrator of General Services (Act June 30, 1949, Title I, sec. 101, 63 Stat. 379, 41 U.S.C.A. § 211, 5 U.S.C.A. § 630); transferred the functions, property and commitments of War Assets Administration to the General Services Administration, and the functions of the War Assets Administrator to the Administrator of General Services (Act June 30, 1949, c. 288, Title I, sec. 105, 63 Stat. 381, 41 U.S.C.A. § 215, 5 U.S.C.A. § 630c); authorized the Administrator to delegate his functions, or those of the administration, to other executive agencies (Act June 30, 1949, c. 288, Title II, sec. 205, 63 Stat. 389, 41 U.S.C.A. § 235, 40 U.S.C.A. § 486); directed that all policies, procedures and directives theretofore prescribed, with respect to surplus property, should remain in full force and effect until superseded (Act June 30, 1949, c. 288, Title VI, sec. 601, 63 Stat. 399, 41 U.S.C.A. § 203, 40 U.S.C.A. § 473); provided that "The Administrator shall have supervision and direction over the disposition of surplus property. Such property shall be disposed of to such extent, at such time, in such areas, by such agencies, at such terms and conditions, and in such manner, as may be prescribed in or pursuant to this chapter. * * * The care and handling of surplus property, pending its disposition, and the disposal of surplus property, may be performed by the General Services Administration or, when so determined, by the Administrator, (or) by the executive agency in possession thereof * * * any executive agency designated or authorized by the Administrator to dispose of surplus property may do so by sale, exchange (or) lease * * * upon such other terms and conditions as the Administrator deems proper, and it may execute such documents for the transfer of title or other interest in property, * * as it deems necessary * * *." (Act June 30, 1949, c. 288, Title II, sec. 203, 63 Stat. 385, 41 U.S.C.A. § 233, 40 U.S.C.A. § 484); also provided that where disposition of surplus property "has been by lease * * * the Administrator shall administer and manage such * * * lease * * * and may enforce, adjust, and settle any right of the Government (not of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation) with respect thereto in such manner and upon such terms as he deems in the best interest of the Government" (Act June 30, 1949, c. 288, Title II, sec. 204, 63 Stat. 388, 41 U.S.C.A. § 234, 40 U.S.C.A. § 485); and directed the Administrator to "advise and consult with interested Federal agencies with a view to obtaining their advice and assistance in carrying out the purposes of this chapter." Act June 30, 1949, c. 288, Title II, sec. 205, 63 Stat. 389, 41 U.S.C.A. § 235, 40 U.S.C.A. § 486. (Italics ours.)

The lease of September 1, 1949, states that the lessors, Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the United States of America are "both acting by and through the General Services Administrator under and pursuant to the powers and authority contained in the provisions of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, and the Surplus Property Act of 1944"; recites that the premises therein described have been declared "surplus property of the Government of the United States", and are included "in the types of surplus property which have been assigned to War Assets Administration for disposal"; and that the "Department of Air Force had determined that the use of the leased premises by the lease herein is necessary for the production of military equipment for the National Defense"; and is signed by a director of disposals of War Assets Administration under a delegation of authority from War Assets Administration, which authorized him "to execute * * * any * * * lease * * * or other instrument in writing in connection with the care, handling and disposal of surplus real property * * * and do * * * any other act necessary to effect the transfer of title to any such surplus real * * * property * * *" (Italics ours.)

On March 17, 1955, which was after levy of the taxes under consideration in this case, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, by a quitclaim deed, conveyed any interest it might have in the property in question to the United States of America.

Appellant contends that, upon the filing of the surplus property declaration and the entry into possession by War Assets Administration, the land and improvements under discussion ceased to be "real property of the" Reconstruction Finance Corporation within the meaning of the statute subjecting such property to taxation by local governments.

Respondents contend that this land and improvements continued to be subject to local taxation until execution of the quitclaim deed on March 17, 1955, and cite the case of Continental Motors Corporation v. Township of Muskegon, 1956, 346 Mich. 141, 77 N.W.2d 370, in support of their contention. The facts of the cited case, although similar, are not identical to those in the case at bar. In the Michigan case the Defense Plant Corporation built a plant which was transferred to Reconstruction Finance Corporation by operation of law; the latter corporation declared the property surplus and it was accepted by War Assets Administration in June, 1948. Upon the dissolution of its subsidiary, which was some considerable time prior to the surplus property declaration, the Continental Motors Corporation had commenced its occupation of the property under a lease to the subsidiary from the Defense Plant Corporation and, as related by the court, "such use and occupancy has continued to the present time. The record does not indicate that any material change in operations has taken place." Ibid., 77 N.W.2d 370, 372. Although a lease dated April 1, 1949, by Reconstruction Finance Corporation, acting "by and through the War Assets Administrator", to Continental Motors Corporation, was surrendered as of November 1, 1950, from the foregoing statement by the court, and the fact that the latter corporation sought a refund of taxes assessed for the years 1953, we must conclude that it remained in continuous possession. In holding that the property there in question was subject to local taxation under section 8 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, the Michigan Supreme Court relied upon its finding that Congress consented to local taxation of federal property for the public good; "to prevent prejudice to local economic conditions" and a realization of the hardship resulting from the removal of such property from the tax rolls which is "embarrassing to the functioning of local governments, and results in throwing a heavy burden on taxpayers generally", (Ibid., 77 N.W.2d 370, 374) and, respecting the case before it, stated that "Declaring the property in question to be surplus did not operate to change the general purpose or character of its use. It continued to be occupied by Continental Motors as lessee, and that corporation continued to carry out the operations indicated by the agreements made by it with the Federal government through the latter's agencies. No reason is apparent why the waiver of immunity should have been terminated at that time. From the standpoint of local economy and well-being precisely the same reasons existed as during the prior years when it was assessed under the State law and taxes were paid without question". Ibid., 77 N.W.2d 370-374. The same argument would support the obviously untenable contention that the property was taxable even though, coincidentally with its surplus property declaration, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had executed a deed conveying it to the United States of America. The real question for determination in the cited case, as in the case at bar, was whether the property had ceased to be "real property of the corporation", within the meaning of the Act which subjects it to local taxation at the time of the levy under consideration.

Equally nonresponsive to the determinative issue was the Michigan court's consideration of the intention of Congress concerning the effect of the Surplus Property Act of 1944 on the provisions of said section 8 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, and its conclusion that "The waiver of immunity from taxation involved in the instant case came into being by express action of Congress. It is, we think, inconceivable that that body contemplated the revocation of such waiver by mere implication". Ibid., 77 N.W. 2d 370, 376. Respondents, relying on the cited case, contend that this court must determine whether or not there is an implied repeal of the express congressional consent to levy a local tax on real property of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation when it is declared surplus and custody thereof transferred to the War Assets Administration. It is our opinion that no question of an "implied repeal" is involved in the decision of this case.

The tax levies under consideration here were made against surplus real property which had been disposed of by a lease made pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act; the terms and conditions of which were those agreed upon in accordance with the procedure prescribed by that Act; a lease executed under the authority of the Liquidator of War Assets, a federal official acting under a delegation of authority from the Administrator of General Services, who was vested with supervision and direction over the disposition of surplus property; and a lease subject to the administration and management of said Administrator who had authority to enforce, adjust, and settle any right of the Government—not of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation—with respect thereto, in such manner and upon such terms as he deems in the best interest of the Government.

The Department of Air Force had determined that the use of the leased premises was necessary for the production of military equipment. This was not a function of Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

It will be noted that, during the negotiations for the execution of, or occupancy under the lease, Reconstruction Finance Corporation neither was entitled to, under the law, nor did it actually control or manage the property in any way whatsoever. Prior to this lease, that corporation had declared the property "surplus to its needs and responsibilities". Thereupon War Assets Administration entered into exclusive possession of the premises; used them for its needs; and subsequently negotiated for and executed interim leases respecting the same.

The War Assets Administration, General Services Administration, and officials acting for them referred to the premises as "surplus property of the Government" (not of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation), and as included in the types of surplus property which have been assigned to War Assets Administration for disposal. (Italics ours.)

[2] The fact that the corporation did not execute a deed, quitclaiming any interest it had in the property to the United States of America, until March 17, 1955, is inconsequential to a determination of the issue at bar when compared with other facts in the case. The only title in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was that vested by an Act of Congress transferring to it all assets of the Defense Plant Corporation Pub.Law 109, 79th Congress, i. e., Joint Resolution June 30, 1945, c. 215, 59 Stat. 310. See note 15 U.S.C.A. § 611. It does not appear that any instrument evidencing such transfer of title ever was placed of record in this state. None was necessary. The corporation was a government agency. "That the Congress chose to call it a corporation does not alter its characteristics so as to make it something other than what it actually is, an agency selected by Government to accomplish purely Governmental purposes." Cherry Cotton Mills, Inc., v. United States, 327 U.S. 536, 539, 66 S.Ct. 729, 730, 90 L.Ed. 835. Any title to, rights in, control over, or use of the "real property of the corporation" was subject to termination, transfer, regulation or limitation by whatsoever method Congress designated. United States v. Allegheny County, Pa., 322 U.S. 174, 64 S.Ct. 908, 913, 88 L.Ed. 1209. By the Surplus Property Act of 1944, and the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, Congress decreed that property of the corporation might be declared surplus and thereupon another agency of government would take custody and control thereof, with exclusive authority to dispose of the same, and to execute such documents as it deemed necessary to transfer title. Whatever was left after such a declaration, within reason or the intent of Congress, may not be described as "real property of the corporation". (Italics ours.) This residue was referred to as a "barren title" in the case of United States v. Shofner Iron & Steel Works, 9 Cir., 168 F.2d 286, 287, which involved the right of the government to bring an action for possession of real property declared surplus by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, where the court said: "Having declared the property surplus to its needs and responsibilities, that corporation retains no more than the barren legal title for the use of the United States to be transferred wherever the latter may direct." Pertinent, but not mentioned by the court, was the fact that Congress, in the Surplus Property Act, had designated an agent other than the Corporation to transfer the title, in substance reducing the status of the latter in relation to the property to that of a fictitious entity.

If the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had been a private corporation and as such, subject to local taxation, having only that interest in the property in question which the evidence in this case shows it did have, i. e., a bare legal title subject to transfer by an agent over which it had no control, the primary rights of ownership therein being vested in the Government, as was the fact in this case, that property would not have been subject to local taxes. Johns Hopkins University v. Board of County Commissioners of Montgomery County, 185 Md. 614, 45 A.2d 747. It is unreasonable to believe that Congress intended to subject property to local taxation because the bare legal title thereto was vested in a governmental agency, instead of in a private corporation.

The only reasonable conclusion which may be drawn from the facts and the law in this case is that the property in question, during the years 1951 through 1955, was not "real property of the corporation" within the meaning of section 8 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, but rather, was surplus property of the United States of America.

This conclusion is in accord with the decision of the Court of Claims in Board of County Commissioners of Sedgwick County, Kansas v. United States, 105 F. Supp. 995, 123 Ct.Cl. 304, cited by appellant. The facts in the cited case are substantially similar to those of the case at bar except that in the former the lessee was in continuous possession before as well as after the surplus property declaration, and War Assets Administration did not dispose of the surplus property until after the levy of the taxes which were the subject of the action. The facts in the case at bar more firmly support our conclusion. In the cited case the court said (Ibid., at page 1001):

"The waiver of constitutional immunity from taxes of 'real property of the corporation' * * * was undoubtedly intended to apply to that real property of the corporation held by it in the performance of the duties and responsibilities imposed upon it by law. But by the August 21, 1946, declaration of the property as surplus * * * the RFC declared that the property was surplus to its 'needs and responsibilities', and by the acceptance of April 16, 1947, was divested of all control and responsibility. At no time after the acceptance by the WAA on April 16, 1947, did the RFC or any of its employees have physical possession, control, or custody of the property. It had neither the use nor the right to use the property. It could not even withdraw the declaration of surplus property without the approval of the War Assets Administrator, 32 CFR, 1946 Supp. 8301.15(b)." And also that "The purpose of the waiver provision had been fully served when the property passed to the control of the WAA.

"Upon consideration of these factors we cannot presume that Congress intended the waiver provision with respect to 'real property of the corporation' to extend to the lands in question after they passed to the responsibility and authority of WAA."

The taxes under consideration in this case were levied illegally. Appellant is entitled to recover the difference between the taxes paid and those which it should have paid on its possessory interest. Parr-Richmond Industrial Corporation v. Boyd, 43 Cal.2d 157, 169, 272 P.2d 16.

The judgment is reversed with instructions to the trial court to enter judgment in favor of appellant in such amount as that court may determine in accord with this decision, the stipulation of the parties respecting appellant's possessory interest, and the law in the premises.

Paul L. ESTEP, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

BUDGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
Inc., a corporation, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 5888.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Oct. 10, 1958.

Action for damages resulting from a gas explosion. From an order denying its motion for a change of venue in the Superior Court of San Diego County, Bonsall Noon, J., the defendant appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that the cause of action stated was in contract rather than in tort as respects the defendant's right to a change of venue and that the record did not establish that defendant waived its right to object to the order made on the ground of acquiescence therein, and that where the affidavits filed by defendant merely created a conflict with complaint as to the place where the contract was made and the trial court resolved the conflict in favor of the plaintiff, the reviewing court would not interfere.

Order affirmed.

1. Corporations ⇨503(3)

Upon a motion for change of venue by a corporation, the burden rests upon it to show that the action has not been brought in the county authorized by the Constitution. West's Ann.Const. art. 12, § 16.

Crider, Tilson & Ruppe and Henry E. Kappler, Los Angeles, for appellant.

William F. Reed, San Diego, for respondent.

MUSSELL, Justice.

In this action for damages filed in San Diego county it is alleged in the first cause of action in the complaint that on or about March 18, 1957, plaintiff and defendant entered into a certain written contract in San Diego county, California, whereunder defendant undertook to manufacture or alter to the specifications of plaintiff a certain Expando-Home trailer, and undertook and agreed to plumb the trailer for a water heater and to cap the lines, including the gas lines; that defendant breached the terms of the agreement in that it did not cap the gas line ending in the water heater cabinet and that as a result of said breach of the contract, when plaintiff was in said trailer, it became filled with gas and exploded, severely injuring plaintiff. In the second cause of action it is alleged that defendant expressly and impliedly represented and warranted that said trailer would be safe to use for the purposes of residing therein, including the operation of the gas stove and equipment; that when plaintiff attempted to operate the gas system in said trailer, gas escaped as a result of the failure of defendant to cap the gas line ending in the water heater cabinet, with the result that an explosion occurred. In the third cause of action it is alleged that defendant negligently and carelessly designed, constructed, inspected and manufactured said trailer; that it was delivered without the gas line leading to the water heater being capped, resulting in serious injury to plaintiff.

On March 14, 1958, defendant Budger Manufacturing Company, Inc., filed a demurrer to said complaint and a notice of motion to change venue to the County of Los Angeles. This motion was made on the ground that said defendant's principal place of business was in Los Angeles county; that the accident referred to in plaintiff's complaint occurred in San Bernardino county; and that the alleged contract referred to was made and performed in Los Angeles county. The motion was supported by the affidavit of Marvin Wolfe, sales representative of defendant corporation at Los Angeles, in which he stated that on March 18, 1957, he received a telephone call at Los Angeles from the plaintiff in San Diego in which plaintiff placed an order for the trailer involved; that the order was accepted and a copy of the confirmation thereof, which is the same as the alleged contract attached to plaintiff's complaint, was sent by him to plaintiff in San Diego, and that said confirmation of the order incorporated certain changes which were made as the original order had been placed by telephone. An affidavit of merits was filed by the president of the defendant company in which he included the statement that all sales by the defendant company and all deliveries were made in the County of Los Angeles.

The demurrer and the motion for change of venue were heard by the court on March 27, 1958, at which time the court signed an order denying the motion for a change of the place of trial and overruled the demurrer. Defendant Budger Manufacturing Company appeals from the order denying its motion.

[1] Appellant's rights with reference to venue are governed by section 16 of Article 12 of the State Constitution and upon a motion for change of venue by the corporation, the burden rests upon it to show that the action has not been brought in the county authorized by said section. Pacific Bal Industries v. Northern Timber, 118 Cal.App.2d 815, 826, 259 P.2d 465. Said section 16 of the Constitution reads as follows:

"A corporation or association may be sued in the county where the contract is made or is to be performed, or where the obligation or liability arises, or the breach occurs; or in the county where the principal place of business of such corporation is situated, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial as in other cases."

In Liera v. Los Angeles Finance Co., 99 Cal.App.2d 254, 258, 221 P.2d 737, 740, it was held that "In considering an appeal from an order denying a motion for change of place of trial, for the purpose of the motion, the allegations of the complaint must be taken as true. Coley v. Hecker, 206 Cal. 22, 272 P. 1045; Yolo County Consolidated Water Co. v.

Adamson, 22 Cal.App. 493, 135 P. 48." See also Rutherford v. New York Hanseatic Corp., 153 Cal.App.2d 462, 464, 314 P.2d 560.

[2, 3] In Hayutin v. Rudnick, 115 Cal. App.2d 138, 141, 251 P.2d 707, it is said that the right to a change of the place of trial must be determined from the pleadings of record at the time a motion for a change is filed. The affidavits filed herein by the defendant merely created a conflict with the allegations of the complaint as to the place where the contract was made. The trial court resolved this conflict in favor of plaintiff and a reviewing court will not interfere with its ruling. Hayutin v. Rudnick, supra, 115 Cal.App.2d at page 141, 251 P.2d at page 708; Ward Mfg. Co. v. Miley, 131 Cal.App.2d 603, 611, 281 P.2d 343.

Appellant asserts that "The gravamen of all three causes of action sounds in tort and the injury having occurred in San Bernardino county, the appellant corporation was entitled to a change of venue to the county of its residence."

[4] In Eads v. Marks, 39 Cal.2d 807, 811, 249 P.2d 257, it is held that it has been well established in this state that if the cause of action arises from a breach of a promise set forth in the contract, the action is ex contractu, but if it arises from a breach of duty growing out of the contract it is ex delicto; that where the cause of action arises from the breach of a contractual duty, the action is delictual notwithstanding that it also involves a breach of contract; that contractual negligence ordinarily gives rise to an action either on contract or in tort, and the injured party may at his election waive the contract and sue in tort; or waive the tort and base his action on the contract alone.

In Peterson v. Sherman, 68 Cal.App.2d 706, 711, 157 P.2d 863, it was held that in seeking a determination as to whether an action is one in contract or in tort, the general rule is that the character of the action is to be determined by the nature of the grievance rather than by the form of the pleading; that when it is not clear to which class the action belongs, it will ordinarily be construed in contract rather than in tort; and that the court must accept as true the allegations of the complaint.

In the instant case plaintiff bases his first cause of action on the breach of the contract in that defendant failed to cap the gas line ending in the water heater cabinet as specifically agreed in said contract, thereby alleging "a breach of a promise set forth in the contract." In Jones v. Kelly, 208 Cal. 251, 255, 280 P. 942, 943, it is said:

"The law imposes the obligation that 'every person is bound, without contract, to abstain from injuring the person or property of another, or infringing upon any of his rights.' Section 1708, Civ.Code. This duty is independent of the contract and attaches over and above the terms of the contract. This being so, the plaintiffs may treat the injury as a tort or as a breach of contract at their election. 1 Page on Contracts (2d Ed.) § 57."

The court further said, quoting from Rich v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 87 N.Y. 382: "It may be granted that an omission to perform a contract obligation is never a tort, unless that omission is also an omission of a legal duty. * * *"

[5] In the first cause of action herein plaintiff has elected to sue on the contract and the allegations of the complaint must be accepted as true. Where it is not clear to which class the action belongs it would ordinarily be construed in contract rather than in tort. We conclude that plaintiff stated a cause of action in contract rather than in tort in his first cause of action.

[6-8] Respondent herein argues that the clerk's transcript clearly indicates that after the court denied defendant's motion for change of venue, defendant argued the merits of its demurrer and submitted points and authorities therewith, and that such conduct amounted to a waiver of defendant's right to object to the order denying its motion for change of venue. In support of this contention respondent cites Jones v. Blonder, 159 Cal.App.2d 316, 323 P.2d 1015. However, in that case the motion for change of venue was heard and denied on July 5, 1957, and on July 19, 1957, the demurrer was submitted and overruled, appellant being granted fifteen days to answer. Appellant did not file an answer but instead, on August 9, 1957, 21 days after the ruling on the demurrer and 35 days after the order was entered denying a change of venue, filed a notice of appeal from the latter order. In the instant case the motion for change of venue and the demurrer were set for hearing and heard on March 27, 1958. The court in its order denied the motion and overruled the demurrer, giving defendant 10 days within which to answer. The defendant filed its notice of appeal on April 1, 1958. While the court's order recites that it was made after hearing arguments of counsel, it does not state whether the arguments were on the motion or on the demurrer. It is said in Allin v. International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes, etc., 113 Cal.App.2d 135, 138, 247 P.2d 857, that one who by his conduct accepts a ruling of the court under circumstances amounting to acquiescence therein, may not complain of it on appeal. However, in Gallo v. Boyle Mfg. Co., 30 Cal. App.2d 653, 655, 86 P.2d 1067, it is said that it is true that the privilege to have the place of trial changed may be waived impliedly as well as expressly, but in order to do so there must be some act of the moving party tending to show his intent to invoke the jurisdiction of the court of first instance for the trial of questions of the fact or of law. Under the circumstances shown by the record in the instant case we cannot hold as a matter of law that appellant waived its right to object to the order made on the motion for change of venue.

The order denying the motion for change of place of trial is affirmed.

Civ. 23215.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 14, 1958.

Proceeding with respect to order determining heirship of testator who left will specifically disinheriting all his heirs and leaving his entire estate to charitable corporations with provision that if any of his heirs objected to gift to charity such heir should receive $10 as a substitutional bequest. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, William E. Fox, J., entered judgment from which charity appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that attempt to exclude legal heirs from participation in estate was successful only as to such property as was disposed of by will and property subject of a voidable gift to charity must be distributed under the laws of succession to heirs named in statute.

Affirmed.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Division of World Missions of the Board of Missions of the Methodist Church, a corporation, one of the devisees and legatees under the will of decedent, appeals from the order determining heirship, by which it was awarded only one-twelfth of the distributable estate.

George G. Munson died December 18, 1956. By his will executed August 22, 1956, he left his entire estate in equal parts to four corporate charities, of which appellant is one.

It was adjudged that said bequests are valid only as to one-third of the distributable estate. Consequently, two-thirds of decedent's estate was distributed by said judgment to the legal heirs of decedent, who are an adopted sister and the children of a deceased natural sister, the respondents herein.

The stipulation of the parties as to the charitable nature of the corporate beneficiaries under the will, and that respondents are decedent's next of kin and heirs-at-law, left no factual matter to be determined by the court.

It is urged by appellant that, despite respondents' relationship to decedent, they cannot be heard to object to decedent's gift of his estate to charitable corporations for the reason that, included in decedent's said will which was executed more than one month and less than six months before his death are the following provisions:

"Fifth: Feeling that I have sufficiently remembered my adopted sister, Carrie Olivia Cline, aka Olive Cline, through insurance on my life, and specifically remembering the children of my deceased sister, Edith M. Davis, I have intentionally omitted all of my heirs and persons who are not specifically mentioned herein, and I hereby generally and specifically disinherit each and every such person whomsoever claiming to be or who may be lawfully determined to be my heirs at law, and if any such person or any person claiming under them or their heirs shall lawfully become entitled to any part of my estate, I hereby give and bequeath to such person or his heirs the sum of Ten Dollars ($10.00) and no more, in lieu of any share and interest in my estate.

"Sixth: If any devisee, legatee or beneficiary under this will shall contest it or any of its parts or provisions, any share or interest given to that person or association shall be revoked and augment proportionately the shares of such of the beneficiaries hereunder as shall not have joined or participated in said contest. I further direct that any expense incurred by my executor in defending any contest in or about, or in respect to this Will, or the provisions thereof, shall be paid from my estate." Section 41, Probate Code of California, provides:

"No estate, real or personal, may be bequeathed or devised to any charitable or benevolent society or corporation, or to any person or persons in trust for charitable uses, by a testator who leaves a spouse, brother, sister, nephew, niece, descendant or ancestor surviving him, who, under the will, or the laws of succession, would otherwise have taken the property so bequeathed or devised, unless the will was duly executed at least 30 days before the death of the testator. If so executed at least 30 days before death, such devises and legacies shall be valid, but they may not collectively exceed one-third of the testator's estate as against his spouse, brother, sister, nephew, niece, descendant or ancestor, who would otherwise, as aforesaid, have taken the excess over one-third, and if they do, a pro rata deduction from such devises and legacies shall be made so as to reduce the aggregate thereof to one-third of the estate. All property bequeathed or devised contrary to the provisions of this section shall go to the spouse, brother, sister, nephew, niece, descendant or ancestor of the testator, if and to the extent that they would have taken said property as aforesaid but for such devises or legacies; otherwise the testator's estate shall go in accordance with his will and such devises and legacies shall be unaffected.

"Nothing herein contained is intended to, or shall be deemed or construed to vest any property devised or bequeathed to charity or in trust for a charitable use, in any person who is not a relative of the testator belonging to one of the classes mentioned herein, or in any such relative, unless and then only to the extent that such relative takes the same under a substitutional or residuary bequest or devise in the will or under the laws of succession because of the absence of other effective disposition in the will."

The question raised on appeal is whether, under the provisions of testator's will, said Section 41 precludes respondents from taking by succession the residue of the estate over and above the one-third awarded to the charities named in the will.

Appellant, in its opening brief, states that "the gifts are not rendered invalid but are merely voidable, as was said in the decision of the Court in the Estate of Haines, 76 Cal.App.2d 673, 679, 173 P.2d 693: 'at the instance of an aggrieved heir of a designated class; but such heir is not aggrieved unless he would have been entitled to take the property had it not been willed to charity.' "

In re Estate of Haines, supra, 173 P.2d 693, 695, however, concerns a will in which the heirs listed in section 41 had no interest in the residuary estate because of a substitutional clause naming a non-relative as legatee in case the code section should prevent the charity from taking the whole estate. The judgment therein awarded the estate to a non-relative of the decedent under the substitutional bequest and was reversed with directions that the estate be awarded to the named charity, because there was no intestacy as to any portion of the estate and the heirs were excluded from participation therein by the substitutional gift to the friend, in whom none of said estate "shall be deemed or construed to vest."

To the same effect, see In re Estate of Davis, 74 Cal.App.2d 357, 361, 168 P.2d 789, quoted with approval in In re Estate of Randall, 86 Cal.App.2d 422, 427, 194 P.2d 709, 712, as follows:

"By said language [Section 41] the Legislature has declared that where, as in this case, charitable gifts in a will are voidable, the portion of the estate represented thereby shall pass to a surviving relative only to the extent that such relative takes the same under a substitutional or residuary bequest or devise or, if there be no such substitutional or residuary bequest or devise, under the laws of succession if there be no other effective disposition thereof in the will."

Respondents cite and rely upon the rule that "a testator must do more than merely evince an intention to disinherit before the heir's right of succession can be cut off—he must make a valid disposition of his property," followed in In re Estate of Fritze, 85 Cal.App. 500, 505, 259 P. 992, 994. Appellants, however, urge that In re Estate of

Fritze, supra, is inapplicable to the facts of the instant action because of the provision in decedent's will in the proceeding now under consideration that anyone determined to be his heir entitled to object to his gift to charity shall receive $10.00 "as a substitutional bequest."

[1] An attempt to exclude legal heirs from participation in the estate of decedent is successful only as to such property as is disposed of by the will. Property which is the subject of a voidable gift to charity, and not the subject of a substitutional gift in the event of such avoidance, must be distributed under the laws of succession to the relatives named in said Section 41. In re Estate of Davison, 96 Cal. App.2d 263, 267, 215 P.2d 504; In re Estate of Dunn, 120 Cal.App.2d 294, 296, 260 P.2d 964.

In re Estate of Clippinger, 75 Cal.App.2d 426, 171 P.2d 567, was an appeal by decedent's half sister from a judgment determining heirship, by which, notwithstanding the provisions of section 41 that only one-third of an estate may be given to charity by a will made less than six months before death, the trial court awarded only $25 to appellant, because decedent's will gave $25 each to her brother and her sister describing them as "practically strangers," and left the "balance" to an Eastern Star Home. At page 433 of 75 Cal.App.2d, at page 572 of 171 P.2d, Mr. Justice Wilson, speaking for the District Court of Appeal, said: "* * * The death of the testator having occurred within six months after the execution of the will, the home is entitled to only one-third of the residue of the estate, and the testator died intestate as to the remaining two thirds." The judgment was reversed, and, 75 Cal.App.2d at page 436, 171 P.2d at page 573 the trial court was directed to amend its findings and conclusions to show that decedent died intestate as to two-thirds of her estate and that appellant should receive that two-thirds.

[2] It is appellant's contention that decedent's gift in the instant action of $10

only, to any heir who objects to the testator's gift to charity is such a substitutional gift as to preclude the legal heirs from participation in decedent's estate. Under the Dunn and Davison decisions, supra, if in addition to decedent's conditional bequest of the $10 to each of his heirs he had, as in In re Estate of Haines, supra, added to the substitutional clause a gift of the residue to a non-relative, then appellant's position might be sustained. However, in the instant action, the gift to the charities is valid (as against the respondents) only as to one-third of decedent's estate; as to the other two-thirds the substitutional clause disposes of $10 only, to each of the respondents; and as to the balance of the estate, decedent died intestate.

In Re Estate of Heney, 66 Cal.App.2d 867, 869, 153 P.2d 427, Mr. Justice McComb, speaking for the District Court of Appeal, said that where the will disposed of only a portion of the estate and included the provision that "anyone not mentioned in this will and who is related to me will receive not more than ($10.00) Ten Dollars each," nevertheless testator's brothers were entitled to succeed to the estate. Hearing was denied by the Supreme Court.

In Re Estate of Lefranc, 38 Cal.2d 289, 295, 239 P.2d 617, 620, Mr. Justice Schauer, speaking for the Supreme Court, had this to say:

"Under the provisions of various contest clauses heretofore considered by the courts it has been held that whether one in the position of Adele is entitled to succeed as an heir at law to any portion of the legacy * * * which she forfeited depends upon whether the testatrix made other valid disposition thereof. It has been said that 'A testator must do more than merely evince an intention to disinherit before the heirs' right of succession can be cut off. He must make a valid disposition of his property.' (citing cases) Thus, in In re Estate of Mathie, [64 Cal.App.2d 767, 781, 149 P.2d 485], it is held that inasmuch as the entire estate, after payment of debts and expenses, was left in equal shares to two persons without other bequests, the will contained no residuary clause, and a legatee who had forfeited his legacy by contesting the will was nevertheless entitled to receive a share of such legacy under the laws of intestate succession. * * *

In re Walkerly's Estate, 108 Cal. 627, 652, 41 P. 772; Campbell-Kawannanako v. Campbell, 152 Cal. 201, 207, 92 P. 184.

The will in the instant action gives to respondent relatives only $10 each, and expresses the intention to disinherit them in the event that all the property is disposed of as attempted by the will. Since, under the circumstances here shown, appellant can take only one-third of the estate, and no disposition is made of the residue, it must be presumed that the testator expected his next of kin named in said Section 41 to take the other two-thirds of his estate under the laws of succession.

The judgment is affirmed.

Paris & Paris, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ellery E. Cuff, Public Defender, Los Angeles, for respondent.

DAVID, Judge.

Plaintiff holds a default judgment against defendant upon a promissory note for indebtedness, not incurred for a necessary of life. Defendant's wages in the hands of his employer were garnished on three successive occasions, and since judgment, one execution levy was made upon them. In each instance, defendant claimed full exemption under C.C.P. § 690.11 by verified affidavits, and a corporate officer of the plaintiff corporation filed a counteraffidavit, in a stock form, asserting "that affiant is informed and believes and therefore alleges that the moneys claimed exempt by defendant are not necessary for his support or that of his family."

The defendant's verified affidavits established that the earnings garnished were his weekly wages as a janitor, earned within the 30 days prior thereto, urgently needed for the support of himself and his family, consisting of a wife and seven minor children. The needs listed in each instance far exceeded the levy. Except upon the last levy, the parties did not set the contested claim of exemption for hearing, whereupon pursuant to C.C.P. sec. 690.26(7) the sum held each time by the County Marshal was released to defendant after the statutory delay. Upon the last levy, affidavits were filed as in the previous instances, but defendant brought on the hearing on the exemption claim, and in addition, moved the court for an order restraining plaintiff from executing any further attachments or writs of execution upon defendant's wages, pending further order of the court.

Defendant's motion was supported by an affidavit whose statements were sufficient to support the conclusion that further writs against defendant's wages will not reach any sums not exempt under C.C.P. sec. 690.11, and that the only purpose of further writs would be to prejudice defendant in his employment, and to persecute, annoy, harass and inconvenience him, and put him to expense in asserting over and over again the exempt character of the wages; and that there are no circumstances at the present time or in the foreseeable future which would alter the exempt status of defendant's wages as janitor. This affidavit was not controverted; the plaintiff did not appear at the hearing; other testimony was received on defendant's behalf, and the order requested was granted, and all of the claims of exemption asserted to the various levies were allowed.

[1] (1) Under C.C.P. sec. 690.26(9), the affidavits claiming exemption, and any contesting it, are the pleadings on the motion to determine the claim of exemption. That is not all, for the code provides "both shall be received in evidence." An affidavit contesting the exemption on information and belief, being hearsay (Enter v. Crutcher, 1958, 159 Cal.App.2d Supp. 841, 323 P.2d 586), a trial court may dispose of the exemption claim on the affidavit of the debtor alone, if there is no other evidence. Continued use of contesting affidavits made only on information and belief, with no revelation what the information is, with consequent delay in release of sums in the hands of the Marshal to defendant, is a relevant circumstance in determining whether there has been an abuse of process.

[2,3] (2) "Successive seizures of exempt property such as the earnings of the debtor may give rise to an action for abuse of process." (21 Cal.Jur.2d 536; 1 Am. Jur. Abuse of Process, sec. 16.) A wrongful levy is regarded as a tort; and a levy is wrongful where it is made on property of the judgment debtor which is exempt. 33 C.J.S. Executions § 453, p. 836. Abuse of process is a contempt of court. C.C.P. sec. 1209, subd. 4. Wrongful use made of process rightfully issued may, as here, constitute an abuse of process. Tranchina v. Arcinas, 1947, 78 Cal.App.2d 522, 525, 178 P.2d 65, 67.

[4] (3) As a court of record, established by the Constitution, Art. VI, secs. 1, 11, a municipal court shares in "the inherent power [of all courts] to control and prevent abuses in the use of their process." (Italics added.) Golden Gate Candy Products Co. v. Superior Court, 1934, 1 Cal.App.2d 426, 432, 36 P.2d 834, 836; cf. Hart Brothers Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 1938, 31 Cal.App.2d Supp. 766, 771-772, 82 P.2d 221, 224. This power does not depend upon constitutional or legislative grant but is inherently "necessary to the orderly and efficient exercise of jurisdiction." Corum v. Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co., 1945, 67 Cal.App.2d 891, 897, 155 P.2d 710, 713, 14 Am.Jur. p. 370, par. 171. For other declarations of the inherent powers of courts of record, consult: Millholen v. Riley, 1930, 211 Cal. 29, 34, 293 P. 69, 71; Barton v. State Bar, 1930, 209 Cal. 677, 680-681, 289 P. 818, 819; Brydonjack v. State Bar, 1929, 208 Cal. 439, 281 P. 1018, 66 A.L.R. 1507; Kirstowsky v. Superior Court, 1956, 143 Cal.App.2d 745, 753, 300 P.2d 163; Lincoln v. Didak, 1958, 162 Cal. App.2d 625, 328 P.2d 498.

[5,6] (4) Appellant contends the Municipal Court exercised equitable jurisdiction without right, citing C.C.P. § 89. The power to control its process does not depend upon a court's equitable jurisdiction; it is incident to the jurisdiction to hear, decide, and give effect to judgments of all kinds. In this case, the request for the restraining order was made in defense against the repeated assertion that the wages of defendant were subject to plaintiff's claim. If the order is equitable in character, it is consistent with C.C.P. § 89(2) which vests the Municipal Court with jurisdiction over equitable matters asserted defensively.

[7] (5) Appellant contends the order was "too broad". The "further order of the court" is available to the plaintiff at any time that it may be made to appear reasonably possible that a proposed levy will reach non-exempt wages. The right to execution generally is not restricted by the order. Proceedings for examination of the judgment debtor are available (C. C.P. sec. 714.).

The order of February 5, 1958, granting the claims of exemption filed by the defendant, and ordering that further levies on personal earnings be restrained, except on order of court first obtained, is affirmed.

McCOMB, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment denying him an injunction that would restrain defendants from enforcing certain sections of the Municipal Code and the Electrical Code of the City of Los Angeles.

The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend and entered judgment in favor of defendants.

[1] Plaintiff also appeals from a minute order denying his motion for a temporary restraining order and for a preliminary injunction. Since this order dealt solely with the right to preventive relief pending final judgment and denied such relief, the entry of judgment rendered the question of the right to interim relief moot. The appeals from the order must therefore be dismissed.

Facts: Plaintiff is an electrical contractor, duly licensed by the state pursuant to the provisions of sections 7000-7145 of the Business and Professions Code. The Business and Professions Code (div. 3, ch. 9), sometimes called the "Contractors' License Act," creates a "Contractors' State License Board," referred to as the board (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 7000); defines those coming within the jurisdiction of the board, including electrical contractors (§ 7026); prohibits any person from engaging in the business or acting in the capacity of a contractor without first having obtained a state license, and makes it a misdemeanor to do so (§§ 7028, 7030); provides for investigation and examination of applicants for license (§ 7072); requires the payment of an application fee, annual renewal fees, and penalties (§ 7137); makes elaborate provision for investigation of the acts of contractors, accusations against them, causes for disciplinary action, hearings, review, discipline, prosecution of violations of any law, and renewal or reissuance of suspended or revoked license (§§ 155, 7090-7122); and vests broad powers in the board relative to the licensing and regulation of contractors (§§ 7000-7145).

Wilful or deliberate disregard and violation of the building laws of the state, or of any political subdivision thereof, constitutes a cause for disciplinary action. (§ 7110.) Section 7071.5 provides that before reinstatement after disciplinary action the board may require the applicant to give a surety bond or make a cash deposit conditioned upon his compliance with the provisions of the act. Every person injured by the unlawful acts or omissions of such contractor may maintain an action on the bond or a claim on the deposit.

The action instituted by plaintiff challenges the constitutionality of, and seeks to obtain an injunction restraining defendants from enforcing against him, the provisions of sections 93.0201, 93.0204, 93.0205 (2), 93.0501, 93.0504 and 93.0505 of the Electrical Code of the City of Los Angeles and sections 11.00, 21.03, 21.06, 21.08, 21.09, 21.12(a), 21.12(b), 21.188 and 21.190 of the Municipal Code of defendant city.

Section 93.0201 provides that no person shall install, alter, reconstruct or repair any electric wiring regulated by defendant city's Electrical Code without a permit from the Department of Building and Safety, hereinafter referred to as the department.

Section 93.0204 requires that an application for such permit shall be made to the department on a form furnished by the latter. The required information consists of a description of the proposed electric wiring, plans and specifications and a suitable diagram, and "such additional information as may be considered necessary by the Department for the proper enforcement of the provisions of this Code."

Section 93.0205 enumerates those to whom permits may be issued, including (subsection (a)-2) electrical contractors "registered" with the department.

Section 93.0501 is entitled "Contractor Registration" and provides in subsection (a) that "Before any contractor licensed by the State of California shall be issued any permits, he shall be registered with the Department. The applicant shall provide sufficient information to enable the Department to determine if there is compliance with all applicable City and State Laws.

"(b) To register as a contractor, the responsible managing officer or responsible managing employee shall personally appear at an office of the Department and provide the following information:

"1. The business name and address as listed by the Contractors State License Board; and

"2. The names of the owners or officers of a corporation; and

"3. The Contractors State License with the number and classification; and

"4. The signature of the responsible managing officer or the responsible managing employee as listed by the Contractors State License Board; and

"5. License Tax Registration Certificate number.

"(c) The registrant shall notify the Department within 10 days of any change in the facts required by Subsection (b).

"(d) No registration shall authorize any person to do work which is not within the specific classification of the registration.

"(e) Every such registration shall expire on June 30 of each year."

Section 93.0504 defines the regulations to which the foregoing certificate of registration shall be subject:

"1. Certificates of Registration shall not be transferable.

"2. Certificates of Registration shall become void 30 days after the holder who qualified by examination or experience ceases to have effective control over the work performed.

"3. Every Certificate of Registration shall expire on June 30 of each year unless sooner revoked or suspended by the Board. A Certificate of Registration may be renewed within 30 days after expiration without examination upon the payment of the annual registration fee as prescribed in this Code.

"4. The Board may revoke or suspend any Certificate of Registration for failure, refusal, or neglect of the holder to comply with the provisions of this Code or any provision of Section 98.00 of the Municipal Code as set forth therein.

"5. No Certificate of Registration shall authorize any person to do work which is not within the specific classification of the Certificate of Registration."

Section 93.0505 has no application to the issue presented on this appeal.

[2] The Law. A local municipal ordinance that is in conflict with a general law adopted by the Legislature is invalid if it attempts to impose additional requirements in a field that is preempted by the general law. Cal.Const. art. XI, § 11; Tolman v. Underhill, 39 Cal.2d 708, 712 [4], 249 P.2d 280; Pipoly v. Benson, 20 Cal.2d 366, 370, 125 P.2d 482, 147 A.L.R. 515; Atlas Mixed Mortar Co. v. City of Burbank, 202 Cal. 660, 663 [2], 262 P. 334; Pasadena School Dist. v. City of Pasadena, 166 Cal. 7, 9 et seq., 134 P. 985, 47 L.R.A.,N.S., 892;

James v. Myers, 68 Cal.App.2d 23, 27 [1], 156 P.2d 69.

Question: Has the state, by the adoption of division 3, chapter 9, sections 7000-7145, of the Business and Professions Code, preempted the field of regulating contractors?

Yes. The sections of the Electrical Code of defendant city provide:

i. No person shall install wiring without a permit from the Department of Building and Safety. (The Business and Professions Code prohibits any person from engaging in the business or acting in the capacity of a contractor without first having obtained a license and makes it a misdemeanor to do so [§§ 7028, 7030].)

ii. To obtain a permit, one must submit proposed plans and "such additional information as may be considered necessary by the Department for the proper enforcement of the provisions of this Code." (The Business and Professions Code provides for investigation and examination of applicants for licenses [§ 7072].)

iii. To obtain a permit, the contractor must have registered with the department, and in order to register the contractor must appear personally at an office of the department and provide certain information, including his "License Tax Registration Certificate number." (The Business and Professions Code, in addition to prohibiting a person from engaging in the business or acting in the capacity of a contractor without first having obtained a state license, provides for investigation and examination of applicants for licenses.)

iv. In order to obtain a license tax registration certificate number, the contractor must pay the city clerk a fee based on the amount of his gross receipts. (The Business and Professions Code requires the payment of an application fee, annual renewal fees, and provides for certain penalties [§ 7137].)

v. The registration certificate of the contractor can be revoked or suspended for "failure, refusal, or neglect of the holder to comply with the provisions of this Code or any provisions of Section 98.00 of the Municipal Code as set forth therein." (The Business and Professions Code makes elaborate provision for investigation of the acts of contractors, accusations against them, causes for disciplinary action, hearings, review, discipline, prosecution for violations of any law, and renewal or reissuance of suspended or revoked license [§§ 155, 7090-7122], and vests broad powers in the board relative to the licensing and regulation of contractors [§§ 7000-7145].)

[3] It clearly appears from the foregoing that the state has occupied the field of licensing electrical contractors and that therefore the ordinances here under attack are invalid to the extent that they conflict with the Business and Professions Code. Agnew v. City of Culver City, 147 Cal.App. 2d 144, 304 P.2d 788; Lynch v. City of Los Angeles, 114 Cal.App.2d 115, 249 P.2d 856; City & County of San Francisco v. Boss, 83 Cal.App.2d 445, 189 P.2d 32.

The only material difference between the ordinance held invalid in Agnew v. City of Culver City, supra, and the ordinance here involved is that the former imposed a fee of $100, while in the instant case the fee varies according to the amount of the contractor's gross receipts, the minimum being $12.

In City & County of San Francisco v. Boss, supra, the fee was only $10, but the court, in holding the ordinance invalid, pointed out, 83 Cal.App. at page 446, 189 P.2d at page 33 that the ordinance said: "Any certificate of registration may be revoked for any act of the person so registered showing said person to be dishonest or guilty of the violation of any rule or regulation, either state or municipal, regulating or governing contractors." (Italics added.) In such case, the court held that the state law had preempted the field. The only differences between the language just quoted and the corresponding language in the ordinance under attack are, in effect, the foregoing italicized words.

The foregoing cases are directly in point and lead to the inescapable conclusion that the state has preempted the field here involved and that defendant city's ordinances are therefore invalid.

[4] Of course, as contended by defendants, a municipality may tax electrical contractors, as other trades, professions and businesses are taxed. The fees in the present case, however, are exacted not as a business tax but as the price of a license that the city cannot require.

The judgment is reversed. The purported appeals from the order denying motions for a temporary restraining order and for a preliminary injunction are dismissed. Plaintiff is to recover his costs on appeal.

GIBSON, C. J., and CARTER, TRAYNOR and SCHAUER, JJ., concur.

SHENK, Justice (dissenting).

The questions involved in this case are whether the City of Los Angeles can impose a business license tax on a person conducting an electrical contracting business within the city, and whether the city can establish and enforce local regulations as to the quality and character of installations by one who is licensed to conduct that business within the state.

It is conceded that insofar as the state has occupied the field the city cannot impose regulations which are conflicting or even concurrent therewith. Tolman v. Underhill, 39 Cal.2d 708, 712, 249 P.2d 280. We are required then, to determine the extent to which the state purports to regulate in these areas.

First, directing attention to the imposition of the business license tax alone, there can be no question but that the state in providing for the licensing of electrical contractors does not purport to levy a license tax on the doing of business by an electrical contractor. Also, the decisions in this state are uniform in holding that the imposition of a license tax by a municipality is not a preemption of the state-wide licensing provisions. In re Galusha, 184 Cal. 697, 699, 195 P. 406; City of San Mateo v. Mullin, 59 Cal.App.2d 652, 654, 139

P.2d 351. The challenged sections which impose the license tax (Municipal Code of the defendant city, §§ 11.00, 21.03, 21.06, 21.08, 21.09, 21.12(a), 21.12(b), 21.188 and 21.190) are, on their face, the usual type of license tax. They provide generally that the tax be paid by every person who is engaged within the city in any one of a great variety of business activities, including electrical contractors; that the minimum tax is $12 (representing 0.1% of the first $12,000 of gross receipts); that the minimum tax is paid in advance annually, and that upon payment a "License Tax Registration Certificate" is issued.

It is established that freeholder charter cities are empowered to exact business license taxes for revenue purposes. This court has recently held: "It is well settled that the power of a municipal corporation operating under a freeholders' charter * * * to impose taxes 'for revenue purposes, including license taxes, is strictly a municipal affair' pursuant to the direct constitutional grant of the people of the state, Const. art. XI, sec. 6; West Coast Advertising Co. v. City and County of San Francisco, 14 Cal.2d 516, 524, 95 P.2d 138, 143, and that 'the restrictions on the exercise of that power are only the limitations and restrictions appearing in the Constitution and in the charter itself.'" Ainsworth v. Bryant, 34 Cal.2d 465, 469, 211 P.2d 564, 566; see also City of Glendale v. Trondsen, 48 Cal.2d 93, 99, 308 P.2d 1; Ex parte Braun, 141 Cal. 204, 213, 74 P. 780. From the foregoing it is apparent that the State Contractors Licensing Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 7000 et seq.) not only was not intended to, but could not limit the city's power to levy and collect a proper business license tax. In Franklin v. Peterson, 87 Cal.App.2d 727, 197 P.2d 788, the court had before it the same provisions of the Los Angeles Municipal Code that are now before this court. In refuting the contention of an attorney licensed to practice law under a general statute that the imposition of the license tax was a preemption of the state-wide statute, the court stated 87 Cal. App.2d at pages 731-732, 197 P.2d at page Cal.Rep. 329-330 P.2d-51 790: "Conceding that a license requirement cannot be imposed upon a lawyer, nor his business be regulated by ordinance, the tax provided for in the ordinance here under consideration is levied upon the business of practicing law, rather than upon a person because he is an attorney at law. A license to practice law does not carry with it exemption from taxation. * * * The Los Angeles ordinance does not attempt to regulate the professions, business or occupations which are subject to the tax. It provides only for a license for revenue purposes, and is not a regulatory measure affecting the business or profession so taxed." The Peterson case was cited with approval by this court in City of Los Angeles v. Rancho Homes, Inc., 40 Cal.2d 764, 771, 256 P.2d 305.

In spite of the foregoing uniform and overwhelming holdings to the contrary the majority of this court has, without mention of the established law and the many decisions pertaining thereto, declared the invalidity of the license tax provisions, as well as the regulatory provisions of the Electrical Code of the City of Los Angeles. The majority's conclusion that license taxes in the present case "are exacted not as a business tax but as the price of a license that the city cannot require," is definitely contrary to the settled law of this state. It is urged in support of such a conclusion that the city's License Tax Registration Certificate is nothing more than the city's permit to engage in business, but such a contention can be made only upon the failure to recognize the purpose and effect of the certificate. That purpose is required by section 21.08 to be stated on the face of each certificate as follows: "This license tax registration certificate signifies that the person named on the face hereof has fulfilled the requirements of section 21.03 L.A.M.C., by registering with the City Clerk for the purpose of paying license taxes for the classification of business for which the certificate is issued. * * *" Thus, it must be conceded that the certificate is not a permit to do business, and that the exaction of the license tax revenue purposes is not an encroachment upon the state's exclusive right to determine who shall engage in electrical contracting. Conversely, no one will argue that the State Contractors Licensing Act is a revenue raising measure which prohibits a proper local revenue measure. The purpose of the act is "for the safety and protection of the public" against imposition, Gatti v. Highland Park Builders, Inc., 27 Cal.2d 687, 690, 166 P.2d 265, 266. * * * Franklin v. Nat C. Goldstone Agency, 33 Cal.2d 628, 632, 204 P.2d 37, 40. Obviously, the collection of fees for administrative costs pursuant to such an exercise of the state's police power is not intended as a revenue raising measure.

In addition to the authority vested in the City of Los Angeles to enact revenue raising measures, power is also vested in the city to enact, under its police power, measures for the protection of its citizens, their lives and property. The challenged provisions of the electrical code are proper exercises of that power. An examination of the provisions in question discloses that they only regulate the quality and character of electrical installations, and do not attempt to determine the qualifications of those persons who may make such installations.

Among others the plaintiff relies on the case of Horwith v. City of Fresno, 74 Cal. App.2d 443, 168 P.2d 767, for the proposition that a local ordinance is in conflict with general law if it attempts to impose requirements in a field fully occupied by the general state-wide law. Nevertheless it was said in that case, 74 Cal.App.2d at page 449, 168 P.2d at page 770: "This does not limit the right of local governmental agencies to protect property and life through the enforcement of local regulations as to the quality and character of the installations. The right to enforce local ordinances is still in the hands of municipalities through the power of inspections and permits."

In the present case it appears that objection is primarily made to the use of the term "permit"; but it is apparent that the permit required by the electrical code is one for which every state licensed electrical contractor may qualify. No fee is required to be paid, no bond is required to be posted, no examination is made, no investigation is conducted and no suspension is provided for upon a showing of lack of good character or a violation of general or local law. Nevertheless the majority concludes that the provisions constitute an invasion of the general licensing statutory provisions, and cite in support thereof decisions of the District Court of Appeal all of which, on examination, are distinguishable and not in point.

In Lynch v. City of Los Angeles, 114 Cal.App.2d 115, 249 P.2d 856, 858, the then existing provisions of the Los Angeles Electrical Code were declared invalid on the ground that: "The ordinance regulations * * * requiring payment of the so-called 'permit service fee' and the posting of a bond, are clearly objectionable as an attempt 'to legislate upon a subject intended to be fully covered by an act of the legislature.'" The present provisions of the city's electrical code were adopted following the decision in the Lynch case and contain none of the provisions held to be objectionable in that case. In City & County of San Francisco v. Boss, 83 Cal.App.2d 445, 189 P.2d 32, 33, it appears that state-licensed contractors were required by the local ordinance to acquire a registration certificate; that an application fee of $10 was required; that an investigation of the factual matter was to be conducted and the certificate issued only "if the facts set forth in said application are found to be true," and that the certificate was to be revoked upon showing "said person to be dishonest or guilty of the violation of any rule or regulation, either state or municipal, regulating or governing contractors." In the third decision relied on by the majority, Agnew v. City of Culver City, 147 Cal.App.2d 144, 304 P.2d 788, 790, it appears that an ordinance of the City of Culver City provided "for licensing and regulating electrical contractors and fixing fees to be charged electrical contractors as a condition precedent to engaging in electrical contracting in Culver City. * * *" A license fee of $100 was required to obtain a business license to do work as an electrical contractor in the city.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 20, 1958.

The provisions of the city's electrical code here challenged have none of the objectionable features of the foregoing cases. They represent reasonable measures to insure compliance with the municipality's endeavors to protect the lives and property of its citizens and other inhabitants. Certainly it should not be said that a municipality cannot determine that one who professes to be a state-licensed contractor is in fact in good standing as such and is licensed in a particular category; that the installations such a contractor proposes to make will conform both to his license and to applicable building codes; that statistical information concerning the contractor be recorded and made available to those who may be damaged by his failure to comply with applicable local regulations, and that the contractor has complied with proper local business license tax provisions. The challenged provisions in the present case provide only for the foregoing determinations, and the required permit is nothing more than evidence that such determinations have been made or will be made by the municipality.

The decision in this case will create great confusion in freeholder charter cities as to what is and what is not a municipal affair. The distinction between the two for the purposes of this case is adequately dealt with by Mr. Presiding Justice White in his opinion in this case in the District Court of Appeal, in which his associates concurred. I adopt that opinion as a further expression of my views. It is found in 323 P.2d at page 165. The judgment should be affirmed.

On petition for rehearing we are of the opinion that the modification of the original opinion ordered by this court on denial of petition for rehearing does not adequately cure the defects pointed out in the dissenting opinion and that the petition for rehearing should be granted.

Husband brought suit for divorce, and a default decree was entered in favor of the husband. The Superior Court, County of Alameda, Donald K. Quayle, J., entered an order setting aside the default decree, and the husband appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, P. J., held that Superior Court properly granted motion of wife to set aside default decree on ground of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, where there was some indication of confusion between counsel because of attempted reconciliation and a separate maintenance action pending in another county.

Order affirmed.

Oswald G. Ingold, Henry Poppic, Berkeley, for appellant.

Leo J. Todd, Grass Valley, for respondent.

KAUFMAN, Presiding Justice.

This appeal is taken from an order setting aside the respondent's default and the interlocutory decree of divorce granted to the appellant. The sole ground urged for reversal is that, in granting respondent's motion, the trial court abused its discretion as the affidavits fail to show that the default was entered through mistake, inadvertence, surprise or inexcusable neglect and the record itself indicates that the respondent could have filed her answer and cross-complaint any time after July 29, 1957. No respondent's brief having been filed, the case is submitted on the clerk's transcript and appellant's brief pursuant to Rule 17(b) of the Rules on Appeal.

[1] The clerk's transcript indicates that appellant's complaint for divorce was filed on June 7, 1957. After exchange of correspondence between counsel for the respective parties, a reconciliation was attempted on June 29, 1957. On July 14, 1957, the parties separated again. Defendant's answer and cross-complaint were executed but not filed on July 29, 1957. On September 13, 1957, appellant's counsel wrote to respondent's counsel requesting that the answer be filed in ten days. On September 24, 1957, respondent's default was entered, and the interlocutory decree granted on September 27, 1957. On September 27, 1957, respondent filed her answer and cross-complaint. On October 16, 1957, respondent filed notice of her motion to set aside the default and interlocutory decree. The motion was made on the ground that the default was entered through the mistake, inadvertence, surprise and inexcusable neglect of respondent's counsel. The respondent's affidavit of merits states that she has been deprived of her right to care, support and maintenance during the pendency of the action as the plaintiff's complaint does not set forth the community property belonging to the parties. The affidavit of respondent's counsel states that it was necessary for him to be absent from his office for business reasons before the 25th of September 1957, and that he filed the answer and cross-complaint immediately on being notified that the appellant intended to proceed on the original complaint. As we pointed out in Yarbrough v. Yarbrough, 144 Cal.App. 2d 610, at page 612, 301 P.2d 426, at page 427, the failure to file respondent's brief imposes an unnecessary burden on this court, and at least raises the inference that respondent concedes that the appeal is meritorious.

[2,3] We are, however, aware of the rule that appellate courts generally are more inclined toward upholding orders vacating defaults in order to dispose of cases on their merits wherever possible. Stub v. Harrison, 35 Cal.App.2d 685, 96 P.2d 979. In divorce actions, because of the interest of the state, this rule is particularly applicable. Gregory v. Gregory, 92 Cal.App.2d 343, 206 P.2d 1122; Rehfuss v. Rehfuss, 169 Cal. 86, 145 P. 1020. "Even in a case where the showing under section 473 is not strong, or where there is any doubt as to the setting aside of a default, such doubt should be resolved in favor of the application." Garcia v. Garcia, 105 Cal.App.2d 289, 291, 233 P.2d 23, 24.

[4,5] While here there is no clear evidence of conduct on the part of appellant's counsel which misled the respondent or her counsel, there is some indication of confusion between counsel because of the attempted reconciliation and a separate maintenance action pending in another county. The record indicates that respondent's actions took place immediately on notice of the default. We think this case falls within the doubtful category and that the trial court properly resolved the doubt in favor of the respondent. No prejudicial error appearing, the order setting aside the default and interlocutory decree must be affirmed.

Order affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 16, 1958.

Proceeding by husband to rescind property settlement agreement executed by husband and his deceased wife. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Kenneth N. Chantry, J., granted defendant's motion to dismiss, and husband appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that although husband for some years had made his living by buying and selling properties, wife had right to determine for herself when and how she would dispose of her interest in their community property, and wife's refusal to sign transfers of real property necessary for husband to carry on his business was not an act of duress sufficient to warrant husband's attempted rescission of property settlement agreement.

1. Husband and Wife ⇨278(1)

Where husband for some years prior to entering into property settlement agreement with wife had made his living by selling properties and at time of entering into agreement husband was represented by counsel, husband was not entitled to rescission of agreement on ground of misrepresentation and/or mutual mistake as to value of properties owned by him and divided between himself and wife.

2. Husband and Wife ⇨278(1)

Although husband for some years had made his living by buying and selling properties, wife had right to determine for herself when and how she would dispose of her interest in their community property, and wife's refusal to sign transfers of real property necessary for husband to carry on his business was not an act of duress sufficient to warrant husband's attempted rescission of property settlement agreement entered into between husband and wife.

3. Contracts ⇨95(3), 96

A threat to exercise a legal right is not an act of duress, menace, or undue influence sufficient to warrant rescission of contract.

4. Husband and Wife ⇨278(5)

Where husband and wife entered into property settlement agreement which recited that wife's release of certain of community property and her right to support was consideration for husband's agreement to release to wife other community property and to release his right to any support from wife, wife's death before her procurement of final decree of divorce was not a failure of consideration promised and given by her for her husband's agreement, and did not warrant rescission of property settlement agreement.

5. Contracts ⚖83

When a party gets consideration promised to him, fact that it proves worthless or of little value to him because of an unexpected occurrence is not ground for rescission.

6. Appeal and Error ⚖1061(2)

Even if plaintiff states cause of action for declaratory relief, where such relief is asked on basis of alleged facts which entitle plaintiff to no relief, court cannot be required to permit the useless trial on that count alone, and plaintiff cannot be prejudiced by dismissal of action.

William J. D. Lane, Los Angeles, for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from the judgment and/or minute order granting defendant's motion to dismiss after the demurrer to his second amended complaint had been sustained and he had failed to further amend.

The question raised on appeal is whether the facts alleged in the second amended complaint are sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The complaint attempts to state four causes of action for rescission of a property settlement agreement executed by plaintiff and his deceased wife, and one cause of action for declaratory relief.

The following is a summary of the salient facts alleged by appellant in his second amended complaint.

April 20, 1955, plaintiff and his wife, Pauline Konecko, entered into an agreement by which they divided all their community property. Plaintiff (although represented by his own counsel) signed said agreement relying upon statements of decedent's attorney that the values of the properties to be conveyed to the respective parties were equal. That in fact, plaintiff's properties were worth only $7,632.10 and decedent's $18,055.03. That, on May 17, 1955, Pauline was granted an interlocutory divorce.

September 10, 1955, she died intestate.

November 9, 1955, defendant, Josephine Konecko, daughter of plaintiff and his deceased wife, was appointed administratrix of her mother's estate. November 26, 1956, defendant rendered her final account and petitioned for distribution to herself and her sisters and brother, as the only heirs of her mother.

February 28, 1957, plaintiff mailed notice of rescission to defendant. That this was not done sooner because plaintiff "did not know that his children, in whom he had trust and confidence, would enforce it (the property settlement agreement) against him to keep him from sharing in the distribution of his deceased wife's estate." That on April 20, 1955, decedent, because of her 52 years of age and physical infirmity "was incapacitated from doing any business or making or entering into any business." That defendant, "with the intent of cheating and defrauding her father," the plaintiff, induced her mother to sign the agreement.

It was further alleged that prior to April 20, 1955, plaintiff supported himself and decedent by buying and selling real property "on his own account and not as a broker;" that in lieu of alimony plaintiff gave decedent a large portion of his working capital; and "the main consideration in Stanley Konecko's (plaintiff's) entering into the purported property settlement agreement was to provide support for Pauline Konecko and said consideration has completely failed and become entirely void."

That plaintiff was induced to sign the agreement by his wife's refusal to sign the transfers of real property necessary for him to carry on his business of buying and selling real property.

"That a controversy has arisen between plaintiff and defendant relative to their legal rights and duties under said purported property settlement agreement, in that plaintiff alleges said agreement is of no force or effect because of innocent misrepresentation and/or mutual mistake, undue influence, failure of consideration and economic duress as aforesaid, while defendant is seeking to enforce it through the decree of distribution in Pauline Konecko's estate."

Appellant, in his opening brief, urges that causes of action for rescission have been stated on the grounds of mutual mistake, undue influence, duress, and failure of consideration.

[1] The innocent misrepresentation and/or mutual mistake alleged by appellant in said second amended complaint concerns the values of properties owned by him and divided between himself and his deceased wife, which are alleged to have been misstated to him by his wife's attorney. From the complaint it appears that appellant was at that time also represented by counsel; and that for some years prior thereto he had made his living by buying and selling properties. Under the facts so alleged, appellant cannot be permitted to rescind the contract because of his failure to exercise reasonable care to ascertain the true values of his own properties to be divided between himself and his wife who was then suing for divorce. Mesmer v. White, 121 Cal.App.2d 665, 674, 264 P.2d 60.

Appellant, in his opening brief, states that the "undue influence" relied upon by him as a ground for rescission of the property settlement agreement was the advantage taken of his now deceased wife by their daughter, the defendant. He has alleged no advantage taken of him by his wife or the defendant, nor has he alleged any confidential relationship.

[2,3] The duress relied upon as sufficient to warrant his attempted rescission of the property settlement agreement is his deceased wife's refusal to sign the transfers of real property. No unlawful act of decedent or defendant is alleged. Decedent's threat to sign no more conveyances of real property requested by appellant cannot be construed to be an act of duress. She had the right to determine for herself when and how she would dispose of her interest in their community property. A threat to exercise a legal right is not an act of duress, menace or undue influence. Miller v. Walden, 53 Cal.App.2d 353, 361, 127 P.2d 952; Yost v. Yost, 116 Cal.App.2d 572, 578, 253 P.2d 696.

In appellant's opening brief, he states that the failure of consideration relied upon by him as a ground for rescission is "based upon frustration of purpose in that appellant would not have signed the contract sought to be rescinded if he had known that his wife would die before their divorce was final in that the property was conveyed to the wife in lieu of support."

The agreement, cancellation of which is sought by appellant in the instant action, copy of which is attached to and by reference made a part of the complaint, recites that wife's release of certain of the community property and her right to support is consideration for appellant's agreement to release to his wife other community property and to release also his right to any support from said wife.

[4,5] His wife's death before her procurement of the final decree of divorce in her action against appellant is not a failure of the consideration promised and given by her for her husband's agreement. When a party gets the consideration promised to him, the fact that it proves worthless or of little value to him because of an unexpected occurrence, as the wife's death in the instant action, is not ground for rescission.

Because of our views hereinabove expressed that plaintiff failed to state any cause of action for rescission, it is not necessary to here decide whether plaintiff's attempted rescission over two years after his wife's death was a timely or sufficient notice of rescission.

[6] Assuming, but not deciding, that appellant did state a cause of action for declaratory relief, where, as in the instant action, such relief is asked on the basis of the facts alleged which entitle a plaintiff to no relief, then the court cannot be required to permit a useless trial on that count alone, and appellant cannot have been prejudiced by the dismissal of the action.

The judgment is affirmed.

Proceeding to partition property and for an accounting. The Superior Court, County of Monterey, Stanley Lawson, J., ordered the property sold, and an accounting was then had of the money received, and plaintiff's former wife, who claimed an interest in the property, appealed from the accounting. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that while there was sufficient evidence to show a wrongful ouster of plaintiff husband on January 1, 1948, when plaintiff husband was moved out of house and was not permitted to re-enter the property after former wife's grantee had leased the property to another, there was insufficient evidence to show that the ouster was permanent or for how long it was effective, due to allegations of plaintiff husband in Municipal Court action brought by his former wife to the effect that since October, 1949 the occupancy of former wife and her collection of rent on the property had been permissive, and damages to plaintiff husband by the ouster would have to be recomputed accordingly by trial court after determining whether ouster was temporary or permanent.

Where respondent refused to file brief, District Court of Appeal was entitled to accept as true statement of facts in appellant's brief, and was under no duty to seek out points of law in support of the judgment, and was entitled to assume that respondent had abandoned any attempt to support the judgment, and that the point made by appellant for reversal was meritorious. In action for accounting and for partition of property acquired by husband and former wife as tenants in common, where husband was ousted from the premises in January, 1948 when former wife's grantee leased possession to another who took possession, but there was insufficient evidence to show that ouster was permanent or how long it was effective, due to allegations of husband in Municipal Court action brought against him by former wife that since October, 1949 the occupancy of his wife and her collection of rents had been permissive, it was necessary to remand case to trial court for determination of whether ouster was temporary or permanent in order to recompute damages accordingly for ouster of husband.

Charles Reagh, San Francisco, for appellant.

Edmund J. Leach, Jr., Salinas, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff, Raymond Brunscher, brought this action against Charles Reagh to partition certain property claimed by plaintiff to be jointly owned by plaintiff and Reagh, and for an accounting. Thelma Brunscher answered, claiming that she now owns the interest in the property formerly owned by Reagh, and also alleging that if an accounting be granted she be given credit for certain improvements to the property made by her, and for certain other specified items. Pursuant to court order the property was sold and the money received therefrom impounded. An accounting was then had. After all obligations against the property were paid the trial court found that there remained $2,750 to be distributed and that Raymond Brunscher should receive $838.79 and Thelma Brunscher should receive $1,911.21. Thelma Brunscher appeals, challenging the accounting. Reagh has not appealed. Raymond Brunscher has not filed a respondent's brief and his counsel has informed the court that Raymond does not desire to do so.

[1] Where the respondent refuses to file a reply brief, under Rule 17(b) of the Rules on Appeal "the court may accept as true the statement of facts in the appellant's opening brief and, unless the appellant requests oral argument, may submit the case for decision on the record and on the appellant's opening brief." In Postin v. Griggs, 66 Cal.App.2d 147, 148, 151 P.2d 887, it was stated: "Under the provisions of that rule [17(b)] we are entitled to accept as true the statement of facts in the opening brief. We are under no duty to seek out points of law in support of the judgment, are entitled to assume that respondent has abandoned any attempt to support the judgment, and that the point made by appellant for reversal is meritorious."

In the instant case, it is apparent that the judgment appealed from must be reversed. The record shows that in 1933 Ray and Thelma Brunscher were husband and wife. They acquired the real property in question in that year. Title was taken as joint tenants, but they treated it as community property. A deed of trust was put on the property and payments of $27.80 to $30.50 per month were made on it. The parties separated on June 10, 1946, and Raymond took possession of the property and lived there with their oldest child. There were two younger children who remained with Thelma. Thelma and her children spent some time with the Reagh family and then went to Nevada and secured a default divorce from Raymond on January 14, 1947. On February 21, 1947, Thelma deeded her interest in the property to Reagh as security for attorney's fees and money advanced by him. Reagh, by deed dated July 31, 1950, but not recorded until January 28, 1955, deeded the interest involved back to Thelma.

Raymond remained in possession of the property until January 1, 1948. On that date, while Raymond was employed out of town, a Joy Hammock moved in under a lease granted by Reagh. Raymond's personal belongings were moved out of the house and he was not permitted to re-enter the property. Hammock paid rent of $50 per month which was paid to Thelma until September 2, 1953, when Hammock vacated the premises. Thelma then moved into the house with her two children and occupied the premises until June 29, 1956.

Raymond paid the installments on the deed of trust while he occupied the property. After January 1, 1948, Thelma made these payments and as of June 29, 1956, had made payments totalling $2,835.60.

On some date not here important Raymond deeded his interest in the property to one Gordon Hicks, a step-son, and Raymond's interest remained in Hicks until the property was sold pursuant to court order. Raymond purchased the property at the public sale for $6,200, less his one-half interest.

In the accounting the trial court charged Thelma with rent at $50 per month from January 1, 1948, to September 1, 1953, a total of $3,400, while Hammock was in possession, and also rent at $50 a month from September 1, 1953, to June 29, 1956, a total of $1,696.67, the period that Thelma occupied the premises. These two items are challenged by Thelma on this appeal.

[2, 3] It is the general rule that each tenant in common has a right to occupy the common property, and, generally speaking, one such tenant cannot recover rent from the other tenant. McWhorter v. McWhorter, 99 Cal.App. 293, 278 P. 454; Nevarov v. Nevarov, 117 Cal.App.2d 581, 256 P.2d 330. But this rule does not apply where one cotenant wrongfully ousts the other and prevents him from enjoying joint possession. In such event, the wrongfully ousted cotenant may recover the damages resulting from the ouster, which ordinarily are his share of the value of the use and occupation of the land during the period of the ouster. Zaslow v. Kroenert, 29 Cal. 2d 541, 176 P.2d 1.

In the present case there is evidence that Raymond was wrongfully ousted from the premises on January 1, 1948, when Hammock took possession and Raymond's possessions were moved out of the house and Raymond was denied permission to enter. Hammock remained in possession until September 2, 1953. Then Thelma moved in and occupied the premises until June 29, 1956. But there is no evidence that Raymond was denied entry after Thelma had taken possession. Defendant testified that Raymond never demanded possession of the property from her.

Moreover, it appears in the record that in October of 1949 an action was filed against Raymond by Thelma in the Municipal Court of San Francisco to recover doctors' bills incurred by her for one of their children. In a verified answer Raymond averred that the parties own the property in question "and that in order to provide for the support of said minor child this defendant has allowed the mother of said child to collect all of the rents from said community property to be used as and for the support of said minor child." If these allegations are binding on Raymond, a point not passed on by the trial court in the instant case, it would appear that at the time they were made (October of 1949) the occupation of Thelma through Hammock was permissive. If such is the true fact, Raymond is entitled to no damages from the time such agreement was made, because the possession would then be permissive and there is no evidence of any subsequent ouster.

In view of the fact that the judgment must be reversed something should be said about the measure of damages. A wrongfully ousted cotenant is allowed to recover damages equal to his share of the value of the use or of the rental value during the period of the ouster. During both the periods here involved, assuming there was an ouster, recovery would be limited to Raymond's share of the rental value, that is, to one-half of the rents, not all of the rents.

[4] The judgment must be reversed because, while there is sufficient evidence to show a wrongful ouster of Raymond on January 1, 1948, there is insufficient evidence to show that the ouster was permanent or for how long it was effective. This is particularly true because of the allegations of Raymond in the Municipal Court action to the effect that since October, 1949, the occupancy of Thelma and her collection of rents have been permissive. The case must be remanded to the trial court for a determination of whether the ouster of January 1, 1948, was temporary or permanent, and, if temporary, when it terminated. The damages to Raymond caused by the ouster should be recomputed accordingly and in accordance with the views herein expressed.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

Civ. 22983.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Oct. 14, 1958.

Action to revoke probate of will on ground of alleged lack of testamentary capacity and undue influence. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Harold W. Schweitzer, J., entered summary judgment adverse to contestants who appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Patrosso, J. pro tem., held that contestants' affidavits, on motion for summary judgment, alleging that testatrix grieved over death of husband and felt that she was unable to handle her own affairs, were insufficient to raise triable issue as to testamentary capacity, and even assuming a confidential relationship existed between one of the legatees and testatrix, in absence of showing participation in procuring execution of will, there was no proof of undue influence.

1. Wills Ⓒ55(1), 166(1)

Fact that testatrix grieved over the loss of her husband and allegedly told persons that she was unable to handle her own affairs and needed someone to prepare income tax returns for her, was insufficient to show lack of testamentary capacity, or that she executed will as result of the undue influence exerted upon her by any particular legatee or other person.

2. Wills Ⓒ427

Admission of will establishes prima facie for all purposes of contest that it was duly executed in the manner required by law by testator who was competent, free from undue influence, etc., and burden in contest to revoke probate of will is on contestants to establish its invalidity

3. Wills Ⓒ52(1)

Where contest is brought to revoke probate of will it is only when contestant has established prima facie case of absence of testamentary capacity that proponent of will has burden of meeting it.

4. Wills Ⓒ52(1)

Testamentary capacity is always presumed to exist until contrary is established and ultimate question is what was testator's actual mental state at time of testamentary act and not what it may have been.

5. Wills Ⓒ50

Testator has sufficient testamentary capacity if at the time he understands nature of act, nature and situation of his property and his relation to those having claims upon his bounty.

6. Wills Ⓒ55(1, 3)

Mere proof of mental derangement or even of insanity in a medical sense is not sufficient to invalidate a will but contestant is required to go further and prove either such complete mental degeneration as denotes utter incapacity to know and understand those things which the law prescribes essential to making of will, or the existence of a specific insane delusion which affected making of will in question.

7. Judgment ⇨185.3(1)

In contest to revoke probate of will, contestants' affidavits, opposing motion for summary judgment, which alleged that testatrix mourned loss of husband and claimed she was incapable of handling her own affairs which were in fact taken care of by one of the devisees under will, were insufficient to raise a triable issue as to lack of testamentary capacity or undue influence.

8. Wills ⇨50

Ability to transact business is not legal standard of testamentary capacity.

9. Wills ⇨166(7)

Mere proof of opportunity to influence testator's mind, even coupled with an interest or motive to do so will not sustain finding of undue influence in absence of testimony showing that there was pressure operating directly on the testamentary act.

10. Wills ⇨163(2)

Even assuming that fact that devisee had, by reason of handling testatrix' business affairs, established a confidential relationship between herself and testatrix, no presumption of undue influence arose therefrom in absence of proof that such person actually participated in procuring execution of will.

11. Judgment ⇨185.2(6)

On motion for summary judgment, affidavits of moving party are to be strictly construed and those of party opposing motion are to be liberally construed.

12. Judgment ⇨185.3(1)

Where action was brought to revoke probate of will and defendants moved for summary judgment, since contestants' affidavits contained no facts showing existence of cause of action and affidavits in support of motion stated facts which if proved would support judgment in favor of defendants, judgment granting defendants' motion was proper.

13. Appeal and Error ⇨129

Order denying motion to strike affidavits in support of motion for summary judgment and order granting motion for summary judgment are not appealable.

Gladys Towles Root and Eugene V. McPherson, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Harold E. Allport, Jr., Hollywood, Scudder & Forde, Pacific Palisades, Tanner, Odell & Taft, A. G. Ritter, Los Angeles, for respondents.

PATROSSO, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a summary judgment dismissing a petition for the revocation of the probate of the will of the above named decedent.

The testatrix Estelle Christine Goddard died on September 29, 1956, at the age of 60 years, leaving surviving as her sole heirs, Catherine Shafor, a cousin, and Anna Goddard, the mother of the testatrix's predeceased husband.<sup>1</sup> An holographic will executed by the testatrix on March 22, 1948, was duly admitted to probate on October 29, 1956. Thereafter a petition to revoke probate thereof was filed by said Catherine Shafor and Anna Goddard who will hereinafter be referred to as contestants or appellants. The petition for revocation alleged five grounds of contest: (1) lack of testamentary capacity; (2) want of due execution; (3) undue influence alleged to have been exercised by Martha L. Hilands, the executrix and residuary legatee under the will; (4) fraud upon the part of said Martha L. Hilands and (5) that the will had been revoked by the testatrix prior to her death.

1. We assume, although there is no evidence to this effect, that Anna Goddard was an heir by virtue of either section 228 or 229 of the Probate Code, as no claim to the contrary is made by the respondents.

Answers to the contest were filed by the executrix and the other legatees under the will wherein they denied each and all of the allegations thereof.

Following the filing of the answers the respondents served and filed a notice of motion for summary judgment pursuant to the provisions of section 437c of the Code of Civil Procedure supported by two affidavits, one by the executrix and the other by H. E. Allport, her attorney, who had also been the attorney for the testatrix during her lifetime. In opposition to this motion, the appellants filed an affidavit of Grace Lighty, the sister of the testatrix's predeceased husband. At the hearing of the motion for summary judgment it was stipulated that the deposition of Dr. Francis M. Smith, Alta Davidson and H. E. Allport, Sr., might be considered as affidavits on behalf of the moving parties and that the deposition of the appellant Anna Goddard might be considered as a counteraffidavit on behalf of the appellants.

By the affidavits and depositions upon behalf of the respondents it was made to appear (1) that at the time of the execution of the will the testatrix was of sound mind and possessed testamentary capacity; (2) that the will was entirely written, dated and signed in the handwriting of the testatrix and was found among her effects after her death, in an envelope addressed to her attorney; (3) that the respondent Martha L. Hilands never discussed with the testatrix the making of the will; that she never suggested to the testatrix that she make a will nor did she induce or persuade her to do so; that she never knew that the testatrix had executed a will until after it was executed and did not learn of the contents thereof until after the testatrix's death; (4) that the respondent Martha L. Hilands never made any representations to the testatrix with respect to the execution of the will and never conversed with the testatrix or advised her with respect to the disposition of her estate nor did she make any suggestions or representations with respect to the manner of the disposition thereof; and (5) that an examination of the testatrix's papers and personal effects failed to disclose the existence of any will other than the one admitted to probate except a prior will dated March 10, 1942, and likewise failed to disclose any writing, codicil or other instrument revoking or purporting to revoke the will so admitted to probate.

Directing our attention to the showing made by appellants in opposition to the motion for summary judgment by the affidavit of Grace Lighty and the deposition of Anna Goddard, we fail to find therein a single word of testimony to the effect that the will was not entirely written, dated and signed in the handwriting of the testatrix or that there was in existence any later will or other document revoking the same or that the respondent Martha L. Hilands made any false representations to the testatrix in order to induce her to execute a will in her favor. Indeed, in the briefs in this court, appellants make no pretense that there was any showing of any such facts. Appellants' only claim is that the affidavit of Grace Lighty and the deposition of Anna Goddard contain statements of fact which if admitted to be true, as they must on the hearing of a motion for summary judgment, are sufficient to establish the existence of a triable issue as to testamentary capacity and undue influence.

In support of this contention they refer to the following statements in the affidavit of Grace Lighty: Subsequent to the death of her husband the testatrix would call Mrs. Lighty on the telephone and "cry bitterly" and when said affiant visited the testatrix the latter "appeared to be totally incapable of doing anything for herself;" that the respondent Martha L. Hilands "was constantly in touch with the" testatrix, "handling her business affairs, and in fact on one occasion your affiant received a call from Martha Hilands wherein Martha Hilands informed your affiant that she, Martha Hilands, was preparing the income tax returns for the deceased Estelle Christine Goddard because Estelle Christine Goddard could not do that herself; that around March of 1948, at the time your affiant had this conversation with Martha Hilands, your affiant called the deceased Estelle Christine Goddard back on the telephone and the telephone was answered by Martha Hilands. At that time Martha Hilands informed your affiant that your affiant could not speak to Mrs. Goddard because she, Martha Hilands, was handling Estelle Christine Goddard's affairs. That your affiant well and truly believes and is of the opinion that during the year 1948 Estelle Christine Goddard could not and did not handle any of her affairs, nor was she able at that time to make a Will uninfluenced by others."

With respect to the deposition of the appellant Anna Goddard, the testimony therein upon which appellants rely is to the effect that the testatrix was "Very, very nervous. She had to have everything done by someone. She couldn't do a thing alone. So, I think she was persuaded. * * * [S]he couldn't do anything for herself. * * * When she made out that will, yes, there was something wrong, absolutely. * * * I think she was very nervous and she cried most of the time, especially after my son [testatrix's husband] died, and I don't think she was really of a sound mind sometimes because I seen her, I would talk to her over the phone, and she would cry and cry. So, I know that she really wasn't herself. She couldn't have been because it is so unjust to leave that to that one girl [Martha Hilands]. Very unjust."

[1] We fail to find in the foregoing any fact or facts which if testified to upon the trial would tend to establish that the testatrix did not possess testamentary capacity when executing her will or that the same was executed as the result of undue influence exerted upon her by the respondent Martha Hilands or any other person.

[2-4] It is to be remembered that this is a contest after probate and that the admission of the will to probate "'established prima facie for all the purposes of the contest, that it was duly executed in the manner required by law by a testator who was competent, free from undue influence, etc. The burden of proof was on the contestants to establish its invalidity.' In re Estate of Baird, 176 Cal. 381, 384, 168 P. 561. It is only when the contestant has established a prima facie case of the absence of testamentary capacity that the proponent of the will has the burden of meeting it. Testamentary capacity is always presumed to exist until the contrary is established, and the ultimate question is what was actually the testator's mental state at the time of the testamentary act, and not what it may have been." In re Estate of Russell, 1947, 80 Cal.App.2d 711, 714, 715, 182 P.2d 318, 321.

[5] The test of the testamentary capacity has so frequently been stated by the decisions in this State that it seems hardly necessary to repeat it here. A testator has sufficient testamentary capacity if at the time he understands the nature of the act, the nature and situation of his property and his relations to those having claims upon his bounty. In re Estate of Arnold, 1940, 16 Cal.2d 573, 586, 107 P.2d 25.

[6] As has likewise frequently been said: "It is well settled that mere proof of mental derangement or even of insanity in a medical sense is not sufficient to invalidate a will, but the contestant is required to go further and prove either such a complete mental degeneration as denotes utter incapacity to know and understand those things which the law prescribes as essential to the making of a will, or the existence of a specific insane delusion which affected the making of the will in question. In re Estate of Shay, 196 Cal. 355, 359, 237 P. 1079; In re Estate of Russell, 189 Cal. 759, 769, 210 P. 249." In re Estate of Arnold, supra, 16 Cal.2d 573, 585-586, 107 P.2d 25, 32.

[7,8] Where in the showing made by the appellants is there to be found anything even suggesting that the testatrix was mentally deranged or that she was laboring under an insane delusion when she executed her will? The mere fact that she grieved over the loss of her husband certainly does not constitute proof of mental derangement. The only other evidence to which the appellants point as constituting proof of lack of testamentary capacity is the affiant's belief or opinion, unsupported by any reason or specific fact, that the testatrix was unable to handle her own affairs and that she required the services of someone to prepare her income tax returns. However, as our courts have frequently had occasion to point out, the ability to transact business is not the legal standard of testamentary capacity. In re Estate of Sexton, 1926, 199 Cal. 759, 768, 251 P. 778; In re Estate of Powers, 1947, 81 Cal. App.2d 480, 483, 184 P.2d 319; In re Estate of Arnold, supra, 16 Cal.2d at page 586, 107 P.2d at page 32.

Liberalistically construed, the affidavits on behalf of the appellants fail to reveal any fact or facts from which it could be inferred that the testatrix, when executing her will, did not understand the nature of her act or that she was not cognizant of the nature and situation of her property or her relation to those having claims upon her bounty. Construing the statements in the affidavits on behalf of the appellants that the testatrix did not appear to be herself and that she was unable to handle her affairs as constituting expressions of opinion that testatrix was of unsound mind, they are wholly insufficient to establish that fact. As said in the In re Estate of Collins, 1917, 174 Cal. 663, 670, 164 P. 1110, 1113: "When, as in this case the opinions as to unsoundness of mind including those of the intimate acquaintances, are based on facts which show neither morbid delusion nor total mental incapacity, * * * the evidence is wholly insufficient to establish the fact."

In re Estate of McGuirk, 1920, 50 Cal. App. 352, 355, 195 P. 279, 280, it is said: "Nevertheless, and assuming further that his conduct justified the inference that his mental faculties were impaired and weakened to an extent which warranted the conclusion, as stated by witnesses, that he was of unsound mind, there is nothing in the evidence which tends, either directly or inferentially, to prove that his testamentary act was in the slightest degree influenced or affected by the condition of mind which prompted him to say and do things upon which the witnesses based their opinion."

If further support is needed for our conclusion that the showing made by the appellants entirely fails to establish testamentary incapacity, reference may be had to the following cases in each of which it was held that evidence much stronger than that here presented was insufficient as a matter of law to establish this fact: In re Estate of Kendrick, 1900, 130 Cal. 360, 363, 62 P. 605; In re Estate of Chevalier, 1911, 159 Cal. 161, 113 P. 130; In re Estate of Purcell, 1912, 164 Cal. 300, 305, 128 P. 932; In re Estate of Casarotti, 1920, 184 Cal. 73, 192 P. 1085; In re Estate of Perkins, 1925, 195 Cal. 699, 235 P. 45; In re Estate of Finkler, 1935, 3 Cal.2d 584, 46 P.2d 149; In re Estate of Garvey, 1940, 38 Cal.App.2d 449, 101 P.2d 551; In re Estate of Arnold, supra, 16 Cal.2d 573, 582, 107 P.2d 25; In re Estate of Powers, supra, 1947, 81 Cal.App.2d 480, 184 P.2d 319.

[9, 10] With respect to the issue of undue influence little need be said. Assuming that the appellants' proof establishes that Martha Hilands had the opportunity and the motive of exercising undue influence upon the testatrix, this does not serve to establish that such influence was in fact exerted. "Mere proof of opportunity to influence a testator's mind, even when coupled with an interest or motive to do so, will not sustain a finding of undue influence, in the absence of testimony showing that there was pressure operating directly on the testamentary act." In re Estate of Kilborn, 1912, 162 Cal. 4, 11, 120 P. 762, 765. Assuming further for the purpose of this discussion that proof that Martha Hilands handled the testatrix's business affairs established that a confidential relationship existed between herself and the testatrix, no presumption of undue in-

[11] While it is true, as appellants contend that upon a motion for summary judgment the affidavits of the moving party are to be strictly construed and those of the party opposing the motion are to be liberally construed (Gibson v. De La Salle Institute, 1944, 66 Cal.App.2d 609, 618, 152 P.2d 774), it was incumbent upon the appellants to establish by factual affidavits that the charges made in their petition to revoke the probate of the will "raised a real issue, something more than 'the product of adept pleading.'" Schessler v. Keck, 1956, 138 Cal.App.2d 663, 668, 292 P.2d 314, 317.

[12] Appellants, in order to defeat respondents' motion for a summary judgment, were required to present an affidavit or affidavits setting forth evidentiary facts sufficient, if accepted as true, to justify setting aside the probate of the will. Since the appellants' affidavits contain no facts showing the existence of a cause of action in appellants, and the affidavits in support of the motion state facts which, if proved, would support a judgment in favor of the moving parties, the judgment granting respondents' motion was proper. Maltby v. Shook, 1955, 131 Cal.App.2d 349, 355, 280 P.2d 541; Hardy v. Hardy, 1943, 23 Cal. 2d 244, 248, 143 P.2d 701; Terrell v. Local Lodge 758, etc., Machinists, 1957, 150 Cal.App.2d 24, 28, 309 P.2d 130.

[13] The judgment is affirmed. The attempted appeals from the order denying appellants' motion to strike respondents' affidavits in support of the motion for summary judgment and from the order granting the motion for summary judgment are dismissed as said orders are not appealable.

ELK RIVER MILL AND LUMBER COMPANY, a corporation, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

GEORGIA-PACIFIC CORPORATION, a corporation, Hammond-California Redwood Company, a corporation, and Hammond Lumber Company, a corporation, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 9444.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Oct. 21, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 19, 1958.

Action for a declaration that a logging contract entered into between the parties had been terminated and rescinded, to quiet title, and to enjoin the defendants from removing and cutting timber on the lands and to recover damages for timber cut and removed. Judgment for the respondents in the Superior Court, Humboldt County, William G. Watson, J., and the plaintiff appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Warne, J. pro tem., held that the evidence sustained the finding that the logging contract had not been assigned in violation of the contract; that the defendant had the right to subcontract the logging operations; and that plaintiff was not entitled to rescind by reason of assignment and transfer of the defendant's assets and its dissolution.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨996, 1008(1)

Where some of the evidence was oral and some written and much of it bore in some degree on intent and meaning of the contractual agreement, the trial court's inferences and conclusions of fact were decisive on appeal.

2. Declaratory Judgment ⇨347

In an action for a declaration that a logging contract had been terminated and to enjoin the further removal of timber from the lands involved, evidence sustained the finding that defendant had not violated the covenant against assignment of the contract.

3. Logs and Logging ⇨8(1)

Under a contract for the logging of a tract of land providing that the contract should not be assigned or transferred without written consent but authorizing the defendant to contract with other persons for any portion of the work undertaken to be performed by the defendant, defendant had the right to subcontract the logging operations.

4. Corporations ⇨691

Under a contract for the logging of a tract of land and containing a covenant against assignment, assignment and transfer of all of Delaware corporate defendant's assets and its dissolution did not entitle the plaintiff to rescind the contract, since under Delaware law the defendant, in filing a notice of dissolution, remained in existence in order to gradually close and settle its affairs for a term of three years from such dissolution. 8 Del.C. § 278.

5. Corporations ⇨691

Under a contract to log a tract of land, defendant, a Delaware corporation, by subcontracting the logging and selling logs was not "continuing the business" for which it was established in violation of the Delaware statute after filing notice of dissolution where the defendant was merely doing precisely what the statute authorized, which was the closing of its business and the disposing of its remaining assets, including the timber on the property. 8 Del.C. § 278.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Continuing the Business".

6. Logs and Logging ⇨3(7)

A contract for the logging of a tract of land indicating a sale to the defendant of all standing and down timber was construable as the sale of timber and not a license to cut, especially where defendant paid plaintiff a substantial sum for all its timber and was required by the contract to pay all taxes on the timber, and hence under the statute the defendant was authorized to dispose of and convey the property. 8 Del.C. § 278.

7. Corporations ⇨691

Under a contract of a Delaware corporation for the purchase of all timber on a tract of land, even if corporation had no more than an executory contract authorizing it to harvest the timber and had filed a notice of motion to dissolve, plaintiff could be still compelled to perform its agreement, since the right to such performance passed on dissolution of the corporation to the shareholders who were entitled to enforce that right. 8 Del.C. § 278.

8. Logs and Logging ⇨3(1)

A contract for the sale of timber on a tract of land was not invalid for want of consideration where by the contract the plaintiff was entitled to money for the timber and to good logging and the plaintiff had been paid in full for all timber removed up to a certain date and the defendant had tendered payment in full and in advance for all timber remaining on the property.

WARNE, Justice pro tem.

Appellant, Elk River Mill and Lumber Company, a corporation hereinafter called "Elk River", brought this action against Hammond Lumber Company, a corporation, hereinafter called "Hammond", Hammond-California Redwood Company, a corporation, hereinafter called "Redwood", and Georgia-Pacific Corporation, a corporation, hereinafter called "Georgia-Pacific", for a judicial declaration that a logging contract entered into between Elk River and Hammond for the logging of the timber on Elk River lands by Hammond had been terminated and rescinded; to quiet title to certain Elk River lands and to the standing and down timber thereon; to enjoin Hammond and Redwood from further cutting and removing timber on or from the Elk River lands; and to recover damages for timber cut and removed by said respondents subsequent to the alleged rescission and termination of the contract. The case was tried by the court sitting without a jury and judgment was entered in favor of the respondents. This appeal followed.

In 1948, appellant, Elk River, and Hammond entered into a contract for the purchase and sale of all standing and down timber on certain Humboldt County property owned by Elk River. Hammond made an advance payment of $500,000. The purchase price to be paid by Hammond for said timber was to be determined by quantity cut and removed from the said real property at the rate of $7.50 per thousand board feet and if the logging was not completed by December 31, 1959, the remaining timber was, at the option of Elk River to be cruised and paid for at the agreed price of $7.50 per thousand, and Hammond was to have until December 31, 1961, to complete the logging. Hammond was required to pay all the taxes on the timber from and after March of 1957. If the $500,000 advance payment more than paid for the timber, Elk River was to make an appropriate refund to Hammond. Section 13 of the contract provided that neither party could assign or transfer its interest in the contract without the consent in writing of the other party but "this provision shall not be construed to prevent Hammond from entering into contracts with other persons for any portion of the work undertaken to be performed hereunder by Hammond."

From October, 1948, to October, 1956, the property was logged by Hammond in accordance with good logging practice and to the satisfaction of Elk River. During this period Hammond subcontracted a large part of the trucking. During the same period Hammond invested $15,000 in surveying and $100,000 in building roads on the Elk River property and removed about 90 million board feet of timber. At the time this controversy developed, approximately 39 million board feet were yet to be logged.

By an agreement dated May 23, 1956, Georgia-Pacific obtained the right to buy all the stock of Hammond. Tax and financial problems made it difficult for Georgia-Pacific to complete the stock purchase, and Georgia-Pacific made an alternative proposal: It agreed to buy the Hammond assets for $79,508,800 (that being the agreed price of all stock), provided, however, that part of the purchase price was to be paid in debentures rather than cash. The asset purchase agreement was dated September 24, 1956, and it provided that the transaction should close on October 22, 1956.

Promptly after the Georgia-Pacific-Hammond stock purchase proposal became enforceable and the transaction was revised to take the form of an asset purchase, Elk River was requested to consent to an assignment of the 1948 timber sale agreement to Georgia-Pacific or to its wholly owned subsidiary, Redwood. Elk River refused to consent to such assignment.

Elk River's refusal to permit an assignment of the 1948 timber contract forced a change in the asset purchase plan between Hammond and Georgia-Pacific. Consequently, the liquidation plan whereby Hammond was to have disposed of all its assets to Georgia-Pacific was modified to exclude the sale of Hammond's interest in the 1948 timber contract and it was agreed that Hammond would enter into a subcontract with Hammond-California, a Georgia-Pacific subsidiary, whereby Hammond-California, for an agreed consideration, would log the Elk River property and deliver the logs to Hammond at Eureka, California, and that Hammond would then sell the logs to Hammond-California, at cost, the cost to include logging expense, stumpage payments to Elk River, and any other expense incurred by Hammond. The contract then provided that the work should be performed strictly in accordance with the Elk River agreement, and specifically provided that no assignment of Hammond's rights under the Elk River agreement was contemplated.

The sale by Hammond to Georgia-Pacific was consummated on October 22, 1956, and thereupon Hammond, a Delaware corporation, filed a notice of dissolution with the Secretary of State of the State of Delaware. The trial court found: That Hammond has retained its interest in the timber on the Elk River property and the Hammond liquidation program has been modified accordingly; that the activities of Hammond since October 23, 1956, have been its own activities undertaken on its own account and for its own purposes; that those activities have not been the activities of Georgia-Pacific or Hammond-California taken in the name of Hammond Lumber Company; that there has been no assignment by Hammond of the timber sales agreement of October 22, 1948; that the logging contract and the log sales agreement are not, either in form or in substance or in effect, an assignment of the October 22, 1948, contract; that they are not the equivalent of such an assignment; that the transactions evidenced by the logging contract and the log sales agreement were the bona fide transactions entered into by the parties for legitimate business purposes and supported by legitimate business considerations; that it was not a sham transaction or a device to evade the provisions of paragraph 13 of the timber sales agreement of October 22, 1948; that Hammond did not transfer the burden of its obligations under the terms of the Elk River-Hammond contract and that Hammond remains obligated to perform said contract; that subsequent to October 23, 1956, Hammond distributed all its assets to its stockholders, except the timber on the Elk River property, certain cash and the benefit of certain contractual obligations of Georgia-Pacific and Hammond-California. The court further found that the logging operations of Hammond-California on the Elk River property are being conducted by the same methods as when Hammond did the logging and those operations are being supervised by the same foreman and the same logging superintendent who were in charge for Hammond; that the ultimate responsibility for those operations rests with Earl B. Birmingham, president of Hammond-California, who is and for several years has been president of Hammond; that by the provisions of the asset purchase agreement of September 24, 1956, Georgia-Pacific and Hammond-California have guaranteed the performance by Hammond of the timber sales agreement of October 22, 1948; that as of December 31, 1956, the net worth of Hammond-California was approximately $13,500,000 and the net worth of Georgia-Pacific (excluding Hammond-California from consideration) was approximately $47,800,000; that Hammond has tendered to Elk River prompt payment for all timber removed from the Elk River property since October 22, 1956, at the contract stumpage rate of $7.50 per thousand; that Hammond has tendered to Elk River its certified check in the amount of $292,500 to pay in full (at the contract stumpage rate of $7.50 per thousand) for the 39 million feet of timber estimated to remain on the Elk River property; that Elk River has not proved that Hammond will be unable to perform its remaining obligations under the Elk River-Hammond timber sales agreement, and, further, that Elk River has failed to prove that it has been or will be in any way damaged or prejudiced by the transactions of which it complains; that all actions taken by the defendants in connection with the transactions to which this case relates have been taken in good faith and under claim of right; and that Hammond has fully performed all of its obligations under the timber sales agreement of October 22, 1948, and that there has been no breach by Hammond of that agreement.

[1,2] Elk River contends and argues that Hammond has, in substance and effect, assigned the 1948 contract in violation of paragraph 13 of the 1948 timber contract. As heretofore stated, the trial court found that Hammond had not violated the covenant against assignment and we feel that, in this, the record amply sustains the trial court. The findings show on their face that they are based not only on documents but upon all of the surrounding circumstances. Some of the evidence is oral, some is written and much of it bears in some degree on the intent and meaning of the contractual agreement of which Elk River complains. Under such circumstances the trial court's inferences and conclusions of fact are decisive on appeal. As stated in Re Estate of Rule, 25 Cal.2d 1, at page 11, 152 P.2d 1003, at page 1008, 155 A.L.R. 1319:

"The rule is that an 'appellate court will accept or adhere to the interpretation [of a contract] adopted by the trial court—and not substitute another of its own—* * * where parol evidence was introduced in aid of its interpretation, and such evidence * * * is such that conflicting inferences may be drawn therefrom.' (4 Cal.Jur. 10-Yr. Supp. (1943 rev.) 146-147, § 192; see also 2 Cal.Jur. 934-939, § 549.)"

And here, as in that case, "certainly inferences may be drawn from the contract and the surrounding circumstances * * * which would support the finding which we must presume was made by the trial court relative to the intention of the contracting parties."

[3] In a material way the Hammond-Elk River timber contract and the facts of this case are similar to the facts and the contract ruled upon by this court in Ascherman v. McKee, 143 Cal.App.2d 277-283, 299 P.2d 367, 368. In that case Mrs. Ascherman in 1951 entered into a contract with the McKees "for the purchase and sale of the right to cut and remove, on or before July 31, 1956, all fir and pine timber" on the Ascherman property. The purchase price was $20,000, payable $5,000 down and the balance at the rate of $5 per thousand for the timber removed. "There was a covenant against the assignment of the contract or the assignment of any right to remove timber thereunder without Mrs. Ascherman's written consent." The McKees logged for two weeks and then arranged for Stoll to do the logging. Stoll agreed to pay the McKees $7 per thousand for all timber removed. Stoll set about logging the property and the McKees continued paying the Aschermans until the total purchase price of $20,000 had been paid. Mrs. Ascherman then sought to terminate the contract for breach of various covenants, including the covenant against assignment. The trial court concluded that there had been no assignment. This court agreed that the trial court was correct in so concluding. Here, as in that case, the contract entered into between Hammond and Redwood did not purport to be an assignment of the Elk River 1948 timber contract nor of any rights thereunder. On the contrary, it purported to be a contract with Redwood for the logging of timber which Hammond was in the process of paying for. There is nothing in the Elk River contract which prevented Hammond from subcontracting the logging. As heretofore stated paragraph 13 provides: "It is expressly understood and agreed that this contract shall not be assigned or transferred by either party hereto without the consent in writing of the other, but this provision shall not be construed to prevent Hammond from entering into contracts with other persons for any portion of the work undertaken to be performed hereunder by Hammond." In view of this provision in the contract, it may not be said that Hammond did not have the right to subcontract the logging operations. To say otherwise would be contrary to the clear intent and purpose of the paragraph. Here, as in the Ascherman-McKee contract, there was nothing in the Elk River contract which forbade Hammond from selling the timber they were purchasing from Elk River. The fact that Redwood was to deliver the logs to Hammond at Eureka where Hammond, in turn, was then to resell them to Redwood is of no concern to appellant. This was a sale and not an assignment. Elk River acknowledges that here, as in the Ascherman case, the logging subcontract is not identical with the timber purchase agreement. For one thing, Hammond-California must complete the logging by December 31, 1958, rather than December 31, 1961. Apparently the reason for the difference in the time of completion of the logging operations was that if Redwood does not finish the work by December 31, 1958, Hammond will have until October 23, 1959, to complete the logging with its own employees. Elk River points out that in the Ascherman case the McKees had not disposed of their assets. The Hammond sale to Georgia-Pacific makes no difference. Here, Hammond has tendered to Elk River the estimated amount for all timber remaining to be cut or logged upon the Elk River property. Moreover, as matters now stand, Elk River can look not only to Hammond and its stockholders for performance of the 1948 agreement but also to Georgia-Pacific with a net worth of $47,800,000 and Hammond-California with a net worth of $13,500,000, for each has agreed with Hammond to discharge whatever obligations Hammond may have to Elk River.

We do not consider it necessary to distinguish the many cases cited by appellant on the subject matter, since we feel that the ruling in the Ascherman case is decisive here. If there was no assignment in the Ascherman case there was none here. Hammond did not seek to substitute another in its place.

[4] Nor do we believe that there is merit in appellant's contention that by reason of the assignment and transfer of all Hammond's assets and its dissolution Elk River had the right to rescind. The fact that Hammond has filed a notice of dissolution with the Delaware Secretary of State does not mean that the corporation no longer exists. Under section 278 of the Corporation Law of Delaware, 8 Del.C. Ann., Hammond remains in existence in order to gradually close and settle its affairs for the term of three years from such expiration or dissolution. The section, in part, provides: "All corporations, whether they expire by their own limitations or are otherwise dissolved, shall nevertheless be continued, for the term of three years from such expiration or dissolution, bodies corporate for the purpose of prosecuting and defending suits by or against them, and of enabling them gradually to settle and close their business, to dispose of and convey their property, and to divide their capital stock, but not for the purpose of continuing the business for which the corporation shall have been established." Under this provision Hammond will remain in existence until October 23, 1959, for all purposes mentioned in the statute.

Elk River contends that the notice of dissolution terminated the 1948 timber contract and forfeited the timber to Elk River. Such is not the case. In Addy v. Short, 1952, 8 Terry 157, 47 Del. 157, 89 A.2d 136, 139, the Supreme Court of Delaware rejected the position for which Elk River contends. In holding that a dissolved corporation could maintain an action of ejectment to force a right of reverter the Delaware court pointed out that the purpose of section 278 is to make certain that upon dissolution a corporation shall not forfeit its rights. The court said:

"The section above quoted is in effect a statutory expansion of the equitable doctrine that upon dissolution of a corporation its property, notwithstanding the technical rules of the early common law, does not escheat to the sovereign or revert to the original grantor, and will be administered in Chancery for the purpose of winding up the corporate affairs and distributing the assets to those equitably entitled to them. Cf. Diamond State Iron Co. v. Husbands, 8 Del.Ch. 205, 68 A. 240; Washington Fire Co. etc. v. Yates, 13 Del.Ch. 32, 115 A. 365. During the three-year period of winding up, the corporation functions exactly as it had functioned before dissolution, with the important qualification that its powers are limited to closing its affairs and do not extend to carrying on the business for which it was established. But as concerns the property it had at the time of dissolution, its title and possession are unimpaired. Whatever rights it had, of whatever nature, are preserved in full vigor during the three-year period. Any other conclusion would contravene the plain language of the statute. The suggestion that the act of dissolution in itself in some fashion works a forfeiture or extinguishment of a legal right, by analogy to the death of an individual, is therefore on the face of the statute unsound."

To the same effect see Harned v. Beacon Hill Real Estate Co., 1911, 9 Del.Ch. 232, 80 A. 805; Id., 1912, 9 Del. 411, 84 A. 229, 235; Townsend v. Delaware Co., 1918, 12 Del.Ch. 25, 103 A. 576. Addy v. Short, supra, is recognized as an authoritative statement of the Delaware law. See United States v. P. F. Collier & Son Corp., 7 Cir., 208 F.2d 936, 940, 40 A.L.R.2d 1389; United States v. Maryland State Licensed Beverage Ass'n, D.C., 138 F.Supp. 685, 708; Christian v. Texas Gas & Power Corp., D.C.Tex.1952, 14 F.R.D. 80, 81; Stensvad v. Ottman, 123 Mont. 158, 208 P. 2d 507; Big Sespe Oil Co. v. Cochran, 9 Cir., 276 F. 216, 223.

[5] Elk River argues that by subcontracting the logging and selling the logs Hammond is "continuing the business" for which it was established, in violation of section 278 of the Delaware statute. This is not true. Hammond points out that until October 23, 1956, it was in the business of manufacturing and selling lumber, with four billion feet of timber, four mills and 33 retail yards. Since October 23, 1956, Hammond has not manufactured or sold any lumber or operated mills or yards. This means Hammond has not continued in business in violation of section 278 and the trial court so found. What Hammond is now doing is precisely what section 278 authorizes, that is, closing its business and disposing of its remaining assets.

[6, 7] Among those assets is the timber on the Elk River property. Elk River assumes that the timber on Elk River lands belongs to Elk River. We cannot agree with Elk River in this respect. The contract of October 22, 1948, the short form agreement, the indemnity agreement and the amendment of December 20, 1950, all speak in terms of a present sale to Hammond, i. e., "Elk River agrees to sell to Hammond and Hammond agrees to buy from Elk River all the standing and down timber" on the described property. This language purports a sale of the timber, not a license to cut; that it was intended as a sale is further borne out by the fact that upon the execution of the contract Hammond paid Elk River $500,000 and, as the contract makes plain, it was considered probable that this $500,000 would pay for all the timber. Further, Hammond, by the terms of the contract, was thereafter required to pay all taxes on the timber. We feel that this means that title passed when the agreement was signed, and became one of Hammond's assets. See Woodbine v. Van Horn, 29 Cal.2d 95, 107, 173 P.2d 17; Johnson v. Besoyan, 85 Cal. App.2d 389, 392, 193 P.2d 63; Aiello v. Sliskovich, 72 Cal.App.2d 39, 163 P.2d 768; Gianelli v. Globe Grain & Milling Co., 48 Cal.App. 103, 191 P. 720. Therefore, under the provisions of section 278 of the Delaware Corporation Law, Hammond is authorized to dispose of and convey this property. The result would be the same even if Hammond has no more than an executory contract authorizing it to harvest the timber, since under the ruling in Trubowitch v. Riverbank Canning Co., 30 Cal. 2d 335, 345, 182 P.2d 182, 188, the right to compel Elk River to perform its agreement passed on dissolution of the corporation to the shareholders who, as partners, were entitled to enforce that right. The court, in the Trubowitch case, supra, said:

"Since the assets of a dissolved corporation can only be distributed to the shareholders subject to the rights of creditors of the corporation, the assets of the corporation remained subject to an equitable charge for all debts owed by the corporation (see Civ.Code, sec. 402; In re Estate of Scrimger, 188 Cal. 158, 166, 206 P. 65; Stanford Hotel Co. v. M. Schwind Co., 180 Cal. 348, 354, 181 P. 780; 16 Fletcher, Cyc. Corporations, perm. ed., secs. 8127, 8161; Ballantine, Corporations, rev. ed., 723; see 97 A.L.R. 480), and its shareholders who continued the business as a copartnership became personally liable to the creditors of the corporation on existing contracts. National Union Bank of Watertown v. Landon, 45 N.Y. 410; Steele v. Stanley, 237 Ky. 517, 35 S.W.2d 867; 16 Fletcher, ibid., sec. 8132. Nor under modern statutes does the dissolution of the corporation terminate its ability to enforce a contract for the delivery of goods." (Emphasis added.)

[8] There is no merit in the contention that the consideration for the 1948 contract has failed. By the terms of the contract Elk River is entitled to money for the timber and to good logging. The record shows that Elk River concedes that it has been paid in full for all timber removed prior to October 22, 1956, and the record further shows that Hammond has tendered payment in full, and in advance, for all timber remaining on the property. Logging is being continued by the same methods and by the same personnel acting under the same supervision as when Hammond's employees did the work, logging then concededly satisfactory to everyone. Nor is there any merit in Elk River's contention that Hammond has repudiated the 1948 agreement. The record shows, and the court so found, that there was no repudiation of this contract.

For the reasons hereinabove stated we conclude that the judgment should be affirmed. Therefore, we consider it unnecessary to discuss the remaining points raised by this appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

County Sanitation District Number One of Los Angeles County, State of California, Defendant, Respondents,

v.

J. M. LOWERY, Defendant, Appellant.

Civ. 23084.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Oct. 14, 1958.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing

Nov. 3, 1958.

Hearing Denied Dec. 10, 1958.

Proceeding on memorandum filed by sanitation district for costs and disbursements incurred on appeal of prior mandamus proceeding. Auditor of board of directors of district moved to be relieved of personal liability on ground that his defense had been made in good faith. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, William P. Haughton, J., denied motion, and auditor appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that where party brought mandamus to compel sanitation district and auditor of board of directors of district to pay judgment against district, party obtained judgment, auditor appealed, but district did not, district averred that auditor's refusal to pay as directed by judgment had been without authority of board of directors of district, that auditor appeared in mandamus proceeding without consent and approval of board and that board was forced to incur costs by virtue of acts of auditor, denial of auditor's motion was not an abuse of discretion.

1. Costs ⇨230

Where auditor of board of directors of sanitation district, in prior proceedings, had been directed to issue warrants in favor of party who claimed interest on coupon bonds, but auditor refused to issue warrants as ordered by board pursuant to judgments, party brought mandamus against district and auditor to compel payment, district did not appeal from adverse decision, but auditor appealed and served copy of his opening and closing briefs on district, after clerk of court designated district as respondent on appeal, district was an "adverse party" on appeal under section of code designating names of parties on appeal, and district was a "prevailing party" and was entitled to costs. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 938; West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 26(a), (b) (1).

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Adverse Party" and "Prevailing Party".

2. Statutes ⇨223.4

A special statute dealing expressly with a particular subject controls and takes priority over a general statute.

3. Mandamus ⇨190

Where statute relating to matter of costs generally and statute dealing specifically with costs in mandate matters were not consistent, with respect to costs in connection with mandate proceeding, general statute was superseded by statute dealing specifically with mandate matters. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1029, 1095.

4. Mandamus ⇨190

A county sanitation district is a "municipal corporation" within statute providing that in mandate action where respondent is municipal officer all damages and costs awarded against respondent shall be recovered and awarded against municipal corporation represented by such officer and not against such officer, if officer appeared in the defense in good faith. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1095.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Municipal Corporation".

5. Municipal Corporations ⇨1039

Where statute permits sanitation district to be sued in its own name but provides for board of directors which constitutes governing body of district to carry on its affairs and direct its policies, auditor of board, who was not a member of board, had no connection with its counsel, and had no control over its litigation, had no statutory authority to appear on behalf of district and appeal from decision which was rendered against him and district and from which district did not appeal. West's Ann. Health & Safety Code, §§ 4730 et seq., 4738.

6. Mandamus ⇨190

Where party brought mandamus to compel sanitation district and auditor of board of directors of district to pay judgment against district, party obtained judgment, auditor appealed, but district did not, after adverse judgment, auditor moved to strike cross bill of sanitation district, on ground that his defense had been in good faith, counter affidavit executed by district averred that refusal to pay had been without authority of board of directors of district, that auditor appeared in mandamus proceeding without consent and approval of board and that board was forced to incur costs by virtue of acts of auditor, denial of auditor's motion to be relieved from personal liability for costs was not an abuse of discretion. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1095.

In considering an appeal from order, which was made on motion based on affidavits and which involves a determination of question of fact, if there is any conflict therein, that favoring respondent is accepted by reviewing court as true, and since all intendments are in favor of ruling of lower court, affidavit in behalf of successful party is deemed not only to establish facts directly stated therein, but all facts reasonably to be inferred from those stated.

8. Costs ⚡264

In proceeding to determine costs in connection with appeal from mandamus action brought against county auditor and county sanitation district to compel payment of valid judgment against district, which did not appeal, evidence sustained implied finding that appeal of auditor was not made in good faith. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1095.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, Los Angeles, Alfred Charles De Flon, Deputy County Counsel, Hollywood, for appellant.

No appearance for respondent George A. Mitchell.

Gordon, Knapp & Gill, Joseph C. Gill, Los Angeles, for respondent County Sanitation Dist. No. One of Los Angeles County.

LILLIE, Justice.

On the original trial of this action, a mandamus proceeding to compel the county auditor Lowery to pay a valid municipal court judgment against the county sanitation district for interest on bond coupons and entitled, "George A. Mitchell, Petitioner, v. County Sanitation District Number One of Los Angeles County, State of California, and J. M. Lowery, County Auditor of Los Angeles County, State of California, Auditor of Said Board, Defendants," judgment was rendered in favor of petitioner Mitchell, and solely against appellant J. M. Lowery, as auditor of the board of directors of the district, directing him to issue certain warrants in favor of petitioner. Lowery appealed from the judgment and served his opening brief on both Mitchell and the sanitation district. In opposition thereto they each filed separate briefs. Lowery was at all times represented by the county counsel; the sanitation district had its own counsel, as authorized by section 4739, Health and Safety Code, who represented it in all of the within litigation. The judgment was affirmed (150 Cal.App.2d 366, 309 P.2d 930), and a petition for hearing was denied by the Supreme Court. The remittitur included an award of costs on appeal to "respondents."

Pursuant thereto, Mitchell and the sanitation district filed separate memorandum for their costs and disbursements on appeal. Before the court below Lowery made two motions—to strike the cost bill of the sanitation district on the ground it was not a party to the appeal and therefore was not entitled to costs; and to be relieved of personal liability for costs in accordance with section 1095, Code of Civil Procedure. The trial court denied both motions and it is from the orders denying the same he appeals.

It is the contention of appellant, in connection with his motion to strike the sanitation district's cost bill, that the district was neither a "prevailing party" within the purview of rule 26(a), Rules on Appeal, nor an "adverse party" to the appeal under section 938, Code of Civil Procedure. He urges on his motion to be relieved of personal liability for costs that in appealing from the judgment in the mandamus action he acted in good faith in a representative capacity on behalf of the sanitation district, and that under section 1095, Code of Civil Procedure, he is entitled to relief.

At the request of appellant the record in the mandamus proceeding has been incorporated by reference into the record before this court. Therein we note, as did the reviewing court in its opinion disposing of the matter (150 Cal.App.2d 366, 309 P.2d 930), that the superior court litigation was originally made necessary by the refusal of Lowery, as auditor of the board of directors of the sanitation district, to honor a demand previously reduced to a final judgment in a municipal court action brought by Mitchell against the district. This action had its genesis in the refusal of the district, because the obligation had been outlawed by the statute of limitations, to pay interest on certain bonds issued by it and held by Mitchell who had been out of the country on maturity date. Lowery was not therein joined as a party defendant—only the sanitation district was sued. The district, through its board of directors and by resolutions, waived the defense of the statute of limitations at the request of Mitchell's attorney in open meeting, and upon being informed by its counsel that it had intentionally done so, as set forth in its answer, the municipal court granted judgment on the pleadings. Thereafter, when Mitchell, pursuant to the judgment, made demand upon Lowery for payment of the coupons from the funds of the sanitation district, he refused. Mitchell sought the writ of mandate in the superior court to compel him to pay the amount of the judgment. In that proceeding Lowery attacked the waiver of the statute of limitations in the municipal court as being beyond the scope of the sanitation district's legal powers and alleged, among other things, that the board of directors of the district had "improperly and illegally" agreed with Mitchell's attorney to waive the statute.

This court, speaking through Mr. Justice Fourt, affirmed the superior court judgment (150 Cal.App.2d 366, 309 P.2d 930) and declared that it was entirely proper under the circumstances for the district to waive the statute of limitations to permit it to honor and pay its legitimate debts, for which it had the funds available. One of Lowery's contentions on that appeal was that the power of the board to waive the statute was not determined by the municipal court after a "fair, open, adversary hearing," that Mitchell's judgment was obtained by "concert and improper agreement between Mitchell and the Board," and that a violation of the board's so-called official "trust" required a nullity of the waiver. (Appellant's Opening Brief and Closing Brief, No. 22100.)

Although in the mandamus proceeding Lowery, in his unverified counterclaim, alleged that the board of directors of the district acted "fraudulently and in collusion and concert with the plaintiff," his amended verified counterclaim eliminated the claim. However, on appeal, by way of argument, Lowery placed principal reliance for his contentions upon cases involving fraud or collusion, thereby implying the existence of such a situation. The court took cognizance of this and other claims and resolved them adversely to Lowery. It is obvious that this court, too, believed there existed an insinuation against the motives of the board, for it went to some extent to show that Mitchell's counsel presented his claim to the board in a "forthright manner," that before the meeting he had "never seen nor heard of any of the members of the board of directors, or the attorney for the District," had "never discussed the matter with any member of the board individually" and that all matters relating to the waiver were determined in "open public meeting" (150 Cal.App.2d 366, 368, 309 P.2d 930, 931); and concluded, at page 376 of 150 Cal.App.2d, at page 936 of 309 P.2d: "It is difficult to see how or in what manner the District was imposed upon in the present case."

Appellant urges here that the sanitation district itself (as opposed to its board of directors) had a common interest with, and was not a party adverse to, him in the prior appeal. We see no merit in this contention for we cannot comprehend how the district could act except through its board of directors.

We agree with the position advanced by respondent that Lowery's criticisms of the governing board's motives; the implied suggestion of "fraud or collusion"; and his attacks on the integrity and legality of the board's acts necessarily made the district an adverse party in the prior appeal; and that by refusing to draw the warrants as ordered by the board pursuant to the municipal and superior courts' judgments, from which the district did not appeal, appellant placed himself in a position adverse to the district.

The early case of Senter v. De Bernal, 1869, 38 Cal. 637, 640-641, construed the term "adverse party" found in former Practice Act, section 335 (now § 938, Code of Civil Procedure) as every party whose interest in the subject matter of an appeal is adverse to, or will be affected by, the reversal or modification of the judgment or order from which the appeal has been taken, irrespective of whether he appears upon the face of the record as plaintiff, defendant or intervenor. In the instant case the integrity of an official body and the propriety of its acts constituted one of the pivotal questions, becoming a major part of the subject matter of the previous appeal, requiring a defense on the part of the district and by necessity making it a party respondent.

Of interest at this point is his declaration in appellant's previous Notice of Appeal (No. 22100) that he appealed as an "officer" and "employee" of the district, as its auditor, "and on behalf of said County Sanitation District Number One." Since in the original mandamus proceeding the sanitation district and Lowery were named as separate defendants, and since the district did not appeal from the judgment, it is apparent that the district was willing to pay the claim. Although describing himself as an "employee" and "officer" of the district it is clear from the record that appellant in prosecuting his appeal was acting neither under the authority or direction of the board of directors of the district or its counsel, nor with their consent or approval, but was in fact acting in opposition to their authority, contrary to their direction, and in his own behalf. Lowery's Notice of Appeal certainly gave the district the right, if not the duty, to appear in the appellate proceedings and disavow any purported appeal on its behalf.

This it did, effectively defending its waiver of the statute of limitations, standing on its original determination to pay its legitimate obligations.

Additionally, the district was designated as a "respondent" in the Clerk's Transcript in appeal No. 22100, and under rule 14, Rules on Appeal, was entitled to file a brief. In re Estate of Green, 133 Cal.App. 2d 451, 452, 284 P.2d 202. Although originally the clerk may have been responsible for this, the fact that thereafter Lowery recognized and acknowledged the district as a "respondent," is borne out by his service on it of a copy of his opening brief, as well as his closing brief, in which he was silent concerning the district's appearance.

[1] Under all of the facts herein presented we believe that the sanitation district was an "adverse party" under section 938, Code of Civil Procedure. We reach the same conclusion with respect to appellant's further contention that the district was not the "prevailing party" on the prior appeal and hence not entitled to costs under rule 26, Rules on Appeal.

A "respondent" is defined by rule 26(a) as the "prevailing party" where there is a "general and unqualified affirmance"; and the rule 26(b) implements this definition by prescribing the clerk's entry of costs in the remittitur: "(1) In the case of a general and unqualified affirmance, * * * for the respondent * * *." Obedient to the mandate of that section the affirmance of the judgment being general and unqualified, the clerk of this court inserted an entry in the remittitur awarding costs to "respondents."

The Supreme Court has observed, In re McGee, 37 Cal.2d 6, at page 8, 229 P.2d 780, that a litigant may be the prevailing party in substance if not in form. In that case the court held it unjust to require the respondent to bear the costs of appeal when the position he maintained from the inception of the proceedings was eventually upheld. Such a rationale should here, too, be adopted. The district's main contention, to wit, its right to waive the statute of limitations, made necessary by Lowery's attack on the legality and propriety of its actions, eventually obtained the sanction of the reviewing court. Irrespective then of any question of the formal status of the sanitation district on the prior appeal, we believe the district should have its costs under rule 26.

We come now to Lowery's claim for relief from personal liability for costs. He contends that "public officers are not personally liable for costs when they sue, or are sued, in their representative capacities." This general rule of law has been codified in California. The pertinent language of the Code of Civil Procedure, section 1095, providing for costs to the successful applicant in a mandate action reads as follows: "If judgment be given for the applicant, he may recover the damages which he has sustained * * * together with costs; * * * provided, however, that in all cases where the respondent is a state, county or municipal officer, all damages and costs, or either, which may be recovered or awarded, shall be recovered and awarded against the state, county or municipal corporation represented by such officer and not against such officer so appearing in said proceeding * * * but in all such cases, the court shall first determine that the officer appeared and made defense in such proceeding in good faith."

Lowery questions (1) whether as auditor of the sanitation district he was an officer of a "municipal corporation" within the meaning of section 1095, and if not whether the only statute then applicable would be section 1029, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides: "When any county, city, district, or other public agency or entity, or any officer thereof in his official capacity, is a party, costs shall be awarded against it on the same basis as against any other party and, when awarded, must be paid out of the treasury thereof;" and (2) if section 1095 rather than 1029 is applicable, whether the trial court abused its discretion in failing to find that he acted in good faith.

[2, 3] Section 1029 relates to the matter of costs generally, whereas section 1095 deals specifically with costs in mandate matters. Appellant concedes as much, and also acknowledges that the statutes are not consistent. Where such inconsistencies appear, courts are governed by the established principle of statutory construction that a special statute dealing expressly with a particular subject controls and takes priority over a general statute. Brill v. County of Los Angeles, 16 Cal.2d 726, 732, 108 P.2d 443; Tousley v. Dishman, 90 Cal.App. 759, 761, 266 P. 373. For the purposes of this appeal, therefore, we think that section 1029 is superseded by section 1095.

[4] However, before section 1095 can be properly invoked it must appear that all of the conditions therein specified have been met. First, the respondent officer sought to be charged must have been an officer of one of the public agencies listed—in the instant case, a municipal corporation. No case has been cited to the effect that a county sanitation district is or is not a municipal corporation; although in Imperial Irr. Dist. v. County of Riverside, 96 Cal.App.2d 402, 405-406, 215 P.2d 518, an irrigation district was held to be a "municipal corporation" as that term is used in Section 1, Article XIII of the California Constitution. The Imperial Irrigation District case, supra, follows the reasoning found in Rock Creek Water Dist. v. County of Calaveras, 29 Cal.2d 7, at page 11, 172 P.2d 863, 866, where the court quotes with approval from the dissenting opinion in the case of Turlock Irr. Dist. v. White, 186 Cal. 183, 195, 198 P. 1060, 17 A.L.R. 72: "An irrigation district probably comes nearer than any other of the subordinate public corporations of the state to meeting the technical requirements defining a municipal corporation. It has its own directors and officers, conducts its own elections, can sue and be sued in its corporate name, issues bonds, levies, collects, and disburses its own revenues, acquires and holds property, both real and personal, in its own name, and in the management of its internal affairs is entirely independent of the county and state, aside from the control of general laws." All of the foregoing powers are granted a county sanitation district by the provisions of Health and Safety Code, section 4700 et seq., and the district operates independently of other agencies; hence, we cannot do otherwise than decide that a county sanitation district is a "municipal corporation" as the term is used in section 1095. Furthermore, such a conclusion makes for uniformity and obviates the anomaly which would result if for certain purposes, such as exemption from property taxes, county sanitation districts are to be treated in the same category as municipal corporations, and for other purposes such as the one at bar they are to be placed in another category. Metropolitan Water Dist. of Southern Cal. v. Co. of Riverside, 21 Cal.2d 640, 644, 134 P.2d 249.

[5] The next condition specified in section 1095 relates to the representation of the municipal corporation by the officer against whom costs are asked. As auditor of the county in which the district was formed, Lowery is ex officio auditor of the district. Section 4732, Health and Safety Code. According to the record in the mandamus action, he appeared as "an officer, employee and agent" of the district and "on his own behalf and on behalf of said County Sanitation District Number One," and his then attorney, the county counsel, is his present counsel of record. He was not a member of the district's governing body, the board of directors consisting of the chairman of the board of supervisors and the presiding officers of 9 other cities located within the district (Health and Safety Code, section 4730), nor did he have the same authority given the district to employ counsel. Health and Safety Code, section 4739. His sole interest in the original litigation between Mitchell and the district seemingly stemmed from a difference of opinion with the board which ordered him to draw the warrant—his personal belief, and that of his counsel, that the district and the taxpayers as real parties in interest were being imposed upon. The trial judge in the municipal court action, however, determined otherwise and any personal liability for the payment of a doubtful claim was thus extinguished. Personally dissatisfied with the trial court's decision in the subsequent mandamus action, he prosecuted an appeal to this court and unsuccessfully sought a hearing in the Supreme Court. Appellant would have incurred no possible personal liability had he drawn the warrant in payment of the municipal court's final judgment, or in compliance with the writ of mandate. The record is clear that the appeal he prosecuted was neither necessary nor authorized by the district or its counsel; nor did he represent the district. It was, at all times, represented in this litigation by its board of directors and its counsel, a fact upon which the opinion of this court (150 Cal.App.2d 366, 309 P.2d 930) was predicated. The question posed here is whether the enactment of the proviso in section 1095, permitting recovery of costs under stated conditions, contemplated the situation at bar. Although the right of the district's auditor to refuse payment of a doubtful claim must be conceded, we do not believe that in opposing satisfaction of a final judgment thereafter validating such claim, the auditor, acting as he did not only without the consent and approval of the board of directors of the district but directly contrary to its directions to pay it, was then and there representing the district and thus entitled to the protection of the pertinent provisions of section 1095. Particularly is this so when he took such action without the authority or sanction of the district's governing board which alone was empowered by statute to employ counsel trained and paid to render advice on legal matters. Lowery advanced the argument that in this litigation he has represented the district as opposed to its board of directors. It takes only a review of section 4730 et seq., Health and Safety Code, to reject appellant's argument as without merit. Although section 4738 permits the district to sue and be sued in its own name, the code further provides in detail for a board of directors which constitutes the "governing body" of the district, to carry on its affairs and direct its policies. Since Lowery is not a member of the board, has no connection with its counsel and has no control over its litigation, we are at a loss to find any statutory authority for his appearance "on behalf of the district," in the prior appeal. Nor does the record aid him in his claim, for it is apparent that his acts, since the entry of the municipal court judgment, were in complete derogation of the board's order. Nor does statutory authority or the record show Lowery in this case had any control over the board's litigation, which right at all times was vested with the governing board. An Illinois case, People ex rel. Altorfer v. City of Peoria, 378 Ill. 572, 39 N.E.2d 42, cited by respondent, seems persuasive. The court there upheld the right of the city council to control its litigation and stated, 39 N.E.2d at page 44: "One of the defendants, the city of Peoria, it is agreed, is a nominal party to the mandamus action. Its co-defendant, the commissioner of buildings, is a party to the record in his official capacity, no relief being sought or granted affecting his individual rights in any respect. The judgment awarding the writ of mandamus commanded him to issue a building permit, an order limited to action incident to his official duties and, conversely, in no way related to his personal interest. The interest which the commissioner of buildings and his superior, the mayor, might have in prosecuting an appeal from a judgment rendered against the city and its officer was subject to the rule of a majority of the council as expressed at a regular meeting. Hotchkiss v. Calumet City, 377 Ill. 615, 37 N.E.2d 332."

In short, Lowery disagreed and took personal issue with the board, its counsel and the courts, and expected the taxpayers to pay costs expended in asserting his position on appeal.

It is interesting to note at this point that appellant's argument is predicated mainly upon his contention that fiscal officers generally should be permitted to serve as "watchdogs" at government cost over the actions of local governing bodies to protect the taxpayers. Referring only to the case at bar, we are unable to find statutory authority for this position, and it would appear as a practical matter that appellant, whose personal liability was in no way at stake, in obtaining independent counsel and directly opposing the district's orders and the two judgments, was in no better position than that of a taxpayer who brings a suit to determine the legality of official action. Appellant cites District Bond Co. v. Cannon, 20 Cal.App.2d 659, 67 P.2d 1090, for the proposition that he had the privilege of appealing a judgment he deemed incorrect. In that case it is obvious that the city treasurer acted with the authority of the board of the improvement district and on the advice of its counsel, who represented her. She did not act in derogation of the district's authority. The petitioner urged a dismissal of her appeal because she was not personally an aggrieved party. In rejecting its contention the court recognized she was acting as an officer and affirmed her right in that capacity to appeal from an order which determined her duty with reference to the fund in question. The privilege of appealing as such is not in question in the instant case. Our query is whether it can be done at district expense.

[6] In any event, it clearly appears from the record that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to find that Lowery was acting in good faith—such refusal being implicit in the order denying the motion for relief from personal liability. The motion was heard and submitted on affidavits, as well as on the record (trial and appellate) in the mandamus action. Lowery's affidavit was limited to the allegation that he asserted his defense "in good faith" and on advice of counsel "and not for the purposes of harassment of petitioner George A. Mitchell, or for any other purpose." A counteraffidavit, executed by the district's counsel averred, among other things, that as auditor it was Lowery's duty to draw the warrant, that his refusal has been without the consent, direction or authorization of the board of directors, and without and contrary to the advice of the board's official counsel, that adequate funds were available for the payment of the final judgment, and that the board has been willing and able to pay. It further alleged that Lowery was ordered by the board to satisfy the judgment, his refusal resulting in the judgment in the mandamus proceeding, that he appeared without the consent and approval of the board or its counsel and that the "district was forced to incur these costs by virtue of the unlawful refusal of J. M. Lowery to discharge his legal duty to draw a warrant in payment of what the district board of directors and its counsel, as well as the courts, determined to be a lawful obligation of the district."

[7,8] Lowery argues that to charge him here with costs and disbursements would substantially eliminate a valuable check on the official acts of governing bodies; he refers to a ruling on a demurrer to the effect that the district could not legally waive the statute; and points out that this court in no wise considered his appeal a frivolous one and went to some lengths to resolve the issues presented. Of course, in the last analysis the existence or absence of "good faith" was a factual question, although a close one, and governed by the familiar substantial evidence rule, also applicable to matters submitted by way of affidavit. Griffith Co. v. San Diego College for Women, 45 Cal.2d 501, 508, 289 P.2d 476, 47 A.L.R.2d 1349. It is well settled that in considering an appeal from an order made on a motion based on affidavits and which involves a determination of a question of fact, if there is any conflict therein, that favoring the respondent is accepted by the reviewing court as true, and since all intendments are in favor of the ruling of the lower court, the affidavit in behalf of the successful party is deemed not only to establish the facts directly stated therein but all facts reasonably to be inferred from those stated. DeWit v. Glazier, 149 Cal. App.2d 75, 307 P.2d 1031; Doak v. Bruson, 152 Cal. 17, 91 P. 1001; West Costs Securities Co. v. Kilbourn, 110 Cal.App. 293, 294

P. 57. The Supreme Court has held that the phrase "good faith" "generally speaking means being faithful to one's duty or obligation." People v. Nunn, 46 Cal.2d 460, 468, 296 P.2d 813, 818. Under the facts as here presented and the applicable statutes governing the management of county sanitation districts, the inference is reasonable that Lowery had no duty, official or otherwise, to which he owed the measure of fidelity evidence by his defense of the mandamus action and the appeal which followed. On the issue of "good faith" insofar as the trial court has passed upon the credibility of those executing the affidavits and weighed the evidence offered therein, its implied findings will not be disturbed (Griffith Co. v. San Diego College for Women, supra). We find in the record before us no abuse of judicial discretion in the trial court's denial of Lowery's motion to be relieved from personal liability for costs.

For the foregoing reasons, the orders are, and each of them is, affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Oct. 17, 1958.

Action by wife and her husband for a declaratory judgment determining rights of the parties under an installation and service agreement covering a cigarette vending machine installed in wife's restaurant by corporate defendant following a signing of the agreement by plaintiff-husband. Defendants counter-claimed for damages for breach of contract. The Superior Court, San Bernardino County, A. D. Mitchell, J., entered judgment for plaintiffs and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, P. J., held that evidence sustained finding that plaintiff-wife was sole owner of the restaurant, that individual defendant knew plaintiff-wife was the sole owner of the cafe and procured husband's signature to the agreement on the false representation that the agreement was merely a receipt for the machine, and that there was no valid written agreement between the parties for retention of the machine in wife's restaurant beyond a one year period.

GRIFFIN, Presiding Justice.

In this action by plaintiffs-respondents, and cross-defendants, husband and wife, against defendants-appellants and cross-complainants for declaratory judgment under section 1060 of the Code of Civil Procedure involving the interpretation of and rights of the parties in an installation and service agreement, plaintiffs prevailed. The agreement involved (Exhibit 1) reads in part:

"In consideration of Acme Cigarette Service, * * * installing and servicing various cigarette vending machines in the undersigned's place of business $125.00 Advanced Commissions and other valuable consideration, the undersigned agrees to, and does hereby, assign and grant to Acme the exclusive right and privilege of selling cigarettes at said premises for a period of one year commencing with the 4th day of September, 1953, and thereafter from year to year unless sooner terminated by written notice sent registered mail by either party to the other not later than sixty (60) days prior to the expiration of the term, or any extension hereof; and during said period, further agrees not to permit any person, firm or corporation other than Acme to sell, trade in, or offer cigarettes for sale at said premises. The undersigned further states there is no other legal agreement in effect covering the sale of cigarettes at said premises."

"Acme agrees to maintain and service said machine(s) during said period and shall have full access to the undersigned's place of business during reasonable business hours for that purpose. Acme shall pay to the undersigned its prevailing rate of commission, subject to the express understanding that in the event of any change in the cost of cigarettes to Acme, or any change in or imposition of any tax on the sale of cigarettes, or in the ownership, use or operation of cigarette vending machine(s), the commissions to be paid by Acme may be changed accordingly without otherwise affecting this agreement, upon written notice to the undersigned of any such change. The undersigned agrees that if he shall sell and/or transfer his interest in the business during the term, or any extension, hereof, he shall, in that event, require that as a condition of said sale and/or transfer, the purchaser and/or transferee thereof shall accept this contract for the unexpired portion thereof and assume all of the terms, covenants and conditions thereof. In the event of a breach of this agreement, the undersigned agrees to pay all costs and attorney's fees which may be incurred by Acme by reason thereof. This agreement sets forth the complete understanding between the parties and no representations were made not appearing herein.

"Trade Name      Coffee Cup Cafe Title

(Signed) "By W. L. Hamrick
                 "636 W. 'A' St., Ontario, Calif.

"Approved and Accepted:
                 "Acme Cigarette Service
(Signed) "By John W. Wheelus."

The evidence is, and the court found generally that in accord with said written contract (Exhibit 1) defendants installed one of their cigarette vending machines in the premises of the Coffee Cup Cafe, in Ontario; that plaintiff Fleda Hamrick was and is the sole owner, as her separate property; that plaintiff husband never had any interest therein; that on September 4, 1953, defendant company, acting through its agent, defendant Wheelus, agreed orally with plaintiff wife that said defendant could place said machine, then owned by defendants, in her place of business "for a period of one year" at the agreed rental of $125, paid in advance; that defendant Wheelus, knowing Mrs. Hamrick was the sole owner of the cafe, "procured" the husband, W. L. Hamrick alone to sign an agreement in her absence and that he represented to the husband that Exhibit 1 was merely a receipt and that if he would sign it, he could show his employer, "Acme Cigarette Service" assurance that the machine could remain in said cafe; that no copy of said agreement was given to nor left with either plaintiff; that about July 1, 1954, Wheelus interviewed plaintiff wife and endeavored to "procure" her to enter into an agreement that would provide that said vending machine should remain in her cafe for one year and that she then verbally informed him that the machine must be removed when the year agreed to had expired; that she had a machine of her own and would not agree to leave their machine there beyond the year agreed upon; that about September 4, 1954, Wheelus informed Mrs. Hamrick that this agreement (Exhibit 1) was in full force and effect and he intended to enforce it; that on September 4 she turned said machine to the wall and refused to let it operate and that Wheelus subsequently removed it from said cafe; that Mr. Hamrick never was authorized to sign the agreement; that Wheelus knew at all times that the only agreement he had regarding the operation of said machine was the oral agreement of Wheelus with her that the machine would stay in her cafe for one year only and that said agreement was terminated in July, 1954, as of September 4, 1954, when plaintiff Fleda Hamrick refused to give defendants a new agreement; and said agreement was terminated when defendants removed the machine. The court found generally in favor of plaintiffs and cross-defendants on defendants' cross-complaint. It concluded that no valid written agreement was entered into between Mrs. Hamrick and defendants; that the verbal agreement was for one year only and was terminated; and that defendants concurred in said termination. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiffs and against defendants on their cross-complaint seeking damages for breach of contract, costs and reasonable attorneys' fees.

The main claims on appeal are insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings; that the findings do not support the conclusions or judgment; and that the trial court failed to find on a material issue raised by the pleadings.

It is argued that the finding that Mr. Hamrick owned no interest in said cafe is not supported by the evidence because it showed the husband worked in said cafe and did odd jobs, and that accordingly he must have contributed community property to the business enterprise even though it was purchased by Mrs. Hamrick with money left to her by her first husband, citing Pereira v. Pereira, 156 Cal. 1, 103 P. 488, 23 L.R.A.,N.S., 880. Although the business was purchased after the marriage of plaintiffs, the evidence shows the city license, bank accounts and employment reports were all carried in the wife's name and she actually operated the business as her own. The husband was paid a few dollars occasionally for his work. The facts are distinguishable from the Pereira case. The evidence was sufficient to support the finding. 10 Cal.Jur.2d 684, sec. 21; Sec. 162, Civil Code.

[1,2] Although in conflict, there was sufficient evidence to show, independent of the signed agreement, that Mrs. Hamrick did have some verbal agreement with defendants to allow the machine to remain in her place of business for a period of one year, and that Wheelus did wrongfully represent to Mr. Hamrick, who he knew did not own the coffee shop, that the contract was only for one year, and if he would sign it, it was only a form and did not amount to anything; that therefore he did not read it but believed these representations and signed it for his wife without her consent or knowledge. The facts were sufficient to bring the case within the exceptions mentioned in the parole evidence rule that when the terms of a contract have been reduced to writing there can be no evidence of the terms other than the contents of the writing except (1) where a mistake or imperfection of the writing is put in issue by the pleadings; or (2) where the validity of the agreement is the fact in dispute. "This section does not exclude other evidence of the circumstances under which the agreement was made or to which it relates, as defined in Section 1860, or to explain an extrinsic ambiguity, or to establish illegality or fraud." Sec. 1856, Code Civ.Proc.; see also Sec. 1640, Civ.Code.

It is next argued that the finding that Mr. Hamrick never had any authority to sign the agreement is not supported by the evidence because it showed that, at least, he had the ostensible authority so to do or that Mrs. Hamrick was estopped to deny it, citing Laack v. Dimmick, 95 Cal.App. 456, 273 P. 50; Civil Code, secs. 2317, 2318, and 2334. The testimony is that defendants knew Mrs. Hamrick was the sole owner of the Coffee Cup Cafe, and knowing this fact he accepted Mr. Hamrick's signature under the representations found to be made. The finding has evidentiary support.

Some claim is made that although the name Acme Cigarette Service was signed to the contract and was the named defendant herein, it was Wheelus's testimony that the Acme Service, Inc., took over the outstanding service agreement and accordingly the finding that there was no evidence submitted showing that they were the same corporation is not supported by the evidence. Apparently the entire agreement was terminated or held void and unenforceable. We see no prejudice by the finding.

Defendants next argue that the cross-complaint pleads a breach of the agreement by both Mr. and Mrs. Hamrick and that the court failed to find on the issue of Mr. Hamrick's personal liability thereon. The court specifically found Mr. Hamrick signed the agreement on the false representation that the signing of it by him was only to show the company that the machine could remain in the cafe. A recovery against him on the cross-complaint was rejected. This sufficiently disposed of the issue. The evidence, although conflicting, supports the findings, as made, in respect to both plaintiffs and cross-defendants.

Judgment affirmed.

Civ. 22844.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.
Oct. 15, 1958.

Taxpayer's suit to enjoin city from using for municipal purposes income derived from submerged and tidelands which state had granted in trust to city. From judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, A. Curtis Smith, J., denying a permanent injunction, plaintiff in intervention appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that change in conditions after commencement of suit, including legislative and judicial determination as to ownership and proper use of income from lands granted in trust to city and fact that city had accepted and complied with such determination, made injunction unnecessary.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐991

In taxpayer's suit to enjoin city of Long Beach from using for municipal purposes income derived from submerged and tidelands which state had granted in trust to city, good faith of city in abandoning, in compliance with judicial determination as to trust status of such income, previously asserted intention to continue using such income for municipal purposes was a question of fact, and reviewing court would not interfere with trial court's finding of good faith. St.1951, p. 2443, § 2; West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 2228-2236.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐994(3), 1012(1)

In suit for injunction, involving question of good faith of defendant, weighing the evidence and determining the credibility of witnesses were proper functions of trial court.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐991

In taxpayer's suit to enjoin city of Long Beach from using for municipal purposes income derived from submerged and tidelands which state had granted in trust to city, in what manner city conducted itself, why it did so, and whether it had reasonable cause so to do were questions of fact, and reviewing court would not disturb trial court's findings on such questions. St.1951, p. 2443, § 2; West's Ann. Civ.Code, §§ 2228-2236.

4. Injunction ⇨1

Whether injunctive relief will be granted in a particular case is a matter largely within the discretion of trial court.

5. Injunction ⇨4

In proceedings for injunctive relief, equity acts upon the situation as it appears at the termination of litigation as distinguished from situation at the time of or prior to commencement of action.

Refusal in taxpayer's suit to enjoin city of Long Beach from using for municipal purposes income derived from submerged and tidelands which state had granted in trust to city was not abuse of discretion, in view of legislative and judicial determination after commencement of suit that portion of such income released from trust was released to state and not to city and that city held balance of such income in trust for purposes of commerce, navigation and fishing and subsequent compliance by city with such determination. St.1951, p. 2443, § 2; St.1956, 1st Ex.Sess., p. 341.

The appropriateness of injunction is to be determined as of the time of order or judgment, unless special circumstances otherwise require.

8. Injunction ⇨4

Equity acts in the present and not in the past tense, and whether injunctive relief will be granted depends upon present and future conditions and not solely on conditions existing when suit was brought.

9. Injunction ⇨1

Injunction is an extraordinary power to be exercised with great caution, and rarely, if ever, should such power be exercised in a doubtful case.

10. Injunction ⇨22

In absence of special circumstances, injunctive relief will be denied, if, at time of order or judgment, there is no reasonable probability that past acts complained of will recur.

11. Injunction ⇨22

Injunctive power is not used as punishment for past acts and is ordered against such acts only if there is evidence they will probably recur.

12. Injunction ⇨22

Injunction will not be granted to prevent in the future that which in good faith has been discontinued, in absence of any evidence that acts complained of are likely to be repeated in the future.

13. Injunction ⇨4

Injunction will ordinarily be refused, where events which render an injunction unnecessary occur after the filing of complaint.

Change in conditions after commencement of taxpayer's suit to enjoin city of Long Beach from using for municipal purposes income derived from submerged and tidelands which state had granted in trust to city, including legislative and judicial determination that portion of such income released from trust by statute was released to state and not to city and that city held balance of such income in trust for purposes of commerce, navigation and fishing and fact that city had accepted and complied with such determination, made injunction unnecessary. Theodore R. Gabrielson, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Walhfred Jacobson, Long Beach, O'Melveny & Myers, Pierce Works, Los Angeles, for respondents.

LILLIE, Justice.

Plaintiff in intervention Alma Swart appeals from a judgment denying a permanent injunction.

The city of Long Beach, as trustee, held in its possession certain revenues received by it under a trust which it had used and intended to continue to use for general municipal purposes. These funds were derived from oil and gas developed on tide and submerged lands granted to the city by the state of California in 1911. Under this grant the state conveyed to the city of Long Beach all of the tide and submerged lands within the corporate limits of the city in trust for commerce, navigation and fishing.

In May, 1953, plaintiff Mallon, not an appellant herein, filed a "taxpayer's" suit against the city of Long Beach and various city officials to enjoin them from using the revenues in question for municipal purposes, claiming they could be expended only for the trust purposes of commerce, navigation and fishing. Appellant was permitted to intervene. Demurrers to the complaints were sustained and appellant appealed to the Supreme Court from the order sustaining the same.

In the meantime the city filed its answer admitting its intention to use 50% of the oil and gas revenues and 100% of the dry gas revenues for general municipal purposes and not for the trust uses designated by the grant and alleging that under Assembly Bill 3400 (Stats.1951, Ch. 915, page 2443), hereinafter referred to as the Act of 1951, the funds had been released to it; that it owned the funds absolutely free from the terms of the trust and had a right to use them as its own.

On April 5, 1955, the Supreme Court rendered its opinion on the appeal from the order sustaining the demurrers (Mallon v. City of Long Beach, 44 Cal.2d 199, 282 P.2d 481), reversing the lower court and holding that the Act of 1951 effected a partial revocation of the trust over the tide and submerged lands releasing certain revenues from the trust, but that the monies were released not to the city of Long Beach but to the state of California, and operated to transfer to the state 50% of the income from oil and gas and 100% of the income (past, present and future) from dry gas derived from the city's tide and submerged lands.

After this decision and in July of 1955, the city amended its answer admitting the prior transfers of trust revenues into the municipal treasury, but contending it acted in good faith believing that under the Act of 1951 they had been released to it and therefore belonged to the city and that the expenditures were proper; and asserting that it would discontinue its prior practices of transferring and using the funds for its own purposes, did not intend to do so in the future, and that an injunction to prevent further diversion of funds was not necessary.

Shortly thereafter in August of 1955 the state, seeking to recover the funds released to it under the ruling of the Supreme Court (Mallon v. City of Long Beach, 44 Cal.2d 199, 282 P.2d 481), unsuccessfully attempted to intervene in the instant case. On September 16, 1955, it filed an action of its own against the city entitled "People of the State of California, et al. vs. City of Long Beach, et al., No. 649466, in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County" (hereinafter referred to as the People's case) to recover the revenues. Negotiations for settlement arose and no proceedings were taken until after the legislature passed the Act of 1956 (Ch. 29, Stats. 1st Ex.Sess.1956), effective July 5, 1956, which supplied legislative approval of settlement of the People's case, fixing the sum payable by the city to the state as $120,000,-000, for all claims to the funds as of January 31, 1956, monthly payments by the city to the state for future accruals of 50% of the oil and gas revenues and 100% of the dry gas revenues, and providing the judgment to be rendered in the People's case to be final. Pursuant thereto a stipulated judgment was entered in the People's case on September 11, 1956.

Under the consent decree the city on October 31, 1956, paid to the state, in full settlement of all claims to the funds in question up to February 1, 1956, the sum of $122,339,133.89. It thereafter started making monthly payments as provided in the judgment and as far as we know has continued to do so.

The trial of the instant case was held in February of 1957 principally on the issue of whether a permanent injunction would lie against defendants to enjoin them from expending for general municipal purposes the trust funds already covered by the Act of 1956 and the judgment in the People's case. It revolved around the issue of defendants' good faith in abandoning their prior expressed intent to use the funds for other than trust purposes. The assistant city attorney of Long Beach who interpreted the Act of 1951 for the city council and gave it advice on all of its proposed actions; a former member of the city council from 1950 to 1954, now a judge of the Long Beach Municipal court; a former mayor of Long Beach from 1942 to 1945; and the Long Beach city auditor testified on behalf of defendants. Numerous exhibits were received for both plaintiff and defendants, the majority of which were city council resolutions. The plaintiff offered no testimony. Defendants' witnesses were questioned extensively about various transfers of funds, under what authority they were made, the city council's belief concerning the construction of the Act of 1951, its general intent then and now, and its activities in connection with certain prior court litigation and legislative action.

The trial court found, among other things, that defendants, although mistaken in their construction of the Act of 1951, believed in good faith that the funds, released from the tidelands trust thereunder (50% of oil and gas revenues, and all past and future dry gas revenues), had been released to the city as absolute owner and not to the state of California; and as such they could use them as their own for general municipal purposes as distinguished from public tidelands or harbor purposes; that this belief and understanding was shared by the governor of the state, the then legislature, the attorney general and the legislative counsel. The trial judge also found to exist certain changed conditions or circumstances since the filing of the action. In denying injunctive relief the court concluded that due to changed circumstances occurring subsequent to the commencement of the action "There is no reasonable expectation or probability that the acts complained of herein by plaintiff and by plaintiff in intervention will be either repeated or continued by defendants or any of them and no necessity for the granting of the injunctive relief prayed for herein now exists."

The issue on this appeal is whether the trial judge abused his discretion in refusing the injunctive relief sought.

Appellant contends that since 1939 the city's conduct relating to its various transfers and use of trust funds for general municipal expenditures, its extended litigation over the use and ownership of the trust revenues and its lobbying activities in connection with the Act of 1951, clearly shows past deliberate "misappropriation of trust funds" and that the city's protestations that it has ceased its transfer and expenditure of revenues and intends no further such activities are not in good faith. Appellant argues that defendants' past conduct, not having been in good faith, they are not now in good faith in "abandoning" their previous intention to use the revenues as their own. To show that defendants are not to be trusted in the future she submits a history of the city's activities since 1939, which without doubt discloses numerous efforts on the part of the city to free itself from the status of trustee and use the funds as its own. This history constituted part of the record considered by the trial court in determining whether defendants were in good faith in their assertions of abandonment of earlier activities to gain control of the funds.

The record discloses prior extended litigation by the city, most of which was instituted either by it, or its officials, in the form of "friendly suits" for judicial determination of its rights in the funds at various times.

The first, an original proceeding in the Supreme Court, was brought by the city against its port manager (City of Long Beach v. Marshall, 11 Cal.2d 609, 82 P.2d 362) in 1938 to determine if it had the right to drill for oil on the tidelands. The court held it could develop the mineral resources but that the lands were conveyed in trust for commerce, navigation and fishing. Thereafter the city developed gas and oil on the tidelands, receiving substantial revenues therefor. It arranged through its municipal gas department to sell dry gas and place the revenues therefrom in the gas revenue fund. By council resolutions it transferred the funds to the general purpose fund for general municipal uses. The trial court herein, having heard the testimony of the city officials concerning these transfers and their explanation for the council's activities, concluded: "Now, with respect to their conduct after the Marshall case, so far as the holding of the Marshall case at least is concerned, I can't say that they deliberately violated that."

On December 30, 1947, suit was filed by the city against its treasurer (City of Long Beach v. Morse, 31 Cal.2d 254, 188 P.2d 17), to force him to transfer money from the harbor fund to the public improvement fund for general use. The court held that since the tidelands were granted to the city in trust, proceeds from oil and gas development must be used for trust purposes (commerce, navigation and fishing). Thereafter substantial funds were transferred for municipal use. After hearing the testimony relating to the city's activities in this regard, the lower court admitted they presented "a much more serious problem." From its further statement, this obviously was taken into consideration in deciding the showing necessary to establish good faith, because the trial judge further related the city's conduct after the Morse case with subsequent acts to show good faith had reestablished itself in the city's later activities.

On January 25, 1951, an injunction suit was filed against the city (Trickey v. City of Long Beach, 101 Cal.App.2d 871, 226 P.2d 694) to enjoin it from transferring trust funds into the general purpose fund. The court held that the "dry gas" income was part of the trust and could not be used for nontrust purposes.

Immediately after the court's decision in the Trickey case, in an attempt to "undo" the court's ruling, city officials lobbied in the legislature. It resulted in the Act of 1951 which provided that 50% of the oil and gas revenues on hand and to be derived in the future, and 100% of the dry gas revenues, past, present and future, received by the city in its capacity as trustee, are "declared to be free from the public trust for navigation, commerce and fisheries, and from such uses, trusts, conditions and restrictions as are imposed by any of said above-entitled acts." Sec. 2, Stats. 1951, p. 2443. Appellant sharply criticized the conduct of city officials in lobbying for the passage of this act, accusing the (city) trustee of violating its duties and obligations to the beneficiary, withholding information from the legislature and perpetrating a fraud upon the state, the legislature and the people of the state of California.

However, the trial court after listening to the testimony of the city officials concerning their interest in the bill, their lobbying activities and their reasons and explanations therefor, said: "The plaintiff in intervention seems to take the view that there is something wrong, almost underhanded, in going to the Legislature to try to undo that (Trickey) case and to even get much more." The trial judge declared the city's acts were not only legitimate but that it is entirely proper "where you are dissatisfied with the law, to go to the people who make the laws and attempt to avoid the consequences of the law with which you are dissatisfied. I see nothing in the slightest wrong with going to the Legislature and seeking the legislation that they sought and having obtained the legislation."

After the Act of 1951 became effective, a public improvement fund was set up, the city transferred funds for general use, and authorized certain expenditures for the erection of municipal buildings and facilities. The evidence shows that the city relied upon its attorney's interpretation of the Act that the revenues belonged to it; that defendants at all times believed that the Act of 1951 released the funds from the trust to the city.

Of this the trial judge said, "I see nothing unreasonable in the interpretation that they placed upon the law. They were wrong, but many other people were wrong, too, in the interpretation of that law, and consequently, the fact that they did not follow the law as it was ultimately construed by the Supreme Court in the Mallon case, was of course legally wrongful, but nothing morally wrongful. * * *". The court concluded from all of the evidence before it that the city had not acted in defiance of the law but on erroneous advice and under mistaken belief.

It was at this point the instant action was filed. The city, believing it had the right to use the funds, continued to do so up to the day of the Supreme Court's ruling on April 5, 1955 (Mallon v. City of Long Beach, 44 Cal.2d 199, 282 P.2d 481). Appellant claims that on the very day the decision was rendered the city transferred $980,000 for general use (Exhibit 34) and other sums by council resolution on October 4, 1955 (Exhibit 35), and on April 12, 1956 (Exhibit 36). The evidence showed that the transfer of $980,000 was actually made four days prior to April 5, 1955, and when the city council passed its resolution (Exhibit 34), it was unaware of the decision and that later all funds transferred subsequent thereto were restored as impounded trust money. The trial judge, after hearing the explanation for these transfers and the resolutions said: "if it hadn't been for the explanation in Exhibits 34, 35 and 36, I believe are the ones—the last three resolutions—in any event, under which transfers were made, two of them subsequent to the Mallon decision, one on the day of the Mallon decision, if it hadn't been that I had been completely satisfied with the City's explanation of those three resolutions, that, coupled with their conduct following the Morse case, it would have probably led me to believe that they were in need of an injunction * . . .".

This points up two facts—that the trial judge accepted the city's explanation of its conduct and believed it acted in good faith; and that he was not unmindful of the city's questionable conduct between the Morse case and the Trickey case and appellant's claims that it had deliberately misappropriated trust funds. But considering the entire record the trial judge had this further to say: "I find little or nothing in the record of the conduct of the City of Long Beach since 1951 that is reprehensible. . . ."

[1,2] Since the court heard the testimony of the witnesses, all city officials during the crucial periods, and had before it all of the council resolutions bearing upon every transfer and expenditure charged, we feel it will serve no useful purpose to further recount the evidence. The issue of good faith was one of fact and was resolved in favor of respondents by the trial judge. In so doing, the lower court was performing its normal and proper function of weighing the evidence and determining the credibility of the witnesses. With the trial judge's determination of the good faith issue, and its finding thereon, this court will not interfere.

[3] No complicated legal issues are here involved. Appellant in her accusations against the city (which mainly involve factual questions resolved by the trial judge) charges the trustee, among other things, with dealing with trust property for its own profit (using the funds for general municipal purposes), taking action adverse to the beneficiary without disclosure of its adverse interest, lobbying for the passage of the Act of 1951, commingling trust property with its own (as in the Trickey case), defrauding the beneficiary by interpreting the law favorable to its own interests, and "misappropriating trust funds." In support of these charges, she cites extensively from sections 2228-2236 of the Civil Code and authorities pointing up the obligations and duties of a trustee. In what manner the city conducted itself, why it did so, and if it had reasonable cause so to do, were questions of fact resolved by the lower court. The findings reflecting these determinations the reviewing court will not disturb.

[4] It is almost too well settled to require citation of authority that whether injunctive relief will be granted in a given case is a matter largely within the discretion of the trial court. Wholesale Tobacco Dealers Bureau of Southern California v. National, etc., Co., 11 Cal.2d 634, 82 P.2d 3, 118 A.L.R. 486; Phillips v. Isham, 111 Cal. App.2d 537, 244 P.2d 716; Smith v. Mendonsa, 108 Cal.App.2d 540, 238 P.2d 1039; People v. Black's Food Store, 16 Cal.2d 59, 105 P.2d 361; Brock v. Superior Court, 11 Cal.2d 682, 81 P.2d 931. The trial court not only based its holding that "no injunction is presently necessary" upon its findings of good faith on the part of the city in asserting its intention to abandon its prior conduct, and "because of the present conduct of the City of Long Beach, which I believe is beyond reproach"; but also upon the additional point "that for all practical purposes, the problem is already disposed of by the law of the case, in this very case that we now have before us, the Mallon decision, the Supreme Court decision of the Mallon case (April 5, 1955); we have the legislative enactment (Act of 1956) authorizing the settlement of this problem; we not only have the People's case, but we have an injunction in the People's case. * * *" which the trial court classed under "change of circumstances," all of which led the court to conclude that "(T)here is no reasonable expectation or probability that the acts complained of * * * will be either repeated or continued. * * * and no necessity for the granting of the injunctive relief prayed for herein now exists."

[5] Before discussing the general rule that equity acts in injunctive proceedings upon the situation, as it appears at the termination of litigation as distinguished from that at the time of or prior to the commencement of the action, recognized by the trial judge when he said: "We are concerned with the present situation, and not with the prior situation," we refer briefly to the changed circumstances supported by the record and relied upon by the trial court.

[6] At the outset of the instant litigation, the city in its answer emphatically declared its intention to continue to expend the funds in question for its general use. However, since then and before the trial on the merits, conditions arose, the effect of which was to foreclose defendants' further use of the money—in the form of a Supreme Court decision, a legislative enactment and a final stipulated judgment in an action between the city and state, settling once and for all in clear and unequivocal language the long dispute between them over the ownership of the funds accrued and accruing. In the face of this state of affairs, the city filed an amended answer saying in effect, "We engaged in these activities up to now, we thought we were right; we were wrong; we will not do it again and we need no further court order to prevent us from doing it in the future." This "change of circumstances" resulting in the city's present attitude, supported by the record herein, completely warranted the exercise of the trial court's discretion in denying injunctive relief. Very briefly the change consisted of the following: After the city filed its answer in 1953 asserting its right to the money, the Supreme Court on April 5, 1955, advised defendants that the Act of 1951 operated to release to the state, not to the city, the funds it intended to use. To recover the revenues which accrued since 1951, and to accrue in the future, the state sued the city in September of 1955. To implement settlement of this case, the Act of 1956 was passed by the legislature approving the rendition of a judgment completely and finally disposing of all claims past, present and future. Pursuant to this act a stipulated judgment was entered in the People's case on September 11, 1956, completely settling all claims to 50% of the revenues from gas and oil and all revenues from dry gas up to February 1, 1956, all future claims to those revenues accruing after January 31, 1956, ordering the city to account for and pay over monthly accrued revenues and declaring the city's rights to 50% of oil and gas revenues remaining in the tidelands trust and directing their use only for trust purposes requiring an order of court for other uses. Pursuant to this order, the city on October 31, 1956, paid to the state of California a lump sum of $122,339,133.89 in full settlement of all claims to the funds to February 1, 1956, started monthly payments to the state which it has continued to date and has not touched the remaining 50% for a nontrust purpose.

By the time the instant case was tried an accounting had been had and all acts or omissions occurring prior to February 1, 1956, had been finally settled, all past controversy between the parties over the disputed funds had ended and the city had acceded to the legislative and judicial adjudication of its rights in and to the revenues in question. Long before trial the city found itself under judicial decree bound to use the very funds here in dispute in the same identical way urged by appellant. It has complied and we have no reason to believe it is not now still complying. Any protection the beneficiary may need is found in the mandatory judgment in the People's case to pay over to the state the monies as to which appellant sought an injunction preventing their use for municipal purposes, and the injunctive effect of the judgment as to the monies remaining in the so-called Long Beach tidelands trust. We can only conclude from the record that there was no necessity for what, in effect, would be a second injunction regulating the use of the disputed revenues.

[7,8] In Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Minnette, 115 Cal.App.2d 698, at page 709, 252 P.2d 642, at page 648, the court stated the general rule applicable to the facts of the case at bar: "The appropriateness of injunction is to be determined as of the time of the order or judgment unless special circumstances otherwise require." This is based upon the theory that equity acts in the present and not in the past tense. "It has been said that equity acts in the present tense, and that relief is dependent on present and future conditions rather than solely on those existing when the suit was brought." 43 C.J.S. Injunctions § 29, page 460; American Fruit Growers v. Parker, 22 Cal.2d 513, 140 P.2d 23. A case of interest at this point is Oliver v. City of Cincinnati, 12 Ohio App. 432, 32 O.C.A. 533, involving a taxpayer's suit for injunctive relief to enjoin a proposed street railway franchise. The city appeared and admitted its intention to do that sought to be enjoined. The county prosecuting attorney then filed an ex rel. quo warranto proceeding in the name of the state wherein an injunction was issued enjoining the carrying out of the terms of the ordinance granting the franchise. Thereafter, the city filed an amended answer and denied it would attempt to proceed further. In refusing what in effect would be a second injunction, the Ohio Court of Appeals said:

"In the absence of exceptional circumstances, in equitable actions, the right to judgment or decree is not limited to the facts as they existed at the commencement of the action, but the relief administered is such as the nature of the case and the facts as they exist at the close of the litigation demand. An injunction will not be granted where at the time of the hearing conditions have so changed that no unlawful act is threatened. Continental Securities Co. v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. [D.C.], 207 F. 467; Sherman v. Foster, 158 N.Y. 587 [53 N.E. 504]; Pond v. Harwood, 139 N.Y. 111, 120 [34 N.E. 768]; Peck v. Goodberlett, 109 N.Y. 180 [16 N.E. 350]; Union Bag & Paper Co. v. Allen Bros. Co., 107 App.Div. 529 [95 N.Y.S. 214]; Hale v. Jenkins [55 Misc. 119], 106 N.Y.S. 282; Brown v. Cole [Sup.], 105 N.Y.S. 196; Boone v. Von Arx, 4 Alaska 716, and Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada v. Michigan Railway Commission [D.C.], 198 F. 1009, 1022. See note to Alsager v. Peterson, 31 S.D. 452 [141 N.W. 391], in 38 Ann.Cases, 1915D [1251], and cases therein cited, and 16 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law, 431.

"In the case at bar, before this cause was presented to the court for decision, there was a binding judgment by the court of last resort determining that the agreements in question were void. It was between substantially the same parties as those in this case. Unlike the situation presented in Davis v. Berry, supra [D.C., 216 F. 413], there is no apprehension that the defendants will attempt to carry out the ordinance, the invalidity of which has been conclusively established and the performance of which has been prohibited. The city requires no further decree to protect its interest. To paraphrase the decision in Continental Securities Co. v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. [D.C.], 207 F. 467, 471, the obnoxious franchise is dead and the supreme court has written its epitaph. There is not even a moot question for determination by this court. The plaintiff is not entitled to a decree." 12 Ohio App. at pages 437-438.

[9-13] Injunction "is an extra-ordinary power, and is to be exercised always with great caution" and the power rarely, if ever, should be exercised in a doubtful case. City & County of San Francisco v. Market St. Ry. Co., 95 Cal.App.2d 648, 655, 213 P.2d 780, 781; Schwartz v. Arata, 45 Cal.App. 596, 188 P. 313. If, therefore, at the time of the order or judgment, in the absence of special circumstances, which are not here involved, there is no reasonable probability that past acts complained of will recur, injunctive relief will be denied. Injunctive power is not used as punishment for past acts and is ordered against them only if there is evidence they will probably recur. Rosicrucian Fellow- ship v. Rosicrucian, etc., Ch., 39 Cal.2d 121, 245 P.2d 481; Hannah v. Pogue, 23 Cal.2d 849, 147 P.2d 572. A court of equity will not afford an injunction to prevent in the future that which in good faith has been discontinued in the absence of any evidence that the acts are likely to be repeated in the future. 43 C.J.S. Injunctions § 22, p. 445; Thome v. Honcut Dredging Co., 43 Cal.App.2d 737, 111 P.2d 368. In line with these general rules governing the issuance of an injunction are the cases of Ratterree Land Co., Inc., v. Hutton, 4 Cal.2d 100, 47 P.2d 732 and Blackmore Investment Co. v. Johnson, 213 Cal. 148, 1 P.2d 978, which hold that where events occur after the filing of the complaint which render an injunction unnecessary, it will ordinarily be refused.

[14] A search of the record before us discloses nothing to indicate a probability of either a disposition of, or opportunity for, the city to in the future abandon its declared intention to abide by the legislative act of 1956 and the court's judgment. Without such a probability an injunction is unnecessary.

For the foregoing reasons the exercise of the trial court's discretion in denying injunctive relief was warranted. No abuse thereof is apparent in the record and the judgment is affirmed.

RUSS-FIELD CORPORATION, a corporation,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

UNDERWRITERS AT LLOYD'S, LONDON, ENGLAND, Malvern Insurance Company, Drake Insurance Company Limited, Sphere Insurance Company Limited, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 23070.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 9, 1958.

Hearing Denied Dec. 3, 1958.

Action by motion picture corporation against insurers on feature motion picture errors and omissions policies for amount which corporation had paid in settlement of actor's claim against it. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Paul Nourse, J., rendered judgment for corporation, and insurers appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Herndon, J., held that where policies provided that corporation warranted that it knew of no act or omission which might form basis of claim against it, and producer in accordance with industry, custom, and usage believed he had right to make or obtain script changes which he believed would improve story, there was no duty on part of corporation to notify insurers at time corporation applied for policies of decision to revise screenplay, in absence of any knowledge of actor's objections to revisions, and corporation did not breach warranty by making script revision which resulted in actor's making claim against corporation after effective date of policies.

Affirmed.

1. Insurance ⇨430

Where feature motion picture errors and omissions policies provided that they covered loss arising from any claim against insured by reason of negligent act in connection with production of picture or breach of contract rights wherever alleged to have been committed by insured and that insured warranted that it knew of no act, error or omission which might form basis of claim against it, policies covered loss or liability arising from any claim or claims which might be made as distinguished from loss or liability arising from act or event upon which claim might be based and covered claims arising from acts or errors previously committed.

2. Insurance ⇨177

Under endorsement to feature motion picture errors and omissions policies providing that insurers were liable for any loss occasioned by any claim arising either on picture placed in production during term of insurance or picture released or first licensed for use during term of insurance, coverage for claim based on picture which was released for distribution within one year designated as effective period of policies was not excluded.

3. Insurance ⇨665(4)

In action on feature motion picture errors and omissions policies evidence sustained finding that picture, in connection with which claim was made against insured, was placed in production during term and effective period of policies.

4. Stipulations ⇨18(7)

In action on feature motion picture errors and omissions policies, pretrial stipulation that claim was asserted against insured arising out of and in connection with production of motion picture while policies were in force and effect was binding upon insurers and precluded any successful attack upon finding that claim was a loss sustained in connection with production of picture.

5. Insurance ⇨665(3)

In action on feature motion picture errors and omissions policies which contained insured's warranty that it knew of no act, error or omission which might form basis of claim against it, evidence sustained finding that insured had no knowledge of claim asserted against it on effective date of insurance.

6. Insurance ⇨285½

Where producer of motion picture for corporation, which obtained feature motion picture errors and omissions policies under which corporation warranted that it knew of no act or omission which might form basis of claim against it, in accordance with industry custom and usage believed he had right to make or obtain script changes which he believed would improve story, there was no duty on part of corporation to notify insurers at time corporation applied for policies of decision to revise screenplay in absence of any knowledge of actor's objections to revisions and corporation did not breach warranty by making script revision which resulted in actor's making claim against corporation after effective date of policies.

7. Statutes  223.1

Fact that word is common to two statutes does not mean that decision construing it in one statute must control in construction of the other.

8. Insurance  437

A "willful act" within statute providing that an insurer is not liable for loss caused by willful act of insured connotes something more blameworthy than the sort of misconduct involved in ordinary negligence and something more than the mere intentional doing of an act constituting such negligence. West's Ann.Insurance Code,   533.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Willful Act".

9. Insurance  665(4)

In action on feature motion picture errors and omissions policies, evidence sustained finding that breach of contract, if one occurred, with respect to revision of script resulting in claim against insured by actor who refused to perform under revised script, was not a "willful act" within statute providing that an insurer is not liable for loss caused by willful act of insured. West's Ann.Insurance Code,   533.

10. Insurance  514

Although by terms of contract insurers were not obligated to defend insured against asserted claims, insured acquired right to make any reasonable and bona fide compromise of claim against it when insurers denied coverage and disclaimed liability.

11. Insurance  646(8)

Where feature motion picture errors and omissions policies indemnified against 90% of loss arising from making of claim alleging negligent act, error or omission or breach of contract rights, settlement by insured with party who made claims against insured was presumptive evidence of liability of insurers.

12. Insurance  665(4)

In action on feature motion picture errors and omissions policies for amount which insured had paid in settlement of claim against it, evidence sustained finding that settlement was reasonable and prudent in the circumstances.

13. Insurance  670

Where feature motion picture errors and omissions policies indemnified against percentage of loss arising from making of a claim alleging negligent act, error or omission or breach of contract rights, it was not necessary to find that insured had in fact breached its contract with actor, who asserted claim against insured for breach of contract, in order to find that insurers were liable for insured's loss resulting from compromise settlement of actor's claim.

Spray, Gould & Bowers, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Zagon, Aaron & Sandler, Beverly Hills, Nelson Rosen, Hollywood, for respondent.

HERNDON, Justice.

The questions presented by this appeal relate to the scope of the coverage of a rather special and unique contract of insurance issued by the Underwriters at Lloyds, London, and denominated "Feature Motion Picture Errors and Omissions Insurance for Studios and/or Distributors." The trial court held that the claim which gave rise to the loss in question constituted a risk within the coverage of the policy and accordingly rendered judgment for plaintiff, the insured. The defendant insurance carriers have appealed.

Plaintiff, a producer of motion pictures, owned the motion picture rights to a literary property entitled "The Most Dangerous Game." Early in 1955 plaintiff engaged Henry Tatelman as producer, vesting him with authority to supervise the production of a motion picture based upon that story. In February, 1955, Tatelman commenced preparations for the production by employing Robert Wilder, a screen writer, who proceeded at once to prepare a draft of the script for a motion picture entitled "Run For the Sun." Tatelman thereafter also employed other necessary personnel, including a director and various actors, one of whom was Mr. Leo Genn.

Mr. Genn, a resident of England, was under contract to render his services as an actor for the Genn Company, and Mr. Tatelman negotiated for the services of the actor through the William Morris Agency, which had local offices and acted as agent for Mr. Genn and the Genn Company. Mr. Tatelman submitted the Wilder script, which was designated as "a first draft screen play," for Mr. Genn's examination. Thereafter, in August, 1955, the Genn Company, acting through the Morris Agency, entered into an oral agreement with plaintiff to furnish the services of Leo Genn to portray the role of "Martel" in the Wilder script. Plaintiff agreed to pay Genn the sum of $3500 per week for a minimum of ten weeks and to furnish Genn round-trip transportation from London, England, to Mexico City, together with certain other emoluments.

Thereafter, in order to secure a desirable director and to overcome certain censorship objections which had been raised, plaintiff employed Mr. Dudley Nichols to revise and rewrite the Wilder script. There was no express contractual provision in the agreement with Mr. Genn giving the actor script approval, and there is testimony in the record that Mr. Tatelman had the script revised on the assumption and in the belief that, pursuant to custom and usage in the industry, the producer had the right to control the script and to make such changes as it deemed desirable to improve the picture. Both Mr. Tatelman and Mr. Nichols testified that they did not anticipate any objection by Mr. Genn to the changes they made in the Wilder screenplay. Although the Nichols screenplay substantially retained the story line and plot of the first script, the name of the character which Mr. Genn was to play was changed from "Martel" to "Browne" and his nationality and characterization changed from that of a German Nazi official to that of an English traitor. The Nichols screenplay was completed late in October, 1955, and plaintiff made arrangements to commence principal photography from this screenplay on or about October 31.

Meanwhile, on October 17, 1955, the two policies of insurance which are the subject of this action were issued to plaintiff by defendants' agents covenanting to indemnify 90% of certain enumerated losses which might be sustained by plaintiff in connection with the production and distribution of the picture "Run For the Sun." The most pertinent provisions of the policy read as follows:

"1. This insurance, subject to the terms, conditions, limitations and warranties hereinafter mentioned, covers * * * the 'Insured' for loss, liability, costs and expenses (hereinafter referred to as 'loss') arising from any claim or claims which may be made by any person or persons, firms, or corporations, against the insured by reason of any negligent act, error or omission in connection with the production of Feature Length Motion Pictures, * * * or any infringement of property or patent rights, or breach of contract rights, or invasion of the rights of privacy (whether under common or statutory law,) or defamation, or slander, or libel, or plagiarism, or any violation of copyright (whether under common or statutory law) arising out of said Motion Pictures, wherever committed or alleged to have been committed by the Insured. * * *

* * * * *

"6. The Insured warrants that as of the effective date of this Insurance and with respect to any coverage granted by this Insurance, it knows of no act, error or omission which might form the basis of a claim against it or in respect of which a claim has already been made against it except as specifically enumerated in this Insurance.

* * * * *

"7. It is understood and agreed that the Underwriters shall be liable only for loss arising from any claim or claims made against the Insured during the effective period of this Insurance or within three (3) years thereafter in respect of any Motion Picture covered hereunder, whether the production of any such Motion Picture shall have been commenced during said effective period or prior thereto, with said liability being limited to that proportion of the loss resulting from any such claim as shall apply to any such Motion Picture or repetition or continuation of loss from any such claim as a result of the continued distribution of such Motion Picture during the effective period of this Insurance."

Within a week or so after the delivery of the certificates, counsel for plaintiff informed the insurance brokers that he thought Clause 7 was ambiguous and requested a clarification. Pursuant to this request, the insurer issued Endorsement No.
2 dated October 31, 1955, the pertinent portion of which reads as follows: "It is further understood and agreed that Clause
No. 7 is deleted in its entirety, and the following substituted therefor: 'Underwriters shall not be liable for loss arising from or by reason of: (a). Any claim, suit or action unless it arises on a picture placed in production during the term of this insurance or on a picture released or first licensed for use during the term of this insurance, and any distribution during or subsequent to the term of this Certificate. (b). Any claim, suit or action unless notice of such claim, suit or action be given to the Underwriters within three years of the expiration or termination date of this Certificate."

The foregoing endorsement was transmitted to plaintiff's attorneys on or about November 8, 1955. The attorneys found the endorsement unsatisfactory, and later notified defendants' agents that it was unacceptable to plaintiff. Although the matter is not of controlling importance, it is to be noted that the trial court held that the endorsement was effective and became a part of the contract.

On or about October 21, 1955, Leo Genn arrived in Los Angeles from England, and was furnished with a copy of the final draft of the screenplay as rewritten and revised. At a meeting held on October 22, 1955, Genn informed plaintiff's representatives that the role of "Browne" was not a proper vehicle for his artistic talents and would detract from his reputation and standing in the motion picture industry.
Mr. Genn declared his refusal to accept said role, but stated that he stood ready to perform the role of "Martel" based upon the original Wilder screenplay. This was the first time that plaintiff, or its representatives, learned that Genn had any objection to the changes and revisions in the script.

In the meantime plaintiff had made arrangements and commitments to commence principal photography based upon the revised script on or about October 31. Plaintiff offered to attempt to make changes in the revised script in an effort to overcome Genn's objections, but he remained adamant in his refusal to appear in the picture unless it was made upon the original Wilder script in which he would play the role of "Martel." Plaintiff refused to utilize Genn's services on this basis and employed another actor to portray the role of "Browne."

On or about November 1, 1955, Genn Company asserted a claim against plaintiff alleging that plaintiff had breached its obligations under the contract whereby Genn was employed and demanded payment of damages in the sum of $35,000 plus traveling and living expenses in excess of $4000. On November 7, 1955, Genn Company instituted legal action against plaintiff wherein it sought recovery of damages in the sum of approximately $39,000, together with interest and costs. Plaintiff immediately notified defendant insurance carriers of the making of the claim and of the filing of the legal action by Genn Company. On March 12, 1956, defendants advised plaintiff that it was their position that the insurance issued by defendants did not cover the claim asserted by Genn Company.

Upon the assertion of the claim by Genn, plaintiff caused its attorneys to investigate the facts and circumstances involved in the controversy. After completing their investigations, plaintiff's counsel recommended that an attempt be made to settle the case upon a reasonable basis. On May 9, 1956, after various negotiations, plaintiff paid to Genn Company the sum of $11,500 by way of compromise and settlement of Genn's claim. This settlement was recommended by plaintiff's counsel.

Plaintiff thereafter instituted the instant action on the insurance contract. After a nonjury trial judgment was rendered for plaintiff in the sum of $11,250, representing 90% of the settlement with Mr. Genn plus the reasonable value of attorneys' services as provided in the policy. The trial court found: that plaintiff notified defendants immediately on receiving knowledge of Mr. Genn's claim; that the compromise settlement was made by plaintiff in good faith; that the settlement was prudent and reasonable in view of the facts and circumstances; that plaintiff neither knew nor should have known of Mr. Genn's claim at the time of applying for insurance or on the effective date thereof; and that "[t]he certificates issued by defendants indemnify plaintiff against loss resulting from breach of contract rights either committed or alleged to have been committed by plaintiff." The court expressly refrained from finding whether plaintiff actually breached the contract with Mr. Genn, but found that "if there were such a breach, it was not an intentional or wilful or deliberate breach" but one which resulted from negligence "in the ordinary course of business."

Appellants' first contention is that the insured event occurred prior to October 17, 1955, the effective date of the policy, and that plaintiff's loss, therefore, is not covered. In the supplement to their opening brief, appellants state their contention as follows: "It also clearly appears that the changes in the script were material, and that they were made before the effective date of the certificates of insurance. The alleged breach of contract by plaintiff, or in the alternative, its alleged negligent act, error or omission in that respect, occurred before the policies ever became effective." This contention is based upon two premises: (1) that under the terms of the contract the insured event consisted of the acts or omission of the insured giving rise to the claim rather than the making or presentation of the claim itself; and (2) that the acts and omission which gave rise to the instant claim were the making of material changes in the movie script without obtaining Genn's approval, all of which occurred before October 17, 1955.

Neither of these premises is tenable. The first runs counter to the trial court's interpretation of the contract—an interpretation which is amply supported by well settled rules of construction. See Cal-Farm Ins. Co. v. Boisseranc, 151 Cal.App. 2d 775, 780, 312 P.2d 401. The second is factually erroneous because it was after the effective date of the insurance that Genn declared his refusal to accept the role of "Browne" in the revised script and plaintiff refused to return to the original screen play. It was approximately two weeks after the effective date of the policy that plaintiff hired a substitute for Genn and proceeded with production dispensing with his services.

Applicable rules of construction were recently stated by this court in City of Santa Monica v. Royal Indemnity Co., 157 Cal. App.2d 50, at pages 54 and 55, 320 P.2d 136, at page 138, quoting from Continental Casualty Co. v. Phoenix Construction Co., 46 Cal.2d 423, 437, 296 P.2d 801, 57 A.L.R. 2d 914; Arenson v. National Automobile and Casualty Insurance Co., 45 Cal.2d 81, 83, 286 P.2d 816; Fageol Truck & Coach Co. v. Pacific Indemnity Co., 18 Cal.2d 731, 747, 117 P.2d 661, and Osborne v. Security Insurance Company, 155 Cal.App.2d 201, 207-208, 318 P.2d 94; “* * * any ambiguity or uncertainty in an insurance policy is to be resolved against the insurer. * * * If semantically permissible, the contract will be given such construction as will fairly achieve its object of securing indemnity to the insured for the losses to which the insurance relates. * * * If the insurer uses language which is uncertain any reasonable doubt will be resolved against it; if the doubt relates to extent or fact of coverage, whether as to peril insured against * * *, the amount of liability * * * or the person or persons protected * * *, the language will be understood in its most inclusive sense, for the benefit of the insured. * * * Where two interpretations equally fair may be made, that which affords the greatest measure of protection to the assured will prevail.”

[1] With these rules of construction in mind, we readily conclude that the trial court's interpretation of the instant contract is correct. The coverage clause above quoted provides that the certificates cover “* * * loss * * * arising from any claim or claims which may be made * * * against the insured by reason of any negligent act, error or omission in connection with the production of Feature Length Motion Pictures * * * or breach of contract rights, * * * arising out of said Motion Pictures, wherever committed or alleged to have been committed by the Insured, * * *.” It is reasonable to conclude that the quoted language expresses an intent to cover loss or liability arising from “any claim or claims which may be made” as distinguished from loss or liability arising from the act or event upon which the claim may be based. This interpretation of the coverage clause is aided by the provisions of paragraph 7 which state that “* * * the Underwriters shall be liable only for loss arising from any claim or claims against the Insured during the effective period of this Insurance, or within three (3) years thereafter in respect of any Motion Picture covered hereunder, whether the production of any such Motion Picture shall have been commenced during said effective period or prior thereto. * * *” Again in paragraph 11 the term “any one loss” is defined to mean “* * * loss arising from any claim or claims made by any person or persons in respect of any act, error, or omissions, including any repetition or continuance thereof.”

The trial court's interpretation of the contract is further aided by the provisions of paragraph 6 whereby the insured warranted that it knew of no act, error or omission “* * * which might form the basis of a claim against it or in respect of which a claim has already been made against it * * *.” If it were the time of the act, error, or omission rather than the time of the assertion of the claim which was determinative of the insurer's liability, the warranty would be without purpose. If the policy were not intended to cover claims arising from acts or errors previously committed, there would have been no reason to call upon the insured to warrant its lack of knowledge of any such act, error, or omission.

Appellants properly concede that a contract of insurance or of indemnity may be so written as to cover liability for events which have occurred prior to the issuance of the policy. There are numerous precedents for sustaining coverage in analogous situations. In Tulare County Power

Co. v. Pacific Surety Co., 43 Cal.App. 315, 325, 185 P. 399, 403, the liability insurance policy purported to insure "against loss or expense arising or resulting from claims upon the assured for damages on account of bodily injuries, including death therefrom, accidentally suffered, or alleged to have been suffered, during the period of this policy * * * when such injuries or death result from accident occurring within the period hereinafter mentioned." A person was killed when he came in contact with an electric line which the insured had negligently installed and maintained. The insurer contended there was no liability for the claim because the negligent acts which caused the injury had been done prior to the issuance of the policy. In rejecting this contention the reviewing court declared: "The accident in question happened 'during the period of this policy,' and we think it entirely immaterial that the installation of the wires which caused the accident occurred two months prior to the issuance of the policy. * * * its [the insurance company's] liability was for accidents occurring during the life of the policy."

Similar contentions by the insurers were rejected in Protex-A-Kar Co. v. Hartford Accident and Indemnity Co., 102 Cal.App. 2d 408, 416, 227 P.2d 509, and Remmer v. Glens Falls Indemnity Company, 140 Cal. App.2d 84, 88, 295 P.2d 19, 57 A.L.R.2d 1379.

[2,3] It appears equally clear that Endorsement No. 2 does not exclude coverage of the claim here involved. Under this Endorsement the insurers are liable for any loss occasioned by any claim arising either (a) on a picture placed in production during the term of the insurance, or (b) on a picture released or first licensed for use during the term of the insurance. It is undisputed that the picture was released for distribution in July, 1956, which was within the one year designated "as the effective period" of the certificates. The trial court also found that the picture was "placed in production during the term and effective period of the certificates." There is ample evidence to sustain this finding.

[4] Furthermore, it is to be noted that one of the pre-trial stipulations provided as follows: "On or about November 1, 1955, and while the aforesaid certificates were in full force and effect, * * * [Genn Company] asserted a claim against plaintiff arising out of and in connection with the production of said motion picture." This stipulation is binding upon the insurers and precludes any successful attack upon the court's finding that Genn's claim was a loss sustained in connection with the production of the picture. Capital National Bank of Sacramento v. Smith, 62 Cal.App.2d 328, 343, 144 P.2d 665; Grand v. Griesinger, 160 Cal.App.2d 397, 325 P.2d 475.

[5] Appellant's second contention, that plaintiff breached its warranty under paragraph 6 of the policy, must be rejected. The warranty was simply to the effect that the insured knew of no act, error or omission which might form the basis of a claim against it. The trial court's finding that plaintiff had no knowledge of the Genn claim on the effective date of the insurance is amply supported by the evidence. Both Mr. Tatelman and Mr. Nichols testified that the script as revised was not substantially different from the original script and both testified that they did not anticipate any objection from Genn by reason of the changes made. " * * * where the insured qualifies his statement regarding a certain material matter by an expression to the effect that he makes such statement only according to his knowledge of the fact or condition involved, untruth or incompleteness of the statement due to ignorance, by the insured, of a fact or facts making the statement untrue or incomplete does not amount to a breach of warranty." 27 Cal.Jur.2d 725, § 239.

[6] There is evidence in the record that in accordance with industry custom and usage Mr. Tatelman believed he had the right to make or obtain script changes which he believed would improve the story. Under such circumstances there would not be any duty on the part of the insured to notify the insurer of a decision to revise the screenplay prior to any knowledge of the actor's objections to the revisions.

Third, appellant contends that the Genn claim arose by reason of a "wilful" act of the insured, and that the appellant was thereby exonerated by virtue of Insurance Code, § 533 which provides: "An insurer is not liable for a loss caused by the wilful act of the insured * * *". As has been pointed out above, the trial court expressly refrained from deciding whether or not the insured actually had breached its contract with Genn, but it did find that "* * * if there were such a breach, it was not an intentional or wilful or deliberate breach by plaintiff, but was a breach which resulted in the ordinary course of business from negligent act, error and lack of due care on the part of plaintiff and its employees."

In urging the applicability of section 533 of the Insurance Code, appellant argues that the term "wilful act" as used in the statute means simply an act performed intentionally and deliberately, regardless of the intent or purpose with which it was performed. Respondent's position is that the term "wilful" as used in the statute denotes performance of an act for which no reasonable excuse can be given.

Both constructions advanced above find support in the decisions. Depending on the context, the terms "wilful" and "wilful act" as used in statutes have quite different significations attached to them. See e. g. 45 Words and Phrases, p. 186, Id., Willful Act, p. 246. The terms are used in one sense to denote the quality of an act or the intent with which it was done. See McPheeters v. Board of Medical Examiners of California, 103 Cal.App. 297, 301, 284 P. 938; Alden v. Mayfield, 33 Cal.App. 724, 727, 166 P.2d 382. More often the terms denote simply an act deliberately and voluntarily performed. See Davis v. Morris, 37 Cal. App.2d 269, 274, 99 P.2d 345; In re Trombley, 31 Cal.2d 801, 807, 193 P.2d 734 (construction of the term "wilful" in sections 203 and 216 of the Labor Code). Parsons v. Smilie, 97 Cal. 647, 654-656, 32 P. 702;

Crowell v. City of Riverside, 26 Cal.App.2d 566, 581, 80 P.2d 120 (construction of "wilful" in § 3275 of the Civil Code).

[7] But the fact that a word is common to two statutes does not mean that a decision construing it in one statute must control in the construction of the other. Union Iron Works v. Industrial Acc. Com., 190 Cal. 33, 43, 210 P. 410. Thus we must determine the sense in which the Legislature employed the term "wilful act" in enacting § 533 of the Insurance Code. See generally, 23 Cal.Jur. 745, § 122 et seq. In McKenzie v. Scottish U. & N. Ins. Co., 112 Cal. 548, 557-558, 44 P. 922, 925, the Supreme Court in discussing the legislative intent in the enactment of § 2629 of the Civil Code, the statutory predecessor of Insurance Code, § 533, said:

"The ordinary negligence of the insured and his agents has long been held as a part of the risk which the insurer takes upon himself, and the existence of which, where it is the proximate cause of the loss, does not absolve the insurer from liability; but willful exposure, gross negligence, negligence amounting to misconduct, etc., have often been held to release the insurer from such liability.

"To set at rest questions involving the different degrees of negligence, and the results following therefrom, we may reasonably suppose, was the object of the framers of our Civil Code. Under section 2629, supra, [now § 533 of the Insurance Code] the nice distinctions often made necessary are dispensed with; and the general proposition is established that no form of negligence on the part of the insured, or his agents or others, leading to a loss, avoids the policy, unless it amounts to a willful act on the part of the insured. The Code thereby sets at rest a fruitful cause of litigation." (Emphasis added.)

[8] A "wilful act" as used in this statute connotes something more blameworthy than the sort of misconduct involved in ordinary negligence, and something more than the mere intentional doing of an act constituting such negligence. Cf. Meek v. Fowler, 3 Cal.2d 420, 426, 45 P.2d 194; Gimenez v. Rissen, 12 Cal.App.2d 152, 161, 55 P.2d 1254.

[9] The finding that the breach, if one occurred, was not "wilful" is supported by substantial evidence. Cf. Pellas v. Ocean Acc. & Guar. Corp., 24 Cal.App.2d 528, 535, 75 P.2d 635. Mr. Tatelman testified in substance that he made arrangements for filming from the revised screenplay on the assumption that Mr. Genn would play his role in the revised version without objection. It is a legitimate inference that when Mr. Genn's objections were made known, it was too late to do anything but proceed to produce the film on the revised version. See McPheeters v. Board of Medical Examiners of California, 103 Cal.App. 297, 301, 284 P. 938, and see also Nome Beach Lighterage and Transportation Co. v. Munich Assur., C.C., 123 F. 820, 825-826, reversed 9 Cir., 133 F. 636, on retrial, judgment for the insured Nome Beach Lighterage and Transportation Co. v. Standard Marine Ins. Co., C.C., 156 F. 484, affirmed 9 Cir., 167 F. 119, 120.

The fourth of appellants' major contentions is that the policy covers only a loss arising from a "negligent act, error or omission" on the part of the insured, and that liability for a loss arising from a "breach of contract" must be limited to a negligent breach. In other words, the argument is that the element of negligence must be present to qualify the breach of contract as an insured risk. The argument is academic in view of the trial court's express finding that the claimed breach of contract rights "* * * arose by reason of negligent act, error or omission on the part of plaintiff in connection with the production of said motion picture." Although the finding does not recite the specific act or omission constituting the negligence, it was not unreasonable for the trial court to conclude that Mr. Tatelman had been negligent in failing to notify Mr. Genn at an earlier date of the proposed changes in his role and in failing to seek his cooperation and acquiescence in changes before proceeding with other arrangements.

Finally, appellant contends that the trial court committed reversible error in failing to find whether or not there was an actual breach of contract by respondent, arguing that the validity of the Genn claim constituted a vital issue because "[i]f there was no breach [by the plaintiff] there was no loss for which defendant could possibly be liable." This argument, in effect, is simply another attack on the trial court's conclusion that "The certificates issued by defendants indemnify plaintiff against loss resulting from breach of contract rights either committed or alleged to have been committed by plaintiff." (Emphasis added.) That construction of the contract is well supported by precedent and authority, as discussed supra.

[10-13] By the terms of the instant contract the insurer was not obligated to defend the insured against asserted claims. But when the insurer denied coverage and disclaimed liability, the insured acquired the right to make any reasonable and bona fide compromise of the claim against it. Ritchie v. Anchor Casualty Co., 135 Cal. App.2d 245, 258, 286 P.2d 1000; Lamb v. Belt Casualty Co., 3 Cal.App.2d 624, 630, 40 P.2d 311. The insurer by the terms of its contract did not agree to indemnify against liability, but rather against 90% of the loss arising from the making of a claim alleging negligent act, error or omission or breach of contract rights. "A policy providing for indemnity against the liability is to be differentiated from a policy providing for indemnity against loss or damage." 1 Richards, Insurance, 612-614, § 166. (Emphasis added.) The settlement by plaintiff with Mr. Genn was presumptive evidence of liability of the insured. Ritchie v. Anchor Casualty Co., supra, 135 Cal.App.2d 245, 250, 286 P.2d 1000; Chrysler Motors of California v. Royal Indemnity Co., 76 Cal. App.2d 785, 788, 174 P.2d 318. However, wholly apart from that presumption there is ample evidence to sustain the trial court's finding that the settlement of the instant claim was reasonable and prudent in the circumstances. It was not necessary for the trial court to find that plaintiff had in fact breached its contract with Genn in order to find a loss for which the appellant was liable.

The judgment is affirmed.

Oct. 21, 1958.

Hearing Denied Dec. 17, 1958.

Action against sanitary district for damages resulting when home was flooded with sewer water and debris because district's manhole was plugged. The Superior Court, County of San Mateo, Louis B. Dematteis, J., rendered judgment for homeowner, and district appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, P. J., held that jury, under evidence, was entitled to draw inferences that there had been improper inspection of sewer system and that district was guilty of negligence.

KAUFMAN, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff Fred L. Mulloy his wife, Clarice, and plaintiff as guardian of his minor child Beverly, filed a complaint setting forth two causes of action against the defendant Sanitary District. The first charges the defendant with the creation of a private nuisance of December 1, 1955, when the plaintiffs' home was flooded with sewer water and debris; the second charges the defendant with the improper construction, operation and maintenance of sewer line servicing the plaintiffs' home. The defendant sanitary district appeals from a judgment rendered on a jury verdict in favor of the plaintiffs. The following questions are raised by the appeal.

1) Is a sanitary district liable for a private nuisance resulting from an obstruction in the sewer line which the district has failed to discover?

2) If so, does the evidence here support the verdict?

The facts viewed most favorably to the plaintiffs are as follows: On December 1, 1955, the plaintiffs had lived for several years at 203 Manor Drive in Sharp Park in San Mateo County. Defendant, a sanitary district organized pursuant to Health and Safety Code section 6400 et seq., operated a sewer system which serviced the plaintiffs' home. The system consists of numerous pipes of varying sizes running to a sewage treatment plant. The pipes themselves do not actually pass through the manholes, as a trough at the base of each manhole serves this function. Each manhole has two openings at the base, one for entry and one for discharge. There are approximately 500 manholes in the defendant's system. One of these manholes is located directly in front of the plaintiffs' home.

On December 1, 1955, the plaintiff came home from work about 5 p. m. He did not notice anything unusual about the manhole in front of his home or detect any unusual odors in the street. After dinner, the plaintiff heard gurgling in the bathroom. He went to investigate and saw airbubbles coming from the toilet. The bubbles stopped and he returned to the living room. Shortly thereafter the noises began again. The plaintiff returned to the bathroom and flushed the toilet. The water began to back up in the toilet and in the bathtub, soon flooding the bathroom and ultimately the other rooms in the house. About four inches of sewer water and debris was deposited throughout the house causing extensive damage. As soon as the plaintiff saw the water backing up, about 6:45 p. m. he called the Sharp Park Fire Department. Plaintiffs made several more calls to the fire department during the next 20 minutes, but did not call the defendant district. The superintendent of the defendant district was first notified of the occurrence at about 7:00 p.m. by a plumber called by the plaintiffs and the fire department. When the defendant's employees arrived at approximately 7:10 p. m., most of the damage had been done and the water ceased coming from the manhole. Defendant's employees removed the cover and ascertained that the manhole was plugged and full of water. They inserted a steel rod into the manhole and dislodged a broom or mop wedged in the pipe. The broom or mop was wide enough to cover the mouth of the 6 inch pipe and had a broken handle about 18 inches long. The plaintiffs and a neighbor testified that there was other debris in the manhole, some of which was removed and some of which was washed away. One of defendant's employees and the plumber did not remember any additional debris. The time required to unplug the manhole was estimated from 5-15 minutes by the various witnesses.

Defendant's evidence indicated that it employed two men whose principal duties were the inspection and maintenance of the pump house, sewer lines and manholes. Occasionally, these men also performed routine installation and other services for the district. Under normal circumstances, a routine inspection of each of the 500 manholes in the district was made every 30 days. Unless some debris is found, a routine inspection takes about one minute and consists of lifting the manhole cover, which weighs about 60 lbs., and looking for trash, sludge, sticks, etc. Records are kept by the defendant of all inspections and maintenance work performed in the district. These records indicate that the manhole in front of plaintiffs' home was inspected on a two hour inspection tour November 30, 1955 (the day before the occurrence complained of) and no obstruction of the sewer was seen at that time. Peculiarly, defendant's records as to the inspection of this particular manhole are more detailed than its records about any other. The testimony of defendant's employees as to the precise route taken by them on November 30, 1955, is in conflict. It is clear however that neither employee descended into the manhole on November 30, 1955. The area covered by the November 30 inspection consisted of 50-60 manholes in an area of 2-3 square miles. Another employee of the defendant's testified that it would take 2-4 hours to conduct a routine inspection of this area if no difficulty or obstruction was encountered. Defendant's records also reveal two prior inspections of the line in question on July 16, 1955, and October 10, 1955. No plugs or obstructions were found on either of these occasions. Defendant's superintendent stated that it was good practice to conduct occasional flushings and cleansings of sewer lines and that men and equipment were available for this purpose. The practice, however, was not to flush the lines unless some obstacle was discovered and the line serving plaintiffs' home had not been flushed prior to December 1, 1955.

It is apparent from the above that there is ample evidence to sustain the verdict. We need therefore to concern ourselves with the first and main question raised by this appeal.

[1,2] Defendant argues that as a public agency engaged in a governmental activity it cannot be held liable in the absence of a special statute. However, we are here concerned with direct damage to real property, for which liability existed even at common law. Ambrosini v. Alisal Sanitary District, 154 Cal.App.2d 720, 317 P.2d 33. In this state it has long been recognized that a governmental unit is liable for creating and maintaining a nuisance. Phillips v. City of Pasadena, 27 Cal.2d 104, 162 P.2d 625; Hassell v. City and County of San Francisco, 11 Cal.2d 168, 78 P.2d 1021; Adams v. City of Modesto, 131 Cal. 501, 63 P. 1083; Peterson v. City of Santa Rosa, 119 Cal. 387, 51 P. 557. We recently applied this rule to a sanitary district in the Ambrosini case, supra. In considering whether facts alleged are sufficient to constitute a cause of action in nuisance, the plaintiff must show that a legislative body has declared the condition complained of to be a nuisance. Vater v. County of Glenn, 49 Cal.2d 815 and 820, 323 P.2d 85.

[3] Section 3479 of the Civil Code provides in part: "Anything which is injurious to health, or is indecent or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property, so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property * * * is a nuisance." It cannot be questioned that the facts proved do constitute a nuisance within the above statutory definition. Adams v. City of Modesto, 131 Cal. 501, 63 P. 1083.

Appellant contends that it cannot be held liable on the theory of negligence and hence the court improperly instructed the jury on this subject.

This contention is answered in Kramer v. City of Los Angeles, 147 Cal. 668, 82 P. 334, where the city was held liable for negligently allowing the outlet of a drain to be clogged with debris, causing the bursting of a pipe on plaintiff's premises.

[4,5] The jury here, under the evidence, was entitled to draw an inference of improper inspection of the sewer system and hence the appellant was guilty of negligence. Also under this theory appellant was not entitled to notice. District of Columbia v. Gray, 6 App.D.C. 314, at page 319.

We conclude that the judgment finds support in the record before us on both the nuisance and negligence theories.

Hearing Denied Dec. 10, 1958.

Defendant was convicted for robbery. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Le Roy Dawson, J., entered judgment. Defendant appealed therefrom and from the sentence, and from order denying motion for new trial and from all prior orders. Defendant also applied for writ of habeas corpus. The District Court of Appeal, Herndon, J., held that the evidence afforded adequate basis for inference that defendant participated in robbery by driving the get-away automobile.

Judgment and order denying new trial affirmed; appeals from sentence and from all prior orders dismissed; application for writ of habeas corpus denied.

Warren Paul Beghtel, appellant, in pro. per.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

HERNDON, Justice.

Appellant Beghtel and one Fritz were charged with robbery and, in a second count, with kidnapping for the purpose of robbery. Appellant was charged with one prior robbery conviction and Fritz was charged with two priors. Both entered pleas of not guilty. Appellant's motion to dismiss made pursuant to Penal Code, § 995 was denied.

When the case was called for trial, Fritz withdrew his original plea and entered a plea of guilty to robbery in the first degree. Pursuant to stipulation, appellant's case was submitted on the transcript of the evidence taken at the preliminary hearing, both sides reserving the right to introduce additional evidence. The only additional evidence offered or taken at the time of trial consisted of cross-examination of the arresting officers by appellant's counsel and the proof of appellant's prior felony conviction. The trial court found appellant guilty of robbery and not guilty of the kidnapping charge. His motion for a new trial and his application for probation were denied, and he was sentenced to State prison.

In his opening brief, appellant states that he is appealing from the judgment, the order denying his motion for a new trial and from "all prior orders made in the case." As indicated by its caption, the opening brief also purports to constitute an application for a writ of habeas corpus. Appellant's contentions relate exclusively to the sufficiency of the evidence to warrant the magistrate's order holding him for trial after the preliminary hearing and to support the judgment of conviction. Since appellant's cross-examination of the police officers neither added anything of substance to the People's case as made at the preliminary hearing nor in any way detracted from it, it is fair to say that the magistrate's order and the judgment of conviction rest upon the same evidence as summarized in the following recital.

On November 17, 1957, at about 8:45 p. m. codefendant Fritz entered a liquor store in Los Angeles, pulled a gun, announced

"This is a holdup" and took approximately $300 in cash from the owner and operator, a Mrs. Hayward. The money taken consisted of currency taken from the cash register and several rolls of coins of various denominations taken from a desk near the safe in a back room.

Twenty minutes later appellant and Fritz were arrested at a place in Los Angeles about five miles distant from the scene of the robbery. The arresting officers noticed an automobile being driven in an erratic manner, wheeling back and forth across the traffic lanes. They ordered the car to the curb. The car was being driven by appellant but was registered to Fritz, who was seated on the front seat beside the appellant. The police had the occupants of the car step out and a routine sobriety test was commenced with appellant. As Fritz opened the car door on the righthand side a light came on inside the car illuminating the floorboards and one of the officers observed a roll of dimes on the floorboards and another roll of coins lodged under the accelerator. The officer observing the roll of coins stated to his associate in the presence of the defendants that apparently they had something more than a case of drunk driving. Upon being asked, Fritz indicated his consent to the officers' search of the vehicle. Fritz was directed to stand away from the car, and as one of the officers proceeded to look into the vehicle, Fritz began to move between two rows of parked cars. The other officer ordered him to stop and at that time both defendants were handcuffed.

The officer then resumed his search of the car and found a box containing eight .32 caliber shells in the glove compartment. When asked if there was a gun to go with these shells, both defendants declared they didn't know of any gun. The officer then looked under the right-hand side of the front seat and found a .32 caliber Mauser German automatic and wads of currency of various denominations, seven rolls of quarters, three rolls of dimes, six rolls of nickels, five rolls of pennies and $2.75 in loose change. When asked whether this was their money, both defendants failed to respond. Both also stood mute when asked the question "Whose gun is this?" Other articles found on the back seat of the car were two face masks, two men's yellow silk baseball-type caps, two pairs of gloves, one of cotton and the other of rubber, a pair of multi-colored sun glasses and a gray felt hat. The defense presented no witnesses.

[1] The sufficiency of the foregoing evidence to sustain the judgment of conviction is self evident from its recital "All persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether it be felony or misdemeanor, and whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, or, not being present, have advised and encouraged its commission, * * * are principals in any crime so committed." Penal Code, § 31. All participants in a robbery are chargeable as principals and are equally guilty. People v. Best, 43 Cal.App.2d 100, 105, 110 P.2d 504.

[2] Manifestly the evidence afforded a more than adequate basis for the inference that appellant participated in the robbery by driving the get-away car. As stated in People v. Raucho, 8 Cal.App.2d 655, 664, 47 P.2d 1108, 1112, "* * * the perpetration of a robbery is not completed the moment the stolen property is in the possession of the robbers. Robbery, a combination of the crime of assault with that of larceny, includes, as does larceny, the element of asportation, and this taking away is a transaction which continues as the perpetrators depart from the place where the property was seized."

[3] The evidence strongly indicates that appellant was arrested while performing the act which constitutes the element of asportation. He was arrested twenty minutes after the holdup, driving the gunman's car which contained the loot taken from the victim of the robbery. A roll of the stolen coins lay at his feet as he drove. As stated in People v. Beaulieu, 144 Cal.App.2d 536, 541, 301 P.2d 304, 306: "* * * it is apparent that it [the evidence] adequately justifies the inference that appellant aided and abetted Beaulieu and Fritz in the commission of the robbery by assisting them in making a 'getaway.'" See People v. Boss, 210 Cal. 245, 250-251, 290 P. 881. In numerous cases robbery convictions have been sustained on similar evidence. See People v. Mora, 139 Cal. App.2d 266, 271, 293 P.2d 522, and People v. Bonner, 5 Cal.App.2d 623, 631, 43 P.2d 343, and cases therein cited.

[4, 5] Appellant's contention that the evidence produced at the preliminary hearing was not sufficient to warrant holding him for trial is obviously untenable, since the "reasonable or probable cause" required to uphold the commitment of a defendant is established by proof sufficient to cause a person of ordinary caution or prudence conscientiously to entertain a reasonable suspicion that a public offense had been committed in which the defendant had participated. People v. Platt, 124 Cal.App.2d 123, 131, 268 P.2d 529; Weber v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 68, 69, 216 P.2d 871.

[6, 7] It is equally obvious that the application for a writ of habeas corpus constitutes an attempt to invoke a clearly inappropriate remedy. In re Lindley, 29 Cal. 2d 709, 722-723, 177 P.2d 918; People v. Lempia, 144 Cal.App.2d 393, 398, 301 P. 2d 40. Furthermore, since appellant is confined in San Quentin State prison in Marin County he is not within the habeas corpus jurisdiction of this court. People v. Lempia, supra, 144 Cal.App.2d 393, 398, 301 P.2d 40; People v. Martinelli, 118 Cal.App. 2d 94, 98, 257 P.2d 37.

The application for the writ of habeas corpus is denied. The appeals from the sentence and "from all prior orders made in the case" are dismissed. The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

Prosecution for pool selling and bookmaking in two counts. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Edwin L. The District Court of Appeal, Fourn, J., held that where accused was charged in one count with engaging in pool selling and bookmaking upon result and purported result of horse race, and in second count that on certain date he received certain moneys wagered upon horse race, criminal venture was divisible transaction, and counts were based upon separate and distinct acts.

Order affirmed.

1. Criminal Law §565

In prosecution for pool selling and bookmaking in two counts, where arresting officer testified that on certain month, day and time he went to place of arrest and that accused was arrested one half hour later on same day, evidence was sufficient to show that offense was committed within required three years of filing of information, especially where officer had been policeman for only two and one half years notwithstanding that officer did not designate the year. In prosecution for pool selling and bookmaking in two counts, where counsel for accused indicated that it was not necessary to proceed further with examination of arresting officer as to how bookmaking was commonly conducted in area, on appeal accused could not argue that there was no sufficient foundation in record to establish that officer was qualified to testify. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 337a, subds, 1, 3.

James L. Garcia, Compton, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Lynn Henry Johnson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

FOURTH, Justice.

This is an appeal from an order granting probation in a bookmaking case.

In an information filed in Los Angeles county, the appellant was charged in count I with a violation of Penal Code, section 337a, subd. 1, in that on July 11, 1957, he had engaged in poolselling and bookmaking upon the result and purported result of a horse race; in count II he was charged with a violation of subd. 3 of the abovementioned section, in that on July, 11, 1957, he received certain moneys wagered upon a horse race. It was also charged that appellant had previously been convicted of the crime of assault with intent to rob and that he had served a term in a state prison therefor.

The appellant pleaded not guilty and a trial by jury was waived. By stipulation the matter was submitted upon the transcript of the hearing at the preliminary examination. Each side reserved the right to introduce further evidence. The prosecution rested and the appellant offered additional evidence. The appellant was found guilty. No finding was made as to the alleged prior conviction because the district attorney, for some reason which is not readily apparent from the record, saw fit not to introduce any evidence with reference thereto. The appellant was sentenced to jail for sixty days on each count, the sentences to run concurrently, and then such sentences were suspended and appellant was placed upon probation for one year upon condition that he pay a fine of $300 and that he not engage in bookmaking and similar activities for the same period.

A résumé of the facts is as follows: On July 11, 1957, officer Hubert Greene of the police department went to a hot dog stand located on the southwest corner of Third and Central streets. The officer had been on the police department for two and one-half years, and for the last three and one-half months had been engaged in investigating and arresting persons for bookmaking in Los Angeles county. He had made a study of race track gambling and its modus operandi as carried on in Los Angeles county for race tracks and bookmaking, and was familiar with the customs and manner in which poolselling and bookmaking are conducted in Los Angeles county and had made twenty or twenty-five arrests for such offenses.

The officer seated himself at the hot dog stand and ordered a malt and a sandwich. While he was seated there an unidentified female seated herself next to him. They conversed, and after the conversation this female walked to the appellant, held a short conversation, and then returned to her place next to the officer at the bar. The officer remained at the bar and observed approximately three persons walk to the appellant, have a short conversation, and apparently hand to appellant something that appeared to be money. The appellant went to a telephone and appeared to make a telephone call after the other persons had given him money.

The officer then walked over to the appellant and stated that he had a good horse in the fifth that he would like to get if the horse had not been scratched. The appellant replied that he did not know the officer. The officer informed the appellant that he, the officer, lived right around the corner, that he did not play very often and that he had never made a bet with the appellant before. The appellant then stated, "I guess you are all right," and directed the officer to go to a car outside where he could find a copy of the National Daily Reporter. The officer went to the automobile and was handed a copy of the National Daily Reporter by an unidentified person in the car. He consulted the scratch sheet and selected a horse in the fifth race at Hollywood Park in Inglewood by the name of "Maquita." The officer then returned to the appellant and stated, "I would like $3.00 to win on number five in the fifth." The appellant repeated the bet and took the $3. The appellant walked to the telephone and appeared to make a telephone call. The appellant then walked to the rear of the hot dog stand and the officer gave a pre-arranged signal to his partners. When they arrived the appellant was placed under arrest.

The defendant testified in his own behalf, and in effect, stated that he did not take or place a bet with or for the officer.

The appellant asserts (1) that the evidence is insufficient to show the offense was committed within three years of the filing of the information; (2) that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the conviction.

[1] Appellant argues, with reference to the first contention, that the burden was upon the prosecution to show that the information was filed within the period of the statute of limitations, and that the state failed to carry its burden. Section 800 of the Penal Code provides as follows:

"An indictment for any other felony than murder, the embezzlement of public money, the acceptance of a bribe by a public official or a public employee, or the falsification of public records, must be found, and information filed, or case certified to the superior court, within three years after its commission. * * *

In this particular cause the information was filed on August 22, 1957, charging the appellant with the commission of the offenses on July 11, 1957. The officer testified that on July 11, at 1:30 o'clock p.m., he went to the hot dog stand, and that the appellant was arrested at 2:00 p.m. on July 11. Appellant seems to insist that there is no designation of what year was meant by the officer. We are not required to close our eyes to the commonly accepted fact that in ordinary speech a reference to "July," without mention of the year, indicates a reference to the "July" immediately past. Furthermore, in this particular instance, the officer had been a policeman for only two and one-half years, and it is obvious that he referred to July 11, 1957, and not to a July previous to such employment.

[2] Appellant is incorrect in his assertion that there was no evidence as to how bookmaking is commonly conducted in Los Angeles. The officer did testify that he had made twenty-five arrests for bookmaking, that he had testified in court fifteen times as a result of such arrests and that he was familiar with the customs and manner in which bookmaking was conducted in Los Angeles county. He also testified that bookmakers in Los Angeles county commonly used the National Daily Reporter, the Daily Racing Form, and he described the different materials in which bookmakers record bets. In any event, in this particular case, it does not lie with the appellant to complain at this point, for it is clear from the record that the officer was going to testify more fully as to the customs of bookmakers in Los Angeles county but was cut off by counsel for the appellant, as indicated by the following excerpt from the record:

"Q. [by the Deputy District Attorney]: Officer, what documents, records and paraphernalia are commonly used in bookmaking and pool selling, in Los Angeles County? A. The documents most commonly used are the National Daily Reporter and the daily racing form and different materials in which bookmakers record bets, and formica and paper and pencil and pencils and ink.

"The Court: Do you want to stipulate?

"Mr. Margid [Counsel for defendant]: I think he is about through.

"The Court: I noticed that you were trying to get his attention there.

"Mr. Margid: I was telling him under the facts that I knew it, he doesn't need all these questions he is asking.

"The Court: Are you satisfied then as to his qualifications, Mr. Margid?

"Mr. Margid: Yes, I am.

"The Court: All right, proceed.

"Mr. Plunkett: Thank you, counsel."

Counsel for appellant having indicated, as above set forth, that it was not necessary to proceed further, the appellant surely cannot now press the argument that there was no sufficient foundation in the record. People v. Boyles, 45 Cal.2d 652, 656, 290 P.2d 535.

[3,4] Appellant also asserts that in count II the charge of accepting a bet in violation of Penal Code, section 337a, subd. 3, was a necessarily included offense in count I, the charge of bookmaking in violation of Penal Code, section 337a, subd. 1, and that therefore he cannot be convicted on both counts.

The mere fact that multiple convictions are based upon acts closely related in point of time and arising out of the same criminal venture, as was the situation in this case, does not raise the bar of section 654 of the Penal Code. In re Chapman, 43 Cal.2d 385, 389, 273 P.2d 817. The question is, whether or not each conviction was based upon a separate and distinct act (People v. Knowles, 35 Cal.2d 175, 187, 217 P.2d 1), whether or not the criminal transaction was a divisible transaction, and the answer in each case must be resolved upon its own facts. People v. Brown, 49 Cal.2d 577, 591, 320 P.2d 5.

In our opinion, the criminal venture in the case at bar was a divisible transaction, and counts I and II were based upon separate and distinct acts.

The order is affirmed.

Prosecution for sale of narcotics. The Superior Court, Fresno County, Arthur C. Shepard, J., entered judgment upon verdict of guilty and overruled motion for new trial and accused appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, P. J., held that trial judge's questioning of witness for accused in regard to whether witness stated in prior report facts given in evidence by her, without indicating that they were inconsistent, was not prejudicial error, where question did not call for production of report and there was no objection made to form of question.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇨1166½(12)

In prosecution for sale of narcotics, trial judge's questioning of witness for accused in regard to whether witness stated in prior report facts given in evidence by her, without indicating that they were inconsistent, was not prejudicial error, where question did not call for production of report and there was no objection made to form of question. West's Ann. Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

2. Witnesses ⇨246(2)

The trial judge may make reasonable examination of witnesses in course of trial.

Betty Lou Lamoreaux, Fresno, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Jack E. Goertzen, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Presiding Justice.

Defendant-appellant was convicted by a jury of unlawful sale of narcotics (Violation of Sec. 11500 of the Health and Safety Code). He admitted a prior conviction of a felony (possession of narcotics). A reversal is sought on the claimed ground of prejudicial misconduct of the trial judge.

According to the testimony of one O. C. Reed, special employee of the Narcotics Bureau, on February 20, 1958, he and one Ann Massey, a woman who had been previously convicted of selling narcotics on different occasions, saw defendant near the International Pool Hall and Bar, in Fresno. Defendant spoke to Ann and continued on into the bar. Later, he came back to her and she told him Reed would like to buy some narcotics. Defendant said he would go and obtain some but he would have to have the money ($5) for a single capsule. Reed counted out five one-dollar bills. Defendant placed them in his pocket and told her he would return in a little while. Several narcotic agents were stationed in a Japanese hotel room nearby and they testified they saw the money pass to defendant and that Reed gave a known signal, by tipping his hat to the other officers, that defendant was going to obtain narcotics for him. Defendant drove away in a car with a known user. Reed began talking to Ann. About 30 minutes later defendant returned and went into the bar and Reed followed. Defendant told Reed to remain there because he wanted to talk with Ann, alone. He walked out to Ann and had a conversation with her. Ann and defendant walked toward an alley and Reed followed them. He saw defendant pass something to Ann and then defendant disappeared. Ann returned to Reed and gave him a capsule and said: "This is the stuff". She said defendant was afraid of Reed. Reed took the capsule containing a powdery substance to his hotel and it was subsequently analyzed and found to contain opium. The other officers corroborated Reed's testimony insofar as they could see from the hotel window and saw the money pass to defendant.

Defendant failed to testify at the trial but produced Ann as his witness. She had been sentenced to prison on several sales of narcotics and apparently had previously applied for probation and had made a statement to the probation officer in reference to her activities in this traffic which the trial court in this action had previously read and considered. Her story on the witness stand was generally that she and Reed were talking near the International Pool Hall about 5 p. m. on the day in question; that she met defendant walking down the street, stopped him, and inquired if he would give her a ride to her mother's home; that Reed handed defendant $5; that he took it and asked her what it was for; that she told defendant that Reed had made a mistake, that the $5 was meant for her, and that defendant then gave it to her; that the purpose of the transaction was for the purchase of narcotics because she had agreed to furnish Reed with it; that after defendant returned the money to her he left and later came back to see if she was ready to take the ride; that she walked across the bridge, picked up a capsule she had hidden away underneath the fence, took it back and gave it to Reed; that she and Reed went to a hotel and divided the capsule; that Reed just "sniffed" a little from his finger and said he was going up to his room and use it; that she made the sale to Reed without any help from defendant; and that this transaction was the reason she was in prison. She was sentenced on more than one count for the sale of narcotics.

[1] Counsel for defendant rested his case. A recess was taken and thereafter the trial judge asked the witness to resume the stand. She did so and the judge inquired: "Now, Ann, you remember that you made a report to me through the probation office in respect to these transactions?"

"The Witness: Yes.

"The Court: Did you tell me any of the things in that report that you have told here? (Pause). You are not afraid of me, are you?"

"The Witness: No.

"The Court: Have I ever said anything unkindly to you?"

"The Witness: No.

"The Court: All right. You remember you made that report through the probation officer? You didn't tell me any of these things in that report, did you?"

"The Witness: No.

"The Court: That is all."

The prosecution called Mr. Reed in rebuttal, who denied Ann's story in reference to "sniffing" the narcotic or using it in any form. The people rested their case and arguments to the jury followed the next morning. Before the jury returned with a verdict against defendant his counsel moved for a mistrial on the grounds that the court committed prejudicial error in relation to the examination of the witness as above related. The motion was denied. The same question was again considered by the trial judge on a motion for new trial which was denied.

The claim is that the judge's questioning indicated to the jury his belief that the witness was not telling the truth; that the witness had made a prior inconsistent statement, and the court endeavored to impeach the witness' testimony without producing or showing the claimed prior inconsistent statement to her for examination and explanation; that this form and method of impeachment is not authorized and that the error was not cured by subsequent instructions, citing Section 2052 of the Code of Civil Procedure; People v. Giacomino, 347 Ill. 523, 180 N.E. 437, 84 A.L.R. 1168, 1172, 1178; People v. Zammora, 66 Cal. App.2d 166, 210, 152 P.2d 180; and 3 Cal. Jur.2d 648, sec. 162.

[2] A close examination of the questions propounded do not show that the trial judge indicated the witness had made a contrary or inconsistent statement to that made on the witness stand. The examination only went to the question as to whether the witness stated in a prior report all the facts here related without indicating that they were inconsistent. She stated she did not. The question did not call for the production of the report. There was no objection by counsel for defendant to the form of the question. No motion was made to strike the answer and no request was made that the jury be instructed to disregard the questions and answers. There was a general instruction given to the effect that if any expression of the trial judge seemed to indicate an opinion as to which witnesses were worthy of belief, the jury was instructed to disregard it and that this was a matter solely for the jurors to determine. It is a well-established principle of law that a trial judge may make reasonable examination of witnesses in the course of a trial. People v. Ottey, 5 Cal.2d 714, 721, 56 P.2d 193; People v. Deacon, 117 Cal.App.2d 206, 209, 255 P.2d 98; People v. Corrigan, 48 Cal. 2d 551, 555, 310 P.2d 953. The importance in achieving truth in placing guilt on deserving shoulders in equal to the importance of achieving truth to exonerate the innocent. We are convinced that the questions, as propounded, and the answers given, did not constitute prejudicial error sufficient to warrant a reversal, nor that it would be reasonably probable that a different result would have been reached had the report been produced. People v. Watson, 46 Cal.2d 818, 299 P.2d 243; People v. Hume, 56 Cal.App.2d 262, 266, 132 P.2d 52; People v. Corrigan, 48 Cal.2d 551, 556, 310 P.2d 953; *People v. Emmett E. Patten, Monrovia, Glen A. Duke, Los Angeles, for appellant Cotterman.

Youngdahl & Glick and Norman W. Alschuler, Los Angeles, for respondent Reynolds.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal by Audrey L. Cotterman, a niece of the deceased Canfield Wilson, from a judgment awarding letters of administration to Lola Reynolds, the legitimated natural daughter of the deceased.

In this case there was a three-way contest for letters of administration. Fern Forister claimed to be the common-law wife of the decedent under a purported common-law marriage in Nevada, and as such entitled to letters in his estate. Lola Reynolds, the daughter of Fern Forister, claimed to be the legitimated natural daughter of the decedent, and as such entitled to letters in his estate. Appellant, Audrey L. Cotterman, claimed letters as the daughter of a deceased brother of the deceased.

The sole question at issue is whether the facts support a finding that Lola Reynolds was adopted and legitimated, pursuant to the provisions of section 230 of the Civil Code. That section reads as follows:

"The father of an illegitimate child, by publicly acknowledging it as his own, receiving it as such, with the consent of his wife, if he is married, into his family, and otherwise treating it as if it were a legitimate child, thereby adopts it as such; and such child is thereupon deemed for all purposes legitimate from the time of its birth. The foregoing provisions of this Chapter do not apply to such an adoption." (Enacted 1872.)

It is not contended, on this appeal, that Lola Reynolds was not the daughter of decedent. There was, without question, sufficient evidence to warrant such a finding.

The decedent, during his lifetime, was at one time a bartender. He was married to Marjory Yuill on March 11, 1931, and they separated in 1935, and a final decree of divorce was entered between them on August 24, 1938. He was married to Jean Kellner on September 13, 1939, which marriage was terminated by a final divorce on March 29, 1948. Fern Forister met the decedent about December 10, 1932, and they stayed together for about two weeks, and during such period of time Lola Reynolds was conceived. The decedent's wife at that time, Marjory, testified, in substance, that decedent was away from home for the two weeks in question and that he had admitted to the fact that he had associated with Fern. The wife also testified that sometime in February or March of 1932, the decedent admitted to her that he was in trouble with Fern, who was then pregnant. The wife further stated that she and the deceased gave Fern money from time to time, and that after the birth of the child it was in their home on occasions; that on one of such occasions the baby remained from about noon to dusk, slept on the couch and was played with by the decedent and his mother. An almost identical episode occurred about one year later. Further, the wife stated that on one of such occasions, "we discussed the situation in a friendly manner * * we discussed the resemblance, and he said, 'She looks like me.' And I said, 'Yes, you can't deny her.' He said, 'I'm not denying her.' That was in front of her mother." Further, she stated that the father had done such natural things as fondling the child and holding her in his arms and playing with her. The wife also stated that every time they saw the child, "We discussed * * * the resemblance was so clear * * *." The paternal grandmother played with the child in the presence of the deceased and on occasions when there were no customers at the bar where the deceased was employed, he would place the child upon the bar and play and talk with her, and would state, "This is my little girl." Further the wife testified that throughout her marriage to the deceased they gave Fern money, from time to time, to support and maintain the child, and that they visited at Fern's home to see the child, and that all of this was with her consent as the wife of the deceased.

The decedent and his wife separated in 1935, and he went to Nevada. Fern took the child, Lola, with her to Nevada and they lived with the deceased at Henderson, Nevada, during the summer vacation period of 1936.

The decedent remained in Nevada. However, he occasionally visited his mother and stepfather, the Ainsworths, in Los Angeles county until the death of Mr. Ainsworth in 1955, at which time he returned to Los Angeles county to care for his mother, Mrs. Ainsworth.

When Lola was about twelve years of age she was brought, at the request of her grandmother Ainsworth, to the grandmother's home. A witness described the visitation by stating that the deceased was there and that he greeted the child by putting his arms around her and inquiring about how she was getting along, which pleased the grandmother. The deceased would say, "How is my Lola?"

During the funerals of both of the Ainsworths, Lola sat in the family room reserved solely for the nearest of kin, and rode to the graveside in the family car. When the services were completed the deceased introduced Lola, his daughter, to friends present whom she had not met theretofore.

Further, when Lola was about seventeen years of age she wanted to get married and told her mother about it. The mother advised her that she would have to secure the consent of her father. The mother Fern, Lola, and Lola's intended husband, Peter Reynolds, then drove to Nevada to talk with the deceased. At first the deceased stated that Lola was too young to get married, but later changed his mind, and when told that the wedding would cost about $100, he gave Lola this amount and wished her well. Lola was married on April 1, 1950.

There was sufficient evidence, if believed by the trial court, for it to find that the decedent publicly acknowledged that Lola was his natural child, that the decedent took Lola into his family with the consent of his wife and that he otherwise treated her as if she were a legitimate child. Based upon such a finding, the court properly found that Lola was the legitimated surviving daughter of Canfield Wilson, deceased, and as such entitled to have letters of administration issued to her.

In Blythe v. Ayres, 96 Cal. 532, at page 576, 31 p. 915, at page 922, 19 L.R.A. 40, referring to section 230 of the Civil Code, it is said:

"This section of the Code is entitled to a liberal construction, because section 4 provides: 'The rule of the common law that statutes in derogation thereof are to be strictly construed, has no application to this Code. The Code establishes the law of this state respecting the subjects to which it relates, and its provisions are to be liberally construed with a view to effect its objects and to promote justice.'"

disavows the common-law tenets and favors legitimation."

Also, the court in the Lund case said, 26 Cal.2d at page 482, 159 P.2d at page 649: "The last quoted statute [Civ.Code, § 230] is that upon which petitioner relies. It is, on its face, primarily a law governing legitimation or status, but if under it the petitioner has attained the status of legitimacy 'for all purposes' in California then he is entitled to the benefit of the general succession statutes."

In the Blythe case, supra, referring to the use of the word "acknowledge" in the section under consideration, it is stated, 96 Cal. at page 577, 31 P. at page 922, 19 L.R.A. 40: "The word 'acknowledge' has no technical meaning, and in its ordinary acceptation is defined, by Webster, 'to own or admit the knowledge of.' It is not necessary to dwell at great length upon this special element necessary to satisfy the statute. Under the evidence it can hardly be considered debatable. Blythe declared the plaintiff to be his child to all persons upon all occasions. He was garrulous upon the subject. * * * He acknowledged the child to its mother and to its grandmother before it was born, and subsequently in no single instance was he ever heard to deny its paternity."

Certainly, the evidence in the present case discloses that the decedent declared the child Lola to be his. He acknowledged to his wife that he was the father of a child to be born to Fern, and introduced the child many times as his own, and years later, at the funeral of his mother, he further introduced the child as his. These are but a few of the circumstances which appear very convincing to us.

It is true that the decedent did not have much of a family life as we know such generally, but in the first instance, when the child was born, and the visitations were made to the decedent's home, the child was received with the consent of the then wife into decedent's family. Under the circumstances of this particular case, we believe that the child was received into decedent's family as such with the consent of his wife.

Passing to the remaining element of the statute which requires the father's "otherwise treating it as if it were a legitimate child." In this case there can be no doubt that the decedent did otherwise treat Lola as though she were his legitimate child. As the court stated in Blythe v. Ayres, supra, 96 Cal.2d at pages 580-581, 31 P. at pages 923, 19 L.R.A. 40: "If the father has publicly acknowledged the child to be his child, and has taken it into his family, it would seem but little remained to be done to wash away forever the stain of bastardy. The public acknowledgment of the child is the main fact. It is the important factor in the eyes of the statute. If the child was publicly acknowledged and received into the family, it would be a novel case where a court of equity would close its doors and refuse to declare a legitimation because the child was poorly clothed and illy fed. That case has not yet arisen, and it is hoped and believed it never will. The statute clearly means that the father must treat his illegitimate child as he would naturally treat his legitimate child, not as the majority of men in his financial circumstances would or should treat their children. Every man furnishes the rule by which he must be measured. No imaginary standard of excellence can be created, and then it be demanded that Blythe shall rise to that standard. If appellants' contention be true, a child whose father was an ignorant man, believing education an evil to be shunned, and who therefore denied an education to the child, could not be granted legitimation. * * * It appears that at no time was she deprived of the necessities of life. She resided at all times either with her mother or her grandfather. Blythe furnished something near $150 a year for her support. Certainly during her infancy this was entirely sufficient, and no complaints were made to him that more money was needed to meet her wants. At all these times he himself was either stopping in a log house in the mountains of Trinity, or living with his mistress in lodgings in San Francisco, surrounded by his dogs, birds, and cats, while his hens were located upon the roof. It may well be inferred from the simplicity of his own life as indicated by the foregoing circumstances, that, if legitimate children had been born to him, they would have been treated, as far as pecuniary expenditures were concerned, upon the same lines as this illegitimate child was treated."

It was appropriately stated in Re Estate of Lund, supra, 26 Cal.2d at pages 494-496, 159 P.2d at pages 655, 656, 162 A.L.R. 606: "Likewise it must be accepted as true that once a child has been received into the family of its father, it attains the de facto status of a member of that family, and unless disavowed, such status (in a broad sense) continues with it for the remainder of its days. The word 'family' means not merely those who live in one house but, in equally wide usage, signifies all who are descended from a not too distant common progenitor. Webster's New Int. Dict. (2d ed.) Here the petitioner was received into the intimate family circle, the household itself; * * *. It is not shown to have ever been disavowed or terminated. * * *

"It is presumed 'That a thing once proved to exist continues as long as is usual with things of that nature' (Code Civ.Proc., § 1963(32)) and 'That a person is innocent of * * * wrong' (Code Civ.Proc. § 1963(1)). * * * Once the child had been unconditionally received into the family, he was received permanently and continuingly unless and until such reception was revoked (if in its nature it could be revoked), and a revocation of such reception would constitute an unnatural and wrong act. Such an act will not be presumed. * * *

"* * * The biological relationship of father and son, and the de facto family relationship which the father had established, are not transient or volatile things which may exist one moment and be non-existent the next, or which depend for their continuance upon repetitions of the original words or acts. Once proclaimed and established they exist as facts for all time and in all places."

The judgment is affirmed.

Oct. 20, 1958.

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Richard C. Fildew, J., for unlawful possession of heroin, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, P. J., held mere fact that defendant had been under arrest at time when he revealed and delivered to officers narcotics secreted within his body was merely a factor to be considered in determining whether he had voluntarily surrendered contraband, and that the question was one of fact.

Affirmed.

I. Criminal Law 394.4(2)

Arresting officer's statement that it would be better for defendant if he then surrendered any narcotics secreted in his body rather than have same found in jail was not improper and did not constitute duress or otherwise violate any of defendant's constitutional rights, and narcotics thereupon withdrawn by defendant from his own rectum were admissible in evidence in his subsequent prosecution for unlawful possession of heroin. West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 4573.

Edward Houston in pro. per.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

FOX, Presiding Justice.

Defendant was charged with possession of heroin in violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code. It was also alleged that he had suffered a prior felony conviction for forgery and served a term of imprisonment therefor. A jury trial having been waived, the court found the defendant guilty as charged, and also found the alleged prior conviction to be true. Defendant was sentenced to the state prison. He has appealed from the judgment.

Sergeant Hall, of the Los Angeles Police Department attached to the Narcotics Division, had received information from two informants, whom he considered reliable on the basis of past performance, that defendant was a user and peddler of narcotics, and that he kept narcotics in his rectum. On the morning of July 8, 1957, Sergeant Hall also received information from a brother officer that defendant was then in possession of heroin and had it secreted as above indicated. Shortly thereafter, Sergeant Hall and his partner, Sergeant Bowser, went to defendant's apartment, Room 331 at 460 East Fourth Street; they arrived there at about 10:30 a. m. Sergeant Hall knocked on the door; thereupon defendant opened the door, and stood back approximately three feet. Defendant was in the nude. The officer observed that there were needle marks and scars over the veins of each arm, indicating that defendant was a user of narcotics. Sergeant Hall advised defendant that he was a police officer and that he was under arrest on a narcotics charge. The officers did not have a warrant for defendant's arrest. They then entered and conducted a search of the room. No narcotics were found. Sergeant Hall inquired of defendant and whether he had any narcotics in or on his person, and defendant replied in the negative. After defendant dressed, the officers left for jail with the defendant in custody. On the way, Sergeant Hall had a conversation with the defendant in which the officer explained to him that they had information that he had narcotics secreted within his body, and asked defendant whether he would give permission for a body search. Defendant stated that he would give such permission. He was then asked if he would put it in writing, and defendant stated that he would not. Defendant was then informed that he was going to jail and would be booked and if he had any narcotic secreted in his body it would be better if he gave it to the officers rather than have it found in the jail. Thereupon defendant stated that he would give it to the officers, and at that time he inserted his fingers into his rectum and withdrew a latex bag containing six white paper bindles, which were found to contain heroin. In a conversation with the officers defendant stated that he had bought the narcotics from a woman on Sixth Street. Sergeant Hall testified that secreting narcotics in such fashion was not unusual.

Defendant did not take the stand and did not present any evidence in his behalf.

[1] Defendant asserts that the evidence of guilt was obtained by a "body search" in violation of his constitutional rights. There is not the slightest evidence that the officers searched defendant's person

The uncontradicted evidence is that defendant voluntarily withdrew the latex bag from his rectum and handed it to the officer when the latter told him he was going to jail, where he would be booked, and if he had any narcotics secreted in his body it would be better if he gave it to the officers rather than have it found in the jail. Since defendant had had previous jail experience, he of course knew he would be searched upon being booked, and that since the officers had information that he possessed contraband and where he concealed it, he naturally realized that it would be discovered. Having been previously incarcerated in a penal institution he was undoubtedly aware of the serious consequences of having contraband found in one's possession in such an institution. Hence he realized that the officer's statement was correct, as truly it was, for section 4573 of the Penal Code makes it a felony to bring narcotics into a jail. In the circumstances the statement of the officer was not improper and did not constitute duress or otherwise violate any of defendant's constitutional rights (see People v. Woods, 139 Cal.App.2d 515, 524-25, 293 P.2d 901), and the contraband handed over to the officers by defendant was admissible in evidence.

[2,3] Whether defendant's apparent consent to disclose and surrender the contraband was in fact voluntarily given was a question of fact. People v. Michael, 45 Cal.2d 751, 753, 290 P.2d 852. But, under the evidence, there can be only one answer to that question unless a contrary answer is dictated by reason of the fact that defendant was under arrest at the time he revealed and delivered the latex bag to the officers. Our Supreme Court has not passed upon this specific point. It did, however, reject, in Rogers v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 3, 10-11, 291 P.2d 929, 933, the federal rule that a confession made during a period of illegal detention is inadmissible. The case holds that the fact that a confession is made during an unlawful detention is "only one of the factors to be considered in determining whether the statement was voluntarily made." No good reason appears for holding otherwise relative to the consent of a defendant to disclose and hand over contraband while under arrest. People v. Lujan, 141 Cal.App.2d 143, 147, 296 P.2d 93. In the Lujan case, which involved an actual search and seizure, this court held that the mere fact that defendant was under arrest and in handcuffs at the time he gave his consent to search his home did not per se vitiate such consent. In the instant case defendant did not take the stand and did not otherwise challenge the testimony of the officer as to the circumstances under which he disclosed and surrendered the contraband. Where, as here, a defendant voluntarily produces evidence against himself his constitutional rights are not violated. People v. Michael, supra.

Since there was no search and seizure involved in this case, defendant having voluntarily disclosed and surrendered the evidence, the rule of Priestly v. Superior Court, 50 Cal.2d 812, 330 P.2d 39, relative to disclosing the identity of confidential informants, is not here pertinent.

The record reveals no basis whatever for defendant's assertion of misconduct either on the part of the judge or the prosecutor.

The statement of facts demonstrates there is no substance to defendant's claim that the evidence is insufficient to sustain his conviction.

The judgment is affirmed.

Division 2, California.

Oct. 21, 1958.

Actions arising out of motor vehicle collision. The Superior Court, Contra Costa County, Wakefield Taylor, J., rendered judgment favorable to only one of the plaintiffs, and an appeal was taken. The District Court of Appeal, Martinelli, J. pro tem., finding no California authority as to effect of joinder on allowance of costs, held that mother and her two daughters, who were injured in collision between their automobile and defendant's truck, and their husband and father could have brought separate actions against owner and driver of other vehicle involved in collision, in which case defendants could have recovered their costs against unsuccessful plaintiffs; and held that mere fact that such plaintiffs had joined in bringing their actions and that one of them had been successful would be no reason to deny defendants costs against those plaintiffs who had failed to establish their causes of action.

Affirmed.

I. Automobiles ⇨245(14)

In cross actions arising out of intersection collision, evidence was sufficient to take to jury question as to whether driver of automobile on inferior road had been negligent in entering intersection in view of proximity of truck traveling on four-lane through highway.

2. Automobiles ⇨171(8)

Even if entering intersection on inferior road when truck was approaching intersection in far lane of four-lane through highway did not constitute negligence, continuing across through highway after automobile engine sputtered in middle of through highway, which was divided by a "painted island," constituted negligence.

3. Automobiles ⇨244(59)

In cross actions arising out of intersection collision, evidence would sustain finding that truck driver on through highway had not had last clear chance to avoid colliding with automobile traveling on inferior road.

Russell F. King, Richmond, for appellants.

Cresswell & Davis, Oakland, for respondents.

MARTINELLI, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff Opal Fields and her minor daughters, Brenda and Karen, through James Fields, their guardian ad litem, sought damages for personal injuries arising from a collision involving a truck owned by defendant Napa Milling Company and driven by its employee, defendant August Rossi. James Fields, in his individual capacity as husband and father, sought to recover medical expenses incurred as a result of the accident. Napa Milling and Warehouse Company filed a cross-complaint seeking to recover for damage to its truck.

A trial without a jury resulted in a judgment awarding $700 and costs to Brenda Fields, denying recovery to Karen Fields, and denying recovery to the remaining plaintiffs. Defendant Napa Milling and Warehouse Company was denied recovery upon its cross-complaint and was awarded its costs against all except Brenda Fields.

Plaintiffs Opal, Karen and James Fields appeal from the portions of the judgment denying them recovery and awarding costs to defendant.

The evidence shows that the accident occurred on Eastshore Boulevard (Highway 40) at its intersection with Fresno Avenue in Richmond, California. Eastshore is a through highway running in a general north and south direction and is 60 feet wide with four lanes divided by a "painted island" approximately 6 feet wide. On March 15, 1956, the date of the accident, the posted speed limit on Eastshore in the area of this intersection was 35 miles per hour. There was a stationary stop sign located on Fresno Avenue approximately 20 feet west of the west edge of the highway for the purpose of controlling traffic crossing the highway from west to east.

At about 2:30 p. m. on March 15, 1956, appellant Opal Fields, accompanied by her two daughters, drove east on Fresno and stopped at its intersection with Eastshore. She testified that the only traffic she observed was respondents' truck over two blocks away approaching from the right in the outer (east) lane at approximately 30 miles per hour. Appellant started across the intersection traveling at a speed of approximately 8 to 10 miles per hour and when she reached the middle of the highway her engine sputtered. At this time respondents' truck was approximately a block away and was traveling at the same speed, approximately 30 miles per hour. There was conflicting testimony as to whether appellants' automobile stopped in the center strip. She testified that there was "very little" change of speed. Rossi testified that appellants' car made a "hesitation stop" at the center strip. A witness to the collision, Mr. Jackson, testified that when respondents' truck was within 50 to 60 feet of the intersection, appellants' car stopped in the middle of the highway. The deposition of another witness to the accident, Elaine Fay McDaniel, indicated that appellant proceeded slowly across the intersection without stopping.

There was conflict also as to the location of the point of impact. The Highway Patrol Officer who investigated the accident testified that the collision occurred at a point 4 feet east of the east edge of the traveled portion of Eastshore and 2 to 3 feet north of the center of Fresno Avenue. Jackson testified that the point of impact was on the paved portion of the highway in the east lane.

At the trial respondent Rossi testified that he was driving north on Eastshore Boulevard in the east lane at approximately 30 miles per hour. He stated that he first noticed appellants' car when it was approaching the center of the highway and at this time he was approximately 60 feet from the Fresno Avenue intersection. The car stopped in the center strip and then began to move again and Rossi applied his brakes. The witness had previously testified when his deposition was taken that he first saw appellants' car at the stop sign, and at this time he was approximately a block from the intersection. There were other inconsistencies between his testimony at the time of the deposition and at the trial.

The trial court found that the collision and injuries were proximately caused by the negligence of respondent Rossi and the contributory negligence of appellant Opal Fields. He found that Karen Fields did not sustain any compensable injuries and that compensable injuries were sustained by Brenda Fields.

Appellants contend that there was no substantial evidence to support a finding of contributory negligence or in other words there was no substantial evidence indicating that respondents' truck constituted an immediate hazard within the meaning of section 552 of the Vehicle Code.

Appellants recognize that the power of this court "begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support the conclusion reached by the [trier of fact]." Crawford v. Southern Pacific Co., 3 Cal.2d 427, 429, 45 P.2d 183, 184. They contend, however, that as a matter of law the evidence would not support a finding of contributory negligence.

In McGuire v. San Diego Transit System, 143 Cal.App.2d 509, 299 P.2d 905, the testimony of the driver of defendant's bus was to the effect that he stopped at the intersection and saw no traffic approaching from the north. He entered the highway and came to a rolling stop at the center island. At this point he observed a red truck approaching about 500 feet away at about 35-45 miles per hour. He saw no other vehicle and believing he had time to cross he accelerated the engine and was traveling at the rate of 5-10 miles per hour when he was struck by plaintiffs' automobile. On appeal from a judgment for plaintiffs, one of the contentions was that the evidence was not sufficient to show negligence on the part of the bus driver. The appellate court held that a jury might well have believed that both the red truck and plaintiffs' car were so close to the intersection as to constitute an immediate hazard. Assuming that the defendant had the right of way at the time of his original entry into the intersection, the court stated that the fact that the bus stopped in the center portion of the highway and then continued on in the face of oncoming traffic might well justify a finding of negligence of the bus driver. Cf. Smith v. Pellissier, 134 Cal. App.2d 562, 286 P.2d 66.

[1,2] In the instant case, accepting appellants' contention that it did not constitute negligence to enter the intersection, there was evidence that the car stopped in the center of the highway. Appellant Opal Fields testified that her engine "sputtered." The trial court could have decided that it was contributory negligence even though there was no "immediate hazard" when entering the intersection to continue across the highway knowing that the automobile engine was not functioning properly. The question of whether respondents' truck was an "immediate hazard" was a factual question and the evidence would support a finding that it was contributory negligence to enter the intersection. Lewis v. Doyle, 149 Cal.App.2d 176, 181, 307 P.2d 965.

Cases are cited by appellants for the proposition that drivers crossing a through highway may reasonably misjudge the speed or distance of an approaching vehicle and the proximate cause of the accidents was the failure of the approaching driver to take reasonable preventive action. Van Cise v. Lencioni, 106 Cal.App.2d 341, 346, 235 P.2d 236; Shivers v. Van Loben Sels, 109 Cal.App.2d 286, 289, 240 P.2d 635; Root v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 84 Cal.

App.2d 135, 137, 190 P.2d 48; Stickel v. San Diego Elec. Ry. Co., 32 Cal.2d 157, 162, 195 P.2d 416. These cases do not aid appellants as they hold only that the jury could have found that appellants' vehicles did not constitute an "immediate hazard." "Whether a vehicle is or is not approaching so closely as to constitute an immediate hazard is a question of fact and not of law." Van Cise v. Lencioni, supra, 106 Cal.App. 346, 235 P.2d 236, 239. The evidence was sufficient to support the finding of contributory negligence.

[3] Appellants contend alternatively that respondent Rossi's testimony establishes that respondents were liable under the theory of last clear chance. "What constitutes a last clear chance depends on the circumstances, and is thus ordinarily an issue of fact, on which a finding by the jury is binding unless there is no substantial evidence to support it." 35 Cal. Jur.2d, Negligence, § 262, pp. 806-807. The evidence would support a finding that Rossi was entitled to assume that appellant intended to yield the right of way. It was for the trier of fact to decide whether Rossi was aware of the victims' dangerous position and whether he ought to have realized the inability to escape. There was evidence that when the truck was within 50 to 60 feet of the intersection, appellants' car was stopped and then "pulled out right in the path of the truck." If this evidence were accepted it would support a decision that respondent had no clear chance to avoid the accident.

Appellants contend that it was error to deny Karen Fields nominal damages and that her legal rights were jeopardized because this permitted costs to be assessed against her.

During the course of the trial appellants' counsel stated several times that Karen was not injured. At the close of plaintiffs' case their counsel stated "We will make a claim for nominal damages for her * * *."

Appellants cite as authority for their contention Civil Code section 3360 which provides: "When a breach of duty has caused no appreciable detriment to the party affected, he may yet recover nominal damages."

[4] It is fundamental that a negligent act is not actionable unless it results in injury to another (35 Cal.Jur.2d, Negligence, § 52, p. 549, enunciating the complementary Latin reciprocals "injuria absque damno" and "damnum absque injuria," which properly interpreted mean that a wrong without damage does not constitute a cause of action for damages any more than damage without wrong does not ordinarily constitute a cause of action). "Since the action for negligence developed chiefly out of the old form of action on the case, it retained the rule of that action, that proof of damage was an essential part of the plaintiff's case. Nominal damages, to vindicate a technical right, cannot be recovered in a negligence action, where no actual loss has occurred." Prosser on Torts, 2d Ed., p. 165.

[5] Since testimony of appellant Opal Fields and statements of her counsel would support the finding that Karen suffered no compensable injury, it was not error to deny her damages.

Appellants contend that it was error to award respondents costs as against Opal and James Fields. They argue that since it was found that respondents were negligent and since Brenda Fields recovered $700 and respondent Napa Milling Company recovered nothing on its cross-complaint, appellants were in effect the prevailing parties and were entitled to costs under authority of Code of Civil Procedure section 1032.

[6] It has been held that defendants who defeat an action for damages by filing a claim against the plaintiffs for damages arising out of the same action are entitled to recover their costs, since they are the "prevailing party" under section 1032, subdivision (b). Schrader v. Neville, 34 Cal. 2d 112, 207 P.2d 1057; Gerstein v. Smirl, 70 Cal.App.2d 238, 241, 160 P.2d 585.

Whether viewed as a joinder of parties or a joinder of causes of action the instant case consisted of four separate causes of action. Code of Civ.Proc. §§ 378, 427. Appellants could have brought separate actions. Colla v. Carmichael U-Drive Autos, Inc., 111 Cal.App.Supp. 784, 787, 294 P. 378; Edgar v. Citraro, 112 Cal. App. 183, 186, 297 P. 653. If the actions had been brought separately, they could have been consolidated for trial in the discretion of the trial court. Code Civ.Proc. § 1048.

While it would seem that there is no authority in California as to the effect of joinder on the allowance of costs, it has been stated that the consolidation of actions would not have the effect of depriving a plaintiff, in the event of a judgment in his favor, of the right to recover legal costs as to which his right had accrued. Realty Const. & Mtg. Co. v. Superior Court, 165 Cal. 543, 132 P. 1048, 1050. In that case a peremptory writ of mandate was sought to require the superior court to consolidate certain actions. The court stated that the question of clerk's fees "to and including the entry of judgment" appeared to be entirely immaterial in determining the question whether or not actions should be consolidated.

Authority in New York would indicate that costs could not be awarded to respondents.

"Under a statute authorizing joinder of plaintiffs generally, it is held that if one plaintiff recovers a bill of costs he recovers it for all plaintiffs. * * *

"Only one bill of costs can be granted where several successful plaintiffs join in bringing suit under a statute authorizing joinder of parties whose right to relief arises out of the same transaction. * * *" 20 C.J.S. Costs §§ 96, 97, p. 346, citing New York cases.

In holding that only one award of costs could be made where there was a joinder of plaintiffs the New York court stated "So far as costs are concerned, all plaintiffs and all defendants joined under section 209, Civil Practice Act, are one entity." Antonietti v. Pearson, 153 Misc. 803, 276 N.Y.S. 52, 54. This section 209 corresponds with the California Code of Civil Procedure, section 378, providing for joinder of parties.

In Colla v. Carmichael U-Drive Autos, Inc., supra, [111 Cal.App.Supp. 784, 787; 294 P. 378, 380] the court stated, referring to section 378 "In the complaint filed, each 'case' or cause of action preserved its identity, and each plaintiff prayed for and obtained a segregated award based on the damages individually proved. The code section contemplates of course an action single in form, but with each 'case' or demand retaining its distinctive identity as though pleaded in an independent action. No plaintiff is interested in the entire complaint. The interest of each is in his own 'case' or cause of action; and the complaint as a whole is merely a series of 'cases' embodied in one document."

Section 378 provides that " * * * judgment may be given for such one or more of the plaintiffs as may be found to be entitled to relief, for the relief to which he or they may be entitled." It is settled that judgment may be given in favor of defendants who are not shown to be liable. Joerger v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 207 Cal. 8, 20, 276 P. 1017.

If each party in the instant case had commenced a separate action, it would seem clear that respondents could have recovered their costs against appellants. Since each cause of action retains its distinctive identity where there is a joinder and each plaintiff recovers or fails to recover on his separate demand, there would seem to be no authority, purpose, or reason to deny respondents costs against appellants who failed to establish their causes of action.

The judgment is affirmed.

Cr. 6158.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Oct. 20, 1958.

Hearing Denied Dec. 17, 1958.

Prosecutions for kidnapping for purpose of robbery. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Herbert V. Walker, J., entered judgment of conviction of kidnapping and one defendant appealed from the judgment and denial of his motion for new trial, and codefendant appealed from the judgment. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, J., held that where information alleged defendants kidnapped and carried away a woman with intent and for purpose of committing robbery, they could not have committed act of kidnapping and carrying away named woman for purpose of robbery without necessarily committing act of kidnapping, and therefore kidnapping was an offense for which they could be convicted being necessarily included within the crime of kidnapping for the purpose of robbery.

Affirmed.

1. Indictment and Information ☞191

By statute, in a criminal prosecution, a jury is authorized to find an accused guilty of any offense, the commission of which is necessarily included in that with which he is charged. West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 1159.

2. Indictment and Information ☞191

If, in committing acts denounced by one statute, the accused must necessarily violate another, the latter offense is necessarily included within the former.

3. Indictment and Information ☞191

In determining what offenses are included within a charge, court must look to the language of the accusatory pleading rather than to the language of the statute defining the offense charged.

4. Indictment and Information ☞191

Where information alleged defendants kidnapped and carried away a woman with intent and for purpose of committing robbery, they could not have committed act of kidnapping and carrying away named woman for purpose of robbery without necessarily committing act of kidnapping, and therefore kidnapping was an offense for which they could be convicted being necessarily included within the crime of kidnapping for the purpose of robbery. #### 5. Kidnapping ☞1

Where a victim of an alleged kidnapping has at first willingly accompanied the accused, the accused may nevertheless be guilty of kidnapping if he subsequently restrains his victim's liberty by force and compels the victim to accompany him further. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 207.

Evidence sustained convictions for kidnapping.

Gladys Towles Root and Eugene V. McPherson, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Carl Boronkay, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

By amended information, Leonard John Haas and Richard Paul Gallagher were charged with kidnapping Irmgard Davis for the purpose of robbery. Pen.Code, § 209. It was also alleged that they inflicted bodily harm on Mrs. Davis. In a jury trial, defendants were found guilty of kidnapping (Pen.Code, § 207) and they were sentenced to state prison. Haas appeals from the judgment and the denial of his motion for new trial. Gallagher appeals from the judgment.

The convictions were based upon evidence of the following facts. Mr. and Mrs. George L. Davis spent the evening of June 6, 1957, celebrating their fourth wedding anniversary at a restaurant on Olvera Street in Los Angeles. They left the restaurant shortly before 2 o'clock in the morning and drove toward their home in Long Beach in the family car, which was a cream-colored 1956 Cadillac. Mr. Davis testified that as they proceeded south on Alameda Boulevard, his wife asked him to stop the car so that she could relieve herself. After considerable discussion, Davis stopped in a dark and lonely spot about a block north of a crossing known as Dominguez Junction and Mrs. Davis alighted, taking her purse with her. Davis then drove to the crossing, made a U-turn and drove back to the place where he had left his wife. She was nowhere in sight. After searching the area for half an hour, Davis went home. Between 9 and 10 a. m., his wife was brought home from the hospital in a nervous and distraught condition. Davis stated that at the time she left the car she had about $200 in a billfold inside her purse and she was wearing three rings, including an expensive diamond cocktail ring. When she returned from the hospital she had neither the money nor the cocktail ring.

Mrs. Davis testified that after getting out of the car she walked a few feet off the road and relieved herself. She became frightened and angry when her husband drove away. Mr. Davis had had a few drinks and had been quarreling with her. She noticed a light coming from a building on the other side of Alameda Boulevard and proceeded to cross the street. A car passed her, going north, then stopped and backed up to where she was standing. Defendant Haas got out of the car, seized her arms and shoved her inside.

As the car started up in a northerly direction, Mrs. Davis was placed in the front seat between Haas and defendant Gallagher, who was driving. Haas told Gallagher to drive through unlighted streets and to stay in the dark. Gallagher stopped the car in an alley and the two men forced Mrs. Davis into the back seat. At this time, she no longer had her purse. Haas got into the back seat and started to remove her clothes. He pinned her arms behind her back and had sexual intercourse with her against her will and over her resistance. Gallagher then changed places with Haas and had intercourse with Mrs. Davis while Haas drove the car. When Haas stopped the car in order to change places with Gallagher, Mrs. Davis screamed and attempted to escape. Haas struck her on the head with his fists, scratched her nose and slammed the door on her foot, which was partially outside the car. She lost her shoes during the struggle. Gallagher then told her: "You better not try any more like this again, we'll let you have it. We have a gun." Mrs. Davis asked for her purse and Gallagher said that she did not have a purse. Haas had intercourse with her a second time as Gallagher drove the car. While Haas was pressing her onto the back seat, she removed her cocktail ring and tried to hide it in her brassiere but Haas took the ring. (On cross-examination, she admitted stating at the preliminary hearing that Gallagher had taken her ring.) Shortly afterward, Mrs. Davis asked for a cigarette and Gallagher drove to an all-night market where he purchased several packs of cigarettes. When he returned to the car, Haas said: "You better step on it, I see the cops over there." At that moment, Mrs. Davis jumped out of the car and screamed for help.

Mrs. Davis further testified that when the police officers arrived, her dress was dirty and disarranged, although it had not been torn, and her panties and shoes were missing. She had bruises on her arms, shoulders, chest and face and scratches on her feet, face and knees. The officers retrieved her purse from the car and handed it to her, but the money was gone. Upon being shown a $50 bill by the deputy district attorney, Mrs. Davis identified it as one of the bills she had had in her purse; the number "24" was written on it in pencil. The cocktail ring was never recovered.

Delano Manos, a Los Angeles County Sheriff's deputy, was one of the officers who came to the assistance of Mrs. Davis.

At 4:15 a. m. on June 7th, Manos and his partner, Deputy Kirkpatrick, were patrolling the Bell Gardens area. Manos testified that as they drove past an all-night market they observed a black 1949 Pontiac in an adjacent parking lot. There were three persons in the car, a woman and two men. The Pontiac started up and left the lot. As it entered the street, Mrs. Davis jumped out of the car and screamed "Help, police." When the officers ran over, she said: "They have a gun." Upon being asked by Deputy Manos what had happened, Mrs. Davis replied: "They took my money." At this time she was in a hysterical condition; her clothes were unbuttoned and disarranged. The officers took defendants into custody and searched the Pontiac. They found Mrs. Davis' purse and panties on the front floorboard on the passenger side of the car but they did not find the cocktail ring; there was no money in the purse. Defendants were searched and $63 was found on the person of Haas and $145, including a $50 bill, was found on the person of Gallagher; the money was received in evidence. The officers ordered another police car to take Mrs. Davis to the hospital.

Defendants were taken to the sheriff's station where they were questioned by Officers Manos and Kirkpatrick. When asked where they obtained the money found on their persons defendants replied that it was part of their accumulated wages from a merchant seaman's trip. Upon being asked by Kirkpatrick whether he had raped Mrs. Davis, Haas said that he had tried to do so, but was deterred by her struggling and crying. Gallagher denied having sexual relations with Mrs. Davis. He told Officer Manos that Mrs. Davis had flagged down the Pontiac and entered it willingly.

Dr. Albert H. Lerner was on duty in the emergency room of the Maywood Hospital on the morning of June 7th. At approximately 5 a. m., he made a pelvic examination of Mrs. Davis and took a vaginal smear which disclosed organisms resembling male spermatozoa. Lerner testified that he did not notice any bruises on her face, although he saw some blemishes which might have been bruises. Mrs. Davis appeared nervous and anxious and he administered some demerol to calm her nerves. A few hours later, Mrs. Davis was examined by her family physician, a Dr. Rabin. Rabin testified that he found scratches on her nose, elbow and shoulders and bruises on her back, shoulders, legs and arms; one of her toes was severely bruised. Mrs. Davis was crying and in a state of extreme anxiety.

Defendants took the stand and denied their guilt. Gallagher testified that he had $160 on his person on the night of June 6th; the money consisted of $20 from his savings account and $140 which he had saved from weekly disability checks; he had been injured on his job and was not working on June 6th. Haas testified he had about $75 which he had saved from his salary; his employment terminated in late May.

Defendants testified they took Mrs. Davis into the car but denied the use of force and denied striking her or taking her rings or money from her purse. Gallagher stated that he did not have intercourse with Mrs. Davis. Haas testified that he had intercourse with Mrs. Davis on the back seat of the car with her consent and that they were planning to go to his (Haas') residence to spend the night. Both defendants corroborated the other witnesses as to the circumstances of their arrest.

The first contention to be discussed is that defendants were improperly convicted of kidnaping for the reason that kidnaping is not an offense necessarily included within the crime of kidnaping for the purpose of robbery. We cannot agree.

Penal Code, Section 209, as amended in 1951, provides in material part: "* * * any person who kidnaps or carries away any individual to commit robbery, or any person who aids or abets any such act, is guilty of a felony * * *." Section 207 provides: "Every person who forcibly steals, takes, or arrests any person in this state, and carries him into another country, state, or county, or into another part of the same county, * * * is guilty of kidnapping."

[1-3] The jury is authorized by Penal Code, Section 1159, to find an accused guilty of any offense, the commission of which is necessarily included in that with which he is charged. If, in committing acts denounced by one statute, the accused must necessarily violate another, the latter offense is necessarily included within the former. People v. Chester, 138 Cal.App. 2d 829, 831, 292 P.2d 573. Furthermore, we must look to the language of the accusatory pleading rather than to the language of the statute defining the offense charged in determining what offenses are included within the charge. People v. Marshall, 48 Cal.2d 394, 309 P.2d 456.

[4] The amended information alleged that Haas and Gallagher "did willfully, unlawfully and feloniously kidnap and carry away Irmgard Davis, an individual, with intent and for the purpose of committing robbery." A sufficient answer to defendants' argument is that they could not commit the act of kidnaping and carrying away Mrs. Davis for the purpose of robbery without necessarily committing the act of kidnaping.

A second contention is that the court committed prejudicial error in amplifying one of its instructions to the jury.

At the People's request, the court gave the following instruction: "Every person who unlawfully and forcibly steals, takes, or arrests any other person in this state, and carries him into another country, state or county, or into another part of the same county, doing so against the will or without the consent of the person so carried, is guilty of kidnapping."

On the second morning of their deliberations, the jurors returned to the courtroom to "have a broader interpretation on the paragraph on kidnapping." Whereupon the court stated: "Well, I think the definition as given is as simple as can be given, except I might say this, that the taking of my [sic] person into a vehicle against their will, transporting for any distance, would be simple kidnapping; even going further than that, the law is that if I get into a vehicle voluntarily and then they refuse to let me get out and we go further, I mean transport me further, that becomes simple kidnapping, you see." (Emphasis added.)

[5] Defendants assign error to the italicized portion of the foregoing statement. In this connection, they argue that the offense of kidnaping consists of the forcible seizure and asportation of another person; that a mere unlawful detention, with or without the use of force, constitutes the offense of false imprisonment; and that the statement of the court told the jury in effect that it might convict defendants of kidnaping Mrs. Davis upon proof of facts amounting to no more than false imprisonment. The argument cannot be maintained. The challenged remarks correctly stated the law. It is settled that where the victim has at first willingly accompanied the accused, the latter may nevertheless be guilty of kidnaping if he subsequently restrains his victim's liberty by force and compels the victim to accompany him further. People v. Trawick, 78 Cal.App.2d 604, 606, 178 P.2d 45, and cases cited.

[6] The final contention to be considered is the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the convictions. Defendants assert that the testimony of Mrs. Davis was inherently improbable. Their arguments are not persuasive. The contention is obviously untenable. The testimony of Mrs. Davis has already been related and it is unnecessary to restate it. The weight to be accorded to her testimony and the resolution of any inconsistencies were questions for the trier of fact, not for a reviewing court. People v. Thomas, 103 Cal.App.2d 669, 672, 229 P.2d 836; People v. Dragoo, 121 Cal.App.2d 322, 324, 263 P.2d 90. Mrs. Davis' account of her ordeal, together with the testimony of her family physician and of the arresting officers, was amply sufficient to establish defendants' guilt of kidnaping.

As to Haas, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed; as to Gallagher, the judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 23123.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 16, 1958.

Hearing Denied Dec. 10, 1958.

Action was brought for injuries. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Frederick F. Houser, J., entered judgment in favor of the plaintiff and entered an order granting motion of defendants for new trial, and both plaintiff and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that Superior Court abused its discretion in granting defendants a new trial merely because plaintiff's counsel in voir dire examination of defendants' witness brought out that witness was employed by an insurance company after the witness testified that he was an investigator and worked for an "insurance exchange," and because plaintiff's counsel mentioned the insurance company thereafter four more times.

Order granting a new trial reversed, and judgment affirmed.

1. New Trial ⇐31

Allegedly improper questions concerning insurance could not be capitalized upon motion for new trial, where no objection was made to any of the questions, no motion was made to strike any questions or answers, no motion was made for a mistrial, and no cautionary instruction to the jury was requested.

2. Trial ⇐127

Where defendants' witness in personal injury action stated on voir dire examination by plaintiff that he was an investigator and worked for certain "insurance exchange," it was not improper for plaintiff's counsel to ask whether the "insurance exchange" was an insurance company, in order to clarify the identity of the employer of the witness.

3. Trial ⇐127

Where counsel for plaintiff on voir dire examination of witness of defendants in personal injury action properly brought out fact that witness was employed by an insurance company after witness stated that he was employed by an "insurance exchange," the mention of such insurance company thereafter four more times by plaintiff's counsel did not amount to prejudicial misconduct.

4. Trial ⇐133(3, 6)

If the repeated reference to an "insurance company" by plaintiff's counsel in personal injury action is deemed by trial judge to be inflammatory, trial judge should deal with such references like any other improper evidence, by prompt exclusion or prompt admonition to counsel and cautionary instruction to the jury.

5. New Trial ⇐29

Superior court abused its discretion in granting defendants a new trial in personal injury action merely because plaintiff's counsel in voir dire examination of defendants' witness brought out that witness was employed by an insurance company after the witness testified that he was an investigator and worked for an "insurance exchange," and because plaintiff's counsel mentioned the insurance company thereafter four more times.

6. Appeal and Error ⇨206(2)

Where examination of witness of defendants by plaintiff's counsel was conducted without objection from defendants, defendants would not be heard to say on appeal that such examination by plaintiff's counsel was not voir dire or that such fact was of any consequence.

7. Trial ⇨133(6)

If references by plaintiff's counsel to insurance in cross-examination of defendants in personal injury action were deemed by trial court to be improper, it was the duty of the trial court to act promptly and then admonish plaintiff's counsel and instruct the jury.

8. New Trial ⇨70

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to grant defendants' motion for new trial, on ground of insufficiency of the evidence, in action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when automobile in which plaintiff was riding ran into rear of truck and trailer owned by one of the defendants and driven by other defendant.

9. New Trial ⇨70

On motion for new trial on ground of insufficiency of the evidence, trial court has room for exercise of a broad discretion.

10. New Trial ⇨70

Trial court, in order to grant a motion for new trial, on ground of insufficiency of the evidence, has to do more than disagree with the jury's verdict, and must be of the opinion that the verdict is clearly against the weight of the evidence.

11. New Trial ⇨70

Trial court may sometimes properly deny motion for new trial, on ground of insufficiency of the evidence, in cases where, if submitted to trial court without a jury, trial court might, on the evidence, have made a different decision, and trial court must be clearly satisfied that the verdict is wrong in order to grant the motion.

Hecker & Dunford, Bruce L. Wolfson, Beverly Hills, for appellant-respondent Causey.

Early, Maslach, Foran & Williams, Victor Williams and Donald J. Pierr, Los Angeles, for appellants-respondents Cornelius and Pacific Intermountain Express.

ASHBURN, Justice.

This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries growing out of an accident between an automobile in which the plaintiff was riding and a truck and trailer of defendant Pacific Intermountain Express which was being operated by defendant Cornelius. The jury returned a verdict for $5,000 in favor of plaintiff.

The trial court granted defendants' motion for a new trial on the theory that counsel for plaintiff improperly and prejudicially injected and emphasized the question of insurance on the so-called voir dire examination of a defense witness (an investigator for defendants' insurer) who was called to testify concerning a telephonic recording made by the witness of a conversation he had with the driver of the car in which plaintiff was riding. Plaintiff has appealed from the order. Defendants have appealed from the judgment.

Plaintiff and two friends, White and Conway, drove to Fontana on the evening of December 4, 1955, to have dinner with friends. They ate at about twelve o'clock and left Fontana about 2:00 o'clock in the morning on their return trip to Los Angeles. The accident occurred about half an hour later on the Etiwanda Road between Fontana and Los Angeles when the car in which plaintiff was riding collided with the truck and equipment in question, which was some 57 feet in length. A light mist was falling at the time. Plaintiff's testimony is that the car in which he was riding was following the truck, traveling at about the same rate of speed; that the truck stopped a couple of times but the driver of the car, White, was able to avoid an accident by the sudden application of his brakes. White then decided to pass the truck but when he pulled out beside it he discovered a sign, "Stop Ahead," and realizing he could not pass the truck in the short distance between it and the sign decided to fall back behind the truck, whereupon it stopped suddenly and his car collided with the left rear of the truck, resulting in injuries to the plaintiff who was riding on the right side of the front seat.

According to the testimony of Cornelius, the truck driver, he made one stop in a normal manner for a boulevard stop about two miles from the scene of the accident; he later slowed down for a railroad crossing at which time he put on his blinker; as he came to the "Stop Ahead" caution sign he again put on his blinker lights and started slowing down; there was a warning sign on the right side of the highway and another painted on the highway itself, both about 500 feet from the intersection; before commencing to apply his brakes, he looked in his rear-view mirror and saw the lights of a car approximately 500 feet back; he gradually slowed down his trucking equipment until he reached a speed of eight to ten miles per hour when his vehicle was struck in the rear; the point of impact was 134 feet from the nearest line of the intersection. After the accident Cornelius went back to see if anyone in the car was hurt; White, the driver, was out of the car; according to Cornelius, White weaved back and forth as he walked; there was a strong odor of alcohol on the breath of all three men, but White was not "exactly drunk." Cornelius also said the other passenger, Conway, finished a Vodka bottle soon after the collision. Plaintiff testified that he had had one small drink of scotch and milk at four o'clock in the afternoon, and had nothing else to drink; during that same period of time he and White had been together and the latter had done no drinking; that there was no bottle in the car when they left Fontana nor did they take turns drinking. White swore that he had had one bottle of beer in the morning and nothing else that day. Conway was in the east at the time of trial.

Officer Smith of the Highway Patrol testified that he detected no odor of alcohol on plaintiff, but the driver, White, had alcohol on his breath and there was a profound odor of same in the car. The officer gave White a roadside sobriety test which he passed; the officer concluded that, although White's ability was impaired, he was nevertheless able to drive a car properly. The witness saw no bottle. He further noted that the tail lights on the truck were lighted and that the brake light was operative. The automobile left 32 feet of locked wheel skid marks.

The record of the hospital signed by the doctor where plaintiff was taken showed that his "[a]ctions support intoxication; odor of alcohol; cooperation poor * * *."

The so-called voir dire examination of the investigator (Weaver) was as follows:

"Q. Mr. Weaver, you say that you are an investigator? A. Yes, that's correct.

"Q. Working for whom? A. The Truck Insurance Exchange.

"Q. Is that an insurance company? A. Right.

"Q. And you were told by that insurance company to make this recording? A. Well, that was part of the job of investigating the accident, yes, interviewing Mr. White. * * *

"Q. Yes. Now, this investigation that you made for this insurance company, was that made in reference to the accident that occurred on December 4, 1955? A. Yes, it was in connection with that accident. * * *

"Q. At the time you informed Mr. White who you were you didn't tell him you were working for an insurance company, though, did you? A. No, I did not. I told him I represented the Pacific Intermountain Express [the other defendant], which, of course, I did.

"Q. Through the insurance company? A. I didn't say that I represented them through the insurance company. I said I represented the Pacific Intermountain Express."<sup>1</sup>

Counsel for defendant neither objected to this testimony nor did he move to strike the questions and answers.

We shall first consider the propriety of the court's ruling on the defendants' motion for a new trial.

The trial judge, though expressing the opinion that the verdict was wrong, expressly refused to base the granting of the new trial upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence and caused a minute order to be entered granting the motion "on the grounds that plaintiff introduced insurance into the case and thereby prejudiced the jury in the plaintiff's behalf." The evidence is such that we would feel obligated to affirm the order had the ruling rested upon insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, but the form of the order precludes our considering insufficiency of evidence as a ground for sustaining the ruling. Code Civ.Proc. § 657. The ruling as made does not square with the authorities or with sound judicial administration.

[1] In the first place, the questions concerning insurance (assuming arguendo that they were improper) could not be capitalized upon motion for new trial because of the fact that no objection was made to any of them, no motion made to strike any question or answer, no motion for a mistrial, and no cautionary instruction to the jury requested. In Hatfield v. Levy Brothers, 18 Cal.2d 798, 813, 117 P.2d 841, the cross-examiner brought out the fact that defendants' representative told plaintiffs immediately after the accident that defendants were insured. No objection or motion having been made at the time, defendants' counsel, after the witness was excused and both parties had rested, charged plaintiffs' counsel with misconduct and moved for a mistrial, which was denied. The Supreme Court held there was no error in this ruling, saying 18 Cal.2d at page 813, 117 P.2d at page 849: "Defendants urge, however, that the injection of insurance into the case was done by plaintiffs' counsel designedly and with the intent to influence the jury and that therefore prejudicial error was committed. But even assuming that error did result, we do not believe that the defendants may successfully claim prejudice in view of all of the circumstances. It will be remembered that no objection was made by defendants until after the witness Meyers left the witness stand, and that even then defendants never at any time made a motion to strike either the question or the answer or asked the court to instruct the jury to disregard the reference to insurance. In fact they expressed the thought that they did not want the jury so instructed. They contented themselves with a charge of misconduct and a motion for a mistrial made after the witness was excused and at the close of the evidence in the case. The court on its own initiative instructed the jury that insurance was not involved in the case." The judgment was affirmed. In the case at bar the court at defendants' request and at the close of the case instructed the jury as follows: "You are reminded that no insurance company is a party to this action and that whether (either) (any) party is insured has no bearing whatsoever on any issue that you must decide. Therefore, the oath you took as jurors requires that you refrain from any inference, speculation or discussion about insurance."

In Gluckstein v. Lipsett, 93 Cal.App.2d 391, 209 P.2d 98, a physician upon cross-examination brought out the existence of insurance. In rejecting the claim of prejudicial misconduct the court said, 93 Cal. App.2d at page 404, 209 P.2d at page 106: "It is obvious that defendant did not give the court a chance to rule or to admonish the jury. It is also obvious that the witness was a bit anxious to volunteer statements which he thought would help the plaintiff's case. The failure of the defendant to ask for a ruling on his assignment of misconduct would indicate that he did not consider it particularly serious at the time. Also he should have asked that the testimony be stricken from the record, as was done in Packard v. Moore, 9 Cal.2d 571, 71 P.2d 922." And, 93 Cal.App.2d at page 405, 209 P.2d at page 107: "It is not reasonable to assume that the verdict would have been any different if the witness had not made this statement." The judgment was affirmed.

1. These questions were not in immediate sequence as the above quotations might seem to indicate.

In De Liere v. Goldberg, Bowen & Co., 30 Cal.App. 612, 159 P. 197, the attorney for plaintiff, when examining the jurors on voir dire, had said defendant was indemnified by a named insurance company against liability for injuries such as those involved in the action. Considering the claim of prejudicial misconduct the court said, 30 Cal.App. at page 614, 159 P. at page 198: "We do not, however, deem it necessary to determine this disputed question in the instant case, for the reason that the record discloses that, during a later stage of the trial, the fact that the defendant was indemnified by the particular surety company adverted to was permitted to go before the jury in the form of evidence without objection, and that such evidence came from the lips of one of the defendant's own witnesses. This fact, taken with the further fact that the court did in the earlier stages of the case expressly instruct the jury to disregard all references to outside parties and confine their deliberations to the issues between the actual parties before the court, impels us to the conclusion that the question and suggestions of plaintiff's counsel cannot be held to have amounted to such prejudicial misconduct as to justify a reversal of the case."

Hoel v. City of Los Angeles, 136 Cal. App.2d 295, 307, 288 P.2d 989, does not control this case, for the facts calling for the trial judge's intervention were materially different from the situation at bar; and the case did not deal with any question of insurance. The general rule that one cannot complain of evidence which he permitted to be received without objection (Mullanix v. Basich, 67 Cal.App.2d 675, 682, 155 P.2d 130; Kershaw v. Tilbury, 214 Cal. 679, 691, 8 P.2d 109; Wills v. J. J. Newberry Co., 43 Cal.App.2d 595, 607, 111 P.2d 346) governs here.

It is time for a reappraisal of this insurance bugaboo. The first California case that announced it seems to be Roche v. Llewellyn Iron Works, 140 Cal. 563, 574, 74 P. 147, which was decided in 1903. This case and subsequent similar rulings are explained in 10 Cal.Jur. 10-Yr.Supp. § 29.1, page 629, as follows: "The theory on which the cases hold such an inquiry improper—and in some circumstances prejudicial—is that there is such a strong popular prejudice against surety or other insurance companies that juries trying issues in an action in which the liability of such corporations is sought to be established are apt to permit their judgment to be improperly swayed by such prejudice. In other words, the courts assume that a jury is more inclined to find a verdict against a defendant if it believes that he is indemnified than would be the case if it were understood that the defendant alone would be required to satisfy the judgment." Automobiles and automobile liability insurance were in their infancy when Roche, supra, was decided in 1903. "Certainly the public acquaintance with and attitude towards liability insurance is far different today than it was in the days of the Wiersema decision—1909. Its existence and impact upon our civilization is one of the facts of life." Pinkerton v. Oak Park National Bank, 16 Ill.App.2d 91, 147 N.E.2d 390, 394. This insurance rule, built upon the theory of prejudice against corporations and especially insurance corporations, has largely outlived its purpose and its justification.

So far as we are advised this is the only type of case in which the trier of fact is not entitled to know the identity of the real party in interest. Under familiar forms of liability insurance policies the defense of an action against the insured is wholly controlled by the insurer; it selects and pays the attorneys, picks the witnesses, determines whether to compromise the case, retains the right to call upon the assured for such assistance as it wants, bars him from otherwise intervening in the conduct of the case, through its own attorneys and agents conducts the trial throughout, likewise conducts any appeal and pays any final judgment up to the limit of the coverage.

Today this insurance problem presents a strange picture. As soon as the subject of insurance is mentioned in the evidence many defense lawyers, particularly the younger ones, call for a bench conference and move for a mistrial—not because they want it (for they do not yet have any indication of what the outcome will be), but in order to “protect” the record against an adverse verdict. This is a daily occurrence. The underlying theory is that the jurors must not know who the real defendant is. While this has been going on in the court house, certain insurance companies in recent years have waged a campaign in the Saturday Evening Post and in Life magazine, designed to reach one out of three potential jurors (more than 70 million persons in all),<sup>2</sup> urging them to be conservative in their verdicts when serving as jurors,—to carry into the jury room the thought of insurance and to consider the impact of large verdicts upon their own insurance premiums. We quote a few such passages taken from the opinion in People ex rel. Barton v. American Automobile Ins. Co., 132 Cal.App.2d 317, 282 P.2d 559: “‘Next time you serve on a jury, remember this: When you are overly generous with an insurance company’s money, you help increase not only your own premiums, but also the cost of every article and service you buy.’” 132 Cal. App.2d at page 319, 282 P.2d at page 560. “‘Your Insurance Premium is Being Determined Now. This could be any courtroom in the country—Behind the locked door, twelve men and women are reaching a verdict involving a defendant protected by a casualty insurance company. What they decide affects your pocketbook. * * Casualty insurance companies have been losing an average of $11 on every $100 of earned automobile liability premiums. More accidents are partly responsible. So are excessive jury awards, rendered by jurors who feel they can afford to be generous with the “rich” insurance company’s money. Actually, jurors who are responsible for awards in excess of what is just and reasonable are soaking you by raising insurance rates.’” 132 Cal.App.2d at page 320, 282 P.2d at page 560.

The only justification for the rule excluding (with limitations) evidence of the existence of insurance is the supposition that jurors will be led into excessive verdicts if they become aware of defendant’s insurance coverage. Today this is a naive conceit. The use of automobiles has increased so prodigiously since 1903 and compulsory liability insurance, or almost compulsory insurance, such as our own Financial Responsibility Law (Veh.Code, §§ 410–418.5) and Security Following Accident statute (Veh.Code, §§ 419–423.1), has become so common that jurors naturally assume as they enter the jury box that defendant is insured against liability. Years of trial experience have shown it to be commonplace, rather than exceptional, for some juror, when asked on voir dire if he or she had ever been a party to a claim for damages for personal injury or property damage growing out of an automobile accident, to say: “Yes, but nobody was injured and my insurance company took care of it,” or: “Yes, but the insurance companies got together and settled the matter.” 5 Stanford Law Review, at 144: “Even if there is no mention of insurance during the trial, the common knowledge of the jurors that most automobile owners are insured must be considered.<sup>15</sup>” The footnote includes this: “The California Department of Motor Vehicles estimates that 80% of California motorists carry liability insurance. Letter of August 7, 1952, on file with the Stanford Law Review."

Our courts have taken cognizance of this fact from time to time. "It is not contended the verdict is excessive. Under the circumstances of this case we may not assume the plaintiffs were prejudiced by the question and answer complained of. It must be true that all jurors know most owners of automobiles carry indemnity insurance these times when motor vehicle accidents are so common." Toomes v. Nunes, 24 Cal.App.2d 395, 399, 75 P.2d 94, 96. "While attorneys may not deliberately drag in the fact that defendants are protected by an insurance company, it is very generally known in these days, to every person of understanding, that most owners and operators of automobiles are now protected by some form of insurance, and particularly do they believe that common carriers operating large trucks upon the highways are so protected, so we do not believe that the questions and answers heretofore referred to could have made any difference in the final outcome of the case, or in the amount that the jury awarded." Moniz v. Bettencourt, 24 Cal.App.2d 718, 725, 76 P.2d 535, 539.

Concerning the refusal of an instruction to the effect that no insurance company is a party to the action, it is said, in Risley v. Lenwell, 129 Cal.App.2d 608, 656, 277 P.2d 897, 928: "While we believe that the court might well have given the requested instruction we do not believe that upon the record in the instant case the failure to give it constitutes reversible error. The jury of course knew that no insurance company was a party to the action, and as stated by this court in Moniz v. Bettencourt, 24 Cal.App.2d 718, 76 P.2d 535, 539, it is very generally known to every person of understanding 'that common carriers operating large trucks upon the highways are so protected [by insurance].' We do not believe that the failure to give the requested instruction affected the final outcome of the case or the amount awarded."

Lahti v. McMnamin, 204 Cal. 415, 422, 268 P. 644, 646, "But, when the fact that defendant carries insurance is properly brought to the knowledge of the jury, either by the evidence on the part of the defendant, or indirectly in connection with proof of some material fact in the case, we know of no rule of law that empowers any court to set aside the jury's verdict upon the assumption that such evidence might have influenced the jury in rendering a verdict which was excessive in amount. If the verdict of the jury is excessive, then it should be set aside by the court, no matter what may have prompted the jury in the rendition thereof. On the other hand, if the verdict is not excessive, as we have held to be the case in this action, then it should be sustained, notwithstanding the fact that there is evidence in the record which might have tended to influence the jury in allowing excessive damages."

Mr. Justice Carter, dissenting in State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co. v. Superior Court, 47 Cal.2d 428, 436, 304 P.2d 13, 18, had this to say: "Moreover, with all the recent publicity that has been given to insurance in automobile accident cases, stressing the effect on premiums for such insurance, it cannot be said that jurors are ignorant on the subject, nor that the insurers want them to be. The claimed danger of injection of insurance into the case has lost much of the sting assumed to exist formerly. In recent widespread publicity jurors have been told generally not to give large awards of damages and to avoid giving any except in the clearest cases. While it is true that in an ordinary personal injury action, with minor exceptions, the existence of insurance is not material to any issue, it must be assumed that the jurors know that all motorists carry insurance."

2 Witkin, California Procedure, § 12, page 1738: "[I]t seems highly unrealistic to suppose that automobile-owning jurors are unaware of the position of insurers in the defense of personal injury actions, particularly since the recent inauguration by these companies of a national publicity campaign against high verdicts. And in operation the rule is largely one of form and tactics, for there are a number of situations in which the reference is either entirely proper or, if improper, does not constitute reversible error."

11 Southern California Law Review, at 414: "Indeed, no case can be found which goes to the extent of holding that the wrongful injection of insurance is prejudicial per se."

4 A.L.R.2d 761, Annotation, at page 764: "[I]n view of the fact that most automobile owners now carry liability insurance covering operation of their automobiles, the probability of prejudice resulting in the minds of the jury from some suggestion that the defendant in an automobile accident case carried liability insurance does not seem so real as it formerly did. While the courts still are careful to prevent unwarranted injection of the liability insurance factor, the more recent cases indicate less of a tendency to regard error in this regard as beyond cure by proper action of the trial judge." At page 817: "In view of the present almost universal custom among automobile owners of protecting themselves from liability for damages resulting from negligence in the operation of their automobiles by procuring liability insurance, and of the general knowledge of jurors of the prevalence of such a custom, it is probable that a reference by plaintiff's counsel suggesting that defendant is insured is not as prejudicial to the right of a defendant to a fair and impartial trial as heretofore."

[2] As shown above, defendants called as their witness one Weaver who stated on direct that he was an investigator and as such had a telephone conversation with Fate White, the owner and driver of the car in which plaintiff was riding, and that he made a recording of the interview with White's consent. When the recording was produced plaintiff's attorney requested and was granted leave to examine the witness on voir dire. It started as follows:

"Q. Mr. Weaver, you say you are an investigator? A. Yes, that's correct.

"Q. Working for whom? A. The Truck Insurance Exchange.

"Q. Is that an insurance company? A. Right."

There was no impropriety in counsel's reference to insurance up to this point. Plaintiff's counsel was entitled to ascertain for whom Weaver was working when he made the recording of his telephonic conversation with White. And when Weaver replied that he was working for the Truck Insurance Exchange, counsel was entitled to inquire whether that was an insurance company. The witness first used the word "insurance" and counsel rightly clarified the identity of the witness' employer. Cf. Cozad v. Raisch Improvement Co., 175 Cal. 619, 624, 166 P. 1000; Reneau v. Hirsch, 88 Cal.App. 1, 8, 262 P. 1100; Wilson v. Fredericksen & Kasler, 94 Cal.App.2d 361, 364, 210 P.2d 741; Moffitt v. Ford Motor Co., 135 Cal.App. 7, 17, 26 P.2d 661; Brown v. McCuan, 56 Cal.App.2d 35, 40, 132 P.2d 838; Charter v. Olson, 137 Cal.App.2d 636, 646, 290 P.2d 867.

[3-5] Counsel mentioned the insurance company four more times. The trial judge held it was improper for plaintiff's attorney to bring out the fact of insurance in the first instance, that he should have confined himself to showing that the witness was acting on behalf of the defendant,—i. e., the nominal one, not the real party in interest. In the circumstances here present, neither the first mention of insurance by counsel nor later repetition could amount to prejudicial misconduct; repetition of a known fact adds little if anything to the effect of knowledge already possessed. True, the subject of insurance, like the wealth or size of defendant or inflammatory pictures of a plaintiff's injuries, may be so presented as to be objectionable because of a tendency to lead the minds of the jurors away from the real issues; but such matters are easily controlled by the trial judge. If counsel's repeating of the phrase "insurance company" was deemed by the judge to be inflammatory he should have dealt with it like any other improper evidence, by prompt exclusion or prompt admonition to counsel and cautionary instruction to the jury. The ruling at bar was in point of law an abuse of discretion.

[6] It is said that this cross-examination was not in fact voir dire. That may be true, but no such objection was made and counsel's avowed effort to show prejudice and bias of the witness was in some measure justified by later developments. Objection to receipt of the recording in evidence having been overruled, and playing of same having been started, the court soon interrupted and ruled that it was unintelligible so far as White's statements were concerned. It was decided to play the record again and the judge promptly stopped it, saying: "Let the record show that the Court stood directly over the recording machine,—the Court's hearing is average and is good, according to doctors—and that the Court could not distinguish the answers of Mr. White, and the only reason that they were intelligible at all was because the investigator, Mr. Weaver, repeated them after Mr. White gave the answer, so that we are not getting audibly the answers given by Mr. White in that conversation, and the record is therefore not admissible." This condition of the record would reflect directly upon the transcript of same to which the witness referred to refresh his memory. The examination having been conducted without objection from defendants, they cannot now be heard to say it was not voir dire or that that fact is of any consequence.

The examination in question occurred in the afternoon. The next morning, in chambers, the court opened the subject, saying: "I don't think it makes much difference in this case. But, in the Court's opinion, Mr. Wolfson, you went way too far in questioning that investigator the other day as to his insurance company connections, and so far, in the Court's opinion, if the jury brings in any verdict against both defendants, which they have to do,— they have to bring it in against either both or none—The Court will grant a motion for a new trial so far as the individual defendant is concerned, in other words, so far as Mr. Cornelius is concerned, on the basis that your questions were prejudicial so far as Mr. Cornelius is concerned. Now, they came awfully close to being prejudicial, in the Court's mind, as far as the freight company was concerned. The only reason that I wouldn't grant a motion for a new trial, unless I change my mind—and I haven't made a final determination on it—but where you have a corporation involved, if the corporation is a substantial corporation of any size I don't think that the fact that there is insurance materially affects the verdict so far as the corporation is concerned." Counsel for defendants made no motion for a mistrial, no request for special instruction to the jury, no comment whatever, but elected to speculate upon a verdict for defendants, as the judge himself obviously was doing. Counsel had no right to do that. If he considered the examination as prejudicial he should then, at the latest, have sought to undo the harm by obtaining an appropriate oral instruction to the jury or even by declaration of a mistrial, but he could not remain silent and speculate upon the verdict. "It does not behoove a litigant to observe an error being committed and sit idly by and not mention it to his attorney or the court. Should he do this he puts himself in the position of saying: 'If I win I will say nothing; if I lose I will raise the error.' This is not fair to the court and the litigant should not be permitted to take advantage thereof." Kershaw v. Tilbury, 214 Cal. 679, 691, 8 P.2d 109, 114. "A party should not be permitted to remain quiet and take the chance of a favorable verdict, and then, if the verdict is unfavorable, raise the objection on appeal." Aydlett v. Key System Transit Co., 104 Cal.App. 621, 628, 286 P. 456, 459.

[7] If the cross-examiner's references to insurance were deemed by the court to be improper, it was the duty of the judge to act promptly and to then admonish counsel and instruct the jury;<sup>3</sup> it was no more appropriate for the judge to speculate upon a defendant's verdict than it was for defense counsel.

At the argument of the motion for new trial plaintiff's attorney, foreseeing the judge's ruling, offered to dismiss the case as to the individual defendant, Cornelius, who was the driver of the corporate defendant's truck. This the court rejected. At a later hearing on the same motion counsel for plaintiff offered to give Mr. Cornelius a covenant not to hold him liable on the judgment "and thus eliminate the prejudice that you have been referring to as to Mr. Cornelius' liability." But the judge said: "That doesn't cure the problem because the liability of the company is based solely on the liability of the defendant Cornelius. * * * The point is that the jury might never have rendered this verdict if they thought that Mr. Cornelius was going to be liable, might never have rendered it at all if they thought Mr. Cornelius was liable. They figured that because of the insurance involved that Mr. Cornelius would not be liable and so they were willing to render the verdict." Counsel for defendants was given no opportunity to accept or reject this offer. The judge had made up his mind to grant the motion. We think the acceptance of the offer would have cured the (assumed) error. Speculation as to the jurors' reasoning, postulated upon the assumption that they obeyed the instruction that the verdict must be for or against both defendants but ignored the one to the effect that the presence or absence of insurance should not be considered, was improper.

3. "Many decisions justify an affirmance of the judgment upon the ground that the trial court admonished the jury to disregard the objectionable evidence. It is stated that an appellate court will not assume that members of the jury disregarded their oaths and failed to follow the admonition." 11 So.Cal.L.Rev. p. 417.

"Although some of the earlier cases appear to have taken a rather narrow view regarding the curing of error in this regard by instructions to disregard the evidence, remarks, questions or sugges-

The order granting a new trial must be reversed.

[8,9] The judgment must be affirmed. The only argument presented in support of the defendants' appeal from the judgment is that the court erred or abused its discretion in refusing to grant the motion for new trial upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence. With this we are unable to agree. Upon this matter there was room for exercise of a broad discretion (4 Cal. Jur.2d, § 600, p. 479), and in that respect it cannot, upon this record, be said that there was an abuse of discretion.

[10, 11] The trial judge said in in part: "In other words, had I been deciding the case without a jury I would have decided on the basis of the evidence that there was assumption of risk, and because of that assumption of risk I would have given a judgment for the defendant. But I am not of the opinion and was not of the opinion at the time of the last hearing and so stated on page 10—I am not of the opinion that the evidence was so clearly in favor of the defendant that I should grant a motion for a new trial on the basis of the verdict being against the weight of the evidence, clearly against the weight of the evidence. In other words, the Court in order to grant a motion for a new trial has to do more than disagree with the verdict of the jury. The Court has to be of the opinion that the verdict is clearly against the weight of the evidence, and I don't think it was." This is a sound appraisal of the cases. Green v. Soule, 145 Cal. 96, 103, 78 P. 337, 340: "Of course, the judge should give due respect to the verdict tions of insurance, the general rule now appears to be that in the absence of anything indicating the verdict returned was adversely affected, or anything to indicate persistent and studied attempts to bring the objectionable matter before the jury, prompt action in striking improper references to the defendant's insurance from the record, coupled with instructions admonishing the jury to disregard such matters, sufficiently protects the defendant's rights without requiring reversal of the judgment." 4 A.L.R.2d p. 821.

of the jury, and may sometimes properly deny a new trial in cases where, if submitted to him without a jury, he might, upon the evidence, have made a different decision. He must be clearly satisfied that the verdict is wrong; otherwise he should let it stand." See also People v. Richard, 101 Cal.App.2d 631, 633, 225 P.2d 938; Stone v. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist., 81 Cal.App.2d 902, 905, 185 P.2d 396; Imperial-Yuma etc. Credit Assn. v. Shields, 74 Cal.App.2d 932, 935, 169 P.2d 671.

Proceeding on petition of widow for judgment determining that entire estate of decedent was community property and that she was entitled to distribution of one-half thereof. From part of a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Newcomb Condee, J., widow appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that person who was executor of decedent's estate and one of the trustees named therein had authority to litigate widow's claim and since findings as to which property was separate and which was community were irreconcilable, judgment could not stand.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal from part of a judgment determining interests in an estate.

James E. Harvey died testate on December 13, 1954. He was survived by his wife, appellant Annie B. Harvey, two daughters, Anita Fisher and Betty Ernestine Harvey, and a sister, Ruby Fulks. In his will, duly admitted to probate, he required his wife to elect to take under the will in lieu of her community interests; and declared that if she should elect to take her community rights as provided by law and not under the will, all provisions for her in the will should lapse.

The will declared that the home of the deceased and his wife was community property, devised it to the wife, and bequeathed various articles of personal property to her. The residue of the estate was left in trust, one-quarter of the net income therefrom to be paid to the widow, each daughter, and the sister. Jesse E. Harvey and Jesse M. Harvey were named trustees. The will contained an in terrorem clause which provided that any beneficiary who should contest any provision of the will should take nothing.

Appellant filed a petition for a judgment determining interests in the estate, alleging that the entire estate was community property and that she was entitled to distribution of half thereof. Jesse M. Harvey, executor of the will and one of the named trustees, filed a statement of his interest in the estate, alleging that the estate consists of separate property with the exception of an account in Bank of America which, he stipulated, was community property.

The court found that two parcels of realty, a life insurance policy, all automobiles owned by the decedent at death, a bank account in Bank of America, a half interest in another bank account, and clothing and personal effects were community property and that appellant is entitled to have an undivided interest therein distributed to her; that the family home was held in joint tenancy by the decedent and appellant. The court further found that the remaining assets of the estate were separate property of the decedent and concluded they should, on petition therefor, be distributed to the trustees, excluding any interest on the part of appellant. Judgment followed accordingly. The appeal is from the judgment save and except those parts adjudging that certain items were community property and that the home place was held in joint tenancy.

[1,2] Appellant first claims that respondent, as executor, had no authority to litigate or resist her claims. The point is not tenable. Respondent is named as one of the trustees of the trust created by the will. The trustee is a devisee, his rights vesting as of the date of the testator's death. (1 Nossaman, Trust Administration and Taxation, 2d ed., 422, § 26.06, 429, § 27.01.) "In its capacity as trustee the appellant has a vested interest in the property of the estate and the terms of the trust impose upon it the duty of protecting that property from all unnecessary expenses and claims. There can be no doubt that in that capacity it had power to oppose the petition for sale, and has the right of appeal to this court from an adverse decision thereon." In re Estate of Rawitzer, 175 Cal. 585, 587, 166 P. 581, 582.

[3] The court found that appellant contested the will, and adjudged that by reason thereof she is not entitled to take under the will. Appellant asserts the finding is unsupported by the evidence. The point is untenable. There was evidence that appellant unsuccessfully contested the will. By contesting the will appellant forfeited all rights thereunder. In re Estate of Fuller, 143 Cal.App.2d 820, 300 P.2d 342.

Appellant and the decedent were married in January 1934 and lived together until his death in 1954. Beginning prior to 1920 and until about 1946 the decedent was engaged in the sand and gravel business with two of his brothers, Jesse and Frank. The business was conducted by a corporation and a partnership. Frank died about 1946. In 1950 the corporation was dissolved and its assets and those of the partnership were distributed to the decedent, Jesse, and Frank's estate in equal parts. All of the property involved in this proceeding was owned by the decedent prior to his marriage to appellant except the bank account in Bank of America. Appellant's contention at the trial was that the decedent and she entered into an executed oral agreement by which the decedent's separate property was transmuted into community property.

The inventory listed these items as property of the estate: (1) bank account, Bank of America; (2) clothing and personal effects; (3) automobiles; (4) a parcel of realty at 2346-48 Hunter Street, Los Angeles; (5) a parcel of realty at 2342-42½ Hunter Street, Los Angeles; (6) a parcel of realty; (7) and (8) an undivided one-third interest in two parcels of realty; (9) a parcel of realty; (10) a parcel of realty; (11) miscellaneous auto and truck parts; (12) three power shovels; (13) miscellaneous office equipment; (14) a promissory note; (15) a half interest in another bank account. The appraised value of the estate is $82,591.58.

The court found, concluded, and adjudged that items 1, 2, 3, 5, 10, 15, and a life insurance policy were community property. It found, concluded, and adjudged that the remaining items were separate property of the decedent.

Appellant contends the findings were prejudicially inconsistent and irreconcilable. We agree. Items 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15 were acquired by the decedent about February 1950 by reason of the dissolution of his business enterprises and the distribution to him of his prorata share of the assets. His interest in the business was acquired prior to marriage. Items 5 and 10 were acquired by the decedent prior to marriage. The court found them to be community property.

Appellant, the two daughters of appellant and the decedent (testifying against their pecuniary interests), and several apparently disinterested witnesses testified to facts which showed that appellant and the decedent had entered into an executed oral agreement transmuting all, not part, of his separate property into community property. Respondent's position below was that all of the property standing in the name of the decedent was his separate property. There was no evidence that part of the property was community and part separate, yet the court found that items 5, 10, and 15 were community property and that items 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 13, and 14 were separate property of the decedent. There is no evidence in the record warranting a division of items 4 to 15, inclusive, into separate categories. On the evidence, they are either all community property or all separate property.

[4] The inconsistency in the findings is obvious. On the one hand the court found there was an executed oral agreement transmuting separate property into community, and on the other hand found there was no such agreement with respect to property which was acquired by the decedent simultaneously with the property found to be community. In other words, the court found there was an executed oral agreement transmuting separate property owned by the decedent at the time of his marriage into community property, and at the same time found there was no such agreement with respect to other property owned by him at the time of his marriage.

[5] The conflict in the findings is clear, irreconcilable, and material. It is impossible to harmonize them. Where the findings are contradictory and irreconcilable with respect to matters which are material to the merits of the case, and the determination of them, one way or the other, is essential to the correctness of the judgment, the judgment cannot stand. *Andrews v. District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.
Oct. 17, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of petit theft with a prior felony conviction and from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, LeRoy Dawson, J., the defendant appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that the evidence sustained conviction and that permitting a witness to relate his conversation with the defendant was not error.

Judgment affirmed.

In prosecution for theft of dresses, permitting witness to relate his conversation with the defendant respecting the missing dresses was not error where the corpus delicti of the offense had been established by the witnesses' testimony that the dresses were in the showroom prior to the defendant's arrival and that they were missing after his departure and that the witness had given no one permission to take them. William Henry Dunn, in pro. per.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

In a court trial, William Henry Dunn was convicted of a violation of Penal Code, § 667 (petit theft with a prior felony conviction) and was sentenced to state prison for the term prescribed by law. Dunn appeals from the judgment.

The evidence consisted of that received at the preliminary hearing and additional evidence introduced at the trial. Jerry Miller of California is a dress manufacturing firm located on the fifth floor of a building at 722 South Los Angeles Street in the City of Los Angeles. The premises consist of an office, a show room and a factory; the rooms are separated by partitions. On June 25, 1957, Rita Appleby was employed by the firm as a bookkeeper. At about 1 p. m., appellant stepped off the elevator and entered the office, carrying a handful of loose papers. Mrs. Appleby testified that appellant told her he was a minister and asked her for a donation to send boys to camp, which she declined to give, stating that she had no authority to make donations. Mrs. Appleby told him to come back some other time. After talking to the witness for about 10 minutes, appellant left the office and walked across the hall, whereupon Mrs. Appleby went out to lunch.

Shortly thereafter, the proprietor, Jerry Miller, saw appellant enter the elevator; Dunn was carrying a bundle wrapped in newspaper under his left arm. The bundle was about a foot long and looked untidy, as if it had been wrapped in a hurry. An hour or so later, Miller went to the show room to get two new sample dresses for one of his salesmen. The dresses were originals; they sold for $12.75 each at wholesale and $24.95 at retail; Miller had last seen them just before Mrs. Appleby went to lunch. The dresses were missing and Miller had given no one permission to remove them from the show room. The witness identified a strip of fabric shown to him by the deputy district attorney as part of the material from which one of the dresses had been cut; the fabric was received in evidence without objection. No other dresses were made from the remnants.

<sup>1</sup> Several weeks later, appellant returned to the premises and had a conversation with Miller. When the deputy asked Miller to relate the substance of the conversation, appellant's counsel objected that the corpus delicti of the offense had not been established; the objection was overruled and it was not renewed. Miller testified that he asked appellant if he had been in the place before and appellant replied that he always came there for donations. When asked if he "got anything," Dunn said: "Well, you gave me things from time to time." Miller replied: "I never gave you a thing in my life. I never saw you before in my life except I think you are the man who was up here once before and something very peculiar happened." Miller then asked appellant to stay in order to make sure that he had not taken any dresses; Dunn became very indignant. When Miller told appellant that he intended to call the police, Dunn said "Well, I won't stay" and promptly left. Miller accompanied him down the elevator and followed him for several blocks, whereupon appellant put his hand in his pocket and said: "Look, you get away from me or I will pull a knife on you." Appellant then ran across the street against a red traffic signal and Miller was unable to catch up with him.

John Montana was the elevator operator who conducted appellant to and from Miller's establishment on June 25th. On the way up, Dunn was holding a few papers. On the way down, Montana saw him wrapping a bundle under his arm; the bundle was not wrapped in newspaper; it contained some kind of material. When shown the fabric identified by Miller, Montana stated that it was similar to the material that was in the bundle.

Carl W. Rogers, a police officer for the City of Los Angeles, testified that he had a conversation with Dunn prior to his arraignment. The officer asked appellant if he had anything to say before he was brought into court and Dunn replied: "I will gladly plead guilty to petty theft, but I don't want to go back to the joint", and "If you will take me out to the Lincoln Heights Jail and book me petty theft I will plead guilty to it."

A former conviction of petit theft with a prior conviction of felony was established by evidence which was introduced without objection. Its sufficiency is not questioned on the appeal.

Appellant testified in his own behalf that he did not take any dresses belonging to Miller. He went to the premises on June 25th to solicit funds for the AME Church of Christ, of which he was an ordained minister; he did not have a license from the city to solicit funds. He spoke to Mrs. Appleby, who refused to give him a donation, whereupon he left; Mrs. Appleby was still in the office when he departed. On returning to the premises some weeks later, Miller asked him if he had taken the dresses, and he denied his guilt to Miller. Miller went down the elevator with him, but he did not run away from Miller or threaten him with a knife. A month later, some policemen came to his apartment, searched it and found two dresses and some other women's clothing in a footlocker. He had purchased the dresses at Grayson's Department Store in the company of his fiancée. Appellant denied stating to Officer Rogers that he would plead guilty to petit theft; he told the investigating officers that he was willing to plead guilty to soliciting funds without a license.

At the conclusion of Dunn's testimony, the deputy district attorney sought and obtained a several days' continuance in order to procure the attendance of the investigating officers who, he stated, "had recovered the property and could tie in the property to the evidence here." However, when the trial was resumed, the People introduced no further evidence.

Upon request for appointment of counsel on the present appeal, the court referred the matter to the Los Angeles Bar Association Committee on Criminal Appeals for report to the court as to possible merit in the appeal. The matter was assigned to a member of the committee who has made written report to the court stating that the record had been examined and that in the opinion of the attorney it disclosed no valid ground of appeal. After we had examined the record, the request for appointment of counsel was denied. Appellant was duly so advised and his time to file a brief was substantially extended. Appellant has filed a brief in propria persona. His sole contention is that the evidence was insufficient to establish his guilt of an offense of theft. In accordance with our practice, we have made a thorough study of the record. We have discovered no insufficiency of the evidence and no error at the trial.

[1,2] Theft is characterized as the felonious taking of property which is not one's own. Pen.Code, § 484; People v. Moorhead, 104 Cal.App.2d 688, 694, 232 P.2d 268. In a prosecution for petit theft, the People must prove an unlawful taking and asportation of property of some intrinsic value with the intent to deprive the owner thereof. People v. Williams, 73 Cal.App.2d 154, 157, 166 P.2d 63.

[3] In our opinion, there was sufficient evidence to prove appellant guilty of theft. Dunn admitted being on the premises shortly before the time when the dresses were found to be missing. The court could reasonably infer from the testimony of Miller, Montana and Mrs. Appleby, from the evidence of appellant's actions when accused by Miller and from his offer to plead guilty to petit theft, that Dunn went to the premises on a pretext of soliciting funds, waited until the bookkeeper went to lunch, and took the dresses from the show room, attempting to conceal them in a bundle under his arm. Appellant refers in his brief to several inconsistencies in the testimony of Montana and Miller, for example, that the two witnesses gave different descriptions of the bundle. But the resolution of inconsistencies and the weight to be accorded to their testimony were questions for the trier of fact, not for a reviewing court. People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 104 P.2d 778; People v. White, 35 Cal.App.2d 61, 69, 94 P.2d 617.

[4] The court did not commit error in permitting Miller to relate his conversation with appellant. The corpus delicti of the offense had been established by Miller's testimony that the dresses were in the show room prior to Dunn's arrival on June 25th, that they were missing after his departure, and that Miller had given no one permission to take them. People v. Kross,

The judgment is affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

HERNDON, Justice.

Convicted by a jury of second degree robbery, defendant seeks a reversal of the judgment on the basis of two contentions: (1) that the trial court erred in admitting evidence tending to prove that he was guilty of three crimes other than that for which he was on trial, and (2) that defendant's arrest in Los Angeles County by an officer from Ventura County without a warrant was invalid and that evidence procured in the incidental search was improperly admitted.

The sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict being clear and unchallenged, the facts may be briefly stated. On May 21, 1957, at about 8:30 p. m. Rena Lively was the sole employee in charge of the Western Union office in Oxnard, California. Miss Lively testified that defendant entered the office just as she had finished dealing with two Mexican Nationals who promptly left the office, leaving her alone with the defendant. Defendant inquired whether she had a money order for one

Weber. After checking her files, she informed defendant that she had no such money order. Thereupon, the defendant pulled a gun and in a low voice ordered her to turn over her money to him. He kept the gun partially concealed by his coat so that she was able to see only a portion of it. Miss Lively testified that she was frightened and that she promptly complied by giving defendant the money as demanded. After taking the money, defendant followed her to a restroom and ordered her to remain inside. She stated that the defendant was polite, calm and quiet spoken. He was wearing a light blue suit, a white shirt and no tie. One Richard Martin, a taxi driver, testified that he saw defendant in the Western Union office between 8:20 p. m. and 8:30 p. m. on the night of the robbery. He stated that defendant was in the office at the time the Mexican customers were present.

Detective Sergeant Patton of the Oxnard Police department testified that on the evening of May 27, 1957, he showed a photograph of defendant to Miss Lively who stated that he was the man who had robbed her. A few hours later, at approximately 2:20 a. m., Sgt. Patton and another Ventura police officer observed the defendant in Lynwood, California, driving an automobile. They stopped him near his home, placed him under arrest for robbery and proceeded to search his car. The officers had no search warrant nor arrest warrant at the time. The search of defendant's car produced a dark blue suit, a straw hat and a toy pistol. Defendant told the officers he had found the toy pistol on the lawn that morning and intended to give it to a friend's child. When accused by the officers of robbing the Western Union office in Oxnard, defendant denied it. Defendant was taken briefly to the Lynwood police department and was then transported to the Oxnard police department. Testifying in his own defense, defendant admitted that he had been convicted of armed robbery in Los Angeles County on March 17, 1954, and had been incarcerated for that crime, but had been placed on parole in March of 1957. He testified that between 8 p. m. on May 21, 1957, the night of the Oxnard robbery, and 2 a. m. of the following day he was in a bar at Lynwood, California, during which time he was engaged in negotiating for the purchase of a car from the bartender. He denied that he was ever in the Western Union office at Oxnard at any time. The bartender gave testimony corroborating defendant's alibi.

Over defendant's objection, the trial court admitted evidence tending to prove that defendant was guilty of three robberies in addition to the one with which he was then charged. Miss Margaret Brislane and George Howell, both Western Union employees, testified that on April 15, 1957, at 1:20 a. m. defendant robbed Miss Brislane in the Western Union office located at 741 S. Flower Street in Los Angeles. Defendant denied being in this Western Union office at any time during that day. He testified that at the time of that robbery he was in Hollywood in a bar.

Mrs. Patty Dunagan and Mrs. Willard Jordan, Western Union employees, testified that on May 27, 1957, at 10:40 p. m. defendant attempted to rob Mrs. Dunagan in the Western Union office at Santa Ana, California, but left without taking any money when the victim feigned a faint. The defendant denied that he had been in the Western Union office at Santa Ana at any time on May 27, and testified that at the time in question he was in a bar in Norwalk.

Mrs. Mary Ward and Mrs. Elaine Bonar, both Western Union employees, testified that defendant robbed Mrs. Ward in the Western Union office in Wilmington, California, on May 10, 1957, at 2 p. m. Defendant denied that he had been in that office of Western Union at any time, and testified that at the approximate time of that robbery he was in the Lynwood branch of the Bank of America and that after leaving the bank he had gone to the Clover Room, a bar in the same city where he had stayed "for a while."

Since defendant denied the robbery and offered the defense of an alibi, it is obvious that the sole issue determinative of defendant's guilt or innocence was the question of his identity as the robber. In other words, the essential question was whether the prosecution witnesses were mistaken in their identification of the defendant as the perpetrator of the crime with which he was charged. The test of admissibility of evidence of other crimes for the purpose of identifying the defendant was stated as follows in People v. Grimes, 113 Cal.App. 2d 365, 371, 248 P.2d 130, 133: "[W]hether the facts pertaining to the other offenses allowed to be proved, show a general pattern, scheme, or plan, and are sufficiently similar and possess a sufficiently high degree of common features with the act charged to warrant the inference that if the defendant committed the other acts he committed the act charged." In People v. Peete, 28 Cal.2d 306, 318, 169 P.2d 924, it was held that evidence of another crime showing a similar modus operandi was admissible as tending to identify the defendant as the perpetrator of the crime immediately charged.

[2] The evidence in the case at bar portrayed a series of four robberies, including the one charged, so similar in pattern and involving a modus operandi with so many distinctive and common features that the correctness of the trial court's ruling is not open to serious question. Whether proffered evidence of other crimes satisfies the applicable test is primarily a question for the trial court. People v. Grimes, supra, 113 Cal.App.2d 365, 371, 248 P.2d 130; People v. Roach, 148 Cal.App.2d 364, 368, 306 P.2d 523; cf. People v. Peete, 28 Cal.2d 306, 169 P.2d 924.

All four robberies were perpetrated within a period of six weeks. In addition to the fact that all four robberies involved Western Union offices, the following similarities appear: (1) the approach to all four robberies was similar in that in each case before demanding the money, the perpetrator made a request of his victim that would allow him to survey the premises. In Wilmington, Santa Ana and Oxnard the defendant asked each of the respective victims whether she had a money order for a certain named person. In Los Angeles, he asked the victim for change for a $5 bill. (2) During all four robberies the defendant was dressed in a similar and distinctive fashion in that on all occasions he was described as being neatly dressed, wearing either a light blue or dark blue suit without tie. (3) The weapon used and the manner of its use were similar in all four robberies in that on all occasions the defendant was armed with a gun and in each instance he made some apparent attempt to keep the weapon partially concealed from the victim. (4) The words and forms of expression used by defendant were remarkably similar in all instances. On each occasion defendant assured his victim that she would not be hurt if she complied with his demands. (5) During all the robberies, the defendant spoke in a very low tone of voice, so inaudible in fact that in three of the instances he had to repeat himself at least twice. (6) During all four robberies, the defendant exhibited similar mannerisms and was uniformly described as quiet, calm, mannerly and polite. (7) The victims of all the robberies were similar, being in each instance a woman employee of Western Union.

A comparison of the facts of the instant case with those appearing in the cited decisions shows that the "sufficient common features" test was more than adequately fulfilled in the instant case. Cf. People v. Grimes, supra, 113 Cal.App.2d 365, 371, 248 P.2d 130; People v. Roach, 148 Cal.App.2d 364, 368, 306 P.2d 523; People v. Mazza, 135 Cal.App.2d 587, 598-599, 287 P.2d 798.

[3] Defendant strongly argues that the trial court abused its discretion in admitting an excessive quantity of evidence to show the common plan or design. The substance of the argument is indicated by the following quotation from defendant's reply brief: "It is however, of extreme importance to emphasize that assuming, arguendo, that evidence of other crimes was admissible under Respondent's theory that it was relevant to prove a design or scheme, nonetheless the trial court indulged in a prejudicial abuse of discretion in allowing so great a mass of testimony related to such other offenses to be introduced. For even if it be conceded that some evidence of other crimes is admissible, in support of the People's case, nevertheless the Court must exercise a sound judicial discretion in limiting the quantum of such evidence so that defendant's right to be tried only for the offense committed, be not unduly prejudiced and vitiated."

We hold that the foregoing argument must be rejected. Had the prosecution limited its evidence to only one or two of the other similar robberies, defendant undoubtedly would have argued that the proven similarities were merely coincidental and that the examples were too few to establish a general plan or a common design. The prosecutor in this case cannot fairly be charged with excessive zeal in offering a sufficient quantum of incriminating evidence to remove any reasonable basis for obviously-to-be-anticipated arguments and to satisfy a jury beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's identity as the perpetrator of the crime charged. By the same token, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting this quantum of evidence. Indeed, there seems to be an element of inconsistency in defendant's arguments (1) that an insufficient number of similar features were shown to establish a common pattern or design and (2) that the court erred in admitting an excessive cumulation of evidence directed to that purpose.

[4,5] We find no merit in defendant's contention that his arrest in Los Angeles by a police officer from Ventura County was unlawful because the officer was without a warrant. Without citation to any supporting authority, defendant urges " * * * that the spirit of the law requires that where an officer is advised of the whereabouts of a suspect in another county, he is under a duty, at least absent emergency circumstances, to procure a warrant before making an arrest outside the territorial limits of his office." Defendant properly concedes that the fact that an officer could have obtained a warrant does not of itself render illegal an arrest or an incidental search and seizure without a warrant. People v. Winston, 46 Cal.2d 151, 162, 163, 293 P.2d 40; People v. Chapman, 151 Cal.App.2d 59, 62, 311 P.2d 190; Lorenzen v. Superior Court, 150 Cal. App.2d 506, 512, 310 P.2d 180. The authority of the arresting officer in the instant case cannot be denied. It is undisputed that he was a peace officer (Pen.Code, § 817) and as such he had authority under Penal Code § 836, subd. 3, to make the arrest without a warrant if a felony had in fact been committed and he had reasonable cause to believe that defendant had committed it. These conditions were fulfilled; the actual commission of a felony is unquestioned and the victim had made a positive identification of the defendant as the perpetrator in the presence of the officer only a few hours before the arrest was made. Under these circumstances a private person could have made this arrest without a warrant. Pen. Code, § 837, subd. 3. It would appear anomalous to hold unlawful an arrest by a peace officer when the same arrest by a private citizen clearly would have been lawful. People v. Ball, 162 Cal.App.2d 465, 323 P.2d 276.

[6] It appearing that after his arrest defendant was taken before a magistrate in Ventura County, the further contention is made that the arrest was rendered unlawful ab initio by the failure of the arresting officer promptly to take defendant before the nearest or most accessible magistrate in the county in which the arrest was made, as required by provisions of section 849 Penal Code then in effect. Prior to its amendment in 1957, section 849 appeared to be in conflict with section 145 of the same code. Under section 145 the arresting officer is guilty of a misdemeanor if he delays taking the arrested person before a magistrate having jurisdiction to take his examination. Under Article I, Section 8, of the California Constitution, only a magistrate in the county in which the offense charged is triable has jurisdiction to take the examination. This apparent conflict was eliminated by the 1957 amendment to section 849, which requires the arrested person to be taken before a magistrate in the county in which the offense is triable.

[7,8] But assuming, arguendo, that the officer's conduct in taking defendant before the Ventura County magistrate was unlawful, it would not follow that either the antecedent arrest or the search and seizure incidental thereto were illegal. There is nothing in the circumstances here shown to provide any basis for the application of the exclusionary rule of People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905, 50 A.L.R.2d 513. Unlawful activity which does not produce the evidence sought to be suppressed and which is entirely unrelated and collateral to the securing of such evidence affords no basis for applying a rule of exclusion. People v. Maddox, 46 Cal.2d 301, 305, 294 P.2d 6; People v. Martin, 45 Cal.2d 755, 763, 290 P.2d 855; People v. Boyles, 45 Cal.2d 652, 654-655, 290 P.2d 535.

The judgment is affirmed.

Prosecution for violation of narcotic laws. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Walter Carpeneti, J., entered judgment of conviction and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, P. J., held that evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction and that trial court did not err in submitting two counts of indictment, one being for the possession of heroin and the second being for the sale, furnishing or giving away of heroin, to jury and then dismissing the possession count after verdict but before sentencing.

Affirmed.

1. Poisons ☞9

Evidence, which was entirely circumstantial, was sufficient to sustain judgment of conviction for possession of heroin and the sale, furnishing or giving away of heroin. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500; West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1099.

2. Indictment and Information ☞144

In prosecution for narcotic violations on indictment charging in one count the possession of heroin and in the second count the sale, furnishing or giving away of heroin, there was no error by trial court in submitting both counts of indictment to jury and then dismissing count one after the verdict. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500; West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 654, 954, 1099.

Benjamin M. Davis, San Francisco, Yin Soon Wong, San Francisco, of counsel, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., Richard S. L. Roddis, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

KAUFMAN, Presiding Justice.

On February 5, 1957, the defendant and one Mary Frazer were charged by information with the possession of heroin on January 18, 1957, in violation of Health & Safety Code, section 11500. The information was amended to allege three prior convictions as to Mary Frazer and one prior conviction as to the defendant for violation of Health & Safety Code, section 11500. The defendant entered a plea of not guilty and denied the prior conviction. Mary Frazer entered a plea of not guilty and admitted the prior convictions. On March 7, 1957, defendant was charged by indictment with two counts of violation of Health & Safety Code, section 11500; one, for the possession of heroin on February 20, 1957, and the second, for the sale, furnishing or giving away of heroin on February 20, 1957. The indictment was amended to also charge a prior conviction. On April 5, 1957, defendant entered his plea of not guilty to each count of the indictment and denied the alleged prior conviction. Trial date was set for June 10, 1957. On June 10, 1957, the information was dismissed as to Mary Frazer, under Penal Code, section 1099, on motion of the District Attorney. By permission of the court the indictment and information as to the appellant were consolidated for trial. The defendant changed his plea to admit the prior conviction charge.

At the trial, after the conclusion of the prosecution's case in chief, the defendant moved to strike certain evidence, for an advised verdict on the information, and for a dismissal of the possession charge of the indictment. All of these motions were denied. No evidence was offered on behalf of the defendant. A jury trial resulted in a verdict of guilty on both counts charged in the indictment and on the charge of the information. On June 14, 1957, the court granted defendant's motion to dismiss the possession count of the indictment and denied defendant's motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment. Defendant was sentenced to consecutive terms on the remaining two charges for the possession charged in the information and the sale and furnishing charge of the indictment. This appeal is taken from the judgment of conviction, the order denying a new trial and the order denying the motion for arrest of judgment.

On appeal defendant urges that the following prejudicial errors compel a reversal of the judgment.

1. Insufficiency of the evidence as to the sale count charged in the indictment.

2. The trial court submitted both the possession and sale counts of the indictment to the jury and then dismissed the possession count after verdicts had been rendered on both.

3. The trial court instructed the jury that the defendant could be convicted on all offenses charged.

4. The erroneous admission of evidence obtained by illegal search and seizure to prove the possession of heroin charged in the information.

5. Insufficiency of the evidence as to the possession count charged in the information.

[1] As to defendant's first contention, the evidence is entirely circumstantial and amply supports the verdict of the jury. Agent Nickoloff, of the Federal Bureau of Narcotics, testified that on February 20, he first searched informant Howard and ascertained that Howard had no narcotics on his person. He then gave Howard $20 in currency belonging to the United States Government, the serial numbers of which had been recorded. Nickoloff and Howard then drove to the intersection of Fulton and Webster Streets in San Francisco. They were looking for one "Smiley". After parking the car, Howard walked to Fillmore Street and continued walking north. Nickoloff followed Howard and kept him in view continually. Nickoloff watched Howard meet the defendant in Foster's Cafe. He saw that some object was passed between the two men but could not determine its nature. He then saw the defendant and Howard enter a pool hall and then a barbershop next door to the pool hall. The defendant went to the rear of the barbershop and disappeared from Nickoloff's view for about 30 seconds to a minute. Howard remained well in view in front of the barbershop. The two men left the barbershop and reentered the pool hall. There, he again observed a meeting of their hands. Howard then left the defendant, rejoined Nickoloff and handed him a small bundle which was later found to contain heroin. Nickoloff and Howard returned to the Bureau of Narcotics Office. Nickoloff again searched Howard and found no funds or narcotics. The defendant was arrested the next day. People v. Richardson, 152 Cal.App.2d 310, 313 P.2d 651, cited by the defendant, is not applicable here; in that case the police did not witness the transaction and the purchaser was not searched.

[2] The trial court did not err in submitting both counts of the indictment to the jury and then dismissing count one after the verdict. Penal Code, section 954, expressly authorizes the prosecution to plead "different statements of the same offense," under separate counts. Penal Code, section 654, provides that a single act or omission may not be punished under more than one theory of criminal liability. Here, the count was dismissed before sentencing. It does not appear that the action of the trial court was erroneous or prejudicial. People v. Lyons, 50 Cal.2d 245, 324 P.2d 556. The same is true of the instruction that the defendant could be convicted of all the offenses charged. People v. Smith, 36 Cal.2d 444, 447-448, 224 P.2d 719.

Defendant's fourth contention is that the evidence introduced to prove the offense charged in the information, possession of heroin on January 20, was obtained by unlawful search and seizure. The facts of that occurrence, as related by the two police officers and Mary Frazer are as follows: About 5 A.M. on January 18, 1957, Officers Engler and Caulfield saw Mary Frazer leave an automobile in front of the New Fillmore Hotel with an unidentified male. She entered the hotel with the man, and after a brief conversation at the desk, the man left alone. Both officers knew Mary Frazer and from past observation and information suspected she was engaging in prostitution. The officers had previously talked to her at another hotel and asked her to cease her activities and leave the area. They saw Mary Frazer leave the hotel and enter a restaurant a few doors from the hotel. Mary Frazer testified that she met the defendant, then unknown to the police officers, in the restaurant and discussed narcotics with him. She stated she was then a user of heroin and that the defendant had told her he had some good heroin. About 5:30 A.M. she and the defendant left the restaurant and entered the hotel in order to use narcotics. They walked up the hotel stairway without stopping at the desk. The officers followed them, and inquired at the desk about Mary Frazer's room number. They went up to room 133 and listened at the door for two or three minutes. They could hear a conversation but could not discern its content. One of the officers knocked on the door of the room, stated that they were police officers and wanted to come in to talk to her. She testified that after the knock on the door the defendant got up and went over to the sink and told her to wait a minute. About 30 seconds later the officers heard water running. About a minute and a half later, Mary Frazer said "Yes", and opened the door a few inches. On seeing the police officers, she opened the door  $\frac{3}{4}$ th of the way and sat down on the bed which was close to the door. The officers entered and noticed that Mary Frazer was partially disrobed. The defendant, fully dressed, except for his coat, was standing near the wash basin at the rear of the room. The officers talked to Mary Frazer and the defendant for about 15 minutes. Mary Frazer stated she knew the defendant only as "Smiley". Then the defendant reached in his coat which was hanging in a temporary closet at the rear of the room. One of the officers asked the defendant to stay away from the coat until he could examine it. The defendant had been previously patted for weapons but his coat had not been inspected. The officer observed that the defendant who had been calm during the prior period of questioning began to shake and generally appear to be in an agitated and nervous condition. As he stepped toward the defendant, the defendant dropped a number of keys and coins on the floor. The officer looked on the floor and saw a small white article projecting from beneath the defendant's left foot. The defendant's foot appeared to cover the article about  $\frac{3}{4}$ th of the way. The officer picked up the object which turned out to be a small packet of white powder, which was subsequently determined to be heroin.

Both the defendant and Mary Frazer denied knowledge of the packet. Both were placed under arrest and the room searched. The contents of a brown toilet kit belonging to the defendant was examined for weapons. The defendant dumped some of the articles in the kit on the bed. The officers returned the kit to the defendant. The defendant and Mary Frazer were taken to the police station and booked. During the booking the brown toilet kit was examined in detail. A red plastic spoon coated with white powder was found. The powder on the spoon was analyzed and found to contain heroin. Mary Frazer stated that she had not seen the red spoon in the hotel room and that it was not hers.

[3, 4] Defendant argues that the packet and the spoon were obtained as a result of an illegal search and seizure and therefore improperly admitted into evidence. He argues that the entry of the police officers into the hotel room was illegal. It is conceded that the officers did not have either a search or arrest warrant, and that they were following Mary Frazer in the hope of obtaining sufficient evidence of prostitution to arrest her or to talk to her further about her activities. It cannot be questioned that under the circumstances their suspicions were reasonable. People v. Martin, 45 Cal.2d 755, 290 P.2d 855; People v. Michael, 45 Cal.2d 751, 290 P.2d 852. After they knocked on the door and stated their purpose, Mary Frazer opened the door a few inches. Upon seeing the officers, she opened the door further, stepped back and sat down on the bed. Under these circumstances she clearly consented to the entry of the officers. She was the person with proper authority to give consent. There is nothing in the record to indicate that her consent was anything but voluntary. The question of her consent was a question of fact properly left to the trial court. Her expression of assent to the officers and her action in opening the door, suggests an affirmative invitation to the officers to enter. People v. Holland, 148 Cal.App.2d 933, 307 P.2d 703.

[5, 6] The entry of the officers into the room was made with proper consent and not unlawful. People v. Burke, 47 Cal.2d 45, 301 P.2d 241; People v. Michael, 45 Cal.2d 751, 290 P.2d 852; People v. Bouchard, 161 Cal.App.2d 302, 326 P.2d 646. Their questioning of defendant and Mary Frazer were reasonable and proper under the circumstances as was the officer's desire to examine the defendant's coat. Once in the room, the officers were not required to close their eyes to readily visible contraband. People v. Roberts, 47 Cal.2d 374, 303 P.2d 721; People v. Bouchard, 161 Cal.App.2d 302, 326 P.2d 646; People v. Ambrose, 155 Cal.App.2d 513, 318 P.2d 181. The spoon was found in a proper search made after the arrest. It follows that there was no unlawful search and seizure of the items complained of and that they were properly introduced into evidence.

From what has been said above, it is clear that there is ample evidence to support the judgment of possession.

No prejudicial error appearing in the record before us, the judgment must be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

Jay R. Martin and William F. Sharon, Oakland, for appellant.

SPENCE, Justice.

Plaintiff brought this action for damages after defendant allegedly breached a contract by failing to convey her real property in accordance with the terms of a deposit receipt which the parties had executed. After a trial without a jury, the court concluded that the agreement was "illusory" and lacking in "mutuality." From the judgment accordingly entered in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Plaintiff was a real estate developer. He was planning to construct a shopping center on a tract adjacent to defendant's land. For several months, a real estate agent attempted to negotiate a sale of defendant's property under terms agreeable to both parties. After several of plaintiff's proposals had been rejected by defendant because of the inadequacy of the price offered, defendant submitted an offer. Plaintiff accepted on the same day.

The parties' written agreement was evidenced on a form supplied by the real estate agent, commonly known as a deposit receipt. Under its terms, plaintiff was required to deposit $1,000 of the total purchase price of $57,500 with the real estate agent, and was given 120 days to "examine the title and consummate the purchase." At the expiration of that period, the balance of the price was "due and payable upon tender of a good and sufficient deed of the property sold." The concluding paragraph of the deposit receipt provided: "Subject to Coldwell Banker & Company obtaining leases satisfactory to the purchaser." This clause and the 120-day period were desired by plaintiff as a means for arranging satisfactory leases of the shopping center buildings prior to the time he was finally committed to pay the balance of the purchase price and to take title to defendant's property.

Plaintiff took the first step in complying with the agreement by turning over the $1,000 deposit to the real estate agent. While he was in the process of securing the leases and before the 120 days had elapsed, defendant's attorney notified plaintiff that defendant would not sell her land under the terms contained in the deposit receipt. Thereafter, defendant was informed that satisfactory leases had been obtained and that plaintiff had offered to pay the balance of the purchase price. Defendant failed to tender the deed as provided in the deposit receipt.

[1] Initially, defendant's thesis that the deposit receipt constituted no more than an offer by her, which could only be accepted by plaintiff notifying her that all of the desired leases had been obtained and were satisfactory to him, must be rejected. Nowhere does the agreement mention the necessity of any such notice. Nor does the provision making the agreement "subject to" plaintiff's securing "satisfactory" leases necessarily constitute a condition to the existence of a contract. Rather, the whole purchase receipt and this particular clause must be read as merely making plaintiff's performance dependent on the obtaining of

"satisfactory" leases. Thus a contract arose, and plaintiff was given the power and privilege to terminate it in the event he did not obtain such leases. (See 3 Corbin, Contracts (1951), § 647, pp. 581-585.) This accords with the general view that deposit receipts are binding and enforceable contracts. (Cal. Practice Hand Book, Legal Aspects of Real Estate Transactions (1956), p. 63.)

[2, 3] However, the inclusion of this clause, specifying that leases "satisfactory" to plaintiff must be secured before he would be bound to perform, raises the basic question whether the consideration supporting the contract was thereby vitiated. When the parties attempt, as here, to make a contract where promises are exchanged as the consideration, the promises must be mutual in obligation. In other words, for the contract to bind either party, both must have assumed some legal obligations. Without this mutuality of obligation, the agreement lacks consideration and no enforceable contract has been created. Shortell v. Evans-Ferguson Corp., 98 Cal. App. 650, 660-662, 277 P. 519; 1 Corbin, Contracts (1950), § 152, pp. 496-502.) Or, if one of the promises leaves a party free to perform or to withdraw from the agreement at his own unrestricted pleasure, the promise is deemed illusory and it provides no consideration. See J. C. Millett Co. v. Park & Tilford Distillers Corp., D. C.N.D. Cal., 123 F. Supp. 484, 493. Whether these problems are couched in terms of mutuality of obligation or the illusory nature of a promise, the underlying issue is the same—consideration. Ibid.

While contracts making the duty of performance of one of the parties conditional upon his satisfaction would seem to give him wide latitude in avoiding any obligation and thus present serious consideration problems, such "satisfaction" clauses have been given effect. They have been divided into two primary categories and have been accorded different treatment on that basis. First, in those contracts where the condition calls for satisfaction as to commercial value or quality, operative fitness, or mechanical utility, dissatisfaction cannot be claimed arbitrarily, unreasonably, or capriciously (Collins v. Vickter Manor, Inc., 47 Cal.2d 875, 882-883, 306 P.2d 783), and the standard of a reasonable person is used in determining whether satisfaction has been received. Thomas Haverty Co. v. Jones, 185 Cal. 285, 296, 197 P. 105; Fielding & Shepley, Inc., v. Dow, 72 Cal.App. 2d 18, 21, 163 P.2d 908; Fruit Growers' Supply Co. v. Goss, 4 Cal.App.2d 651, 654, 41 P.2d 357; Scott Co., Inc., v. Rolkin, 133 Cal.App. 209, 212, 23 P.2d 1065; Melton v. Story, 113 Cal.App. 609, 612-614, 298 P. 1032; Jones-McLaughlin, Inc., v. Kelly, 100 Cal.App. 315, 321-325, 279 P. 1076; Bruner v. Hegyi, 42 Cal.App. 97, 99, 183 P. 369. Of the cited cases, two have expressly rejected the arguments that such clauses either rendered the contracts illusory (Collins v. Vickter Manor, Inc., supra) or deprived the promises of their mutuality of obligation. Melton v. Story, supra. The remaining cases tacitly assumed the creation of a valid contract. However, it would seem that the factors involved in determining whether a lease is satisfactory to the lessor are too numerous and varied to permit the application of a reasonable man standard as envisioned by this line of cases. Illustrative of some of the factors which would have to be considered in this case are the duration of the leases, their provisions for renewal options, if any, their covenants and restrictions, the amounts of the rentals, the financial responsibility of the lessees, and the character of the lessees' businesses.

This multiplicity of factors which must be considered in evaluating a lease shows that this case more appropriately falls within the second line of authorities dealing with "satisfaction" clauses, being those involving fancy, taste, or judgment. Where the question is one of judgment, the promisor's determination that he is not satisfied, when made in good faith, has been held to be a defense to an action on the contract. Tiffany v. Pacific Sewer Pipe Co., 180 Cal. 700, 702-705, 182 P. 428, 6 A.L.R. 1493; Brenner v. Redlick Furniture Co., 113 Cal.App. 343, 346-347, 298 P. 62; Kendis v. Cohn, 90 Cal.App. 41, 66-68, 265 P. 844; Schuyler v. Pantages, 54 Cal.App. 83, 85-87, 201 P. 137; see also Van Denmark v. California Home Extension Ass'n, 43 Cal.App. 685, 687-689, 185 P. 866. Although these decisions do not expressly discuss the issues of mutuality of obligation or illusory promises, they necessarily imply that the promisor's duty to exercise his judgment in good faith is an adequate consideration to support the contract. None of these cases voided the contracts on the ground that they were illusory or lacking in mutuality of obligation. Defendant's attempts to distinguish these cases are unavailing, since they are predicated upon the assumption that the deposit receipt was not a contract making plaintiff's performance conditional on his satisfaction. As seen above, this was the precise nature of the agreement. Even though the "satisfaction" clauses discussed in the above-cited cases dealt with performances to be received as parts of the agreed exchanges, the fact that the leases here which determined plaintiff's satisfaction were not part of the performance to be rendered is not material. The standard of evaluating plaintiff's satisfaction—good faith—applies with equal vigor to this type of condition and prevents it from nullifying the consideration otherwise present in the promises exchanged.

Moreover, the secondary authorities are in accord with the California cases on the general principles governing "satisfaction" contracts. "It has been questioned whether an agreement in which the promise of one party is conditioned on his own or the other party's satisfaction contains the elements of a contract—whether the agreement is not illusory in character because conditioned upon the whim or caprice of the party to be satisfied. Since, however, such a promise is generally considered as requiring a performance which shall be satisfactory to him in the exercise of an honest judgment, such contracts have been almost universally upheld." (3 Williston, Contracts (rev. ed. 1936), § 675A, p. 1943; see also 3 Corbin, Contracts (1951), §§ 644, 645, pp. 560-572.) "A promise conditional upon the promisor's satisfaction is not illusory since it means more than that validity of the performance is to depend on the arbitrary choice of the promisor. His expression of dissatisfaction is not conclusive. That may show only that he has become dissatisfied with the contract; he must be dissatisfied with the performance, as a performance of the contract, and his dissatisfaction must be genuine." (Restatement, Contracts (1932), § 265, comment a.)

If the foregoing cases and other authorities were the only ones relevant, there would be little doubt that the deposit receipt here should not be deemed illusory or lacking in mutuality of obligation because it contained the "satisfaction" clause. However, language in two recent cases led the trial court to the contrary conclusion. The first case, Lawrence Block Co. v. Palston, 123 Cal.App.2d 300, 266 P.2d 856, 858, stated that the following two conditions placed in an offer to buy an apartment building would have made the resulting contract illusory: "O.P.A. Rent statements to be approved by Buyer" and "Subject to buyer's inspection and approval of all apartments." These provisions were said to give the purchaser "unrestricted discretion" in deciding whether he would be bound to the contract and to provide no "standard" which could be used in compelling him to perform. 123 Cal.App.2d at pages 308-309, 266 P.2d at pages 861-862. However, this language was not necessary to the decision. The plaintiff in Lawrence Block Co. was a real estate broker seeking a commission, his right to which depended upon the existence of a binding agreement between the buyer and seller. The seller had not accepted the buyer's offer as originally written, but had added other conditions. This change constituted a counter-offer. Since the latter was not accepted by the buyer, no binding contract was created and the broker was not entitled to his commission.

The other case, Pruitt v. Fontana, 143 Cal.App.2d 675, 300 P.2d 371, 377, presented a similar situation. The court concluded that the written instrument with a provision making the sale of land subject to the covenants and easements being "approved by the buyers" was illusory. It employed both the reasoning and language of Lawrence Block Co. in deciding that this clause provided no "objective criterion" preventing the buyers from exercising an "unrestricted subjective discretion" in deciding whether they would be bound. 143 Cal.App.2d at pages 684-685, 300 P.2d at page 377. But again, this language was not necessary to the result reached. The buyers in Pruitt refused to approve all of the easements of record, and the parties entered into a new and different oral agreement. The defendant seller was held to be estopped to assert the statute of frauds against this subsequent contract, and the judgment of dismissal entered after the sustaining of demurrers was reversed.

While the language in these two cases might be dismissed as mere dicta, the fact that the trial court relied thereon requires us to examine the reasoning employed. Both courts were concerned with finding an objective standard by which they could compel performance. This view apparently stems from the statement in Lawrence Block Co. that "The standard 'as to the satisfaction of a reasonable person' does not apply where the performance involves a matter dependent on judgment." 123 Cal. App.2d at page 309, 266 P.2d at page 862. By making this assertion without any qualification, the court necessarily implied that there is no other standard available. Of course, this entirely disregards those cases which have upheld "satisfaction" clauses dependent on the exercise of judgment. In such cases, the criterion becomes one of good faith. Insofar as the language in Lawrence Block Co. and Pruitt represented a departure from the established rules governing "satisfaction" clauses, they are hereby disapproved.

[4] We conclude that the contract here was neither illusory nor lacking in mutuality of obligation because the parties inserted a provision in their contract making plaintiff's performance dependent on his satisfaction with the leases to be obtained by him.

The judgment is reversed.

Civ. 22652.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 20, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 13, 1958.

Hearing Denied Dec. 17, 1958.

Action for conversion of lumber cut from timberlands owned by plaintiff. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Vernon W. Hunt, J., entered judgment for defendant and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that evidence sustained finding that lumber company, which under an agreement with plaintiff, entered his land and cut and logged timber, had title to lumber which it cut from such timber and sold to defendant and that defendant therefore was not guilty of conversion in asserting ownership over such lumber.

Affirmed.

1. Trover and Conversion Ⓒ35

In action for conversion, plaintiff must prove either ownership with right of possession, or actual possession of the article claimed to have been converted at the time of the alleged conversion.

2. Logs and Logging Ⓒ35

In action for conversion of lumber cut from timberlands owned by plaintiff, evidence sustained finding that lumber company which under an agreement with plaintiff, entered his land and cut and logged timber, had title to lumber which it cut from such timber and sold to defendant, and that defendant therefore was not guilty of conversion in asserting ownership over such lumber.

3. Logs and Logging Ⓒ5

Timber severed from the soil under the provisions of an agreement, license or permit, before the expiration or revocation thereof, becomes the personal property of the buyer or licensee, and he is vested with the rights incident to ownership of personal property, and is entitled to remove it as his own.

4. Logs and Logging Ⓒ5

One who has felled lumber under a purchase agreement retains title to the lumber after the agreement has been revoked.

5. Logs and Logging Ⓒ35

Where timberland owner did not terminate an agreement with a lumber company for its cutting of timber on plaintiff's lands, until plaintiff discovered a violation of fire laws, defendant which purchased lumber from lumber company could not be deemed guilty of conversion as to lumber cut prior to termination of the agreement on theory that lumber company, by violation of fire laws prior to termination, and thus by violation of the cutting agreement, cut all timber wrongfully, with title not passing to it, nor to defendant.

6. Judgment Ⓒ829(3)

Where plaintiff in a conversion action was a party to a bankruptcy action involving a lumber company which it authorized to go upon plaintiff's lands to cut timber, some of which lumber company sold to defendant, plaintiff was bound by federal court's finding that plaintiff waived certain defaults of lumber company by accepting payments from it, as well as by accepting payments upon plaintiff's claim in bankruptcy.

7. Logs and Logging ⚡35

Plaintiff, in a conversion action against buyer of certain lumber from a company which plaintiff authorized to go upon his land to cut timber, would be deemed to have affirmed title in lumber company to all lumber cut by it on plaintiff's property prior to a certain date, by instituting a suit on that date seeking to recover balance allegedly due for timber cut and logged under the logging agreement.

8. Evidence ⚡317(4)

In conversion action, trial court did not err in refusing to permit a plaintiff's witness to testify as to a certain conversation outside of presence of defendant on theory it would prove joint venture, where record was bare of any evidence of a joint venture.

9. Estoppel ⚡75

Timberland owner, by allowing a lumber company to come upon his property, set up a mill and cut timber, was estopped to assert title against buyer of lumber from lumber company.

Wright, Wright, Goldwater & Wright, Loyd Wright, Edgar R. Carver, Jr., Los Angeles, for respondent.

LILLIE, Justice.

The action in the court below involved a claim of damages for conversion of lumber cut from timberlands owned by plaintiff. The matter was heard by the court sitting without a jury. It is from the judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Viewing the evidence in a light most favorable to respondent, the essential facts are these: Plaintiff and his wife owned timber-bearing lands in Tulare County. On August 2, 1948, they entered into a timber sales agreement with Jones Lumber and Mill Company (hereinafter referred to as Jones Company) under which it was to enter plaintiff's land and cut and log timber. The contract provided in paragraph Two: "that no title or ownership of any timber shall pass from seller until after the timber is cut," and payment therefor shall be made each week for all timber cut the preceding week. Paragraph Four required compliance with all laws, rules and regulations pertaining to logging; and paragraph Eleven provided that should Jones Company fail to cut and pay for timber as required it shall have no right to continue cutting without prior written authorization from plaintiff.

On August 6, 1948, Jones Company moved a small mill onto the property and proceeded to cut timber which it sold to various purchasers, including defendant. On October 8, 1948, plaintiff visited the premises, observed a lack of adequate fire protection and orally advised Jones Company he was terminating the agreement. He also notified it in writing on October 11, 1948.

Up to October 8, 1948, defendant, a prior customer of Jones Company, made from it considerable purchases of timber cut and logged, receiving 11 loads. Thereafter, defendant took 3 loads of lumber from plaintiff's property—2 on October 19, 1948, and 1 on October 21, 1948. In all, defendant bought from Jones Company, and fully paid for, 86,958 board feet of lumber. On October 25, 1948, defendant made to Jones Company its last payment in full for all lumber purchased by it, concluding their dealings.

Prior to October 11, 1948, plaintiff had received various payments from Jones Company for timber cut; and from that date through the beginning of December, 1948, plaintiff continued to receive and cash checks from Jones Company on account of lumber cut and logged by it, the last, in the sum of $1,600 dated December 3, 1948. During the last of November or the first part of December, 1948, plaintiff, claiming he had not received all of the money due from Jones Company under the contract, told defendant's vice-president he intended to sue Jones Company for monies due him; and on December 9, 1948, plaintiff's wife sued Jones Company in Tulare County. In this suit plaintiff and his wife acknowledged receipt of the payments from Jones Company on account of timber cut and logged under the agreement of August 2, 1948, and sued to recover the balance due. In that action certain monies due Jones Company in the hands of another of its customers, Brush Industrial Lumber Company, were attached.

Subsequently, on June 24, 1949, Jones filed a petition in bankruptcy in the Federal court, No. 6688, in which proceeding plaintiff's wife filed a claim based on the contract of August 2, 1948.

In 1949, after the filing of the bankruptcy proceeding, plaintiff asked defendant's vice-president to aid him in establishing his claim against Jones Company under the contract by supplying him with an account of the amount of lumber received by defendant from Jones Company and paid for. Defendant did so. Jones was adjudicated a bankrupt and on September 29, 1949, plaintiff filed a petition to reclaim his timber property in the Federal court, which petition was granted September 27, 1951. Its order was entered October 21, 1951.

Subsequent to the discharge of Jones as a bankrupt, plaintiff on August 15, 1951, made his first and only demand on defendant for the return of the lumber it had purchased from Jones Company and fully paid for, or its purchase price. This action for conversion resulted.

With respect to the lumber purchased by defendant from Jones Company, the trial court found that: "said Jones Lumber and Mill Company had title to said lumber and were the owners thereof and that the plaintiff and the said Elma Eistrat did not at any time subsequent to August 2, 1948, and do not now have, nor did either of them have at any time subsequent to August 2, 1948, nor now have, any right, title or interest in or to said lumber, or any part thereof."

Appellant has made a general attack on all of the court's findings, urging that "there is no substantial support in evidence to support any of the findings as to any facts found." His real contention seems to be that since Jones Company violated the fire laws, and hence the terms of the agreement, all lumber cut by it was wrongfully cut, title did not pass to it, and therefore could not pass to defendant.

Basically, the main issue before this court is whether the trial court's finding that Jones Company had title to the lumber sold to defendant is supported by substantial evidence.

[1,2] If plaintiff failed to meet the burden of proving his ownership to the cut lumber and right to its possession, the judgment of the trial court must be affirmed. It is well settled that "(I)n an action for conversion, plaintiff must prove either (1) ownership with the right of possession, or (2) actual possession of the article claimed to have been converted at the time of the alleged conversion. (Citations.)" Scutt v. Bassett, 86 Cal.App.2d 373, at page 375, 194 P.2d 781, at page 782. Applying the foregoing rule to the evidence in the instant case, it is clear plaintiff failed to establish a cause of action for conversion. The record shows that plaintiff had neither ownership of the lumber with a right to its possession, nor actual possession of it; and that Jones Company had good title to all lumber it cut and logged under the August 2, 1948, contract, and sold to defendant.

[3,4] Nor is there evidence that the 3 loads of lumber taken by defendant from plaintiff's property after October 8, 1948, were cut after the termination of the contract, in fact, the evidence points the other way. Jones Company's mill was not in operation on October 8, 1948; on that day its logging contractor told Jones in plaintiff's presence that he would do no more cutting; and there is no evidence that any cutting took place after October 8, 1948. In its letter of October 14, 1948, to plaintiff protesting termination of the contract, Jones Company advised him that the felling of timber had run about 25,000 feet ahead of the logging operation. Obviously, the 3 loads of lumber taken by defendant after October 8, 1948, were cut before the termination of the contract, although not all removed by defendant until October 21, 1948. As to whether Jones Company had title to the already cut timber it is clear both from the contract itself and the authorities that timber severed from the soil under the provisions of an agreement, license or permit, before the expiration or revocation thereof, becomes the personal property of the purchaser or licensee. He is vested with the rights incident to ownership of personal property and is entitled to remove it as his own. Sorensen v. Jacobson, 1951, 125 Mont. 148, 232 P.2d 332, 26 A.L.R.2d 1186; 54 C.J.S. Logs and Logging § 29(c), pages 730-731. One who has felled lumber under a purchase agreement retains title to the lumber after the agreement has been revoked. Anderson v. Moothart, 198 Or. 354, 256 P.2d 257.

[5] Appellant argues that although he did not terminate the agreement until October 8, 1948, when he discovered the violation of fire laws, since the first week of August, 1948, Jones Company had violated them and its right to cut lumber terminated the first week in August. This argument completely ignores the authorities heretofore cited governing ownership of timber cut before revocation of an agreement. It also overlooks the terms of the contract of August 2, 1948, as well as the evidence. Nothing in the contract precludes the application of general logging rules; in fact, the agreement specifically provides for passage of title after the lumber is cut, and payment each week for that cut the preceding week. The penalty for breach of any of the terms of the contract is not forfeiture of lumber cut, but a termination of the right to continue further cutting. Besides, any breach of contract by Jones Company prior to the termination of the contract by plaintiff could not in itself constitute the basis for a conversion. Emmert v. United Bank Etc. Co., 14 Cal.App.2d 1, 57 P.2d 963. Factually as well as legally, there is no merit to appellant's contention, because the evidence fails to point to any breach of the agreement of August 2, 1948, prior to October 8, 1948. In fact, plaintiff admitted that prior to October 8, 1948, he had no reason to believe Jones Company was not complying with the agreement, and had made prior visitation to the premises on September 4, 1948. Plaintiff was apparently satisfied with its operations under the contract until October 8, 1948, because he made no objection thereto, and received and cashed checks amounting to $1,573.45 from Jones Company under the contract until October 6, 1948. On October 8th, he voiced his first complaint, and then it concerned only inadequate fire protection and the method of cutting. Of interest at this point is Finding V of the Federal Court in the bankruptcy action, U.S.D.C. No. 6688, made September 27, 1951. The lower court in that connection found as follows: " * * * that said U.S.D.C. in its findings in support of said order entered October 1, 1951, among other things, declares that any default in the performance of the terms and conditions of said timber sales agreement (hereinabove referred to) were waived by Thomas Eistrat and Elma Eistrat by acceptance of payments for and on account of lumber cut and logged by the partnership and the bankrupt with knowledge of the delinquency of the partnership and the bankrupt in performance of said provisions, with the exception of those provisions relating to compliance with the forestry rules with respect to fire hazards."

[6] Appellant objects to the trial court's finding herein on the ground that the Federal court's finding upon which it was based was unnecessary to support the Federal judgment, was surplusage and therefore cannot bind plaintiff. There is no doubt but that plaintiff, a party to the bankruptcy action, is bound by the Federal court's finding that plaintiff waived certain defaults of Jones Company by accepting payments from it, as well as by accepting payments upon plaintiff's claim in bankruptcy. Bernhard v. Bank of America, 19 Cal.2d 807, 122 P.2d 892; Hardware Mut. Ins. Co.

v. Valentine, 119 Cal.App.2d 125, 259 P.2d 70; Martin Music Co. v. Robb, 115 Cal. App. 414, 1 P.2d 1000. The payments referred to by the Federal court are those received by plaintiff from Jones Company after plaintiff notified it of its breach and terminated the agreement. The last payment accepted by plaintiff consisted of $1,600 on December 3, 1948.

Appellant has cited for our attention the recent Supreme Court opinion in Eistrat v. Cekada, 50 Cal.2d 289, 324 P.2d 881, wherein he claims that the court found the Federal findings held that he and not Jones had title to the lumber. A reading of this opinion discloses a discussion concerning only the interpretation of a restraining order issued by the bankruptcy court to prevent actions against the bankrupt. Other findings relating to the ownership of the timber were not discussed.

[7] The trial court further found that plaintiff affirmed title in Jones Company to all lumber cut by it on plaintiff's property prior to December 9, 1948, by instituting a suit on that date in Tulare County in the name of his wife, in which they acknowledged receipt of certain payments on account of the timber cut and logged under the contract of August 2, 1948, and sought to recover a balance allegedly due for timber cut and logged under the agreement. Here again are presented questions of fact which the trial court decided adverse to plaintiff. The evidence is substantial to support the finding and the reviewing court will not disturb it. Furthermore, the Federal court heretofore made a similar finding in this connection which is binding on plaintiff.

Substantial evidence in the record also sustains the trial court's finding that plaintiff waived rights, if any he had against defendant in conversion, and elected to pursue his remedy against Jones Company. It is clear that originally plaintiff deliberately chose to proceed against Jones Company. He so advised defendant in early 1948. Later, after he had proceeded against Jones Company and wanted to file his claim in the bankruptcy court against Jones, he even enlisted and received defendant's aid and assistance. It was not until he had exhausted his remedies against Jones Company and failed to satisfy his alleged claim that he decided to proceed against defendant, and then for the first time he made demand on it, after 2½ years. Appellant urges that the evidence shows that on October 11, 1948, plaintiff gave defendant notice that Jones Company did not have title to the lumber; but the trial court, as it had a right to do, rejected this testimony when defendant's vice-president testified to the contrary. Plaintiff also contends that the monies he accepted were only to hold as set-off or security collateral for damages; and that the attachment of funds held by Brush Industrial Lumber Company in the Tulare County action was without his authorization. Again the trial court decided from the evidence the factual questions how, in what manner and for what purposes the monies were received by plaintiff.

[8] Appellant argues that the trial court erred in refusing to permit his witness, Noral Sweem, to testify to a conversation between plaintiff and Jones outside of the presence of defendant. The record is not too clear what plaintiff wanted to prove since no formal offer of proof was made, but it discloses that Sweem hauled lumber to defendant from plaintiff's property in September and October of 1948. He testified that on October 8th, he was on the premises and heard an argument between Tom G. Jones and plaintiff. When plaintiff asked him the conversation, objection was made on the ground of hearsay. Asked by the court the purpose of the evidence, the plaintiff replied:

"Mr. Eistrat: I want to prove by this conversation my allegation. I have a joint venture allegation in my complaint, Third Amended Complaint, your Honor, and I believe all the participants in the joint venture are bound by the acts of the others in the venture, and I want to prove the facts.

"The Court: Is it your theory that the Western Hardwood Lumber Company was engaged in a joint venture within the meaning of the law defining joint ventures?

"Mr. Eistrat: Yes, your Honor."

"The Court: With Jones?"

"Mr. Eistrat: Yes, your Honor."

The objection was sustained on the ground that a proper foundation had not been laid, since there was no evidence in the record supporting a joint venture and it was hearsay as to defendant.

The record is bare of any evidence of a joint venture between defendant and Jones Company and the ruling was proper. Plaintiff claims some did exist and relies primarily upon $3,000 defendant paid to Jones Company on August 18, 1948. But the record is clear that defendant had been a prior customer of Jones Company; had a contract with it for purchase of cut lumber and the $3,000 was an advance payment on lumber to be later delivered; that 14 loads of lumber were subsequently delivered to defendant that the difference between the $3,000 and the total amount was fully paid; and that all lumber delivered was paid for by defendant to Jones Company by October 25, 1948, on which date they concluded their business. Based upon this evidence, the trial court found that the $3,000 was a loan to be, and was, repaid by Jones Company by loads of lumber and that no joint venture or partnership existed between them.

Appellant contends that because of the court's refusal to allow in the testimony of Mr. Sweem, and for other reasons, he was denied due process of law. We have already ruled on the propriety of the court's action in connection with Sweem's testimony; and it is clear that at no point during the trial was appellant denied due process of law. On the contrary, the record is replete with assistance given to plaintiff by the court. Plaintiff appeared in propria persona, and although he has had prior court experience in various cases involving his own litigation and some law training, the trial court was patient, courteous and helpful to him. He was fully heard and he had every opportunity to offer numerous exhibits (40 in all), present his evidence and argue extensively. The record does not show that plaintiff was in any way precluded from putting on his case.

[9] On the issue of estoppel, appellant claims that assuming he is estopped because of his conduct in suing in Tulare County and accepting the money from Jones Company, an estoppel against defendant exists in his favor, which should place the parties on an equal basis. In the first place, the court did not and could not find from the evidence facts to support an estoppel favoring plaintiff. The record does not show evidence to support any kind of a finding that the defendant knew of Jones Company's violation of the fire laws; that defendant knew Jones Company did not own the timber; that defendant paid unconscionably low distress prices for it, or that any estoppel in plaintiff's favor existed. On the contrary in connection with plaintiff's contention that defendant, at the time it took the lumber, knew Jones Company did not own it, the authorities are clear that plaintiff, by allowing Jones Company to come upon his property, set up a mill and cut timber, is now estopped to assert title against defendant. There is no question but that defendant was a bona fide purchaser; that plaintiff in signing the agreement of August 2, 1948, knew Jones Company was going to take possession of the timberlands and sell lumber cut from the property, and that it was doing so and selling to defendant between August 2nd and October 8th. Assuming, under his theory, that plaintiff was the rightful owner of the lumber cut, under the law he would still be estopped from subsequently asserting title. In Wendling Lbr. Co. v. Glenwood Lbr. Co., 54 Cal.App. 691, at page 696, 202 P. 929, at page 930, wherein plaintiff sold lumber to one Routt, a known dealer in lumber, and defendant without knowledge of the facts of the sale bought it from Routt, the court said: "These facts bring this within the rule that when the owner of a property clothes another with the apparent title to, or power of disposition of it and an innocent third party has thereby been induced to deal with the apparent owner in reference thereto, the true owner is estopped from afterwards asserting his title. (Citations)."

Further, in connection with estoppel, the evidence shows that plaintiff at no time advised defendant that Jones Company had no title to the lumber until after defendant's last transaction with it, when the lumber had been delivered and paid for in full.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

S. F. 19961.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.

Oct. 17, 1958.

Action by wine buyer for damages for breach of contract by seller. The Superior Court, Fresno County, Strother P. Walton, J., entered judgment for seller and buyer appealed. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held that where contract was entered into for purchase of wine and seller later stated that he would not deliver wine but buyer did not accept or act upon such statements at that time and later materially changed position by purchasing wine from another winery, buyer at that time exercised election to treat repudiation as a breach of contract.

Judgment reversed with directions.
Opinion, 322 P.2d 561, vacated.

1. Contracts ⇨313(2)

Anticipatory breach of contract occurs on part of one of the parties to an instrument when he positively repudiates contract by acts or statements indicating that he will not or cannot substantially perform essential terms thereof, and anticipatory breach must appear only with the clearest terms of repudiation of obligation of contract.

2. Contracts ⇨313(1)

It is not within power of one party to a contract to discharge it by repudiating it.

3. Sales ⇨405

Where contract was made for purchase of wine, even if it be assumed that seller's statement that he would not deliver wine amounted to a positive repudiation of contract, statement had effect of giving buyer right of election either to treat declaration as an empty threat and to wait until time for performance arrived, or to act upon declaration and treat it as a final assertion by seller and as a wrongful renunciation of contractual relation into which he had entered, and if buyer elected to pursue latter course it became a breach of contract excusing performance on buyer's part and gave him immediate right to recover upon it as such.

4. Sales ⇨405

Where buyer had entered into contract for purchase of wine and seller then stated that it would not deliver wine, but upon being informed by buyer that executed order had been sent seller then stated that it would have to go through with the sale, and although seller's statement might have been considered as an anticipatory repudiation of contract it was not accepted or acted upon by buyer at that time, when buyer materially changed position almost a month later by purchasing other wine in order to obtain the quantity and quality of wines needed buyer exercised election to treat repudiation as breach of contract, and fact that buyer did not make payment in full within 48 hours as provided in contract was immaterial.

5. Sales ⇨418(7)

Where wine buyer made contract for purchase of wine but subsequently seller stated it would not deliver wine and buyer waited until almost a month later before purchasing wine from other source, purchasing of wine from other sources constituted election by buyer to treat repudiation as breach of contract of sale, and it could not be contended that buyer was required on day seller first repudiated contract to immediately buy wines of lesser quality than that contracted for in order to mitigate damages.

6. Damages $\S$ 62(1)

Duty to minimize damages is predicated upon statutory ruling that a person is required to use reasonable care to prevent an unwarranted piling up of damages and extent of this duty is to use ordinary care and diligence to prevent enhancement of damages, but duty does not extend to necessity of going to extraordinary or unusual lengths to minimize damages. West's Ann.Civ.Code,  $\S$  1787, subds. 1-3.

James Robert Nielsen, Iener W. Nielsen and Harold V. Thompson, Fresno, for respondents.

CARTER, Justice.

Plaintiffs, Lewis Guerrieri, and his copartners in the Santa Fe Vintage Company, brought an action for damages for the breach of a contract for the sale of approximately 200,000 gallons of wine against defendant, Phil J. Severini. In that action the trial court found that there was no contract entered into between the parties. On appeal the judgment was reversed and a new trial was ordered. Guerrieri v. Severini, 132 Cal.App.2d 269, 281 P.2d 879.

At the second trial, the court found that there was a valid written contract between the parties which had been breached by defendant Severini but that plaintiffs had suffered no damage thereby.

Plaintiffs here contend that certain findings of the trial court are unsupported by the evidence. These findings will be discussed separately hereafter.

Plaintiffs, who are copartners, are the owners of the Santa Fe Vintage Company which engages in the business of producing, buying, bottling and marketing wine. Their principal place of business is in Los Angeles. Defendant and his wife were the owners of the Severini Winery & Distillery. Fritz Kyer was an independent wine broker doing business in Fresno and in the case at bar acted as agent for both plaintiffs and defendant. On approximately March 27, 1953, Kyer went to defendant and told him that he had an offer from the Santa Fe Vintage Company to buy defendant's wine and suggested a price of 36¢ per gallon therefor. Defendant accepted this offer and Kyer communicated the acceptance by telephone to Guerrieri at his place of business in Los Angeles. At Guerrieri's insistence Kyer prepared a written document which Severini read and signed on either March 30th or 31st.<sup>1</sup>

This document provided that approximately 200,000 gallons of sweet wines were "Sold to Santa Fe Vintage Co." and listed the quantities of each type of sweet wine involved. The price was stated to be 36¢ per gallon and it was provided that "All of the above wine to be out by August 1, 1953." This was "Accepted: Severini Winery & Distillery by Phil J. Severini (signed)." The contract was dated March 27, 1953 and its terms provided for "Cash for Entire Amount Immediately."

On the original appeal of this case the court noted that the provision for cash payment "immediately" meant "cash for entire amount within 48 hours"<sup>2</sup> (132 Cal. App.2d 269, 273, 281 P.2d 879, 882).

contract was signed on the 30th or 31st of March.

1. Severini testified that he signed the order on March 27th. Defendant's brief (pp. 10 and 13) appears to concede that this is erroneous and the opinion on the first appeal specifically states that the

2. In this connection it should be noted that the Reporter's Transcript on the Right after Severini had signed the contract on March 30th or 31st Kyer talked to Guerrieri in Los Angeles on the telephone and at Guerrieri's suggestion immediately mailed the signed contract to him there. In the conversation Kyer told Guerrieri that Severini wanted him to send someone to gauge the wine in the tanks at the winery but Guerrieri said he did not think it was necessary and that he would take Severini's figures as to the quantity. Approximately one hour after Severini had signed the contract and it had been mailed to Guerrieri in Los Angeles, Severini called Kyer on the telephone and told him that due to some domestic difficulties he was having with his wife a restraining order had been placed against his disposition of the wine and that he would be unable to deliver it. Kyer testified that he told Severini that the signed order had already been mailed to plaintiff in Los Angeles. At the second trial Severini admitted that at the first trial, when informed that the written signed order had already been sent to Guerrieri, he had said "Well, if that's the case, that's all that can be done. We'll have to go through with it."<sup>3</sup>

When Kyer called Guerrieri on the telephone on March 30th or 31st to tell him that Severini had told him he would be unable to deliver the wine Guerrieri told him "you just have to get this wine because I want it. I tested and checked it and it is just the thing that we need."

The trial court, after finding (III) that the parties had entered into a binding, valid and enforceable contract "evidenced by a memorandum in writing, signed by the defendant" on March 27, 1953, found (V):

"That it was a term and condition of said contract that the plaintiffs were to have the wine tanks gauged at the Severini Winery and Distillery premises to determine the exact gallonage bought under the aforesaid contract within forty-eight hours of its execution, and that payment for the entire gallonage so bought was to be made by the plaintiff in cash for the entire amount immediately."

The record is uncontradicted that the gauging of the wine was no part of the contract; that which party was to do the gauging was never agreed on by the parties at any time.<sup>4</sup> In Finding VII the trial court found that the plaintiffs had not performed any of the terms, conditions and things on their part to be "done and performed under the said agreement, and specifically the plaintiffs did not gauge the said tanks of wine in accordance with the aforesaid contract, nor did they tender payment to the plaintiff [defendant] in accordance with its terms." It is uncontradicted that plaintiffs were at all times ready, able and willing to pay for the wine.

In Finding VI, it appears "That on March 27, 1956 [1953], subsequent to the execution of the aforesaid contract, and within twenty-four hours thereafter, the defendant, Phil J. Severini, unconditionally repudiated the contract and notified the plaintiffs that he would not deliver the wine in accordance with the said contract. That the refusal of the defendant to deliver the wine constituted a breach of the aforesaid contract." (Emphasis added.)

The record is uncontradicted that while the contract was dated March 27, 1953, it was actually signed on either March 30 or 31, 1953, and that approximately one hour after signing the contract Severini notified Kyer that he would not be able to deliver the wine. However, as has been heretofore set forth the record shows that when informed by Kyer that the written order had been mailed to Guerrieri in Los Angeles Severini said, "Well, if that's the case, that's all that can be done. We'll have to go second trial is far from satisfactory and the record shows the difficulty the parties and witnesses had in recalling the events which occurred in 1953.

through with it." The record also shows that when Guerrieri was informed of Severini's repudiation he did not accept it but insisted that he wanted that particular wine and that Kyer would "have to get" it for him. The record also shows that at times subsequent to March 30 or 31, 1953, Guerrieri, Kyer and Severini tried to negotiate for the delivery of at least half of the wine which was the subject matter of the contract. A letter from Kyer to Guerrieri, dated April 29, 1953, which was introduced and marked as an exhibit, stated that "Phil [Severini] tells me that the wine he offered to give you is his exact half and represents all the wine he has in the winery with the exception of lees." Following a description of the wines and the quantities thereof, is a statement that the total gallonage is 88,000 gallons; that it was ready to ship, that Severini "would like for you to draw at least three truck loads a week until it is all out"; and the manner in which payment should be made. There is also a statement in the letter that "I did overlook mentioning that he [Severini] also told me that in case he got a release from his wife on the second half that you would be given first opportunity to buy it." The letter contains no mention of the price per gallon.

There is also in the record as an exhibit, a letter to Kyer from L. Kenneth Say as "Attorney for Severini Winery & Distillery" dated April 24, 1953, in which he refers to his client's "offer" of March 27th to sell 200,000 gallons of wine to the Santa Fe Vintage Company of Los Angeles and stating that since his "offer" has never been accepted by plaintiff's company "said offer is hereby withdrawn."

The record shows that with respect to the negotiations concerning the 88,000 gallons of wine which Severini represented to be one-half of the wine on hand at his winery, Guerrieri demanded to see Severini's Government Form 702 as evidence that the 88,000 gallons constituted one-half of the wine in the winery. This is, apparently, a government inventory of the wine in a winery. Severini refused to show him the Form 702.

On April 29, 1953, plaintiffs purchased the Morello Winery in order to get the quantity and quality of wine they desired. Prior to that time Kyer had been able to purchase for plaintiffs only about 74,000 gallons of such wine.

[1] The doctrine of breach of a contract by anticipatory repudiation is recognized in this state (Caminetti v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 23 Cal.2d 94, 104, 142 P.2d 741). "An anticipatory breach of contract occurs on the part of one of the parties to the instrument when he positively repudiates the contract by acts or statements indicating that he will not or cannot substantially perform essential terms thereof * * *." *Crane v. [2] Even if we assume that Severini's statement to Kyer that he would not deliver the wine, which it will be recalled was followed by the statement that "We'll have to go through with it," amounted to that positive repudiation in the "clearest terms" required by the law, it is not within the power of one party to a contract to discharge it by repudiating it. Main St. & A. P. R. Co. v. L. A. Trac. Co., 129 Cal. 301, 306, 61 P. 937; Atkinson v. District Bond Co., 5 Cal. App.2d 738, 43 P.2d 867; Tomboy Gold & Copper Co. v. Marks, 185 Cal. 336, 197 P. 94; *Rehart v. [3] If we assume that Severini's statement amounted to a positive repudiation of the contract entered into by him to sell to plaintiffs 200,000 gallons of wine, it had the effect of giving the buyer, or promisee, Guerrieri, the right of election either to treat the declaration as an empty threat and to wait until the time for performance arrived, or to act upon the declaration and treat it as a final assertion by Severini that he was no longer bound by the contract, and as a wrongful renunciation of the contractual relation into which he had entered. "If he elects to pursue the latter course, it becomes a breach of contract, excusing performance on his part and giving him an immediate right to recover upon it as such. Upon such election the rights of the parties are to be regarded as then culminating, and the contractual relation ceases to exist, except for the purpose of maintaining an action for the recovery of damages. 6 Cal. Jur. 458-460; Walker v. Harbor Business Blocks Co., 181 Cal. 773, 186 P. 356." Atkinson v. District Bond Co., 5 Cal.App.2d 738, 743, 744, 43 P.2d 867, 870. In Salot v. Wershow, 157 Cal.App.2d 352, 320 P.2d 926, 930, the rule was stated to be that "Among other requirements for application of the doctrine of breach by anticipatory repudiation are that the repudiatee treat the repudiation as a breach, and that there have [sic] been no retraction of the repudiation by the repudiator prior to the time for performance or prior to a detrimental change in position on the part of the repudiatee in reliance thereon. See Rauer's Law & Collection Co. v. Harrell, 32 Cal.App. 45, 162 P. 125." (Emphasis added.) And, see Abraham Lehr, Inc. v. Cortez, 57 Cal.App.2d 973, 978, 135 P.2d 684; Big Boy Drilling Corp. v. Etheridge, 44 Cal.App.2d 114, 117, 111 P.2d 953.

[4] When the uncontradicted facts shown by the record are considered in the light of the applicable law as heretofore set forth, it appears that while Severini's statement on the 30th or 31st of March that he would not deliver the wine, may be considered as an anticipatory repudiation of the contract,<sup>5</sup> it was not accepted, or acted upon, as such by Guerrieri, the promisee, at that time.

In other words, Guerrieri did not then elect to treat the repudiation as a breach of the contract. But when Guerrieri materially changed his position on April 29, 1953, by purchasing the Morello Winery in order to obtain the quantity and quality of wines needed by the Santa Fe Vintage Company, he exercised his election to treat the repudiation as a breach of the contract of sale.

The fact that Guerrieri did not make payment in full within forty-eight hours as provided in the contract is, under the facts here presented, immaterial. Guerrieri v. Severini, 132 Cal.App.2d 269, 273, 281 P.2d 879; Atkinson v. District Bond Co., 5 Cal. App.2d 738, 745, 43 P.2d 867; Fisher v. Chaffee, 49 Cal.App.2d 97, 100, 121 P.2d 51. As stated in section 320 of the Restatement of Contracts: "Manifestation by the injured party of a purpose to allow or to require performance by the promisor in spite of repudiation by him, does not nullify its effect as a breach, or prevent it from excusing performance of conditions and from discharging the duty to render a return performance.

"Comment:

"a. Although the effect of repudiation may be nullified * * * it operates until so nullified not only as a breach but as a continuing excuse of conditions * * * and as a continuing justification of the promisee's failure to perform a return promise * * * even though the promisee has indicated a willingness to forgive the repudiation." See, also, Civ.Code, § 1440.

It appears, therefore, that Finding VI, as heretofore set forth, is not supported by the evidence.

Finding VIII is "That at the time of the defendant's refusal to deliver and within twenty-four hours of the defendant's breach of the said contract, there was available for purchase on the open market at Fresno, California, assorted sweet wines in sufficient quantities and of a like quality as that contracted for at an identical price per gallon.

5. It would appear that Severini's statement on March 30th or 31st was not "distinct, unequivocal, and absolute" within the rule set forth in Atkinson v. District Bond Co., 5 Cal.App.2d 738, 748, 43 P.2d 867, 870; and Salot v. Wershow, 157 Cal.App.2d 352, 320 P.2d 926. The letter written by Severini's attorney on April 24, 1953, appears to constitute the repudiation.

"That the plaintiffs knew of the availability, but that they unjustifiably refused to purchase the same. That if plaintiffs had purchased the wine so offered to them, they would have suffered no damage whatsoever by reason of the defendant's refusal to deliver the wine under the aforesaid contract." (Emphasis added.)

[5] The record shows that prior to Guerrieri's purchase of the Severini wine he had examined samples of not only the wine referred to in Finding VIII, but other wines as well; that he had his winemaker examine them for alcohol sugars and quality. Guerrieri testified that "The result of that examination [of the Severini wines] was that they were very good wines. Some of them, especially the Muscat and Angelica, higher in balling sugar, which made them more valuable wines than the alcohol outside of the Angelica, which was 18.8 per cent"; that samples of other wines had been sent to him and rejected by him. The record shows that on March 30th or 31st when the contract was signed by Severini there was available a lot of 225,000 gallons of unfinished wine which was one of the wines which had been previously rejected by Guerrieri; that this wine was sold to a third person later in the day on March 30th or 31st after Guerrieri had been told of Severini's statement that he would not deliver the wine contracted for. The evidence is uncontradicted that this so-called available wine was unfinished wine, whereas the Severini wine was finished; that it was not as high in either alcohol or sugar content as the Severini wine, and that the Severini wine included muscat wine while this lot included muscatel.<sup>6</sup> Kyer testified that the 225,000 gallon lot of unfinished wine was available on the afternoon of the repudiation by Severini, but that it was sold later the same afternoon. There is no evidence in the record to show that wines similar in alcohol and sugar content were available in the quantity desired by plaintiffs. If we were to hold, as contended for by defendant, and as found by the trial court, that plaintiffs were required, on the day Severini repudiated the contract, to buy immediately, within the hour, wines of lesser quality than that contracted for, and which had been previously rejected by them, we would be depriving the promisee of his election to treat the repudiation as a breach or continue to stand on the contract and would be forcing him to accept the repudiation as a breach of contract in violation of the rules of law heretofore set forth.

Kyer testified that on or about April 17, 1953, he purchased some 74,000 gallons of wine for Guerrieri at 40¢ per gallon; that the wine in the Morello Winery purchased by Guerrieri on April 29, 1953, was priced at 42½¢ per gallon. It appears from the record that on approximately April 7 or 8, 1953, the San Joaquin Valley experienced an unseasonable frost which resulted in the greatly increased prices of the same type wines. There is evidence in the record that after the frost muscat wine comparable to that which Severini had agreed to sell to plaintiffs and as high in sugar content was selling for 55¢ per gallon.

Section 1787, subdivisions 1, 2 and 3, of the Civil Code provide: "(1) Where the property in the goods has not passed to the buyer, and the seller wrongfully neglects or refuses to deliver the goods, the buyer may maintain an action against the seller for damages for nondelivery.

"(2) The measure of damages is the loss directly and naturally resulting in the ordinary course of events, from the seller's breach of contract.

"(3) Where there is an available market for the goods in question, the measure of damages, in the absence of special circumstances showing proximate damages of a greater amount, is the difference between the contract price and the market or current price of the goods at the time or times

6. Muscat wine is made of 100% muscat grapes while muscatel is a blend of muscat and other grapes.

when they ought to have been delivered, or, if no time was fixed, then at the time of the refusal to deliver." (Emphasis added.)

It is defendant's position that the buyer, Guerrieri, could have taken delivery of all of the wine at any time after the contract was signed; that no time, or times, were specified for delivery even though the contract provided that all of the wine must be taken from the winery by August 1, 1953. It is defendant's theory that there was no anticipatory repudiation in the case at bar; that an actual breach took place on March 30 or 31, 1953, and that the damages should be measured as of that time. From what we have heretofore said, it is obvious that defendant's argument is without merit inasmuch as he could not, by repudiating the contract, force the buyer into accepting the repudiation as a breach of contract. It appears to us that the actual breach took place on April 29, 1953, when the buyer elected to treat the repudiation as a breach by materially changing his position in buying the Morello Winery in order to obtain the quantity and quality of wine necessary to fulfill his needs and to replace that which defendant had agreed to sell.<sup>7</sup> Plaintiffs argue in their opening brief (p. 13) that they were forced to pay a 9¢ increase per gallon over the contract price in their purchase of replacement wine. The record shows that the wine at the Morello Winery was 42½¢ per gallon unfinished; that finishing would cost from 1¾¢ to 2½¢ per gallon. In this connection it should be noted that plaintiffs' complaint alleges that they have been damaged in the sum of $78,000. This appears to be a typographical error inasmuch as they correctly compute the sum (according to their figures in their opening brief) as $18,000.

Defendant contends that plaintiffs had a duty to mitigate damages by accepting the lot of wine which was available for a short time after defendant's repudiation on March 30th or 31st. Reliance is placed on the case of Las Palmas Winery & Distillery v. Garrett & Co., 167 Cal. 397, 400, 139 P. 1077, 1078, wherein it was held that defendant had not been damaged since it could have purchased large quantities of wine of the "same kind, quality, and quantity as it claimed was to be furnished and sold by plaintiff, at prices not in excess of the prices mentioned in the contract * * *." In the Las Palmas case there had been an oral agreement for the purchase and sale of wine. This agreement specifically called for its confirmation in writing which was never done. The court emphatically pointed out that there was more than sufficient evidence in the record to support the trial court's determinations. In the case under consideration there is no evidence in the record to show that the "same kind, quality, and quantity" of wine was available for plaintiffs to purchase.

[6] With respect to plaintiffs' duty to mitigate damages, the rule is that "The duty to minimize damages is predicated upon the statutory rule that a person is required to use reasonable care to prevent an unwarranted piling up of damages. The extent of the duty is to use ordinary care and diligence to prevent the enhancement of damages, and the duty does not extend to the necessity of going to extraordinary or unusual lengths to minimize damages. Jegen v. Berger, 77 Cal.App.2d 1, 174 P.2d 489; Baker v. Borello, 136 Cal. 160, 68 P. 591; Ash v. Soo Sing Lung, 177 Cal. 356, 170 P. 843." Scott's Valley Fruit Exchange v. Growers Refrig. Co., 81 Cal.App.2d 437, 451, 184 P.2d 183, 191. And "The duty to minimize damages does not require an injured person to do what is unreasonable or impracticable, * * *." Valencia v. Shell Oil Co., 23 Cal.2d 840, 846, 147 P.2d 558, 561. And see: Crag Lumber Co. v. Crofoot, 144 Cal.App.2d 755, 780, 301 P.2d 952; Johnson v. Comptoir Etc. D'Exportation, 135 Cal.App.2d 683, 689, 288 P.2d 151; Questo

7. It should be noted here that while plaintiffs' complaint alleges that defendant notified plaintiffs that they would not deliver the wines on May 13, 1953, there is no evidence in the record to substantiate this date as the date of the repudiation. The dates of the various conversations and correspondence have been heretofore set forth and are uncontradicted.

v. Dorado, 136 Cal.App.2d 332, 336, 288 P.2d 529; Gagne v. Bertran, 43 Cal.2d 481, 491, 275 P.2d 15. It would be unreasonable and impracticable under the facts here presented to require plaintiffs, within an hour of the breach by anticipatory repudiation by Severini, to buy unfinished wine inferior in quality which had previously been rejected by them, in order to mitigate the damages caused by defendant's breach.

It is our conclusion that the judgment should be reversed with directions to the trial court to retry the cause on the sole issue of the amount of damages suffered by plaintiffs in replacing the wine covered by the contract breached by defendant Severini.

The judgment is reversed with directions to retry the case on the sole issue of damages.

The ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE CONTROL APPEALS BOARD of the State of California and Ronald C. Chaney, Defendants,

The Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board of the State of California, Appellant.*
Civ. 22200.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Oct. 20, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 12, 1958.

Hearing Granted Dec. 17, 1958.

The Director of the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control brought a mandamus proceeding against the Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board and applicant for transfer of an on-sale general alcoholic beverage license to review action of Appeals Board reversing a decision of the Department denying the transfer of the license. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Frank G. Swain, J., entered judgment and order granting the petition and a peremptory writ, and the Appeals Board appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that the Appeals Board did not err, as a matter of law, in holding that Department was required to show more than a mere unintentional failure on part of applicant to list his arrest for larceny in a foreign state when he was 18 years old in his application in order to establish good cause for denying the application, and that the decision of the Department was not supported by the evidence, and that Appeals Board did not err, as a matter of law, in holding that the arrest and conviction of applicant for larceny and arrest for assault and battery while he was a minor were not of sufficient materiality to furnish a reasonable basis on which to deny application for transfer of the license.

Appeal from order granting petition and from peremptory writ dismissed, and judgment reversed.

Parker Wood, J., dissented.

Edsel W. Haws, Sacramento, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Edward M. Belasco, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal by the Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board from a judgment ordering that a writ of mandate issue commanding it to set aside its decision by which it reversed a decision of the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control and to affirm the decision of the department which denied the transfer of an on-sale general license to Ronald C. Chaney.

On June 29, 1955, Chaney filed an application with the department for the transfer to him of an on-sale general alcoholic beverage license. In support of his application he filed an affidavit on a form furnished by the department which stated:

"Have you ever been arrested?———. If the answer is 'yes' state below in your own handwriting ANY and ALL arrests:

| "Date: | Place Arrested: | Charged With: | Disposition: |
|---------------|------------------------|----------------------|---------------------|
| 1946   | Hollywood       | Fight         | Prob"        |

An investigation of the application was made by an agent of the department. In his report the agent stated that Chaney did not list in his application an arrest on June 11, 1949, at Memphis, Tennessee, for which he served sixty days at a penal farm and was fined $10. The application was denied.

Chaney then petitioned the department for a hearing. A hearing officer conducted a hearing on the issue "Whether applicant misrepresented a material fact in application for license. And whether the issuance of the license would be contrary to public welfare and morals." After the hearing, he made these findings of fact:

"1. The records of the Bureau of Criminal Identification and Investigation, State of California, reflect the following arrests and dispositions thereof for Ronald Creighton Chaney:

"6-11-49 PD Memphis Tenn.

Inv. (Larc.)

Ronald Creighton
CHANNEY

6-14-49 60 ds.
Penal Farms & Fine
$10. 9-13-49

"2. It is true that in his affidavit made in support of his application for the transfer of an on-sale general license petitioner failed to include or mention the arrest and conviction of June 11, 1949 at Memphis, Tennessee for which he served sixty days at a Penal Farm and was fined $10.00, but did include and disclose a prior arrest at Hollywood, Calif. in 1946 when he was charged with the crime of assault and as a result placed on probation."

On these facts the hearing officer determined: "Petitioner misrepresented a material fact on his application for a license transfer. The granting of the petition, or issuance of the license would be contrary to public welfare and morals," and recommended that the petition be denied. The recommendation was adopted by the department. Chaney's petition for reconsideration was denied.

Chaney filed an appeal from the decision of the department with the appeals board. The board reversed the decision of the department on the grounds: the findings do not support the decision denying the license; there was no finding that Chaney knowingly or purposely omitted the fact of an arrest, the finding being that there was a failure to include or mention the arrest; for all that appeared, the omission was unintentional, resulting from an honest mistake or negligence; the evidence would not support such a finding had one been made; on questioning, Chaney openly and frankly admitted the arrest and fully disclosed all the circumstances surrounding it; Chaney testified it was his belief that only arrests occurring in California were required to be listed, and had he understood the application more clearly he would have listed the arrest; there was nothing in the record to show that he was given information by departmental personnel contrary to his erroneous impression as to what was required.

The appeals board concluded that the unintentional or careless omission of the arrest does not constitute good cause under section 22 of article XX of the Constitution on which to base the denial of the license, and reversed the decision of the department.

The director of the department then filed in the superior court a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the appeals board to reverse its decision and for a writ of mandate or certiorari directing the appeals board to affirm the decision of the department. An alternative writ of mandate issued. The appeals board filed a return. The court found: there was substantial evidence to support the determination of the hearing officer; the department correctly determined that Chaney misrepresented a material fact on his application, and that the transfer of a license to him would be contrary to public welfare and morals under section 22, article XX, of the Constitution; the decision of the appeals board was arbitrary and unreasonable in that it substituted its own discretion for that of the department; the appeals board incorrectly determined the issues in the matter in that the findings of the hearing officer and the department were supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole record; the suppression by Chaney of the 1949 arrest constituted good cause for the denial of his application.<sup>1</sup>

Judgment followed ordering that a writ of mandate issue commanding the appeals board to set aside its decision and render a new decision affirming the decision of the department. The appeals board has appealed from the judgment.<sup>2</sup>

Speaking of the judgment in the present case, the Supreme Court in Munro v. Alcoholic Beverage, etc., Appeals Bd., 50 Cal.2d 863, 326 P.2d 506, 507, stated:

"[T]he effect of the judgment is a determination that, as a matter of law, the appeals board could properly act in only one way (affirmance) and that its contrary action was without or in excess of its jurisdiction."

The evidence before the hearing officer was without conflict that the omission to list the 1949 arrest was unintentional. Chaney testified the reason he omitted to list that arrest was:

"I just thought it was a State license. I should have understood the application more plainly and I just didn't put it down. * * *

"Q. And you testified, I believe, earlier, that when you filled out this affidavit, it was your understanding that the arrest that they were inquiring, wanting to know about arrests here in the State of California, because you were applying for a State license? A. That is true.

"Q. You signed this in front of Miss Dolores Blair? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Do you recall her making any statement to you as to arrests in other states or federal arrests? A. No, not in other states. She had asked me if I ever been arrested, however—

"Q. But it was your understanding at that time it was just for arrests here in the State of California? A. Yes."

The affidavit filed with the application is all in typewriting with the exception of

1. The finding of the court that Chaney suppressed the facts went beyond the finding of the department. The department merely found that he "failed to include or mention the arrest." To suppress, in this sense, means the intentional withholding of some fact. Murray v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen, 180 Iowa 626, 163 N.W. 421, 428.

2. Respondent director moved to dismiss the appeal on the ground the appeals board is not a party aggrieved and therefore not entitled to appeal. The Supreme Court denied the motion. Munro v. Alcoholic Beverage, etc., Appeals Bd., 50 Cal.2d 863, 326 P.2d 506.

"1946 Hollywood Flight Prob" and Chaney's signature; a Miss Blair in the office of the department typewrote it.

Chaney is married and has three children. He was 18 years of age at the time of the 1949 incident. Concerning that incident, he testified:

"Q. I call your attention to the date June 11, 1949 and ask whether you were arrested by the Memphis, Tennessee, Police Department on that date? A. Yes, I was.

"Q. What was the charge? A. Well, it was larceny.

"Q. Would you like to explain what happened; the circumstances surrounding this arrest? A. Yes, sir. Another fellow and I, we stole a fan, and we were arrested trying to pawn it.

"Q. And were you tried? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And what was the disposition? A. Sixty days.

"Q. Did you spend sixty days in jail? A. Yes, sir."

Since 1949 he has resided in Borrego Springs, San Diego County, and has not been arrested or in trouble of any kind. For three years he engaged in carpentry work and a construction business. After that he managed a country club in Borrego Springs. A number of letters were introduced in evidence, all attesting to the fact that he has led a model life following his boyhood indiscretions. There was no contradiction of this evidence.

The Constitution provides that the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control shall have the exclusive power, except as therein provided and in accordance with the laws enacted by the Legislature, to license the sale of alcoholic beverages in this state. The department has the power, in its discretion, to deny a license if it shall determine "for good cause" that the granting of such license would be contrary to public welfare or morals. Const. art. XX, § 22, as amended in 1956.

When any person aggrieved thereby appeals from a decision of the department denying a license for the sale of alcoholic beverages, the appeals board "shall review the decision subject to such limitations as may be imposed by the Legislature. In such cases, the board shall not receive evidence in addition to that considered by the department. Review by the board of a decision of the department shall be limited to the questions whether the department has proceeded without or in excess of its jurisdiction, whether the department has proceeded in the manner required by law, whether the decision is supported by the findings, and whether the findings are supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole record. * * * In all other appeals the board shall enter an order either affirming or reversing the decision of the department. * * * Orders of the board shall be subject to judicial review upon petition of the director or any party aggrieved by such order. * * * The provisions of this section shall be self-executing, but nothing herein shall prohibit the Legislature from enacting laws implementing and not inconsistent with such provisions." Const. art. XX, § 22, as amended in 1956. See similar provisions in Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 23084-23091.

[1] The constitutional scheme concerning alcoholic beverage control is an uncommon one. Two independent agencies are created: (1) the department which, as to the granting of licenses, acts as an administrative trial court; and (2) the appeals board, which is the administrative appellate court. There is no provision either in the Constitution or in the implementing legislation which authorizes direct court review of the decisions of the department. Section 23077 of the Business and Professions Code provides that the appeals board shall exercise such powers as are vested in it by section 22, article XX, of the Constitution, "and may adopt such rules pertaining to appeals and other matters within its jurisdiction as may be required." The Constitution imposes the duty on the appeals board of reviewing the decisions of the department. The appeals board is a Constitution-created quasi-judicial body discharging judicial duties. Koehn v. State Board of Equalization, 50 Cal.2d 432, 326 P.2d 502. The courts may not usurp the constitutional powers of the appeals board.

[2] The department's discretion under section 22 is not absolute but must be exercised in accordance with the law, and the provision that it may deny a license "for good cause" necessarily implies that its decision should be based on sufficient evidence and that it should not act arbitrarily in determining what is contrary to public welfare or morals. Stoumen v. Reilly, 37 Cal.2d 713, 717, 234 P.2d 969.

It was the duty of the appeals board in the present case to determine judicially whether the decision of the department is supported by the findings or whether the findings of the department rest on substantial evidence in the light of the whole record. The Constitution does not spell out the scope of court review of orders of the appeals board. It has been held that the scope of such review is limited to determining whether the decision of the appeals board is supported by substantial evidence, and that both the superior court in a mandate proceeding and a reviewing court on appeal therefrom are without authority to reweigh the evidence. 5501 Hollywood, Inc., v. Dept. of Alcoholic Beverage Control, 155 Cal.App.2d 748, 751, 318 P.2d 820.

[3] Section 1094.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that where mandate is issued for the purpose of inquiring into the validity of any final administrative order or decision, the inquiry, where it is claimed that the findings are not supported by the evidence in cases in which the court is not authorized to exercise its independent judgment on the evidence, is whether there has been any prejudicial abuse of discretion; and abuse of discretion is established if the court determines that the findings are not supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole record. The final administrative order here is the order of the appeals board. The court in a mandate proceeding to review the action of the appeals board is not authorized to exercise its independent judgment on the evidence. Covert v. State Board of Equalization, 29 Cal.2d 125, 131-132, 173 P.2d 545.

[4, 5] The question here is not whether the decision of the department is supported by the findings or whether the findings of the department are supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole record. It is the function of the appeals board, acting in a quasi-judicial capacity, to determine those questions. The appeals board reviews the decision of the department; the court in a mandate proceeding reviews the order of the appeals board. The question before the superior court was whether the appeals board abused its discretion in reversing the decision of the department. And the question here is whether the court below erred in determining as a matter of law that "the appeals board could properly act in only one way (affirmance) and that its contrary action was without or in excess of its jurisdiction." Munro v. Alcoholic Beverage etc., Appeals Bd., 50 Cal.2d 863, 326 P.2d 506. This view is fortified by the fact that judicial review does not lie from a decision of the department. A party aggrieved by a decision of the department must appeal to the appeals board before seeking mandate. The courts have no jurisdiction to entertain a proceeding in mandate if no appeal is taken. Fiscus v. Dept. of Alcoholic Beverage Control, 155 Cal.App.2d 234, 235, 317 P.2d 993; Van De Veer v. Dept. of Alcoholic, etc., Control, 155 Cal.App.2d 817, 820-821, 318 P.2d 686.

[6] The department found that Chaney "failed to include or mention the arrest" of 1949. It did not find that he did so intentionally, knowingly, or wilfully. For all that appears, the omission resulted through mistake, forgetfulness, negligence, or some other unintentional reason. From the mere fact that he failed to include or mention the arrest, it concluded that he misrepresented a material fact in his application for a license transfer. It cannot be held, as a matter of law, that the appeals board erred in holding that in order to establish "good cause" for denying Chaney a license something more must be shown than a mere unintentional failure to list the 1949 arrest, and that the decision of the department is not supported by the evidence.

Black defines a misrepresentation as an intentional, false statement respecting a matter of fact. Concealment has been defined as the designed and intentional withholding of a material fact which in honesty and good faith ought to be communicated. Sun Ins. Office, Ltd. of London v. Mallick, 160 Md. 71, 153 A. 35, 43; Lawson v. Southwestern Voluntary Ass'n, 168 Va. 294, 191 S.E. 648, 649.

Allegretti v. Bd. of Osteopathic Examiners, 145 Cal.App.2d 435, 302 P.2d 694, was a proceeding in mandate to compel the respondent board to annul its order suspending the license of the petitioner, an osteopathic physician and surgeon. One of the charges was that the petitioner carried a professional advertisement using the suffix "M.D." in the classified section of the telephone directory. Holding a finding that the petitioner was negligent in not finding out what the charges for the advertising were for or how his name was listed was insufficient to justify a judgment affirming the order of the respondent board suspending the petitioner's license, this court stated (145 Cal.App.2d at page 440, 302 P.2d at page 698):

"Petitioner could have been negligent in these respects and yet innocent of any wrongful intention. Upon the other hand the finding that he was negligent does not acquit him of having acted in bad faith and with ulterior motives.

"The question is not merely whether petitioner had actual knowledge of the erroneous listing. It is rather the question whether he had reasonable cause to believe that his name was or might be incorrectly listed and refrained from making inquiry with the intention of taking advantage of the telephone company's mistake, if a mistake were being made. If his omission to make inquiry was wilful rather than innocent his lack of knowledge would be no defense to a charge that he made use of the suffix 'M.D.' The basic question, therefore, was whether his professed ignorance was the result of carelessness or culpability. * * *

"It is not contended by respondent that a physician and surgeon can be subject to discipline for mere negligence. As applicable to physicians and surgeons there are in the Business and Professions Code some 26 specifications of acts which constitute unprofessional conduct. By their very nature they relate to acts intentionally performed and which would not be the consequence of mere negligence."

In Marchica v. State Board of Equalization, 107 Cal.App.2d 501, at page 509, 237 P.2d 725, at page 731, this court stated:

"The Sales Tax Act [Rev. & Tax. Code, § 6001 et seq.] prevents the retention of a tax paid after it is barred by the statute of limitations in the absence of fraud or an intent to evade. The existence of fraud or an intent to evade was essential to confer upon the board the power which it exerted. In the present case the deficiency assessment and the penalties were predicated on fraud. The fraud meant by the statute is actual, intentional wrongdoing, and the intent required is the specific purpose to evade a tax believed to be owed. [Citation.] The only evidence in this case is the failure to file correct returns. The burden of proving fraud is not sustained by merely establishing a deficiency. [Citation.] The failure to file a correct return does not necessarily constitute fraud. [Citation.] The mere omission from a tax return of items which should have been included does not show a fraudulent intent. [Citation.] If returns are filed a deficiency necessarily arises from an understatement in the returns. An understatement may have resulted from ignorance, bad advice, honest mistake, negligence, or misinterpretation of law; none of which in itself would constitute fraud.

"Fraud is odious. It is never presumed; but must be established by proof. The presumption always is in favor of good faith, innocence, honesty and fair dealing, except, perhaps, where confidential relations are involved. This presumption has been held to approximate in strength that of innocence of crime. [Citation.] It is to be noted that any person who renders a false or fraudulent return is guilty of a misdemeanor. [Citation.] One asserting fraud, except, perhaps, where confidential relations are involved, has the burden of proving it."

Sautter v. Contractors' State License Bd., 124 Cal.App.2d 149, 268 P.2d 139, was an appeal from a judgment ordering that mandate issue commanding the respondent board to set aside its decision revoking certain licenses of the petitioner and ordering that they be restored to him. The petitioner was a contractor. One of the charges before the board was that the petitioner had misrepresented his experience in an application for a license. The board found him guilty of the charge. The superior court found that he did not intentionally misrepresent his experience or any other fact. Section 7112 of the Business and Professions Code, dealing with causes for disciplinary action against contractors, provides: "Misrepresentation of a material fact by an applicant in obtaining a license constitutes a cause for disciplinary action." On the board's appeal the court stated (124 Cal.App.2d at page 156, 268 P.2d at page 144):

"Appellant states that the mere doing of the act is forbidden regardless of the state of mind of the wrongdoer, but cites no authority. Respondent maintains that in determining whether there is ground for disciplinary action, the matter of good faith is important. It was so held in State Bar of California v. Rollinson, 213 Cal. 36, 1 P.2d 428 and In re Jung, 13 Cal.2d 199, 88 P.2d 679."

Nelson Valley Bldg. Co. v. Morrissey, 135 Cal.App.2d 738, 288 P.2d 135, and Federal Communications Commission v. WOKO, Inc., 329 U.S. 223, 67 S.Ct. 213, 91 L.Ed. 204, cited by the director, are not helpful. In the Nelson case the applicant for a contractor's license "knowingly" made a false statement in his application. In the WOKO case the applicant for renewal of a license deliberately furnished the commission with false information and the deception had been carried on for about twelve years.

On the record the conclusion of the appeals board, that Chaney did not knowingly or purposely conceal the fact of the 1949 arrest in his application, appears to be a reasonable one. Indeed it is difficult to see how it could have come to any other conclusion. It could reasonably conclude that the evidence failed to establish any intent to conceal or to mislead the department. We think it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that "the appeals board could properly act in only one way (affirmance) and that its contrary action was without or in excess of its jurisdiction." It stated that under the authority granted the department by the Constitution the department could consider whether Chaney "knowingly or purposely" omitted the arrest; that in such a case "it is the omission itself coupled with intent to withhold information which becomes important in considering the character and suitability of the applicant"; that there was no finding that Chaney knowingly or purposely omitted the fact of an arrest, the finding being that there was a failure to include or mention the arrest; for all that appeared, the omission was unintentional, resulting from an honest mistake or negligence; that the evidence would not support a finding that Chaney knowingly or purposely omitted the fact of the arrest.

The appeals board held that the unintentional or careless omission of the arrest does not constitute good cause under section 22 of article XX of the Constitution on which to base a denial of the license, and that the denial in the present case was an abuse of discretion. We cannot say that it was unreasonable for it to conclude that the decision of the department denying the license is not supported by the findings, and that the unintentional or careless omission of the arrest does not constitute good cause under section 22 of article XX of the Constitution on which to base the denial of the license.

[7] And it cannot be held, as a matter of law, that the appeals board erred in holding that the arrest and conviction in 1949 together with the arrest of 1946 are not of sufficient materiality to furnish a reasonable basis on which to deny the license. In this connection the appeals board said:

"The remaining question is whether the arrest and conviction in 1949 together with the arrest of 1946 are of sufficient materiality to furnish a reasonable basis upon which to deny the license. We think not. The arrest in Tennessee occurred when the appellant was 19 [18] years of age. Since that time the record shows that appellant has not been in any trouble and has pursued a useful and industrious course of conduct. The recommendations of several people which are contained in the record demonstrate that appellant is a responsible citizen and completely qualified to assume the responsibilities of a licensee. The unfortunate incidents of childhood furnish little, if any, basis for an appraisal of his present reputation and suitability. We think that the ends of justice will best be served by closing the book on those unfortunate incidents, thus allowing appellant to pursue his ways as a responsible citizen."

In Jones v. Maloney, 106 Cal.App.2d 80, 234 P.2d 666, the licensee whose license as an insurance agent was revoked had been convicted of two misdemeanors: disturbing a public assemblage, and disturbing the peace and resisting an officer. The

"The missing finding in our case is the fact that the licenses were obtained by the concealment. The findings say nothing about the licenses having been 'obtained' either by 'concealment' or by 'knowing misrepresentation' and the evidence in the case is not sufficient to have supported such a finding had one been made. The misdemeanor convictions were of ancient date. The offenses themselves bear no peculiar or apt relation to petitioner's qualifications for a license as an insurance agent. As there is no sufficient finding of fact to support it, the second charge must fall."

Also see In re McCue, 211 Cal. 57, 293 P. 47.

It follows that the finding of the superior court that the appeals board incorrectly determined the issues in the matter cannot be sustained, and that the judgment must be reversed.

The appeal from the order granting the petition and from the peremptory writ is dismissed; the judgment is reversed.

SHINN, P. J., concurs.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

I dissent. In Munro v. Alcoholic Beverage, etc., Appeal Bd., Cal.App., 329 P.2d 758, 760, which involved a question of fact, it was held that the "Appeals Board was simply called upon to determine whether the findings of the department were supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole record. It was not permitted to exercise an independent judgment on the facts as contended for by appellant." In the present case, in my opinion, there was substantial evidence in the light of the whole record to support the findings, determination, and decision of the department in denying the application. The department was not required to accept the explanation offered by Chaney. The form of the affidavit, wherein he did not answer fully regarding arrests, called specifically for his full statement as to arrests under the laws of California, or of any other state, or of the United States.

In my opinion the judgment should be affirmed.

Rehearing denied; WOOD, J., dissenting.

Quiet title action, wherein a cross-complaint was filed for determination as to validity of note and deed of trust. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Eustace Cullinan, Jr., J., found the allegations of the cross-complaint to be true, and plaintiff appealed from the ensuing judgment. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that partner in joint venture has authority to bind his coadventurer but has no authority to write their signatures; however, the court held, one adventurer could not profit by another adventurer's thus exceeding his authority where third party had parted with value knowing that one adventurer was acting for others but without knowing that instruments given him, which appeared to bear another adventurer's signature, did not actually do so.

Affirmed.

1. Joint Adventures $\S$ 115

In cross action for determination as to validity of note and deed of trust, evidence would sustain finding that cross defendants were joint adventurers.

2. Joint Adventures $\S$ 7

Partner in joint venture has authority to bind his coadventurers but has no authority to write their signatures; however, one adventurer could not profit by another adventurer's thus exceeding his authority where third party had parted with value, knowing that one adventurer was acting for others but without knowing that instruments given him, which appeared to bear another adventurer's signature, did not actually do so. Leon H. Sorell, San Francisco, for appellant.

Depaoli, Cotter & DelCarlo, San Francisco, for respondent.

BRAY, Justice.

Plaintiff sued defendants Gerald V. Posey and Linda Posey to quiet title to real property hereafter referred to as 2094 Mission Street, San Francisco. Defendants answered, then filed an amendment to their answer and eventually a cross-complaint bringing in as cross-defendants with plaintiff, Emil Fritz and Frank Cotton. By these pleadings said defendants and cross-complainants alleged, in effect, that plaintiff and said Fritz and Cotton were partners or joint adventurers in the purchase of real property at the corner of 17th and Mission Streets, consisting of three pieces, namely, said 2094 Mission, 2090 Mission and 3312 17th Street; that Cotton acted as plaintiff's agent and managing partner and had the title to 2094 Mission placed in plaintiff's name; that subsequently Cotton on behalf of plaintiff, Fritz and himself negotiated the sale and transfer to cross-complainants of certain notes and deeds of trust, among which was a note dated October 17, 1955, in the amount of $7,750, secured by a deed of trust on 2094 Mission. The cross-complaint alleged that a judgment had been entered in the superior court adjudging that plaintiff, Fritz and Cotton were each owners of an undivided one-third of 2094 Mission; that in its purchase the parties were partners or joint adventurers and that in the sale of said notes and deeds of trust to plaintiff, Cotton was acting under authority invested in him by plaintiff and Fritz, and that cross-complainants in the purchase of said note and deed of trust relied upon such authority. Cross-complainants prayed that the validity of said note and deed of trust be determined. Cross-defendants Cotton and Fritz filed an answer admitting all of the allegations of the cross-complaint. The trial court found the allegations of the cross-complaint to be true; that plaintiff, Cotton and Fritz were joint adventurers; that it was not contemplated that the ownership of 2094 Mission was to be solely in plaintiff; that Cotton acted for the joint venture and that the note and deed of trust held by cross-complainants are a valid lien upon said property. Plaintiff appeals.

The judgment is a rather peculiar one. It provides that "defendants have judgment against plaintiff on the complaint and that cross complainants have judgment against the cross defendants on the cross complaint * * *." Apparently this judgment established the validity of cross-complainants' lien upon 2094 Mission but leaves the determination of plaintiff's exact ownership to the other superior court action, the judgment in which was on appeal at the time of the rendition of the subject judgment, but which appeal was later dismissed by Division Two of this court. See Fritz v. Foote, 162 Cal.App.2d 622, 328 P.2d 522.

Questions Presented.

1. Was there a joint venture in which Cotton had authority to bind plaintiff in the execution of the Posey note and deed of trust?
2. Are section 1624, subdivision 5, Civil Code, section 1973, Code of Civil Procedure, and section 2933, Civil Code, involved in this case?
3. Effect of introduction of record of the other action.

1. Joint Venture.

[1-3] There can be no question under plaintiff's own testimony as well as the other evidence that there was a joint venture and that Cotton had full power to bind plaintiff in the transaction.

Plaintiff testified that she had known Cotton, a real estate broker, for a number of years. In June, 1955, she saw an advertisement for the sale of certain property. Answering it, she discovered that he was the broker. She did not like the property offered. Shortly thereafter Cotton phoned her about another piece of property. She placed $6,500 in escrow and Cotton negotiated the purchase of it for her. She did not remember the total purchase price, the $6,500 being only the down payment. Apparently she paid nothing further. In twenty days he sold it for her for a profit of $900. She signed some papers in connection with the transaction but does not know what they were. In July he told her about the three pieces of property at 17th and Mission, the total price of which was $110,000. She was to put up $5,000, and there were supposed to be seven investors each to put up $5,000. (In her deposition she stated that there were to be several investors.) She was to be in partnership with those who put up the money. She was to give Cotton $5,000 and he was to use it and similar amounts to be obtained from others, as a down payment. She gave Cotton $5,000 and knew that Fritz had put up $5,000. The three pieces were to be purchased as a unit. She did not know that any of the properties was to be taken in her name only. Cotton was to negotiate for them and divide them later and sell them separately. It was her understanding that Cotton was acting for and on behalf of her and Fritz in the entire transaction. She left the entire transaction up to his discretion, and at all times Cotton was acting in the capacity of her agent. He was to invest the $5,000 for her. She signed no papers in connection with the transaction. Cotton collected the rents on the property after it was purchased. Apparently plaintiff never inquired of Cotton concerning the transaction up to the time the Poseys gave notice of default under the deed of trust. From her own testimony it is clear that she gave Cotton $5,000 to use together with that of other investors, to purchase property whose price was $110,000, and left the entire handling of the transaction to Cotton. Thus, a joint venture with authority in Cotton to act for her was proved, even though she did not know that Cotton was to be one of the investors. She left the complete selection to him.

Cross-complainant Gerald Posey testified that he and his partner had purchased the property (the three pieces) from a Mrs. Hadsell with "a lengthy period of time for closing" (apparently they had merely an option to purchase) so that they might sell one or two pieces to complete the deal. Cotton negotiated for some time with him for the purchase of the property. The record is a little vague as to just what happened next. As nearly as we can make out from most confused testimony, the following is what happened: Posey was to get $118,500 for the property, out of which he was to pay Mrs. Hadsell. Posey was to receive $10,000 down and the balance was to be secured by mortgages. For some reason, Posey had Mrs. Hadsell convey the property as follows: one parcel (2094 Mission) to Posey, another parcel to Posey's partner, and the third parcel to an employee of Posey's. 2094 Mission was subject to a $27,500 deed of trust, 2090 Mission to a $40,000 deed of trust, and 3312 17th subject to a $22,500 deed of trust. Then there was a second deed of trust for $10,000 covering all three parcels. Then on each parcel there was a third deed of trust of $6,166.67 or a total of $18,500 on all three. With the down payment of $10,000 the total of these mortgages came to $118,500, the purchase price. Thereafter, Cotton sold the 17th Street property and 2090 Mission. From such sales the $10,000 deed of trust which covered 2094 Mission as well as the other lots was paid off excepting $1,583.33. Posey then conveyed 2094 Mission to plaintiff subject to the $27,500 first deed of trust and a second deed of trust to him and Mrs. Posey for $7,750 (the note and deed of trust in controversy). This amount was arrived at by adding to the $6,166.67 third deed of trust above mentioned and whose lien was wiped out by the conveyance to plaintiff, the said $1,583.33 balance due on the blanket deed of trust which likewise was reconveyed. Thus, after this more or less frenzied finance, the situation immediately prior to foreclosure of the $7,750 Posey deed of trust was that on a down payment of $10,000 put up jointly by plaintiff and Fritz on a purchase price of $118,500, for three parcels of land, two of the parcels were sold and the third, 2094 Mission, stood of record in plaintiff's name (but in a prior action was held to belong to plaintiff, Fritz and Cotton) subject to a first deed of trust to Mrs. Hadsell for $27,500 and a second deed of trust to cross-complainants for $7,750. There is no evidence as to what this property was or is worth.

Plaintiff did not sign or see any of the notes or deeds of trust given in these transactions. The $10,000 blanket note and deed of trust, the $6,166.67 note and deed of trust and the $7,750 note and deed of trust all bear what appear to be plaintiff's signatures. However, admittedly they are not her signatures but were written by Cotton. Curiously enough, the evidence shows a notary public acknowledged her purported signature on the $7,750 deed of trust. Probably the same is true of the other purported signatures. Posey testified that he had no knowledge that the signatures were not genuine.

Plaintiff makes much of the fact that Cotton "forged," as plaintiff calls it, plaintiff's signatures. Although a partner in a joint venture has, as here, authority to bind his coadventurers, he has no authority to write their signatures. If he signs their names he must indicate he is doing so as partner or agent. See Civil Code, § 1095. It would appear that Cotton without informing plaintiff decided to cut himself in as one of the partners in the venture and considered that his services in handling the transaction were of equal value to the $5,000 which each of his coadventurers paid in. Apparently this arrangement was satisfactory to Fritz. Plaintiff's testimony shows that she was not concerned about who her partners were to be, but left the selection to Cotton. However, he had informed her that each partner-to-be would put in equal moneys with hers. We withhold comment as to the propriety of Cotton's actions and the rights between him and plaintiff. As this is not an action between Mrs. Foote and Cotton, we are only concerned with the situation as between plaintiff and the Poseys.

A joint venture has been defined as an undertaking by two or more persons jointly to carry out a single business enterprise for profit with its existence dependent upon the intention of the parties as shown by an express agreement or by inference from their acts and conduct. Lasry v. Lederman, 1957, 147 Cal.App.2d 480, 485, 305 P.2d 663; Beck v. Cagle, 1941, 46 Cal.App. 2d 152, 161, 115 P.2d 613. There is a difference in the determining of the relationship where third parties are involved, as here, and where the issue is only between the parties themselves. In the case of third parties the fundamental question is what had those parties the right to believe from the language of any contract and from the conduct of the parties to it as affecting them, and not as affecting each other. Westcott v. Gilman, 1915, 170 Cal. 562, 150 P. 777.

Under the circumstances, plaintiff clothed her coadventurer, Cotton, with the authority to represent her in the joint venture. Poseys had the right to assume when Cotton, who had requested Poseys to deed the property to plaintiff, delivered Poseys a note and deed of trust purporting to be signed by plaintiff, the deed of trust bearing a notary's acknowledgment, that the documents were all they purported to be. Plaintiff, as well as Fritz (who admits it), held Cotton out as having the authority to fully represent her. Had he signed her name by him as agent or coadventurer there can be no question but that he was carrying out the transaction for her, which transaction she testified she left to his discretion. The fact that he signed her name without designating that it was not her signature, did not minimize his authority to bind her in a transaction where the third party parted with value, knowing that Cotton was acting for her as well as himself and Fritz, but without knowing that the instruments given him which appeared to bear her signature did not actually do so.

Even though Cotton exceeded the authority which plaintiff intended him to have, she, in effect, held him out to Posey as having that authority. To hold that the property is not subject to the Posey deed of trust would permit plaintiff to have that property without paying the full purchase price, thereby profiting by Cotton's exceeding his authority, if he did, to the damage of the Poseys who were innocent in the transaction.

2. Code Sections.

[4, 5] Section 1624, subdivision 5, Civil Code, requires an agreement authorizing an agent or broker to sell or buy real estate for compensation or commission to be in writing. Section 1973, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that evidence of such an agreement cannot be received without the writing being produced. Obviously, Cotton was not acting as plaintiff's agent for compensation or commission. He was a principal along with her in the transactions. The authority of a joint adventurer to bind his coadventurers does not have to be in writing. The authority may be oral or implied from the circumstances. See San Francisco Iron & Metal Co. v. American Milling & Industrial Co., 1931, 115 Cal.App. 238, 246, 1 P.2d 1008. Section 2933, Civil Code, requires that a power of attorney to execute a mortgage must be in writing. As the Poseys are innocent third parties plaintiff, under the circumstances of this case, is estopped to claim the benefit of this section. None of these sections apply to the situation here.

3. Prior Record.

[6, 7] The court file in the prior action referred to in the cross-complaint was admitted in evidence without objection. Unfortunately, the judgment was not then final, so that it could not be res judicata. See Witkin, California Procedure, 1934-1935. It was an action brought by cross-defendant here, plaintiff there, Fritz, against plaintiff here, defendant there, Mrs.

Foote. Neither cross-defendant Cotton nor cross-complainants Posey were parties to it. It adjudged that Mrs. Foote, Fritz and Cotton were the owners of 2094 Mission. As no objection to its introduction was made, the trial court cannot be charged with error in admitting the file. Whether the court considered it in making its determination we do not know. The findings merely find that such an action was brought and what the judgment was. The evidence in our case was not conflicting. No facts contrary to the facts related herein were produced. Therefore, whether there was a joint venture in which Cotton had authority to bind plaintiff as a matter of law. Disregarding entirely the other action, such a venture under the evidence must be declared as a matter of law. Hence, it is immaterial whether or not the trial court considered the other action. With or without it, the court could have come to no other conclusion than it did.

The judgment is affirmed.

Proceeding on motion to vacate and set aside ex parte judgment obtained by wife. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Aubrey N. Irwin, J., vacated judgment, and wife appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that where cross-complaint, under which 1944 order for alimony pendente lite was made, was dismissed in 1949 under section of Code of Civil Procedure providing for dismissal for failure to bring action to trial, wife's ex parte money judgment entered in 1956 for collection of alimony payments allegedly accrued from 1951 to 1956 was without warrant or authority of law and was properly vacated.

Jerrell Babb, Los Angeles, for appellant.
Bonpane & Dillon and Manuel Ruiz, Jr., Los Angeles, for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Respondent is the plaintiff and cross-defendant in an action for divorce commenced by him in April, 1944, in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County.

On June 1, 1944, his wife, appellant herein, filed an answer and cross-complaint in which she named as cross-defendants respondent and his son, Edwin S. Douglas, Jr.

On October 30, 1944, the aforesaid court made and entered an order requiring respondent to pay appellant as defendant and cross-complainant, the sum of $250 per month as alimony pendente lite.

On March 21, 1946, appellant, as cross-complainant, filed what she entitled a supplemental cross-complaint naming as cross-defendants one Grace Kunkle, Telegraphic Delivery Service, a corporation, Edwin S. Douglas, Jr., and respondent.

On July 5, 1949, the trial court, on its own motion, dismissed respondent's action pursuant to the provisions of Section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

On July 7, 1949, the same court dismissed the cross-complaint, but denied respondent's motion to dismiss cross-complainant's action and proceeded to try the case upon the supplemental cross-complaint.

After the cause was submitted a mistrial was declared. Thereupon, the cross-defendants therein, other than the respondent herein, applied to the District Court of Appeal for a writ of prohibition to restrain the superior court from taking any further proceedings against them, contending that the lower court was without jurisdiction and had abused its discretion in denying their motion to dismiss the action.

On November 2, 1949, the District Court of Appeal granted a peremptory writ of prohibition (Douglas v. Superior Court, 94 Cal.App.2d 395, 210 P.2d 853). The writ that issued so far as pertinent here, reads as follows: "* * *, we do command you * * * that you absolutely desist and refrain from taking any further proceedings against, or making any orders affecting petitioners herein in the above entitled proceedings * * *" (Emphasis added.) In a subsequent decision involving a petition for a writ of prohibition (Douglas v. Superior Court, 143 Cal.App.2d 17, 18, 299 P.2d 285, 286), the District Court of Appeal noted that "No order has been made dismissing the supplemental cross-complaint, although undoubtedly petitioner (respondent herein) is entitled to have it dismissed." This statement finds substance in the language of the court in granting the aforesaid writ of prohibition (Douglas v. Superior Court, supra, 94 Cal.App.2d at pages 398, 399, 210 P.2d at page 854) wherein it is said that the mandatory provision for dismissal after the lapse of the statutory time without proceeding to trial, as well as the decisions therein cited that said period is not extended by the filing of an amended or supplementary complaint, are "equally applicable to the filing of an amended or supplemental cross-complaint" as in the instant action, and require that the cross-action be dismissed upon the lapse of the statutory time after the filing of the original cross-complaint.

On July 20, 1956, appellant, on the basis of her affidavit, secured an ex parte judgment and a writ of execution against respondent to collect the amount of $15,000, plus interest of $2,699.86, which appellant contended was due and owing on the aforesaid pendente lite order made by the court October 30, 1944 for her support on her separate maintenance cross-complaint, said amount being claimed for the five years preceding the filing of her request for said ex parte judgment and writ of execution on July 20, 1956, viz., from July 20, 1951 to July 20, 1956.

On August 20, 1956, respondent filed a motion to vacate and set aside the aforesaid ex parte judgment of July 20, 1956. The motion was based on the grounds (1) that the dismissal of the cross-complaint in 1949 carried down with it all prior orders for support pendente lite and (2) that the valid decree of divorce granted to respondent in Nevada on June 10, 1949, against which there had been no successful attack, barred appellant from collecting payments, pendente lite, from and after said date of June 10, 1949, and (3) that additionally appellant abandoned this present action when she filed a new action in January, 1951 alleging the same grounds for separate maintenance as in this present action.

On August 20, 1956, respondent also filed a motion for entry of dismissal nunc pro tunc of appellant's aforesaid supplemental cross-complaint. This motion was grounded upon the claim that respondent was entitled to such order of dismissal under the holding of the District Court of Appeal in Douglas v. Superior Court, supra (94 Cal.App.2d 395, 210 P.2d 853), prohibiting any further proceedings upon said supplemental cross-complaint against the petitioners in the case just cited for the reason that the filing of the supplemental cross-complaint did not have the effect of extending the time of mandatory dismissal to five years after its filing.

On March 5, 1957, the trial court made its order granting both motions. From such order appellant prosecutes this appeal Appellant first contends that the court erred in dismissing nunc pro tunc her supplemental cross-complaint, since that remedy was available only to correct the record as to clerical errors, and cannot be utilized to correct judicial error, if any there was.

[1] It is undoubtedly true, as urged by appellant, that no rule of law is more clearly or firmly established than the one which holds that where an error is inherently judicial rather than clerical or inadvertent the court has no power to amend its decision.

[2] The cases cited by appellant merely reiterate the foregoing rule that the power of a court to correct clerical error in a final judgment may not be used as a springboard to rectify its judicial errors. That where the error in a judgment is inherently judicial rather than clerical or inadvertent, it can only be set aside in the modes prescribed by statutory procedure, as for example, in Sections 473 and 663 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That subject to these exceptions, inadvertence and clerical errors, the judgment is reviewable only on appeal (Johnson v. Superior Court, 31 Cal.App.2d 111, 113, 87 P.2d 384; Uhl v. Johnson, 141 Cal.App.2d 659, 665, 297 P.2d 493; Thomson v. L. C. Roney & Co., 112 Cal.App.2d 420, 425, 246 P.2d 1017; City of San Diego v. Superior Court, 36 Cal.2d 483, 487, 224 P.2d 685).

[3, 4] However, courts are clothed with inherent power to enter judgments nunc pro tunc. And such an order should be granted or refused as justice may require in view of the circumstances present in a particular case (Norton v. City of Pomona, 5 Cal.2d 54, 62, 53 P.2d 952). In Douglas v. Superior Court, supra, 143 Cal.App.2d 17, 18, 299 P.2d 285, 286, this court said: "No order has been made dismissing the supplemental cross-complaint, although undoubtedly petitioner (respondent herein) is entitled to have it dismissed." Therefore, when, on July 7, 1949, the court dismissed appellant's cross-complaint for separate maintenance under Section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it should have dismissed the supplemental cross-complaint, for, as was said in

Douglas v. Superior Court, supra, 94 Cal. App.2d 395, 398, 399, 210 P.2d 853, 854: "It was thereafter without jurisdiction to proceed in the action as the filing of the so-called supplemental complaint, whether it be in fact a supplemental complaint or an amended complaint, did not have the effect of extending the time of mandatory dismissal to five years after its filing."

In view of the facts as revealed by the record herein, measured by the rule above stated, we conclude that the trial court was fully justified in making and carrying out its nunc pro tunc order.

[5, 6] We come now to a consideration of the correctness and validity of the action of the court in granting respondent's motion to vacate appellant's ex parte money judgment for pendente lite separate maintenance payments entered July 20, 1956, in the sum of $15,000 plus interest amounting to $2,699.86, from July 20, 1951 to July 20, 1956. We are satisfied that the order appealed from was proper. The original action herein was filed by respondent in April, 1944. On June 1, 1944 appellant filed her answer and cross-complaint. On October 10, 1944, the trial court made its order pursuant to the prayer contained in appellant's cross-complaint, that respondent pay to her the sum of $250 per month as alimony pendente lite. It must be borne in mind that the complaint and appellant's cross-complaint, upon the latter of which the pendente lite alimony order was predicated were dismissed by the court below on July 7, 1949, more than two years prior to the date for which appellant's ex parte money judgment provided for allegedly due and unpaid alimony payments, to wit, July 20, 1951 to July 20, 1956. While an application for alimony pendente lite is not a separate action, an order for such alimony "is to all legal intents and purposes a judgment," independent of the final judgment in the action. Therefore, while such judgment is not vacated by a dismissal of the action, the right to alimony awarded by it is terminated (Douglas v. Superior Court, supra, 143 Cal.App.2d 17, 19, 299 P.2d 285). Since the cross-complaint, under which the order for alimony pendente lite was made, was dismissed July 7, 1949 under the mandatory provisions of Section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it necessarily follows, under the applicable rule, that appellant's ex parte money judgment entered July 20, 1956 for the collection of alimony payments allegedly accrued from July 20, 1951 to July 20, 1956, was without warrant or authority of law and was properly vacated.

The order from which this appeal was taken is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 16, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 13, 1958.

Hearing Denied Dec. 10, 1958.

Proceeding brought by wife in 1956 for execution against husband for amount of support payments due from husband under order for support money pendente lite entered in 1944 in divorce proceeding. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Emil Gumpert, J., rendered judgment for wife, and both parties appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that where husband obtained Mexican divorce decree in 1945 and in 1949 obtained a second divorce decree in Nevada, second decree was conclusive determination of status of parties as husband and wife from date of marriage to dissolution of that relation by Nevada court, husband by his proceedings in Nevada court waived his right to assert benefit of Mexican decree, and husband was not relieved of his obligations under pendente lite order for support until date of Nevada decree.

Affirmed.

Bonpane & Dillon, Manuel Ruiz, Jr., Los Angeles, for plaintiff, cross-defendant, and appellant.

Jerrell Babb, Los Angeles, for defendant, cross-complainant and respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

After the five-year period authorizing the issuance of execution under Section 681 of the Code of Civil Procedure had expired, respondent, on March 29, 1955, filed in the superior court, a notice of motion, petitioning said court to nevertheless, issue execution pursuant to the provisions of Section 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The record reveals that said motion was predicated upon the following factual background. Appellant and respondent were married in 1941 and separated in 1944. On April 28th of that year, appellant filed an action for divorce against respondent on the ground of extreme cruelty. On June 1, 1944, respondent filed an answer and cross-complaint for separate maintenance against appellant. On October 30, 1944 the superior court made its order pursuant to the prayer of said cross-complaint, directing appellant to pay respondent support money pendente lite, in the sum of $250 per month commencing November 15, 1944. Said payments were made by appellant to and including the month of February, 1946.

There was testimony by appellant that from February, 1946 to July, 1949 he was absent from the state of California and spent "most of the time in New Rochelle, New York". Appellant, however, contends that during this period he made frequent trips to Los Angeles to appear in court in connection with pending litigation between him and respondent, the trial of which was continuously postponed due to "dilatatory tactics" of respondent. In her affidavit respondent asserts that during these trips to Los Angeles, appellant "kept his whereabouts concealed" from her and that she could not, "with the exercise of due diligence, ascertain same until approximately the month of January, 1953, or for a total of seven years"; that she diligently sought at all times to ascertain appellant's whereabouts; and that she procured the issuance of writs of execution, all of which were returned unsatisfied. It further appears that in 1951, on the occasion of one of appellant's visits to Los Angeles, respondent, through the office of the district attorney, instituted criminal proceedings against him for failure to provide for a minor child, allegedly the son of appellant. In his affidavits, appellant averred that in the early part of January, 1953, he returned to reside permanently in the city of Los Angeles since which time he has continuously lived in Los Angeles; that since the month of January, 1953, "appellant has been continuously in the employ of Telegraph Delivery Service; and the office of said Telegraph Delivery Service was conveniently located in a downtown building at 354 South Spring Street, Los Angeles, California.

"In the fall of 1955 said Telegraph Delivery Service moved its office to Beverly Hills, California, and is located at 292 La-Cienega Boulevard, Beverly Hills, California. Respondent has been always aware of the location and exact address of appellant's employment, and on numerous occasions, during the years 1954, 1955 and 1956, she caused appellant to be served with lawsuits, papers and orders to show cause. By reason of said lawsuits and numerous proceedings thereunder it became necessary for appellant to come into court any number of times throughout the year 1954 to attend court hearings of considerable length, conducted on various dates in the Superior Court before Judge Richards, Judge Walker, Judge McCoy and other judges of the Superior Court, which culminated in the dismissal in September, 1954, of fourteen Superior Court lawsuits filed by respondent, from time to time, in the last 10 or 12 years. Said lawsuits and proceedings were entirely unrelated to any attempt, under Sections 681 or 685, Code of Civil Procedure, to collect back payments allegedly due her.

"At no time whatsoever, within an entire period of ten years, between February 1946, and March 29, 1956, the date of the filing of notice of motion for writ of execution under Section 685, Code of Civil Procedure, did respondent take any action to secure a writ of execution on back payments, under Section 681, Code of Civil Procedure, although respondent knew, from February, 1946, at all times, the whereabouts of appellant, and saw him on his several trips back to Los Angeles, and knew that he was locally employed since January, 1953, and yet waited until March, 1956, to file her motion for writ of execution."

Appellant further asserts that on March 14, 1945, he obtained a valid judgment of divorce from respondent in Mexico. That on March 28, 1945 he married his present wife. That thereafter, in 1951, respondent filed an action in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, attacking the validity of said Mexican divorce, but, in September, 1954, she dismissed the action with prejudice. Appellant therefore, contends that the right of respondent to any further allowance of support pendente lite in the aforesaid separate maintenance action was terminated on March 14, 1945 by the Mexican divorce.

It might here be noted that on July 5, 1949, the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, on its own motion, dismissed appellant's divorce action pursuant to the provisions of Section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and on July 7, 1949 the same court dismissed respondent's cross-complaint, upon which the order for support money pendente lite, here under consideration, was based.

On June 10, 1949, appellant filed an action and obtained a judgment of divorce from respondent in the Eighth District Court of the County of Clark, State of Nevada. Subsequently, respondent made a special appearance in said Nevada court wherein she challenged the validity of the judgment of divorce on the ground of fraud and lack of jurisdiction. The motion was denied, no appeal was taken therefrom, and the judgment has become final.

On March 29, 1946 respondent filed, in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, her motion asking the court to issue a writ of execution pursuant to the terms of Section 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure after the expiration of the five-year period provided by Section 681 of the same code. Respondent's motion sought an execution and a judgment for accrued support payments allegedly due her from February, 1946 to July, 1949 under the pendente lite order granted on October 30, 1944, in her aforesaid separate maintenance action.

Appellant filed objections to respondent's motion, supported by affidavits, on two grounds:

(1) That appellant's judgment of divorce, obtained in Mexico on March 14, 1945, terminated respondent's right to further pendente lite support payments in her separate maintenance action;

(2) That in any event, respondent had no standing in court because she had failed to exercise the due and necessary diligence required by law, and by the provisions of Section 685, Code of Civil Procedure, on a request for the issuance of execution after the expiration of the five-year period provided by Section 681, Code of Civil Procedure.

The court granted respondent's motion and ordered the issuance of a writ of execution under Section 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure against appellant for the sum of $15,928.54 representing payments due from appellant to respondent from March 1, 1946 to and including June 10, 1949 (the date of the aforesaid Nevada divorce), together with interest in the sum of $6,203.54. From such order, appellant prosecutes this appeal.

As his first ground for reversal, appellant earnestly urges that the trial court committed prejudicial error in holding that the Mexican divorce decree entered in March, 1945 was not controlling to terminate the support payments under the aforesaid pendente lite order for separate maintenance and that the date of the Nevada divorce, entered in June, 1949 constituted the effective date of termination.

Under the facts and circumstances present in the controversy now engaging our attention, we are satisfied that the learned trial judge correctly disposed of appellant's contention. We therefore adopt as part of this opinion the following language taken from the "memorandum" filed by the judge of the court below when the cause was decided by him:

[1] "We need not concern ourselves here with the validity of the Mexican decree.

Subsequent to its entry, Mr. Douglas secured a second divorce from Mrs. Douglas, this time in Nevada. (Parenthetically, in other proceedings in this action he asserts the validity of and relies upon the Nevada judgment.) The latter decree was a conclusive determination of the status of the parties as husband and wife from the date of the marriage to the dissolution of that relation by the Nevada court ([In re] Estate of Lee, 200 Cal. 310, 314 [253 P. 145]). It being the later of the two adjudications, it is controlling. Mr. Douglas by his proceedings in Nevada waived his right to assert the benefit of the Mexican decree (Dillard v. McKnight, 34 Cal.2d 209, 219 [209 P.2d 387, 11 A.L.R.2d 835]; California Bank v. Traeger, 215 Cal. 346, 351 [10 P.2d 51]; 29 Cal.Jur.2d pages 174 and 258.)

"In support of the Mexican judgment, counsel for Mr. Douglas rely upon a dismissal 'with prejudice' by Mrs. Douglas on September 14, 1954, of a California action directly attacking it. This dismissal, they assert, was effective as a retraxit and was res judicata on the issue of the validity of the Mexican decree. (Citing Gagnon Co. v. Nevada Desert Inn, 45 Cal.2d 448 [289 P.2d 466].) The Court is thus called upon in effect to declare an estoppel upon an estoppel upon an estoppel. There are two answers to the above: (a) The California action attacked both the Mexican and the Nevada judgments. If the dismissal operated as an adjudication, it determined the validity of both decrees, and as above indicated, the later of the two must control as to the status of the parties; (b) The record here shows a fourth adjudication. After such dismissal 'with prejudice' this court in this very action made a final order establishing the validity of the Nevada judgment. (See the November 10, 1954, order of Judge Philbrick McCoy.) * * *

[2] "The Nevada judgment, if valid, terminated eo instante the award of temporary maintenance herein. (Chirgwin v. Chirgwin, 26 Cal.App.2d 506 [79 P.2d 772];

28 A.L.R.2d 1402; 42 C.J.S. [Husband and Wife § 626, p.] 274.) Mrs. Douglas attacked the jurisdiction of the Nevada Court in that forum. She is thus foreclosed from attacking it here. (Tomkins v. Tomkins, 89 Cal.App.2d 243, 247-[248, 200 P.2d 821], and state and federal cases there cited.) Additionally, as heretofore stated, the Nevada decree was found valid by a final order of this court on November 10, 1954. Accordingly, any recovery herein must be based on amounts accruing prior to June 10, 1949, the date of the Nevada judgment."

We are not impressed with appellant's argument that because divorce laws are established for "public reasons" (Civil Code, Section 3513), and the state has an interest in the marital status, its continuance and its dissolution, the provisions of his Mexican divorce could not be waived by him. When appellant sought the aid of the Nevada court in seeking dissolution of his marriage he represented to that court that respondent herein was his lawful wife. He is an attorney at law, and whatever may have been his reasons, it is manifest he did not rely upon the validity of his Mexican divorce when he invoked the powers of the Nevada court to dissolve the bonds of matrimony existing between him and respondent herein. It would be a mockery of laws governing marriage and divorce and amount to a trifling with judicial process and tribunals if a person might obtain a series of divorces in various jurisdictions and use one of them when that particular decree might, in his opinion, best serve his purpose or interest. Law and good morals should be one and inseparable. The trial court was correct in holding that the Nevada decree having been found valid by a final order of the courts of this state, was the proper one to be used in determining when appellant was relieved of his obligations under the pendente lite order for support herein.

In an opinion this day filed (Douglas v. Douglas, 330 P.2d 655) we affirmed an order of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County made March 5, 1957 vacating an ex parte judgment of said court and a writ of execution obtained by respondent herein against appellant herein, to collect support money allegedly due the former under the aforesaid pendente lite order of October 30, 1944 on appellant wife's separate maintenance cross-complaint, from July 20, 1951 to July 20, 1956. In the case just cited (330 P.2d at page 658) we held that the right of respondent herein to support money under her cross-complaint terminated with the dismissal of that pleading by the court below on July 7, 1949. However, since the order now engaging our attention concerns alleged unpaid pendente lite support money payments from March 1, 1946 to June 10, 1949, such order is unaffected by our holding in Douglas v. Douglas, 330 P.2d at page 657, that the right of respondent herein to such payments did not terminate until July 7, 1949.

We come now to appellant's final contention that the court abused its discretion in granting respondent's motion for issuance of execution under Section 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Without question, appellant introduced evidence that he was in Los Angeles and employed by Telegraph Delivery Service in January, 1953, and thereafter. That respondent knew of appellant's residence in Los Angeles and served him with a series of legal documents during this period. That during the time he lived in New York, appellant made frequent trips to Los Angeles. That on one of such occasions, respondent took advantage of appellant's presence in Los Angeles to have him arrested through the district attorney's office for failure to provide for a child who respondent insisted was appellant's son.

However, these assertions by appellant were challenged and contradicted by respondent in her supporting affidavits and oral testimony at the hearing. We have heretofore narrated in some detail the contents of respondent's supporting affidavit and shall not here repeat them. Suffice it to say that there was presented to the judge of the court below a distinct conflict on the question of whether respondent had set forth good and sufficient reasons for her failure to proceed in compliance with the provisions of Section 681 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[3] The rule is well settled that the discretionary power of a court in proceedings of this character will not be disturbed unless a clear abuse of discretion is made to appear. Even though the correctness of the ruling may be doubted, nevertheless, an appellate tribunal is not warranted in substituting its own opinion, for to do so would divest the trier of facts of that discretionary power primarily reposed in him. In the instant case the trial court had before it not only the affidavits of the parties, but had the opportunity to hear their oral testimony, to observe their demeanor on the witness stand, their candor or lack of candor, and to form an opinion of the verity of both the oral testimony and the averments in their respective affidavits. The prerogatives of an appellate court on appeal when reviewing the sufficiency of the evidence to support the conclusion arrived at by the trial court is thus stated in Re Estate of Bristol, 23 Cal.2d 221, 223, 224, 143 P.2d 689, 690:

[4, 5] "The rule as to our province is: 'In reviewing the evidence * * * all conflicts must be resolved in favor of the respondent, and all legitimate and reasonable inferences indulged in to uphold the verdict if possible. It is an elementary * * * principal of law, that when a verdict is attacked as being unsupported, the power of the appellate court begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support the conclusion reached by the jury. When two or more inferences can be reasonably deduced from the facts, the reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial court,' * * * (Crawford v. Southern Pacific Co. (1935), 3 Cal.2d 427, 45 P.2d 183). The rule quoted is as applicable in reviewing the findings of a judge, as it is when considering a jury's verdict. The critical word in the definition is 'substantial'; it is a door which can lead as readily to abuse as to practical or enlightened justice. It is common knowledge among judges and lawyers that many cases are determined to the entire satisfaction of trial judges or juries, on their factual issues, by evidence which is overwhelming in its persuasiveness but which may appear relatively unsubstantial—if it can be reflected at all—in a phonographic record. Appellate courts, therefore, if there be any reasonable doubt as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a finding, should resolve that doubt in favor of the finding; and in searching the record and exploring the inferences which may arise from what is found there, to discover, whether such doubt or conflict exists, the court should be realistic and practical * * *".

See also Jackson v. De Benedetti, 39 Cal. App.2d 574, 579, 103 P.2d 990.

As to his appraisal of the intrinsic value of the conflicting evidence, and the credibility of the affidavits and testimony of appellant and respondent herein, the trial judge in his "memorandum", had this to say:

"No. 2. The Court is completely satisfied that Mrs. Douglas has shown due and reasonable diligence in pursuing her statutory remedies. A review of the voluminous evidence submitted to and carefully considered by the Court is not necessary to this memo. Suffice it to say that Mr. Douglas (appellant), by every means at his disposal (including the absenting of himself from California and the transfer of his assets to his children), has sought to avoid, and has successfully avoided, the payment of the amounts accruing herein. The evidence discloses numerous efforts on the part of Mrs. Douglas to uncover assets of Mr. Douglas and to enforce payment of sums owing her. The Court is convinced that the issuance of writs of execution during the past years would have been productive of no recovery. * * *

"No. 3. * * * The Court is unwilling to accept Mr. Douglas' bare and unsupported statements regarding payments totalling $8000.00. His testimony and witness demeanor at best, affords no basis for sustaining any such claim, and the Court does not accept it * * *"

[6] In view of the prevailing rule of law as announced in Re Estate of Bristol, supra, 23 Cal.2d at pages 223, 224, 143 P.2d at page 690, we cannot hold that the conclusion arrived at in the trial court that respondent exercised the due diligence required by Section 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure in this case is unsupported by any substantial evidence.

We are inclined to the view that apropos of the case at bar is the following quotation from Demens v. Huene, 89 Cal.App. 748, 753, 265 P. 389, 391, which was quoted with approval in Atkinson v. Atkinson, 35 Cal.App.2d 705, 708, 96 P.2d 824, and in Troendle v. Clinch, 74 Cal.App.2d 480, 484, 169 P.2d 55:

"It is the intent of the law, and it would seem the intent, as well, of good morals, that everyone being able should pay his debts. Here we find the debt ripened into a judgment. Several years go by and it is not paid. The law does not contemplate that, the time of the statute of limitations having run, the liability to pay has completely passed. The motion made in this case is provided for by law. There must, then, be something added to the mere fact of the expiration of the time and that the judgment debtors were possessed of personal property, which would move the court to deny the right given by the statute, section 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure. * * *

Cross Appeal.

Respondent has filed a cross appeal from that portion of the order limiting her recovery to the date of June 10, 1949 "under a theory of validity of the Nevada divorce", and also from that portion of the order denying respondent interest on the back-payments of alimony pendente lite, from June 10, 1949 to date of the order.

Cross-appellant relies heavily on the case of Lewis v. Lewis, 49 Cal.2d 389, 317 P.2d 987, but in that case the holding was that unless the Nevada court had personal jurisdiction over the wife, it was without power to terminate a husband's obligation to provide her support as required in a pre-existing decree of another state (Lewis v. Lewis, supra, 49 Cal.2d at page 393, 317 P.2d at page 990).

This case is therefore authority for the holding of the trial court that the Mexican divorce decree entered in March, 1945, could not effectively terminate the pre-existing pendente lite support order entered by the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, California, on October 30, 1944. This, for the reason that in the Mexican divorce proceeding the court had no personal jurisdiction over cross-appellant.

[7] However, in the case at bar, as found by the trial court, cross-appellant unsuccessfully attacked the jurisdiction of the Nevada court in that forum, and thereafter the trial court herein made an order, now final, in this very action, adjudicating the validity of the Nevada decree. Whether or not the courts of California were obligated under the Full Faith and Credit Clause of the Constitution of the United States, art. 4, § 1, to give the Nevada decree recognition, they did so, and having jurisdiction over cross-appellant, the adjudication of the validity of the Nevada decree, was binding upon her. Therefore, it was not error to terminate the pendente lite support payments as of the effective date of the valid Nevada decree.

Concerning cross-appellant's final contention that the court erroneously denied her interest on the delinquent payments of support money pendente lite to the date of the order appealed from, the record reflects that interest was awarded on said back-payments, "from date of accrual thereof to December 17, 1956", which was the date of the order.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, Los Angeles, by Alfred Charles De Flon, Deputy County Counsel, Hollywood, for appellants.

Walter H. Young, Los Angeles, for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Defendants County of Los Angeles, City of Los Angeles, Los Angeles City School District, Metropolitan Water District of Southern California, and Los Angeles County Flood Control District appeal from a judgment against them and in favor of plaintiff National Charity League, Inc., a Non-Profit Corporation, in its action to recover taxes for the year 1955-56 paid under protest. The judgment requires the refund of the amount of taxes collected, excepting therefrom only the portion collected for the Flood Control District.

According to the Pre-Trial Conference Order made February 25, 1957, plaintiff and defendant at that conference stipulated that plaintiff qualifies for tax exemption under the welfare provisions of the Revenue and Taxation Code (Secs. 214, 214.1); that plaintiff is the owner of the land described in the complaint; that plaintiff intended to construct on said real property a building to be used in connection with its non-profit activity, and "if and when said building was either constructed or actually in the course of construction then said real property and the building either completed or in the course of construction would have been exempt from taxation," that prior to the first Monday in March, 1955, "the plaintiff had cleared said real property, had dug certain trenches for foundations and had placed lumber upon said property, all of which activities were in furtherance of the construction of a building on said real property for welfare use;" that all plans and specifications had been filed with the proper officials and a building permit had been issued; that all financing had been arranged, and thereafter the building was prosecuted to completion and used for welfare purposes.

At the pre-trial hearing and at the trial, plaintiff urged that the building was, on and prior to noon of the first Monday in March, 1955, "in the course of construction" and exempt from taxation under Article XIII, Section 1c of the California Constitution.

Defendants contended at the pre-trial hearing, at the trial, and upon the instant appeal, that there was on Monday, March 7, 1955, no "building in the course of construction within the meaning of said section of said Article of the Constitution and section 214.1 of the Revenue and Taxation Code."

The pre-trial order limits the evidence to be taken to construction work done on said property prior to noon on Monday, March 7, 1955; and states that "the sole legal issue is, whether what the plaintiff had done on said premises prior to noon on the first Monday in March, 1955, constituted work which could be considered to result in a building 'in the course of construction' within the meaning of the Constitutional provision and said section of the Revenue and Taxation Code above referred to."

The trial court found that, as of noon on the first Monday in March of 1955, "excavations for the foundation * * * had been made on the said property, foundation lines had been staked, surveyed and laid out, and foundation forms had been partially constructed * * *," and concluded that "there was a building in the course of construction on the plaintiff's land, which building, when completed, was to be used exclusively for charitable purposes and not conducted for profit," and that said building and land was then exempt from taxation under Section 214.1, Revenue and Taxation Code, and the California Constitution, Article XIII, § 1c.

It is appellant's position that the above quoted finding and the conclusion based thereon are "wholly unsupported by any evidence whatsoever."

The record includes, in addition to the stipulation at the pre-trial hearing that trenches for foundations had been dug, a photograph of the property taken on Friday, March 4, 1955, showing trenches, which, according to the testimony of John Meek, the general contractor, were dug by hand for the purposes of testing the soil and later were filled and leveled.

The witness, Jane Young, however, testified that she was on the property when the photograph of March 4th was taken; that there were two men there that day and they did more work on the property after the picture was taken; that she was also on the property at noon on Monday, March 7th; that more trenches had then been dug and there was some lumber on the lot. On cross-examination, she testified that before Monday noon the digging included "one of the corners of the new building," that more boards not shown in the picture of the 4th had been placed, and further digging had been done along those boards.

Mr. Meek testified that they had a superintendent in charge of the work on this building; that they generally use a foundation digging machine to put in foundations, and for this building "we did some machine excavation and some hand excavation;" their machine excavations were not commenced until after March 7th and no cement footings were in place before noon of that day. He testified that at noon on March 7, 1955, no part of the building was in place, and that any batter boards then located would have been removed later. However, he testified that he was not on the property on March 7th. His testimony does not preclude the court from believing the testimony of Jane Young, who was there, and inferring therefrom that some of the trenches theretofore dug and the boards described by her as on the property at that time were excavations and forms for foundations.

From the entire record, it appears that although lumber had been stacked on the lot, the only permanent part of the building to be constructed which was on the property prior to noon of March 7th was a trench into which a portion of the foundation would later be poured.

Does such an excavation for foundation constitute a "building in the course of construction," within the meaning of the California Constitution and Section 214.1 of the Revenue and Taxation Code?

Said section 1c of Article XIII, as amended in 1954, includes the following language:

"In addition to such exemptions as are now provided in this Constitution, the Legislature may exempt from taxation all or any portion of property used exclusively for * * * charitable purposes and owned by * * * corporations organized and operated for * * * charitable purposes, not conducted for profit and no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual. As used in this section, 'property used exclusively for * * * charitable purposes' shall include a building and its equipment in the course of construction on or after the first Monday of March, 1954, together with the land on which it is located as may be required for the use and occupation of the building, to be used exclusively for * * * charitable purposes."

[1] Section 1c of Article XIII of the California Constitution is purely permissive and not mandatory in character. Under its provisions the Legislature can refrain from exempting any of the property therein referred to, or it can exempt only such property as may meet the conditions specified therein and such further conditions as it may see fit to impose. Sutter Hospital of Sacramento v. City of Sacramento, 39 Cal. 2d 33, 35, 244 P.2d 390.

[2] "In California all property must be taxed unless an exemption is authorized by the state Constitution or granted by the laws of the United States * * *.

* * * * *

"Section 1c is an enabling provision which empowers the Legislature to grant exemptions within certain general categories. In acting under this section the Legislature must necessarily construe the terms of the provision in order to determine the extent of the authority conferred upon it * * *." Lundberg v. County of Alameda, 46 Cal.2d 644, 648, 651, 298 P.2d 1, 4.

Decisions of the courts of other states, or even California decisions based upon other and different provisions of the Constitution and statutes, are of little assistance in determining the exact extent of the exemption from taxation in California on March 7, 1955. The pertinent portions of the statutes then in effect are as follows:

"Property used exclusively for * * * charitable purposes owned and operated by * * * corporations organized and operated for * * * charitable purposes is exempt from taxation * * *." Sec. 214, Rev. & Tax.Code.

"* * * 'property used exclusively for * * * charitable purposes' shall include facilities in the course of construction on or after the first Monday of March, 1954, together with the land on which the facilities are located * * *." Sec. 214.1, Rev. & Tax.Code.

As stated by appellants in their Opening Brief, we need not be concerned with any possible difference in the meanings of the words "building" as used in the Constitution and "facilities" as used in the statute, "because a building in the conventional sense was eventually erected on the land for which exemption was claimed on tax day, 1955." The question to be determined on the instant appeal is whether that building was "in the course of construction," within the meaning of the phrases used in both the Constitution and the statute, at noon on Monday, March 7, 1955.

[3] "* * * The ordinary rule of statutory construction, in respect to provisions exempting property from general taxation, is that such provisions must be strictly construed to the end that the exemption will be neither enlarged nor extended beyond the plain meaning of the language employed." City and County of San Francisco v. San Mateo County, 17 Cal. 2d 814, 817, 112 P.2d 595, 597, and cases there cited.

[4] "* * * In this regard, [the charitable institutions] thus like other private owners of property, have the burden of showing that they clearly come within the terms of the exemption * * *. This rule has been expressly recognized in this state in the application of the orphanage exemption * * *.

"But the rule of strict construction does not require that the narrowest possible meaning be given to words descriptive of the exemption, for a fair and reasonable interpretation must be made of all laws, with due regard for the ordinary acceptance of the language employed and the object sought to be accomplished thereby." Cedars of Lebanon Hospital v. County of Los Angeles, 35 Cal.2d 729, 743, 221 P.2d 31, 34, 15 A.L.R.2d 1045.

Therefore, on the basis of a "strict but reasonable construction" the dispute between the parties in the instant action must be determined.

[5] As heretofore stated, the sole question to be so decided is whether at tax time plaintiff's building was "in the course of construction." "In the course of" is another way of saying "during," and some of the generally accepted synonyms for "construction" are: "making," "framing," "assembling," "building," "erecting," and "creating." In other words, "the course of construction" of a building refers to that period of time between the commencement and completion of the building. In the instant action, it is agreed that at tax time plaintiff's building was not completed. The remaining question is whether, at that time, the building had been commenced.

The Supreme Court of California, in English v. Olympic Auditorium, Inc., 217 Cal. 631, 636, 20 P.2d 946, 949, 87 A.L.R. 1281, held that the notice of non-responsibility was posted by the owner after the "commencement of [the] construction" of the auditorium. At the time of the posting, there was some lumber upon the land, a temporary platform used only for ground-breaking ceremonies and then torn down had been built, and a test hole 6 feet by 10 feet by 6 feet had been dug "for the purpose of testing the character and weight-bearing qualities of the soil, which information was necessary in preparing the plans and specifications for the building. The test hole was thereafter used as a part of the excavation for the building." The Supreme Court in the case just cited followed Simons Brick Co. v. Hetzel, 72 Cal. App. 1, 236 P. 357, wherein it was held that a trench about 60 feet long and four feet deep excavated along the front of the lot "was sufficient to put the holder of the mortgage on notice of a building being under construction on the premises." Whether the building has been commenced is a question of fact to be determined by the trial court. In neither of the two decisions last above cited could it be held that, as a matter of law, the evidence of such excavations was not sufficient to support the finding that the building had been commenced.

[6] The evidence in the instant action that at noon on tax day some trenches for the foundation of the building had been dug is not, as a matter of law, insufficient to support the finding that the building had been commenced. A building having been commenced and not yet finished, unless abandoned, is "in the course of construction." In the instant action, it is stipulated that the plaintiff's building was completed without delay.

Appellant urges that the phrase "in the course of construction" has a different meaning when used in a statute exempting property from taxation, from the meaning of the same phrase when used in a statute creating and limiting liens of workmen as against landowners and contractors.

[7] We are satisfied, however, that the phrase "in the course of construction" applies to a building from the time of its commencement to its completion, and see no logical reason to hold that an excavation which can be recognized by the land owner or mortgagor as "the commencement of a building" (Simons Brick Co. v. Hetzel, supra, 72 Cal.App. 5, 236 P. 358) should not also be recognized by the tax assessor as the commencement of a building.

The judgment is affirmed.

Ehrman, White & McAuliffe, San Francisco, for appellant.

Pierce & Brown, Sacramento, for respondents.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

Respondents began this action to obtain a decree declaring rescinded a transaction whereunder appellant had purchased from them five shares of the capital stock of the Bank of Davis. The judgment granted this relief, and the court denied a motion for a new trial. This appeal followed.

By their complaint respondents alleged that the sale of the shares of stock had been induced by fraudulent representations made to them by appellant. The trial court found these allegations to be true. Appellant's attack on the judgment raises the single issue of the sufficiency of the evidence to support these findings.

The findings may be summarized as follows: Respondents were the owners jointly of five shares of the common capital stock of the bank. Appellant was a director and its manager. During the period here involved the total number of issued and outstanding common shares was 250. Respondents, on May 2, 1953, sold their shares to appellant for $300 per share. During the negotiations for the sale appellant made certain representations which were false, fraudulent, untrue and were known by him to be so. Appellant represented to respondents that the actual reasonable value of the shares was materially less than $300 per share, but that he was willing to pay $300 per share because certain persons were challenging the control of defendant and his associates of a majority of shares. Respondents' shares were, therefore, needed by appellant in order to strengthen his position in the corporation. The shares were then of an actual and reasonable value of $887.24 per share. Appellant represented that the bank was not earning sufficient profits with which to pay substantial dividends. In fact, the bank had earned large profits sufficient to enable it to declare a 100% stock dividend, which was done soon after the sale, and appellant knew the directors had already decided to declare the stock dividend but concealed that knowledge from respondents. Appellant had been negotiating for the purchase of other shares of the bank, one block of stock being one for which the owner had demanded $500 per share and another lot being one in which a tentative sale to appellant had been cancelled. The bank had built up reserves from earnings sufficient to retire its preferred shares and to build up its paid in capital by $25,000 transferred from reserves and to build up a surplus by transferring $55,000 from unallocated reserves to paid in surplus. These steps were taken within a month after respondents sold their stock to appellant. Appellant concealed this information as to the bank's condition from respondents during his negotiations with them for the purchase of their stock.

The court found that appellant had at all times voluntarily assumed and occupied toward all of the shareholders of the bank, including respondents, a relation of personal confidence and by reason thereof was a trustee of a trust in which the shareholders, including respondents, were beneficiaries; that in all matters connected with said trust, appellant was bound to act in the highest good faith towards respondents, but notwithstanding made said misrepresentations and concealed the matters hereinabove before found, and thus obtained and gained an advantage adverse to respondents in violation of his trust; that by reason thereof respondents were induced to enter into the contract of sale and to sell the shares to appellant and did so under the undue influence of appellant.

There is evidence of the following facts: The families of the parties have been residents of the Davis community for many years. Kenneth Haussler, who was thirty years of age at the time of the transactions involved here, had known appellant all his life. Appellant had been connected with the bank since 1929. Respondents' uncle, George Haussler, had for a long time prior to his death been a director and shareholder, and when he died the five shares here involved were a part of his estate, and were purchased through probate sale by respondents. They paid $150 per share. Kenneth is a farmer. He and his father before him had always banked with the Bank of Davis, and Kenneth had done no business through any other bank. Appellant had acted as financial adviser for Kenneth's father and for Kenneth. The families had been quite friendly for a long time. At the time of the sale the common stock of the bank was closely held. One hundred and twenty-two shares were owned or controlled by appellant and his aunt. Acquisition of respondents' five shares would give appellant and his aunt voting control of the corporation. Thirty-one shares were held by a trustee for the Bank of America or Transamerica. A Mrs. Flaherty held 16 shares. One Brinley, through his son, wife and brother-in-law, held 36 shares, and four family groups and individuals owned the balance. Before respondents sold their stock to appellant, Brinley purchased the Transamerica and Flaherty shares. When respondents sold to appellant, their 5 shares appeared to be the only shares available and if appellant could obtain them he and the interests he was working with would have voting control. If Brinley got them the voting control would shift.

Under the foregoing circumstances appellant began dealing with the Hausslers for their stock. The sale was the result of three conferences. The first occurred on the Haussler farm when appellant went there and talked to Kenneth. Between the second conference and the last appellant phoned the Hausslers several times, urging them to sell. The Hausslers went to the bank for the purpose of telling appellant they would not sell. They told him that their shares had been in the family a long time; that they liked to be a part of the organization they were doing business with. Responsive to appellant's statement that he was threatened with loss of control of the bank the Hausslers offered to "lend" him their shares. They told him they would vote the shares with him. His reply was that the only way he could be secure in his position was to purchase the shares outright. He told them the shares were not a particularly good investment, not very valuable and were paying a very low dividend. He offered them $300 a share, stating it was more than the shares were worth, was twice their value, but that because he wanted control of the bank he was willing to pay that price. He told them that the book value did not enter into the market price of stock. Finally he said that in the near future there would be additional shares available and he promised the Haussslers that they could then buy shares in the bank and again become shareholders and that he would see that stock was made available to them to replace the shares they were selling. The Haussslers sold.

[1] To establish the value of the shares, respondents called to the stand one Addison G. Strong. To qualify himself as an opinion witness on value, he testified that he was a certified public accountant and had been such for forty years, was a graduate of the University of California with the class of 1910, having majored in what is now called business administration; that he was a member of the American Institute of Accountants, of the State Society of Certified Public Accountants, and of the National Association of Cost Accountants. He said he had done general work involving banks along financial organizational lines; that over a number of years he had made an examination of a number of banks, some fairly large; that the assets of the banks he had examined ran from half a million dollars up to five hundred million; that he had done auditing in respect of such banks for boards of directors and that his work had involved going into the affairs of these banks with great particularity to determine their condition; that he had made a report with reference to the condition of the Bank of Davis as of the date the shares were sold to appellant. He said he had considered two published reports, one of June 30 and one of December 31, 1952, covering the examination of the Bank of Davis by the State Superintendent of

Banks; that these reports contained a statement of assets and liabilities in some detail with a recitation of the breakdown of certain of the assets and liabilities, the list of securities and their evaluation. He had examined analyses covering such items as the bank's premises, its earnings and reserves. He had examined the bank's income tax returns for the years 1950 to and including 1953. This witness arrived at a book value of $887.24 per share. We think it is unnecessary to go into the details of his testimony wherein he substantiated his result. Appellant challenges his results and his methods; respondents defend them. We deem it unnecessary to repeat their arguments. Unquestionably the testimony of Mr. Strong supports a conclusion that the book value of the shares at least approached fairly closely the value the witness gave as above stated. In this respect it might be noted that the witness in his appraisal of net worth of the shares added nothing for good will, although pointing out that in evaluating the stock of a closely held corporation some amount could have been added for good will in determining actual value. The record supports the finding of the trial court that when appellant told the Haussslers their shares were worth about $150 each he grossly misrepresented the real value of the shares. He was chargeable at the time with knowledge of the book value and of the fact that in some material respects the book value did not reflect the whole of the real value. In the case of a closely held corporation book value is a very material factor in ascertaining real value, yet when the Haussslers asked him about book value his reply was that it had little to do with market value. By thus brushing aside respondents' request for information which in his position as manager of the bank and director he must have had, appellant effectually concealed that which the testimony of the witness Strong revealed. As stated in County Nat. Bank etc. Co. v. Sheppard, 136 Cal.App.2d 205, 213, 288 P.2d 880, 886:

"The method now generally sanctioned and adopted for valuing stock in a closely-held corporation whose stock is unlisted, and where there have been no sales, consists of ascertaining 'the value of the property which they represent, assigning to each share its proportionate worth.'"

The test in such a case as we have before us is stated in this way in Trebelhorn v. Bartlett, 154 Neb. 113, 47 N.W.2d 374, 379:

"The actual value of corporate stock which has no market value, that is, where it is all common stock closely held and not listed or actively traded in on any stock exchange, as in the case at bar, is ordinarily determinable from the then net worth of the corporation divided by the number of bona fide shares issued and outstanding. For that purpose, evidence of the factors and elements, such as assets, liabilities, and all other matters pertinent to the value of the particular corporation involved, may be admitted and considered." (To the same effect see Kendrick v. Schwartz, 69 Cal.App.2d 171, 158 P.2d 405; Gorham v. Massillon Iron & Steel Co., 284 Ill. 594, 120 N.E. 467; Arneson v. Nерger, 34 S.D. 201, 147 N.W. 982; 31 C.J.S. Evidence § 183, p. 901.)

[2, 3] The evidence herein brought appellant squarely within the scope of the rule declared in Hobart v. Hobart Estate Co., 26 Cal.2d 412, 433, 159 P.2d 958, 970:

"Under the 'special facts' doctrine a corporate officer owes a limited fiduciary duty in transactions with a shareholder involving the transfer of stock. The confidential relationship arises as a result of the officer's possession of special knowledge gained in his capacity as a corporate fiduciary. An officer, in buying or selling to a shareholder, must inform him of those matters relating to the corporate business of which the officer has knowledge and which the shareholder has a right to know about, so that the latter may have the benefit of such information in judging the advantages of the deal. Once such disclosure is made, the officer has fulfilled his duty under this doctrine, and the resulting bargain is not subject to disaffirmance on the ground of unfairness to the shareholder. But without such disclosure the fiduciary duty of the officer in such a situation is not discharged."

It is unnecessary to discuss the findings other than those which show fraudulent representations and fraudulent concealment in connection with the value of respondents' shares. We have examined the record closely and think that, with perhaps minor exceptions, the trial court's findings as to other fraudulent representations are supported. But even if they were not the judgment would still have to be upheld because of the misrepresentations and wrongful concealment the court found as to value. As said in Hobart v. Hobart Estate Co., supra, 26 Cal.2d at page 422, 159 P.2d at page 364:

"In general, to establish a cause of action for fraud or deceit plaintiff must prove that a material representation was made; that it was false; that defendants knew it to be untrue or did not have sufficient knowledge to warrant a belief that it was true; that it was made with an intent to induce plaintiff to act in reliance thereon; that plaintiff reasonably believed it to be true; that it was relied on by plaintiff; and that plaintiff suffered damage thereby."

The evidence in this case measures up to the foregoing test and the judgment appealed from must be affirmed.

[4] Appellant moved for a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence and his motion was denied. He now claims an abuse on the part of the trial court in denying that motion. Mrs. Hausler had testified concerning the representations made to herself and her husband by appellant during negotiations leading up to the sale of their stock to him. After the trial was over she wrote him a letter reading as follows:

"Dear Warner

"Quite a little bit sadder and wiser than last week I am writing this note to say that I'm sure what you did was in good faith.

"By the same token all I care about is the rescinding of the shares and a more equal distribution of the management of the bank by the shareholders.

"Kenneth and I, as you probably realize, went into this on principle.

"May I say I have found you a worthy opponent."

She also wrote a letter to a mutual acquaintance, one Virginia S. Dixon, reading as follows:

"Dear Mrs. Dixon,

"This note is to apologize for an oversight of mine in the witness chair, yesterday. In my concentration on the dates in dispute, namely October 1950 to May 1953, I forgot about our pleasant and mostly earlier association in the Eastern Star. I'm sorry.

"I did so hope this would be settled between the two families out of Court. Since this could not be, I had no choice but to sustain the principles in which I believe."

Noting that the action was based upon the bad faith of appellant in procuring respondents' stock, her post-trial assertions to him that she was sure that he had been acting in good faith are declared by appellant to constitute newly-discovered evidence which could not have been presented by him at the trial even with the exercise of the greatest diligence. The letters, says appellant, not only absolve him of fraud but admit special motives in connection with the litigation apart from a single desire to recover for damages claimed to have been inflicted through the alleged fraud. Mrs. Haussler filed an affidavit in opposition to the motion for new trial. She said that when she wrote to appellant that she was sure what he had done had been done in good faith and that she was trying to patch up the unhappy unpleasantness of the trial, she had been trying to be charitable; that she had tried to think that appellant in doing what he had done had wanted to obtain the Haussler shares so badly he had even rationalized his own conduct and behavior to himself; that she meant only to imply such rationalization by appellant to his own conscience; that in all she had said at the trial she had testified truly. It is to be observed that Mrs. Haussler's statement that she was sure appellant had acted in good faith in what he had done is conclusionary in nature. If she and the others had testified truly as to the facts it was the business of the trial court to draw the conclusion of good or bad faith. Mrs. Haussler did not testify, and probably would not have been permitted to testify, as to any opinion she might have held concerning good or bad faith. Notwithstanding her post-trial statements, the trial court in passing upon the motion could not in good conscience grant it if the court was still of the opinion that appellant had acted in bad faith. The court's denial of the motion indicates that such was the opinion of the court.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 19, 1958.

Action for death of race horse. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, George W. Schonfeld, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, P. J., held that even though no charge was made by race track operator for stabling of horses operator owed duty of ordinary care to owner stabling his horse at race track.

Waiver is an affirmative defense which is itself waived if not pleaded in answer; and in action for death of race horse, as alleged result of negligence of race track operator, it was not error to instruct jury to disregard waiver of liability contained in application for stable space where waiver had not been pleaded by defendant.

Alexander, Bacon & Mundhenk, McCarthy, O'Hara & Johnson, San Francisco, for appellant.

Philander Brooks Beadle, John T. Tully, San Francisco, for respondent.

KAUFMAN, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff, Walter E. Chisholm filed a complaint seeking damages for the death of his race horse, Romanticon, allegedly caused by the negligence of the defendant, owner and operator of the Bay Meadows Race Track. Defendant appeals from a jury verdict in favor of the plaintiff on the grounds of certain prejudicial errors in the court's instructions to the jury.

Defendant conducts horse races at Bay Meadows and invites owners of horses to stable their horses at the track and enter them in the races. No fee is charged for the stabling of horses. The defendant, however, retains as its profit, a portion of the sums wagered on the races. In the Fall of 1950, the plaintiff, through his trainer, Hank Ross, applied for and was assigned stable space for several of his horses at Bay Meadows. Before the beginning of the fall races, Romanticon became ill and died on October 9, about three weeks after arriving at Bay Meadows. There was conflicting evidence as to whether Romanticon's death was caused by a parasite commonly associated with colic which the horse had previously had or from gastro-enteritis produced by fly-borne bacteria resulting from the unsanitary condition of defendant's stables. There was also conflicting evidence on whether defendant had exercised ordinary care to maintain its stables in a sanitary condition, and whether defendant had adequately removed manure from the stables twice a week as required by city ordinance. The sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict of the jury is not questioned.

Rather, defendant argues that the court's instructions to the jury incorrectly stated the law. The first instruction complained of reads as follows:

"The violation of a statute or ordinance, except as to speed, constitutes negligence as a matter of law. Unless, however, such violation is a proximate cause of injury it becomes immaterial. There must appear to be a causal connection between the violation of law and the injury before it becomes material to the issue."

Plaintiff introduced into evidence two ordinances of the City of San Mateo. Ordinance No. 350 in its terms declared to be "necessary as an emergency measure for preserving the public health of the City of San Mateo." The ordinance sets up specific requirements for the construction and maintenance of stables and the keeping of horses, mules or cattle within the city limits. The relevant portion of the ordinance, Section 6, reads as follows:

"The manure, offal, soiled straw and other refuse from all stables, barns, sheds, stalls, corrals or other yards where such animals are kept shall be placed immediately upon removal therefrom in tight and closely covered receptacles, constructed of concrete or other approved material impervious to water, and kept covered until removed from the premises or destroyed.

"The contents of such receptacles shall be removed at least twice a week, or oftener, if ordered by the Health Officer of the City of San Mateo."

Ordinance No. 614 defines public nuisances affecting health, morals, decency and safety and provides for the abatement of such nuisances. The relevant portion of this ordinance, Section 2, reads as follows:

"Section 2. Health Nuisances. Subject to the definitions of Section 1 and in addition to any other provisions of this ordinance, the following are declared to be nuisances affecting public health, and shall be abated as such.

* * * * *

"5. Improperly covered accumulations of manure or rubbish which are breeding places for flies, mosquitoes or vermin, or which give forth noisome gases. Abatement may be summary."

[1] Defendant argues that the above quoted instruction is erroneous as these ordinances do not prescribe a standard of care to prevent the sickness and death of a horse, but only a standard of care to prevent the sickness and death of human beings, or at the most a duty to the general public, citing Boie-Hansen v. Sisters of Charity, 152 Cal.App.2d 845, 314 P.2d 189, and Routh v. Quinn, 20 Cal.2d 488, 127 P.2d 1, 149 A.L.R. 215.

We do not think that the ordinances in question are as restrictive in their purpose as the defendant claims. "The term 'public health' is not susceptible to accurate definition since it takes on new definitions when new conditions arise, but, generally speaking, it means the wholesome condition of the community at large." 39 C.J.S. Health § 1, p. 811; State ex rel. Anderson v. Fadely, 180 Kan. 652, 308 P.2d 537, 548. The health of horses and cattle is vital to the maintenance of public health. Stickley v. Givens, 176 Va. 548, 11 S.E.2d 631. In this state, public authorities have the right to quarantine or destroy diseased animals and certain diseased animals are public nuisances. See for example, Agricultural Code, §§ 205-207. If such property can be destroyed for the protection of public health, it cannot be argued that an ordinance which protects public health does not also protect property. An ordinance may be intended for the health and safety of the public in general and the protection of property rights of individuals as well. Reid & Sibell, Inc. v. Gilmore & Edwards Co., 134 Cal.App.2d 60, 285 P.2d 364; Edwards v. Hollywood Canteen, 27 Cal.2d 802, 167 P.2d 729; Alechoff v. Los Angeles G. & E. Corp., 84 Cal.App. 33, 257 P. 569. We conclude therefore that the above quoted instruction was not prejudicial to the defendant.

The court in its instructions indicated that apart from the standard of care set by the ordinances, the defendant owed certain duties of ordinary care to the plaintiff. The second instruction complained of is as follows:

"The duties owed with respect to chattels in the possession of a business invitee are the same as the duties owed to the business invitee personally. (Plaintiff's No. 8.)

"When plaintiff brought this horse, Romanticon, to the Bay Meadows race track, he did so at the implied, if not the express, invitation of the owners of the track, and plaintiff thereupon became a business invitee.

"Upon those owners the law places the duty of exercising ordinary care so as not unnecessarily to expose the invitee, or his horse, to danger or accident and, to that end, to keep it in a reasonably safe and sanitary condition the race track made available for the invitee's use, and which the latter is expressly or impliedly invited to use. (Plaintiff's No. 17.)"

[2] Defendant, seeking to bring himself within the rules applicable to gratuitous bailees, argues that because no charge was made, the plaintiff was at most a licensee, to whom the defendant owed no affirmative duties. The benefit to the defendant need not be measured in monetary terms. Edwards v. Hollywood Canteen, 27 Cal.2d 802, 167 P.2d 729. The plaintiff was on the premises for the purpose of aiding in the carrying out of the defendant's business objective and clearly a business invitee. Hovencamp v. Union Stockyards Co., 107 Tex. 421, 180 S.W. 225, holding that a stockyard must exercise ordinary care like a livery stable keeper. We think the above quoted instruction is correct.

[3] The third and final error complained of on appeal is the court's instruction to the jury to disregard the waiver of liability signed by the plaintiff's trainer in the application for stable space. This instruction was correct as the waiver was not pleaded in any of the defendant's pleadings. It has long been the rule in this state that waiver is an affirmative defense which is itself waived if not pleaded in the answer. Harris v. Nat. Union etc. Cooks & Stewards, 98 Cal.App.2d 733, 221 P.2d 136; Pohle v. Christian, 21 Cal.2d 83, 130 P.2d 417.

We conclude that no prejudicial error appears in the record before us.

Judgment affirmed.

Raymond D. Smith, in pro. per., for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Norman H. Sokolow, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

VALLEÉ, Justice.

Defendant was convicted by a jury of having forged and uttered a check for $500, and sentenced to state prison. He appeals from the judgment and sentence.

On August 13, 1957 defendant presented to Marilyn Kowalski, a teller at Lynwood Branch of Bank of America, a deposit slip and a check. The deposit slip was made to the account of "Georgia P. Smith" for "500 less 300." On the face of the deposit slip there appeared the signature "Reynold P. Smith" and under it, stamped thereon, "Signature of Depositor." The check, drawn on First State Bank of Lynwood, was for $500, was signed "George P. Waxman," was payable to order of "Reynold P. Smith," and was endorsed "Reynold P. Smith." The teller accepted the check and deposit slip and gave defendant $300.

The Lynwood Branch of Bank of America had no account in the name "Georgia P. Smith." The First State Bank of Lynwood had no account in the name of

"George P. Waxman" and had made no provision for extending credit to "George P. Waxman." An exemplar of defendant's handwriting was received in evidence. An expert testified the handwriting on the face of the check and the endorsement were written by the same person who wrote the exemplar; and the handwriting on the deposit slip was identical with that on the exemplar.

Defendant testified and denied any knowledge of the check and deposit slip, and denied having presented them to Miss Kowalski.

[1,2] First, defendant asserts the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict. The point is without merit. A conviction of forgery is sustained by evidence that in exchange for money defendant gave a check that he drew in another's name on a nonexistent bank account. People v. Lamb, 133 Cal.App.2d 179, 180-183, 283 P.2d 727. The signing of a fictitious name where the instrument has been uttered is sufficient to imply an intent to defraud. People v. Weitz, 42 Cal.2d 338, 350, 267 P.2d 295; People v. Platt, 124 Cal.App.2d 123, 134, 268 P.2d 529.

[3] Second, defendant claims he was denied a speedy trial because five days elapsed between his arrest and his arraignment before a magistrate. There is nothing in the record showing the facts stated. No such claim was made in the trial court. The complaint cannot be made for the first time on appeal. People v. McCrasky, 149 Cal.App.2d 630, 637, 309 P.2d 115.

[4] Third, defendant claims he was not legally identified because he was "pointed out" to the only witness on whose testimony the implied finding of identity was based. The point is wholly without merit. Miss Kowalski testified positively that defendant was the person who presented the deposit slip and check to her and who received the money.

[5] Fourth, defendant asserts the court erred in preventing him from questioning a witness. Defendant was represented by counsel throughout the trial. At one point, while his counsel was examining a witness, he personally directed a remark to the witness. He was silenced and his remarks stricken. Obviously, there was no error.

[6] Fifth, defendant claims the court erred in refusing evidence with respect to other checks. The investigating officer was on the stand. On cross-examination he was asked, "Did you make any investigation of some other checks that were signed with the name of R. Smith?" The People's objection was sustained. The ruling was correct. The question was outside the scope of the direct examination, no offer of proof was made, and the purpose of the evidence sought to be elicited was not disclosed.

[7] Sixth, defendant contends he was prejudiced by the conduct of his own counsel in that: he failed to subpoena a key witness; he failed to vigorously pursue the issue of identity; he acquiesced in the court's exclusion of evidence as to other checks; and he referred to him (defendant) as an "ex-convict" in his remarks to the jury. Defendant was represented by a deputy public defender. On cross-examination defendant testified he had been convicted of forgery in 1953 and was still on probation for that offense. Defendant did not in the trial court raise any question with respect to the conduct of his counsel. The point may not be raised for the first time on review. People v. Youders, 96 Cal. App.2d 562, 569, 215 P.2d 743. We have examined the record and find no basis whatever for defendant's complaint. The deputy public defender defended him conscientiously, vigorously, ably, and adequately. Defendant was accorded a fair and impartial trial and the evidence amply sustains the verdict.

[8] In his brief defendant appeals from an order revoking his probation in the case in which he was convicted of forgery in 1953. Defendant's conviction in the case at bar warranted revocation of the order granting probation in the 1953 case. People v. Robinson, 43 Cal.2d 143, 146, 271 P.2d 872; People v. Karman, 145 Cal. App.2d 806, 303 P.2d 74.

Marilyn R. POE, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 6269.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.
Oct. 24, 1958.

Defendant has filed in this court what he calls "Amendment To Appeal." As we understand it, in this document he claims that if the violation of probation in the 1953 case constitutes the prior felony conviction he was wrongfully convicted on the basis of a prior felony inasmuch as the violation was antecedent to and based on the present case; but if his being on probation justified his being sentenced with a prior conviction, he was illegally sentenced in the 1953 case inasmuch as he had been already sentenced therefor. The contention is specious. In the present case defendant was charged in the information with having been convicted of forgery, a felony, in 1953. He admitted the charge. He was placed on probation in the 1953 case. He stood convicted of a felony at the time he was placed on probation. Assuming his probation in the 1953 case was revoked solely on the basis of his conviction in the present case, the court acted entirely within its discretion in sentencing him to state prison in the 1953 case. People v. Robinson, 43 Cal.2d 143, 146, 271 P.2d 872; People v. McClean, 130 Cal.App. 2d 439, 445, 279 P.2d 87.

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Mark Brandler, J., for unlawful possession of heroin, and she appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that evidence would sustain finding that narcotics found in motel had been in joint possession of defendant and man with whom she shared occupancy of motel.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇨260(11)

It is not function of reviewing court to pass on weight of evidence, and finding by trial court will not be disturbed on review if there is substantial evidence to sustain it.

2. Poisons ⇨9

In prosecution for unlawful possession of heroin, evidence would sustain finding that narcotics found in motel had been in joint possession of defendant and man with whom she shared occupancy of motel.

[9] As we said, defendant appealed from the "judgment and sentence." The judgment in a criminal action is the sentence. People v. Tokich, 128 Cal.App.2d 515, 519, 275 P.2d 816. Affirmance of the judgment carries with it affirmance of the sentence.

VALLÉE, Justice.

By information defendant was charged with possession of heroin. By stipulation the cause was submitted to the court without a jury on the transcript of the preliminary hearing and additional evidence. Defendant was found guilty as charged. She appeals from the judgment and the order denying her motion for a new trial.

About 10:45 p. m. on October 29, 1957 Officer Van Court of the Los Angeles Police Department received a telephone call from an unidentified person who told him defendant and Johnny Patterson were in possession of heroin in unit 4 of the Valley View Motel at 14918 Ventura Boulevard, Los Angeles.

Shortly thereafter Van Court, with Officers Olson and Hill, went to the motel and with the use of a pass key entered unit 4. As they entered, Van Court saw Patterson who was standing in the bathroom throw something into the toilet. Hill retrieved from the toilet a syringe that was nearly full of liquid and an eye dropper with a hypodermic needle attached. Defendant was standing near the bathroom door at the time. Immediately to the left of the bathroom door Van Court found four small gelatin capsules on the top of a dresser. Van Court gave defendant a light accommodation test of her eyes and concluded she was under the influence of narcotics. Defendant and Patterson were placed under arrest. The eye dropper and the capsules contained heroin.

At the police station defendant told Van Court and Hill she could not explain what had happened to her but she had had a "terrific yen" for narcotics over the weekend; she and Patterson had gone together, she had put in $28 and Patterson had put in $22; they scored 2½ grams in the Hollywood area; she had "shot two caps" of it about two hours before the officers entered the motel; she was using about two or four caps a day when she had it; Patterson had bought the narcotics and had given them to her.

Patterson testified: he bought the narcotics; he received no money from defendant; the narcotics were his; defendant had no interest in them; he did not see defendant take a "fix." Defendant testified: she did not use any narcotics on October 29, 1957; she did not have any narcotics at that time; she could not recall whether any physical examination of her person was made at the time of her arrest; she did not tell the officers the matters related above; she did not see Patterson take a "fix" or use a hypodermic kit in the motel. Defendant admitted having given Patterson $28 the day before but said she owed it to him, that it was not for narcotics; the capsules were right on top of the dresser; she did not know they were there; Patterson had a kit; she did not see his kit.

The conversation the police officers had with defendant was tape recorded. The tape was played to the court and introduced in evidence.

Defendant's only point is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the implied finding of joint possession. No inquiry was made as to the identity of the informer. No question was or is raised with respect to the legality of the search and seizure.

[1,2] It is not our function to pass on the weight of the evidence. A finding by a trial court of constructive joint possession of narcotics will not be disturbed on review if there is substantial evidence to sustain the finding. The heroin was found in premises jointly occupied by defendant and Patterson. Patterson threw the syringe and hypodermic needle into the toilet. Defendant was standing nearby. The four capsules were found on the dresser. There was evidence that defendant was under the influence of narcotics when the officers entered the motel. Defendant in effect admitted to the officers that she was in possession of the narcotics. It is a reasonable inference that defendant and Patterson were closely associated in the unlawful possession. We are of the opinion the evidence sustains the implied finding of the trial court that defendant knew of the presence of the narcotics in the motel or had the right to exercise dominion and control over them and was therefore in joint possession of them. The evidence sustains the finding of guilt. People v. MacArthur, 126 Cal.App.2d 232, 271 P.2d 914, and cases there cited.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

Appellant.

Cr. 3517.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 21, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 20, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of grand theft. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Walter Carpeneti, J., entered judgment, and the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that instruction on intoxication was erroneous for failure to include statutory provision that where existence of intent is a necessary element of the crime, jury, in determining the intent with which defendant acted, may consider fact that defendant was intoxicated at the time, but that such error was not prejudicial error, where there was a lack of substantial evidence that defendant was intoxicated to the extent of not being able to form an intent to steal.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Larceny ⚡3(1)

To complete the crime of grand theft, intent to steal or take property is necessary in addition to the actual stealing or taking. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 484, 486, 487, subd. 2.

4. Criminal Law ⚡774

In a case requiring proof of specific intent, instruction embodying first sentence of statute providing that no act committed by a person while in a state of voluntary intoxication is less criminal by reason of his having been in such condition, must include second sentence providing that where existence of intent is a necessary element of the crime, jury, in determining intent with which defendant acted, may consider fact that he was intoxicated at the time, and the giving of only the first sentence of the statute without giving the second sentence is error. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 22.

5. Criminal Law ⚡774

BRAY, Justice.

Defendant appeals from judgment of conviction of grand theft after jury trial. He admits the sufficiency of the evidence but contends the court erred (1) in giving instruction on unconsciousness; (2) in omitting "intent" from an instruction on intoxication.

Evidence.

Shortly before noon Fred Clapp was sitting at the bar of the Big Horn Bar drinking a cup of coffee. He occasionally did banking for the proprietor and on this occasion the proprietor had just given him $175 in currency, a check and a bank book. Clapp had placed all three in the left breast pocket of a heavy outer shirt (mackinaw type) he was wearing. Defendant entered the tavern and obtained a bottle of beer. Louis Hanga sat down at the bar next to defendant and started to write down an address. Defendant was "kind of half laying on the bar, and kind of reaching over on my arm." Defendant touched Hanga's arms and shoulders. Police Officer Farnlacher, who was off duty and had come into the tavern to cash a check, observed defendant place his hands on Hanga's thigh. Hanga told defendant to move away. Defendant then sat on a stool next to Clapp and asked the latter "What is the matter? * * * Why don't you like me" and when Clapp said "Don't bother me" defendant said "Just because I am Mexican, is that it?" Defendant tried to hold a conversation with Clapp but the latter made no reply but continued drinking his coffee. Defendant touched the left upper part of Clapp's breast and shoulder—"it was so quick I never paid much attention to it." Officer Farnlacher had noticed the bulge in Clapp's shirt pocket and could see the bank book and part of the money. Farnlacher saw defendant press against Clapp with his left hand and then saw just the tip of defendant's right hand go into Clapp's left breast pocket and then into defendant's right hand pocket. Defendant then left the tavern. Ascertaining from Clapp that the money and bank book were gone, Farnlacher followed by Clapp left the tavern and saw defendant walking rapidly down the street. The officer then saw defendant put his right hand in his right coat pocket and "place something which had a green color in his left hand and put it in his left-hand pocket." Farnlacher ran up and caught defendant, showed him his star, informed him that he was an officer and that he was placing him under arrest. As Farnlacher attempted to handcuff defendant's left hand, defendant spun around, put his left hand in his left pocket and threw some of the money to the ground. One or two bills clung to the flap of his pocket. Apparently the check was thrown out at the same time. It and enough bills with those in the pocket to total $175 were picked up. Defendant said "What the hell are you trying to do, frame me?" On the arrival of the patrol wagon a search of defendant revealed the bank book in defendant's right coat pocket.

As defendant's defense was intoxication to the point of not being able to form an intent to steal, we will now detail the evidence on that issue.

Defendant testified that he had been going from bar to bar drinking tequila all night. He started drinking again early in the morning of the theft. He had a detailed memory of the bars he had visited, the taxis he rode in, and whom he was with until a scuffle or fight which he claims took place the morning of the theft on the sidewalk near the Big Horn Bar. All is then a blank until he found himself in a jail cell. That morning two friends of his had given him a ride and let him off at a certain street corner. He then walked to 16th and South Van Ness. He said "I went to see a fellow I know. We talked in the street." He had a scuffle with this man. Later he said that it was "just somebody I met on the street." When asked if he had ever seen the man before he said "Well, yes and no." When asked "* * * is it 'yes' or is it 'no'" he replied "Well, it could be 'no' * * *" He did not know whether the man was drunk or sober. The two of them just stopped on the street and started talking. He did not remember the conversation but there was a fight or scuffle. First he said he did not know whether he hit the other man, then he said he did not. Defendant remembers lying on the sidewalk, getting up bleeding, "full of blood," and walking away. That is the last he remembers. Defendant alluded to the fact that there was blood on his shirt and suit when he was at the jail. He was vague about the number of drinks of tequila he had, and said that ordinarily he did not drink beer.

Farnlacher testified that prior to the arrest he did not observe blood on defendant or his clothing. However, defendant resisted arrest and with only one cuff on him, Farnlacher had to throw defendant to the sidewalk in order to subdue him. When defendant arose Farnlacher noticed fresh blood on his chin and on his blouse or coat. Farnlacher talked to defendant at the police station. He appeared to understand the questions he was asked and the witness was able to understand him. At that time he said as he had at the time of his arrest, "What are you trying to pin on me?" and "I didn't do it." Farnlacher testified that at the time of arrest he could smell alcohol on defendant's breath and that "there was a certain slurring as to his speech" in talking to the officer. Later at defendant's cell defendant spoke without the slur. The witness would not say that defendant was intoxicated. "I would say that he had been drinking, but not to the extent of intoxication." When the witness ran after defendant, the latter did not stagger at all but walked straight "about the fastest you could walk without breaking into a run." Clapp testified that he smelled beer on defendant's breath and that when defendant came into the tavern he "kind of staggered * * I couldn't say he was drunk, but he kind of was leaning on the bar. I couldn't say he was drunk. That I don't know, but I know he was drinking beer." All defendant drank in the Big Horn Bar was half a bottle of beer.

[1] Grand theft, insofar as is pertinent here, is the felonious stealing or taking of the personal property of another from his person. Pen.Code §§ 484, 486, 487(2). To complete the crime, the intent to steal or take the property is necessary in addition to the actual stealing or taking (People v. Corenevsky, 124 Cal.App.2d 19, 23, 267 P.2d 1048) and the court so instructed.

1. Unconsciousness.

[2, 3] Defendant's position on these instructions is not clear. He apparently mentions them as not curing his claim of error in the intoxication instruction. However, he states without specification of any kind that he does not concede that they should have been given nor their correctness. They embodied the substance of section 26, subdivision 5, Penal Code, and were fully correct. They did not contain and are not required to contain the second sentence of section 22, Penal Code, hereafter discussed. It was so held in People v. Baker, 1954, 42 Cal.2d 550, 575, 268 P.2d 705; People v. Anderson, 1948, 87 Cal.App.2d 857, 860, 197 P.2d 839, and People v. McNichol, 1950, 100 Cal.App.2d 554, 557, 224 P.2d 21. The instruction contained a phrase to the effect that the rule of law on unconsciousness does not apply in a case in which the mental state of the person in question is due to voluntary intoxication resulting from the use of intoxicating liquor. While this statement is a proper one to be used in an instruction on unconsciousness occurring other than from the voluntary use of drugs and intoxicating liquor, here it may have aggravated the failure of the court to instruct upon the question of intent as related to voluntary intoxication from the use of liquor. It is questionable whether the instruction should have been given as defendant at no time claimed that his actions were due to unconsciousness resulting from the blows he claims to have received. His defense was that by reason of intoxication he was unable to form the required intent. As held in the above cases, where intoxication is involved, even if it leads to unconsciousness or a temporary interference with the mental facilities, the situation is governed by section 22 and not by section 26, subdivision 5, dealing with unconsciousness from other causes. In any event, as they were correct instructions on the subject, there was no prejudice in giving them.

2. Intoxication.

The court gave Caljic No. 78-B which is an extensive instruction on intoxication intended, however, to be used where the crime charged does not require specific intent. It included the first sentence of section 22: "No act committed by a person while in a state of voluntary intoxication is less criminal by reason of his having been in such condition." It stated that intoxication was not a defense but "It may throw light on the occurrence and aid you in determining what took place." It did not include the second sentence to the effect that where the existence of intent is a necessary element of the crime the jury in determining the intent with which a defendant acted "may take into consideration the fact that the accused was intoxicated at the time * * *

[4-6] It has repeatedly been held in a case requiring proof of specific intent that an instruction embodying the substance of section 22, Penal Code, must be given and that to give only the first sentence of that section without giving the second sentence is error. People v. Coyne, 92 Cal. App.2d 413, 415, 206 P.2d 1099; People v. Romo, 24 Cal.App.2d 119, 121-122, 74 P.2d 306. If the defendant, as here, offers no instruction upon the subject it is the court's duty to give it of its own motion. People v. Baker, supra, 42 Cal.2d 550, 576, 268 P.2d 705; People v. Sanchez, 35 Cal. 2d 522, 528, 219 P.2d 9. It is true that the evidence of intoxication, including defendant's own testimony on the subject, was quite weak. As hereafter pointed out, there was no substantial evidence to support defendant's claim that he was intoxicated to the extent of not being able to form an intent to steal. It is very doubtful that it would have been error for the trial court to have refused to instruct on intoxication at all. However, as said in People v. Coyne, supra, 92 Cal.App.2d 413, 417, 206 P.2d 1099, the trial judge evidently felt that the evidence was sufficient to require an instruction on intoxication because he gave one. He should have given a proper one. The serious question is whether the giving of such a palpably erroneous instruction was prejudicial. In turn, this depends upon the question of whether there is any substantial evidence upon which the jury could have found that defendant was intoxicated to the extent of being unable to form an intent to steal. Certainly the evidence of the prosecution witnesses would not have supported such a finding. At most their evidence was that defendant appeared to have been drinking, that at one time he staggered, and that at first his talk was slurred. Defendant's testimony, considered alone, might have supported such a finding, although it was quite fantastic. But balancing his acts against his testimony that he did not know what he was doing, eliminates any support for such a finding. His actions in the bar, running his hands over Hanga, his skill in taking the contents of Clapp's pocket without him knowing it, are typical of intentional pickpocketing and are entirely inconsistent with his being so drunk that he did not know what he was doing. Additionally his leaving the tavern immediately upon robbing Clapp, his lack of staggering in his fast attempt to get away, his changing the money from the pocket of his coat which was nearest to Clapp when they both were at the bar to a pocket on the opposite side, his statement to the officer that the latter was trying to frame him and "I didn't do it" are likewise completely irreconcilable with his claim that he did not know what he was doing. Either with or without an instruction containing the second sentence of section 22, it is inconceivable that under the facts of this case a jury would have found that defendant did not have an intent to steal and would not have convicted defendant.

Actions of a defendant may completely refute his testimony as to his inability to form an intent to do the thing which he did. In People v. Keeling, 152 Cal.App.2d 4, 12, 312 P.2d 407, 412, we said, in a homicide case, "Defendant's actions before, during and after the killing completely refute his own statement that he 'blacked out.'" In People v. Clifton, 186 Cal. 143, 198 P. 1065 (homicide), the defendant claimed to have been intoxicated to such an extent as to be unable to understand the questions asked him by the police when first arrested. The trial court had refused to give the defendant's instruction to the effect that the jury could disregard the defendant's answers if it found that the defendant was so intoxicated as not to be able to understand the questions. The reviewing court upheld the refusal to so instruct, stating that "In view of the character of the answers given it is difficult to imagine that defendant did not fully understand both questions and answers" (186 Cal. at page 150, 198 P. at page 1068) and that every witness who testified regarding the matter testified that although the defendant was somewhat under the influence of liquor, the defendant apparently sufficiently understood and intelligently answered the questions. In People v. Coston, 82 Cal.App.2d 23, 185 P.2d 632 (homicide), the trial court gave an erroneous instruction to the effect that forgetfulness may not be an element of unconsciousness. In holding that there was no prejudice in the error, this court stated (82 Cal.App.2d at page 40, 185 P.2d at page 641): "There must be something more than his [the defendant's] mere statement that he does not remember what happened to justify a finding that he was unconscious at the time of that act. Here the only purported evidence of unconsciousness was the defendant's own statement * * * There was no evidence upon which the jury would have been justified in finding that defendant did not know what he was doing at the time of the shooting." So, in our case, the only purported evidence of impossibility to form an intent to steal, was defendant's own statement that he did not know what happened. In view of his acts and the testimony of the other witnesses, it is inconceivable that had the jury been properly instructed on intoxication, the jury could have come to any conclusion other than one of guilt.

In the cases cited by defendant such as People v. Sanchez, supra, 35 Cal.2d 522, 219 P.2d 9; People v. Baker, supra, 42 Cal. 2d 550, 575, 268 P.2d 705; People v. Coyne, supra, 92 Cal.App.2d 413, 414, 206 P.2d 1099, and People v. Romo, supra, 24 Cal. App.2d 119, 74 P.2d 306, the reviewing court, in holding the failure to give proper instructions on intoxication prejudicial, expressly stated that there was substantial evidence of intoxication. Thus in the Sanchez case the court said that "the evidence of intoxication, if believed, would have presented a rational explanation for his [the defendant's] failure to deny the evidence against him." 35 Cal.2d at page 531, 219 P.2d at page 14. In the Baker case the court said that there was "ample evidence of voluntary intoxication." 42 Cal.2d at page 575, 268 P.2d at page 720. The Coyne case set forth the testimony of eyewitnesses to the shooting concerning the defendant's intoxication. In the Romo case, the court stated that the evidence was conflicting and would have supported "either conclusion which might have been reached by the jury upon the question as to whether or not the appellant was so intoxicated at the time as * * * not to have understood what was being done." 24 Cal.App.2d at page 121, 74 P.2d at page 307. As said in People v. Baker, 42 Cal.2d 550, 268 P.2d 705, and cases there cited, "'* * * The circumstances of the case must determine whether the failure to instruct the jury constitutes prejudicial error.'" 42 Cal.2d at page 576, 268 P.2d at page 721. The lack of substantial evidence that defendant was intoxicated to the extent of not being able to form an intent to steal distinguishes our case from those cited by defendant.

The judgment is affirmed.

Hearing Denied Dec. 10, 1958.

Action by foreign beneficiaries of trust established by will against trustee to set aside decree of distribution or in alternative to impress trust on property distributed by that decree. The Superior Court, Glenn County, Curtiss E. Wetter, J., refused to set aside decree of distribution and beneficiaries appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that where will of decedent, who died in 1941, provided that residue of estate should go to certain beneficiaries in trust unless they were residents of country engaged in war with United States of America, and that residue should go to trustee after 10 years if conditions remained so that no portion of trust could be distributed, and named beneficiaries were residents of Germany during World War II, Germany could no longer be said to be engaged in war with United States after practical cessation of hostilities on or about May 8, 1945, so that conditions which could divest interest of German beneficiaries and vest those interests in trustee under will ceased to exist within 10-year period.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment refusing to set aside a decree of distribution, or, in the alternative, to impress a trust on property distributed to respondent pursuant to the decree.

John Bellman died testate on August 8, 1941. By his will, executed on April 13, 1939, he left the residue of his estate in trust for certain collateral relatives living in Germany. He nominated respondent John H. Bradshaw to be the executor of his will and he also named him as trustee of the trust therein created. Bradshaw was granted letters testamentary. The estate remained in probate until April 17, 1953. In the meantime, decrees of partial distribution had distributed all but the residue. On April 17, 1953, the residue of the estate was ordered distributed to Bradshaw individually. The court determined that pursuant to certain conditions expressed in the trust provisions the interest of all the beneficiaries had ceased.

After making various specific bequests, Bellman provided in the Fifth Paragraph of his will as follows:

"All of the rest, residue and remainder of my property wherever the same may be situate, I give, devise and bequeath to Johnie Herman Bradshaw, in trust and as trustee, subject to the following terms and conditions:

"It is my will that the said remainder of my estate is to be divided as follows:

"To my nephew, Fritz Toedter, who resides in Wesseloh, Schneverdingen, Hanover, Germany, the sum of Four Thousand Dollars ($4,000.00);

"To my sister, Mary Behrens, who resides in Fintel, Hanover, Germany, the sum of Four Thousand Dollars ($4,000.00);

"The residue of my estate shall be divided equally among the following nephews and nieces, to-wit, Otto Bell-man, Herman Behrens, Marie Mimi Behrens Heine, Wilhelm Toedter, Christopher Toedter, and to the living children of my niece, Dora, whose last name I do not now recall, but who is a daughter of my brother, Christopher Bellman and the half-sister of my nephew, Otto Bellman, share and share alike."

Ernest J. Hill and Orville C. Pratt, IV, San Francisco, for appellants.

By the Ninth Paragraph of his will Bellman declared as follows:

"During the existence of the trusts herein created, I direct my said trustee to pay to each of said beneficiaries either a monthly, quarterly or annual payment from the corpus, interest, accumulations or accretions thereof, which said sum shall be in the discretion of my said trustee, provided further, that in the event a beneficiary resides in any country engaged in a war with the United States of America, or in a country in which diplomatic relations between the United States of America and said country have been suspended or severed, that my said trustee shall retain and hold the portion of the trust to which said beneficiary is entitled so long as said beneficiary remains a resident of the country engaged in a war with the United States of America, or in which diplomatic relations between the United States of America and said country have been suspended or severed. In the event my said trustee retains and holds any portion of any trust herein created by reason of the conditions above referred to, and said condition or conditions remain for a period of ten (10) years after my death, I direct my trustee to deliver any part or portion of said trusts, so held and retained for ten (10) years from and after my death, to the other beneficiaries not affected by said condition or conditions. In the event that no part or portion of said trusts can be distributed by reason of the aforesaid condition or conditions to any of said beneficiaries, then said trusts, or any part or portion thereof, shall be distributed to Johnie Herman Bradshaw at the termination of ten (10) years from my death."

The decree of distribution was made pursuant to petition of Bradshaw, wherein he made the following allegations: Under the terms of the will of Bellman the residue of the estate was given to petitioner in trust for the purpose of distributing the same to certain beneficiaries therein named and in the manner therein provided. All of the beneficiaries therein named were residents and nationals of the country of Germany. Within a period of less than six months after the death of the above named decedent and before any distribution could be made to any of the said beneficiaries under said trust, the United States of America and the country of Germany became engaged in a war and severed diplomatic relations. The state of war did not finally cease and terminate and diplomatic relations were not resumed between the said countries until more than ten years had elapsed from and after the death of said decedent. By reason of said war and severance of diplomatic relations petitioner had been unable to deliver any part or portion of the residue of said estate to the beneficiaries of said testamentary trust within the ten-year period from and after the death of said decedent. Under the last will and testament of decedent petitioner was entitled to have said residue of said estate distributed to himself free of any trust.

The probate court found in the decree of distribution that by reason of the state of war and the severance of diplomatic relations the trustee had been unable to deliver any portion of the residue of the estate to the beneficiaries of said testamentary trust within the ten-year period from and after the death of Bellman, and concluded that under the terms of the will Bradshaw was entitled to the whole of the residue. The probate court thereupon decreed that the said residue of the estate be so distributed to Bradshaw as sole distributee.

In this action the trial court made the following findings of fact: That at all times during the probate proceedings and up to and including the making of the decree of distribution Bradshaw had known the address of Fritz Toedter in Germany, but that he did not know the address of any of the other beneficiaries; that Bradshaw had not fraudulently or otherwise concealed from the beneficiaries, or any of them, or from the court any facts or matters concerning the estate of Bellman, and that Bradshaw had not made any fraudulent representations to the beneficiaries or to the court; that the beneficiaries had not relied upon Bradshaw to fulfill his obligations as executor and trustee and to deliver to them any part or portion of the trust estate; that the beneficiaries had not been in any wise damaged by the entry of the decree of distribution; that the reason no distribution had been made to Bradshaw as trustee during probate was because doing so would have resulted in an order by the federal alien property custodian vesting the title to all the trust property in the United States; that Bradshaw had not failed to give notice to the beneficiaries of the petition for distribution which he had filed (the evidence shows without conflict that the only notice given was the ten-day statutory notice by posting); that Bradshaw had not intended to prevent the appearance of the beneficiaries when his petition was heard; that Bradshaw had not concealed from the court any matter of notice to the beneficiaries of the hearing of that petition, and that he had not caused the court to act upon his petition without opportunity accorded to the beneficiaries to be heard thereon; that it was untrue that the beneficiaries had been unaware of the petition filed by Bradshaw or of the proceedings taken relative thereto (there is no evidence that they in fact knew of the distribution proceeding); that Bradshaw had not prevented or deterred the beneficiaries from appearing or from being heard at any stage of the proceedings in the matter of the estate; that none of the beneficiaries had been damaged by any act or omission of Bradshaw; that they had not been lulled into any sense of security by any act or omission of Bradshaw; that the beneficiaries had never filed any request for special notice of estate proceedings; that any loss or detriment which they or any of them may have sustained was the result of their inattention to their interests and not the result of any act or omission of Bradshaw; that the beneficiaries and each of them, for some years before the final distribution decree was made, had actual knowledge of the pendency of the probate proceedings; that during the months of July and September, 1950, Bradshaw had caused the beneficiaries to be notified of the provisions of Sections 259 and 259.1 of the Probate Code, and caused them to be advised that it was necessary and desirable that they be represented by a local California attorney in the final distribution of the estate, and that by reason of the aforesaid matters the beneficiaries were now estopped to assert that they were not present or heard in said matter by reason of any act or omission of Bradshaw or that they, or any of them, had suffered any loss or detriment by reason of any such act or omission; that on or about the 22d day of August, 1951, which date it may be noted, is more than ten years after the death of Bellman, a firm of attorneys in New York had caused an attorney practicing in the County of Glenn to inquire into the status of the estate of said decedent and that the attorney had done so and had rendered an opinion to said New York attorneys in that regard; that the decree of distribution had been made and entered on April 17, 1953, and had become final and was binding and conclusive as to the rights of the parties to this action in and to the residue of the estate distributed by the decree; that at all times during the probate of the estate the alien property custodian for the United States of America declared to Bradshaw's attorneys of record in said estate that, if he attempted to distribute any part of the residue of the estate of Bellman to the beneficiaries or any of them, or to any trustee for them, the custodian would forthwith issue a vesting order declaring such property vested in the United States. As conclusions of law from the foregoing findings, the court concluded the decree of distribution was final, binding and conclusive of the rights of the parties to this action; that the beneficiaries were entitled to take nothing by this action from Bradshaw and that Bradshaw was entitled to judgment against them for his costs. Judgment to that effect was thereafter entered and this appeal followed.

[1] It is necessary to construe the Bellman will and under this record this court is not bound by the construction placed thereon by the trial court but is to construe it as a matter of law. As stated in Re Estate of Platt, 21 Cal.2d 343, 352, 131 P.2d 825, 830;

"An appellate court is not bound by a construction of the contract based solely upon the terms of the written instrument without the aid of evidence * * * Under these circumstances, there is no issue of fact, and it is the duty of an appellate court to make the final determination in accordance with the applicable principles of law."

By the testator's will the residue of his estate was bequeathed in trust to Bradshaw for the benefit of his relatives residing in Germany. Their interests vested on his death. Under certain conditions set forth in the will the interests of any one or more of them might be divested and pass to the others, or the interests of all might be divested. If that occurred then and only then the trustee could claim and hold the property as his own. The retention provisions imposed by the testator upon the action of the trustee with respect to distribution of the trust res indicate that the testator contemplated only the normal period of probate during which period the trustee could not, of course, distribute something he had not yet received. When the trustee received the trust property he was by the terms of the will under a duty to begin distribution. The time and amount of partial distributions were left to his absolute discretion. Nevertheless, it was his duty to distribute. He had no other duty with respect to the trust res except its safekeeping. But when he received it and was able to distribute, the will commanded that he retain and make no distribution of the interest of any beneficiary residing in the proscribed territory. However, the retention provisions expired ten years after the testator's death, at which time the trustee was to distribute to anyone entitled to take, that is, anyone not affected by the retention provisions. If there were none such, then all interest of any beneficiary whose share had been so retained ceased and the trustee owned the same free from the trust.

[2,3] Turning now to the retention provisions we find there were two. The distributive share of any beneficiary was to be retained if he was residing in a country "engaged in a war with the United States of America." Likewise, there should be retained the share of any beneficiary residing in a country not maintaining diplomatic relations with the United States. While the trial court found that at all times during the ten years after the testator's death all of the German relatives of the testator had been residing in a country engaged in war with the United States and that the same country also, during the same period, was not maintaining diplomatic relations with the United States, these findings cannot stand against historical fact of which this court takes judicial notice. It is a historical fact that diplomatic relations were resumed between Germany and the United States on July 2, 1951, when the first German diplomat was accredited to the United States. This condition for retention therefore ceased within the ten-year period following the testator's death. As to the retention condition concerning residents in a county "engaged in a war" with the United States, we think the reasonable interpretation of that language is that the described period ended with the practical cessation of hostilities. It is historical fact that about May 8, 1945, or shortly thereafter, the German armies surrendered and Germany was wholly occupied by the allied forces. Germany could no longer be said to be "engaged in a war" with the United States. The very word "engaged" connotes action. Thus Webster's International Dictionary defines the word "engaged" as a state of being involved, "especially, involved in a hostile encounter; as, the engaged ships continued the fight." We hold that within the common and reasonable meaning of the phrase "engaged in a war", Germany, after the surrender of her armies and the occupation of her territory by the allied forces, was no longer engaged in war with the United States. The result of the foregoing is that the conditions which could divest the interest of the German beneficiaries and vest those interests in Bradshaw ceased to exist within the ten-year period after the testator's death. See Peters v. McKay, 195 Or. 412, 413, 238 P.2d 225, 246 P.2d 585; Kaiser v. Hopkins, 6 Cal.2d 537, 539, 58 P.2d 1278; Hoover v. Sandifur, 27 Wash.2d 791, 171 P.2d 1009, 168 A.L.R. 170.

The situation respecting the alien property custodian and his power to vest and his threats to vest the interests of the German nationals, which situation is heavily stressed in respondent's brief, has nothing to do with the question of title. The existence of a power to vest was not mentioned in the will. It may have been good judgment on the part of Bradshaw to keep the estate proceedings open, as he did, for approximately 12 years, but he could only obtain title to the property as to which he was trustee under the conditions specified in the testator's will.

[4-8] When Bradshaw, as executor, filed his petition for distribution and therein for the first time made a claim that he owned individually and was entitled to distribution of the trust res, he was bound to act in respect to the beneficiaries of the trust by those rules which govern the action of trustees. One who is a trustee cannot purchase or deal with the subject of the trust nor place himself in an attitude antagonistic to the trust. It is against public policy to permit persons occupying fiduciary relations to be placed in such a position that the influence of selfish motives may be a temptation so great as to overpower their duty and lead to a betrayal of their trust. This rule is unyielding and a trustee may not, under any circumstances, be allowed to have any dealings in the trust property with himself or acquire any interest therein. Courts will not permit an investigation into the fairness or unfairness of such a transaction or allow the trustee to show that the dealing was for the best interest of the beneficiaries. It is a trustee's duty in all things to first consider and always to act for the best interests of the trust. In re Estate of Howard, 133 Cal.App.2d 535, 540-541, 284 P.2d 966. Much more might be said concerning the strict supervision of trustees by courts, but the underlying policy is so well known that extended citation of authorities is unnecessary. The findings of the court that the German nationals did not rely upon the good faith of their trustee are of no avail to respondent. Under the law they had a right to so rely and in the absence of direct evidence that they knew that he had turned against them it must be assumed that they did so rely. There is no such evidence in this record. Unavailing also to respondent are the court's findings as to communications to the German nationals respecting their rights to inherit under the sections of the Probate Code referred to, for their right to inherit was a matter entirely apart from Bradshaw's claims that their inheritances had been divested by the conditions in the will. Neither does it avail respondent that they consulted attorneys concerning the status of their interest and may have been informed, or, as we hold, misinformed by those attorneys as to that status. The plain fact is that respondent was a trustee for their benefit at all times with which we are here concerned, that he gave them no warning that he intended to take their property as his own through the medium of a court decree, and that he gave them no actual notice of his attack upon them. By such conduct he violated his plain duties as trustee. The posted notice that was given was that of the executor. The decree followed in the space of ten days. It does not aid respondent to argue, as he does and as the court found, that the German nationals could have demanded, but did not demand, special notice. Their failure to do so lessened not at all respondent's duty as trustee. Under the circumstances existing and as soon as respondent determined to take for himself the trust res it was his duty to surrender up his trusteeship upon notice to the beneficiaries according to them ample opportunity to seek a successor or other representation and then to present his claims to a court of competent jurisdiction in an adversary proceeding.

It does not help respondent that the trial court here found that he had not misrepresented anything to the probate court or that that court (since it had the will before it) knew of the pertinent provisions with respect to the trust estate and the title to it. The vice of his conduct is that he succeeded in obtaining a judgment upon which he now relies through a proceeding had in the absence of those whose interest he was attacking and under conditions whereby he knew that they would not be represented, as in fact they were not. It makes no difference that the court found that he acted in good faith. Under such circumstances he must be held to have acted in bad faith. The situation is comparable to that where a trustee deals with the property of his trust. In such situations it is to be said as the court said in Pacific Vinegar & Pickle Works v. Smith, 145 Cal. 352, 365, 78 P. 550, 554:

"* * * The great purpose of the law is to secure fidelity in the agent. When one undertakes to deal with himself in different capacities—individual and representative—there is a manifest hostility in the position he occupies. His duty calls upon him to act for the best interests of his principal. His self-interest prompts him to make the best bargain for himself. Humanity is so constituted that, when these conflicting interests arise, the temptation is usually too great to be overcome, and duty is sacrificed to interest. In order that this temptation may be avoided, or, if indulged in, must be at the peril of the trustee, it has been wisely provided that the trustee shall not be permitted to make or enforce any contract arising between himself as trustee and individually with reference to any matter of trust, nor will the court enter into any examination of the honesty of the transaction."

There appears to be no good reason why the interests of the appellants cannot be sufficiently secured to them by a reversal of the judgment appealed from with directions to the trial court to enter a judgment declaring that respondent took the property distributed to him under the trusts declared in the testator's will and that he is accountable to them as trustee for that property and the proceeds thereof. It is so ordered.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

In an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County, defendants were charged with the crime of robbery (Penal Code, Section 211), in that they did by means of force and fear take $63 in money from the person of James Long.

Defendants pleaded not guilty, trial by jury was duly waived, and the cause was submitted to the trial court on the transcript of the preliminary examination, each side reserving the right to offer evidence in addition to that contained in the aforesaid transcript. Following a reading of the transcript and presentation of additional testimony, the court adjudged defendants guilty as charged. Motion for a new trial was denied as to each defendant, and they were committed to the Youth Authority of the State of California. From the judgment of conviction and the order denying their motions for a new trial both defendants prosecute this appeal.

Concerning the factual background surrounding this prosecution, the record reflects testimony that on the evening of May 11, 1957, at approximately 10:15 p. m., James Long, proprietor of a service station in the city of Los Angeles, was seated alone in the office of his service station. He had been on duty since 7:30 a. m. that morning but was not "overly tired" or sleepy since it was his usual routine to work these long hours. During this period Long had not used stimulants. Some 15 minutes earlier, at about 10:00 p. m., Long had checked the cash register in the service station office and found that it contained approximately $63, representing part of his business proceeds for that day.

At approximately 10:15 p. m., on the aforesaid night, defendants Rumph and Shamburger appeared at the door of the service station. The area both inside and outside the service station office was well lighted. Long walked to the door and was directly facing the defendants, when Rumph jumped to one side and pushed something hard into Long's side, the latter not actually seeing a gun at this time. Defendant Rumph informed Long that it was a holdup and when Long asked him what he said, defendant Shamburger then exhibited a gun and told Long that this was a "stickup."

Long was pushed over to the cash register, was told to open it, and defendant Rumph then removed the money. After the money had been taken, defendants Rumph and Shamburger ran from the service station and fled on foot, their departure being witnessed by Joseph White, a customer, who arrived just before defendants ran out the door. As the defendants ran out the door, White had a direct view of their faces at a distance of approximately 18 feet for a period of about five seconds.

On June 17, 1957, at approximately 1:14 a. m., Sergeant Gaylord L. Campbell of the South Pasadena Police was stationed in his police car on the Orange Grove ridge above the Pasadena Freeway. He observed a car, which in his estimation was exceeding the 55-mile per hour speed limit on the Pasadena Freeway, proceed along the freeway, up the ramp to the Orange Grove Bridge and skid through the stop sign at the top of the ramp. As the vehicle negotiated a right-hand turn after skidding through the stop sign, Sergeant Campbell turned on his red light and gave chase, honking his horn at the same time. The automobile turned right at the first block south of the freeway and finally stopped after Sergeant Campbell had pulled alongside in his police car. Two of the three occupants of the car were defendants Rumph and Shamburger, and when the driver Rumph was questioned about his manner of driving, he stated that "someone was chasing them." Because of the apparently excessive speed of the car, the fact that it skidded through a stop sign and turned down a residential side street after he gave chase, the lateness of the hour, the apparently unsubstantiated excuse that "someone was chasing" the car, and the fact that defendants were Negroes and the residential street down which they turned was part of an all-Caucasian neighborhood, Sergeant Campbell believed that the occupants of the car might have committed a felony. Because of this belief, he arrested the occupants and subsequently searched the car in which they had been riding, the result of the search being the discovery of a loaded .38 caliber revolver in the glove compartment of the car.

On approximately June 20, 1957, James Long appeared at the Los Angeles Police Department building and there viewed a police lineup of possible suspects consisting of about twenty men, approximately fifteen of whom were Negroes. The defendants Rumph and Shamburger were among those appearing in the lineup, but were separated by five or six men. At this lineup Long was able to positively identify defendants Rumph and Shamburger as the men who robbed him on the night of May 11, 1957.

Some time after the viewing of the lineup and the identification of the defendants by Long, Joseph White also appeared at the Los Angeles Police Department building and there looked over pictures of possible suspects and viewed a police lineup. He was shown a group of pictures and shortly thereafter viewed a police lineup of approximately ten men, consisting of both Negro and Caucasian suspects including defendants Rumph and Shamburger, they being separated by approximately two men in the lineup. At this time White identified, both from the pictures and from the lineup, the defendants Rumph and Shamburger as the men he had seen running from Long's service station on the night of May 11, 1957, and at the time of the robbery.

Both defendants were sworn as witnesses in their own behalf. Defendant Shamburger testified that he was not in Los Angeles at any time during the evening of May 11, 1957. That about 10:30 p. m. on that date (when the robbery occurred), he was at home where he arrived about 10:00 p. m. that night. That when he arrived at his home, his mother, father, brothers, sisters and a friend, Mr. Noulín Hollingsworth were there. Ollie Mae Butler testified that she lives in Pasadena. That she saw defendant Shamburger, on May 11, 1957, the date of the robbery, at the B & C Restaurant about a quarter to 8:00. She further testified that she and Shamburger along with a Mr. Percy Moore, left the B & C Restaurant about 10 minutes after 8:00, and that they walked to Fair Oaks and Colorado where they stood under a canopy while it was raining, and that they walked to Green Street and Shamburger left them at that time; that she came back to her home with Percy Moore; that defendant Shamburger came to her home about a quarter of 9:00 and that Roosevelt Butler "picked Shamburger up" from her house.

Roosevelt Butler testified that he took defendant Shamburger in his automobile from the latter's home between 5:30 and 6:00 p. m. on the evening here in question; that they rode around until about 7:30 p. m. when they let defendant out of the automobile at the home of the witness Ollie Mae Butler. That about 9:45 p. m. he "picked up" defendant Shamburger, drove him to the latter's home, and saw him go through the door into the house. The witness Percy Moore corroborated in general, the testimony of Ollie Mae Butler.

Defendant Shamburger's father testified that the former arrived home on May 11, 1957 at about 10:00 p. m. and did not leave the house at any time during the night.

Testifying in behalf of defendant Rumph, his father stated that the gun found in the car driven by the defendant belonged to his wife and although usually kept locked up in a small box at home was, on the day of defendant Rumph's arrest, missing, the back of the box having been pried off. Defendant Rumph testified that he had broken into his father's locked box and obtained the gun found in the car at the time of his arrest, June 17, 1957, because his life had been threatened on the 16th of June, 1957. Defendant Rumph further stated that one Gordon Holt had threatened to shoot him in connection with some girl, although Rumph had met Holt only two or three times and had not gone with any girl that Holt was interested in. He denied any participation in the robbery of which he was accused.

[1] Appellants' sole contention is that the decision of the court was contrary to law and the evidence in that the latter was legally insufficient to sustain the finding of guilt. Appellants urge that since they were not arrested until more than a month after the alleged robbery, their identification would be rendered difficult. That since the victim had been working from 7:30 a. m. on the date of the crime which occurred around 10:00 p. m., he was tired and, according to the witness White, appeared to be nervous, that "It is quite obvious that the human body cannot take such an assault (the robbery) without the mind being affected so far as the ability to identify is concerned." However, the victim testified that he was not overly tired or sleepy because it was his usual custom to work these long hours.

[2-4] Appellants direct our attention to certain testimony given by the prosecution witnesses indicating some uncertainty as to the type and color of the clothing worn by the robbers, whether they wore hats or caps, or had mustaches or sideburns. All these contentions present factual situations for determination by the duly constituted arbiter of the facts. It has long been the rule, strictly adhered to in this state, that in the exercise of their appellate jurisdiction, the courts of appeal are restricted to the consideration of questions of law alone, and that, therefore, the matter of evidence does not constitute a subject of review by those tribunals, except where there necessarily arises from the evidence or is presented thereby, from its very nature, a question of law, such as where the evidence bears upon its face the brand of improbability, or which may be said to be unbelievable, per se, because it involves a claim that something has been done that it would not seem possible could be done under the circumstances described in the evidence. In such a situation, the issue becomes one of law. The instant case does not present such an issue. While the claimed weakness in the identification testimony of two of the prosecution's witnesses undoubtedly afforded opportunity for a persuasive argument to the trial judge against the reliability of such testimony, we see in them nothing from which a reviewing court could justly conclude that their entire testimony is, per se, unbelievable, and that it was, therefore, the duty of the trial judge not only to disregard it, but to accept appellants' testimony and that of their alibi witnesses, and therefrom conclude that the appellants' guilt had not been disclosed by the evidence to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt. The record reveals that the victim and the witness Joseph White positively identified appellants as the perpetrators of the robbery. Also, as heretofore set forth in the factual narrative of this prosecution, both of the aforesaid witnesses, prior to the trial, positively identified appellants when the witness recognized them in a police "line-up," and Mr. White recognized them in pictures shown him of possible suspects. On appeal, we are not authorized to retry the case or reweigh the evidence. Our function is limited to a determination of whether there is sufficient evidence in the record, contradicted or uncontradicted, to justify the conclusion that a crime was committed and that the accused were the perpetrators thereof. Questions of the weight of evidence, and the credibility of witnesses being for the trial court, it necessarily follows that when the circumstances shown, reasonably justify the finding of guilt, an opposing view that such circumstances may be reconciled with innocence will not warrant interference with the judgment on appeal. As was said in People v. Smith, 35 Cal.App.2d 73, 76, 94 P.2d 633, 634: "* * * it is a matter for the trial judge to be persuaded beyond a reasonable doubt and not this court."

[5] What we have herein stated is equally applicable to appellants' contention that the "alibi" testimony of their witnesses was sufficient to "raise a reasonable doubt whether defendant was present when the crime was committed." The trial judge had the witnesses before him. He was afforded an opportunity to observe their demeanor, candor or lack of candor, as well as the fact that they were all relatives or close friends of appellants and their consequent interest in the outcome of the prosecution. It is manifest that he questioned their veracity to the extent that, in the light of other evidence positively identifying appellants as having committed the crime charged against them, the "alibi" evidence did not create in his mind a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused. Considered in the light of the rule announced in People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681, 682, 104 P.2d 778, a declaration by this court that the adjudication of guilt by the trial judge in the case now engaging our attention is barren of a sufficient foundation to uphold it, would not be justified.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and the order denying defendants' motion for a new trial are, and each is affirmed.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

In a nonjury trial defendant was adjudged guilty of assault with a deadly weapon. She appeals from the judgment and the order denying her motion for a new trial.

[1] Appellant contends that the evidence was insufficient to support the judgment; and that the court abused its discretion in not granting a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence.

On January 15, 1957, about 1 a. m., Miss Blair and Mr. Solorzano were sitting at the bar in a saloon. About ten minutes thereafter, the defendant and Espe Baca (girl friend of defendant) entered the saloon and approached Miss Blair with whom they were acquainted. Baca asked Blair if her friend (Solorzano) would buy a drink for Baca and defendant. Solorzano bought drinks for them, and they sat at the bar.

Blair testified that, after the drinks had been served, she stood up in order to show new pedal-pushers to Baca; when she stood up she left her cocktail glass on the bar; at that time defendant was sitting at the bar, and Blair and Baca were standing near defendant; Blair was about three feet from defendant and she (Blair) did not have anything in her hands; while they were standing there, defendant criticized Blair with respect to her clothes, dyed hair, and moral character; then the defendant hit Blair's face; defendant and Baca ran out a cocktail glass; the glass broke and cut Blair's face; defendant and Baca ran out of the place; Blair was taken to a hospital where doctors sewed the face injury; the doctors also sewed a wound which was in the palm of Blair's hand; she did not know the cause of the cut in her hand.

Mr. Solorzano testified that after the drinks had been ordered, and while he was sitting at the bar and while Blair, Baca, and defendant were standing near him, he heard conversation and he noticed that Blair was looking toward the floor and seemed to be laughing; then he saw defendant, with a cocktail glass in her hand, "lash out" at Blair with her right hand and strike Blair on her left temple; defendant made another grab at Blair, but Solorzano (witness) and the bartender pushed the defendant away.

A police officer testified that he had a conversation with defendant, in the presence of her attorney, at the police station two days after the injury occurred; in that conversation the defendant said: she had known Blair a long time; at the time involved here, Blair kept insisting on buying a drink for defendant, and that defendant had refused; Blair turned toward defendant, with a glass in her hand, and defendant believed that she struck Blair at that time; she and Blair had been "teed off at each other" over an old boy friend; a wound, which was on her hand, was received as a result of the fracas; and she had not made a report to the police.

Defendant testified that she had known Blair about six years; when defendant and Baca were about to leave the saloon, Blair called Baca and offered to buy a drink for Baca and defendant; then defendant and Baca went to the bar, and a man bought drinks for them; the man was an older man than Solorzano; she did not recall seeing Solorzano there; Blair asked defendant why defendant did not like her; defendant replied that she did not want to talk about it; Blair said that she was a lady, but she knew defendant was not a lady; then Blair came at defendant with an uplifted hand; defendant, who had a cocktail glass in her hand, put her hands in front of her to push Blair away, and the glass broke on Blair's face; she did not strike Blair.

Baca's testimony corroborated the testimony of defendant.

The bartender testified that, on a prior occasion, Blair told him that she would cut defendant with a can opener; he told defendant that Blair had made that statement; Blair's reputation in the neighborhood for peace and quiet was that she was belligerent and loud.

The evidence was sufficient to support the judgment.

In support of her motion for a new trial, the defendant presented an affidavit of Gloria Garcia, which recited in substance that she had been acquainted with defendant about five years, and she talked with defendant every few months during that time; she had been acquainted with Blair about a year; she (affiant) was in the saloon at the time of the alleged incident and was in a position to observe the actions of defendant and Blair; affiant's attention was attracted to them by the raised and shrill voice of Blair; defendant was sitting at the bar, and Blair was standing; Blair came at defendant in a threatening manner as if she were going to strike defendant; defendant thrust out her hands to ward off the blow aimed at her; defendant was drinking at the time she was attacked by Blair.

Appellant contends, as above stated, that the court abused its discretion in denying the motion for a new trial. She argues that the newly discovered evidence, as shown by the affidavit, was not merely cumulative; that the affiant was the only witness who had a more or less impartial view of the circumstances; that affiant was not emotionally involved in the events. Appellant argues further that extraordinary diligence was exercised in order to discover new evidence; that counsel for appellant stated, in the trial court, that the new witness came forward after the trial and made the affidavit after much effort on the part of counsel.

[2,3] A motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence is a matter within the discretion of the trial court. People v. Greenwood, 47 Cal.2d 819, 821, 306 P.2d 427. Under the circumstances here the trial court might properly have regarded the alleged newly discovered evidence as cumulative. Defendant's witness Baca gave testimony which corroborated defendant's testimony. Also, the court might properly have found that the defendant, with reasonable diligence, could have discovered and produced the alleged evidence at the trial. At the hearing of the motion for a new trial, counsel for defendant stated that the reason the additional witness did not come forward prior to the trial was that she did not want to become involved in the trial. The affidavit states that the additional witness was in the saloon at the time involved here and she was in a position to observe the actions of defendant and Blair, and she had known defendant about five years and had talked with her every few months during that time. The court might have inferred therefrom that defendant and the additional witness had had conversations on various occasions after the saloon incident and that defendant had had an opportunity to discuss the incident with the witness and to endeavor to produce her as a witness. The court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion for a new trial.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

Mandamus proceeding to compel superior court to entertain appeal from decision of justice court. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that where clerk of justice court demanded $9 filing fee "to go with papers" and party seeking to appeal from decision of justice court sent check, within 30-day period allowed for appeals, drawn to order of superior court clerk instead of justice court clerk, but upon being notified that $9 fee should go to justice court clerk to be forwarded and that additional $1 fee was required by justice court, party sent $10 check to justice court clerk after 30-day period, there was substantial compliance with statute requiring payment of all fees before appeal will be effectual, and timely payment of $1 fee was waived by failure to demand it.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

The sole question raised in this proceeding is whether an appeal from a justice court to the superior court was subject to dismissal for failure to pay the required fees in the manner and within the time prescribed by law.

Petitioner was the defendant in a justice court action in which judgment was awarded in favor of the plaintiff, who is the real party in interest in this proceeding. No notice of rendition of judgment was served or filed, but on October 11, 1956, defendant filed a notice of appeal to the superior court. On November 5, defendant received a letter from the clerk of the justice court which, after reciting that the papers in the case were ready to be sent to the county clerk, stated, "I am waiting for the $9.00 filing fee that has to go with the papers, if you will send a cashiers check made out to the Clerk of the Superior Court, I will send it with the balance of the papers and not send it thru the trust fund." Pursuant to this request, defendant sent a cashier's check for $9 payable to the clerk of the superior court. This check was received by the justice court clerk on November 7 and thereafter forwarded to the superior court.

On November 16, defendant received a letter in which the clerk of the justice court stated that she had been informed by the county auditor that the superior court could not accept the filing fee direct from defendant's attorney and that it would have to be sent through the justice court and deposited in a trust fund and then be transferred to the superior court. The letter further stated that the justice court clerk should have charged a transfer fee of $1 and that if defendant would mail a money order for $10 the clerk would keep $1 for the justice court transfer fee and send the balance to the superior court clerk. Defendant immediately complied with these instructions by forwarding a money order in the amount of $10 payable to the justice court clerk.<sup>1</sup>

On motion of plaintiff the superior court dismissed the appeal, and defendant commenced this proceeding in mandamus to compel the superior court to entertain the appeal.

1. At the time the appeal was taken the superior court was entitled to $9, consisting of a filing fee of $8 (Gov.Code, § 26824) and a law library fee of $1 (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6321), and the justice court was entitled to a transfer fee of $1 (Gov. Code, § 71667).
2. Section 981 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "No appeal taken from a judgment rendered in a justice court in civil matters shall be effectual for any purpose whatever unless the appellant shall, at the time of filing the notice of appeal, pay in addition to the fee payable to the judge of the justice court on appeal, the fees provided by law to be paid to the county clerk for filing the appeal and for placing the action on the calendar in the superior court. Upon

[1] Section 981 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that no such appeal shall be effectual for any purpose unless the appellant, at the time of filing the notice of appeal, pays the fee payable to the judge of the justice court and the fees provided to be paid to the county clerk, and that no notice of appeal shall be filed unless such fees are paid in accordance with the provisions of this section.<sup>2</sup> Under section 974 of the Code of Civil Procedure an appeal in a civil action in a justice court may be taken at any time within 30 days after notice of rendition of judgment.<sup>3</sup> Where, as here, no notice of rendition of judgment is given, it has been held that the giving of notice of appeal is a waiver of an equivalent to notice of rendition of the judgment, that it starts the 30-day period running, and that the appellant has 30 days thereafter in which to perfect his appeal and pay the required fees. Simmons v. Superior Court, 30 Cal.App. 252, 254, 157 P. 817; see Autrand v. Superior Court, 104 Cal.App.2d 480, 481, 231 P.2d 546.

[2] It is not disputed that the $9 check was received by the justice court clerk and sent to the superior court clerk within the 30-day period, but it is claimed that the payment was not effective because the check was drawn to the order of the superior court clerk instead of the justice court clerk. Section 981 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which relates specifically transmitting the papers on appeal, the judge shall transmit to the county clerk the sum thus deposited for filing the appeal in the superior court and for placing the action on the calendar. No notice of appeal shall be filed unless the fees herein provided for are paid in accordance with the provisions of this section."

3. Section 974 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides in part: "Any party dissatisfied with the judgment rendered in a civil action in a justice court, may appeal therefrom to the superior court of the county, at any time within 30 days after notice of the rendition of the judgment. The appeal is taken by filing a notice of appeal with the judge of the justice court, and serving a copy on the adverse party. * * * to appeals from the justice court to the superior court, does not require that such a check be made payable to the justice court, but provides that, upon transmitting the papers on appeal, the judge of the justice court shall transmit to the superior court clerk the sum "deposited for filing the appeal in the superior court." See supra, footnote 2. The county auditor, in advising the justice court clerk that the superior court could not accept payment of the fees on appeal direct from defendant's attorney, was apparently relying on section 24353 of the Government Code which provides in part: "Each officer of a county or judicial district authorized to collect money shall pay into the county treasury at the time required by law, but in any event on or before the fifth day of each month, all money collected by him * * * that is payable into the treasury and file with the county auditor * * * a cash statement * * * of all money handled by him * * * during the preceding month. * * *" Although this section sets forth the manner in which the internal accounting of funds should be made by the various officers of a county or judicial district, an officer's failure to comply with those directions should not deprive a party of his right to appeal, particularly where, as here, the party has followed the instructions of the justice court clerk and there has been a substantial compliance with section 981 in respect to the payment of the fees on appeal.

[3] Plaintiff also claims that payment of the fees was not timely because of defendant's failure to pay the $1 transfer fee to the justice court within the 30-day period. As we have seen, the justice court clerk did not demand this $1 fee originally, and, as a consequence, the payment was not made until after the 30 days had passed. A civil appeal from a justice court is not subject to dismissal for failure of the judge to exact payment of the fee payable to the justice court. Gunn v. Superior Court, 73 Cal.App.2d 564, 566-567, 166 P.2d 906; see Autrand v. Superior Court, 104 Cal. App.2d 480, 481, 231 P.2d 546. In the Gunn case it was held that a reasonable construction of section 981 is that a judge of the justice court is not compelled to transmit to the superior court the record on appeal until all requisite fees are paid to him, but that if he transmits the record, together with all the fees payable to the clerk of the superior court on such appeal, that court acquires jurisdiction even though the judge may have failed to exact the fees payable to his court. 73 Cal.App.2d at page 567, 166 P.2d at page 907. In the present case, timely payment of the $1 transfer fee was waived by failure to demand it.

Let a peremptory writ of mandate issue directing the superior court to entertain the appeal.

SPENCE, Justice.

Defendant was charged with the murder of Douglas Callies and with the furnishing of narcotics to a minor in violation of section 11714 of the Health and Safety Code. He admitted three prior felony convictions. The jury returned verdicts of guilty and found the murder to be second degree. Defendant has appealed, contending: (1) that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the convictions; (2) that he was convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice; (3) that the trial court committed prejudicial error in instructing on the elements of murder, and in failing to give a cautionary instruction relative to the evidence of an oral admission by defendant. We have concluded that defendant's contentions cannot be sustained, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

The alleged offenses occurred in San Francisco. Stanley Hoffman and the deceased, Douglas Callies, had been friends for several years. Both were minors, twenty years old. On the evening of September 27, 1956, Hoffman had planned to take two girls to the theatre. About 5:30 p. m., as Hoffman was leaving his home to pick up the girls, he received a telephone call from Callies. The latter, upon learning of Hoffman's plans, asked if he could go along and Hoffman agreed. Thereupon Hoffman drove to Callies' home, and the two then proceeded to the Fillmore Street area because Callies, who was in the Merchant Marine and had just returned from a cruise, wanted to buy some heroin. Both young men had used heroin in the past, and on several occasions they had used it together.

According to Hoffman, they first saw defendant on Fillmore Street near Golden Gate Avenue. Hoffman stopped his car and defendant got in the back seat. Hoffman had known defendant for several months, had previously purchased heroin from defendant, and had taken the heroin shots in defendant's hotel room on those occasions. Hoffman introduced Callies to defendant, told defendant that Callies wanted to buy some heroin, and defendant stated that he thought he could get some. Callies then gave defendant $50 and defendant left the car. In a few minutes defendant returned, gave Callies $15 in change, said "Everything is all right," and directed Hoffman to drive to a service station.

Hoffman proceeded to a nearby station and drove up to the pumps. Callies stayed with the car and arranged to get some gas, while defendant, carrying the heroin and the "outfit," accompanied Hoffman to the men's room. There they went behind the dividing partition, where defendant prepared the drug by cooking it in a spoon, helped Hoffman put a tourniquet around the latter's arm and held it in place while Hoffman took only a small injection as he was driving the car. Thereupon Hoffman went outside to telephone the girls that he would be late, and then waited in the car. Meanwhile Callies joined defendant in the men's room. In a few minutes, Callies and defendant returned to the car. Callies got into the front seat and sat with his chin on his chest. He acted "like he was almost unconscious," "mumbling a little bit," not "saying too much" but "groaning and moaning." Defendant got into the back seat, and Hoffman drove to defendant's hotel, where defendant remained.

Hoffman then drove to the Ingleside district to pick up the two girls. The girls wanted to sit in the front seat, so Callies, who was in a dazed condition but "able to stand on his feet" though "sort of fumbling around," was moved to the back seat. Hoffman drove to the neighborhood theatre and parked the car. It was about 7:30 p. m. Hoffman asked Callies if he wanted to go to the movie and Callies mumbled "no." Hoffman left Callies in the back seat of the car, rolled down the window, and locked all the doors. He took Callies' wallet and gave it to one of the girls to put in her purse, as he was afraid someone might try to "roll" Callies, thinking that he was drunk.

After staying for the full double feature program, Hoffman and the two girls returned to the car. As they approached the car, Hoffman saw Callies "leaning over toward the window" and thought that he was asleep. Hoffman slapped Callies twice but he did not move. Hoffman then felt Callies' face; it was cold. Hoffman became "scared," and finding that Callies had no pulse, he told the girls that Callies was dead. Hoffman was going to telephone the police, but the girls objected as they wanted to avoid any publicity. One of the girls began to cry, and Hoffman took her home. Thereupon Hoffman and the other girl drove to a churchyard, where Hoffman took Callies' body out of the car and placed it on the ground. Then after taking his companion home, Hoffman returned to his own home, without contacting the police. Hoffman was arrested about 11 a. m. the next day, September 28.

A number of experts testified that Callies died from narcotics poisoning. Heroin is a derivative of morphine, and an amount of morphine sufficient to cause death was found in Callies' body. There was also found an amount of alcohol equivalent to three-and-a-half bottles of beer or shots of whiskey, which was ingested a relatively short time before death. The amount of alcohol, however, was not significant enough to contribute to death. No needle marks were found on the body by the autopsy surgeon, but he indicated that this was not uncommon, for it is very easy to inject material so that the site of the injection would be invisible. The autopsy surgeon estimated that at the time he examined the body, which was at 11 a. m. on September 28, the deceased had been dead over four to six hours but less than two or three days.

Defendant was the sole defense witness. He testified that he had known Hoffman for about three months and had seen him several times. He denied ever selling narcotics to Hoffman or using narcotics with Hoffman, except for the single occasion on September 27 here in question. He stated that Hoffman once asked him to sell narcotics which Hoffman's friend was to bring back from overseas, but that he had refused. He further stated that on one occasion Hoffman had borrowed his "outfit" to use with some other persons at a service station; and that on another occasion Hoffman had come to his hotel to ask for the use of his room to take an injection, but that he had refused because Hoffman had previously had trouble with his landlord.

With respect to the events of September 27, 1956, defendant testified that he had met Hoffman and Callies on the street and that they asked him if they could use his room and "outfit" to take some narcotics. He stated that he refused to let them use his room but agreed to let them use his "outfit" in return for some of their heroin. Defendant then went to his room, got his "outfit," and the three proceeded to the service station. There they went to the men's room in the sequence as related by Hoffman: first, defendant and Hoffman, but that Hoffman prepared the narcotic solution while he, defendant, readied the hypodermic needle, and that he then stood guard at the door while Hoffman went behind the partition and presumably took "a fix"; that Hoffman then emerged from the room and sent Callies in to "take a fix," while defendant continued to guard the door; and finally, after Callies finished, defendant went in for his own "fix." Defendant denied that he had mixed the narcotic solution or assisted Hoffman and Callies in taking their shots. He further denied having received $35 from Callies as payment for the heroin, but claimed that Callies furnished the heroin, presumably having brought it in from overseas.

As a rebuttal witness, the prosecution produced a policewoman who had accompanied Hoffman to defendant's room on the evening of October 1, 1956, before defendant's arrest. She stated that she was introduced to defendant as a friend of Hoffman, and that in her presence defendant told Hoffman that he had sold "a $35 paper" to Callies on the fatal night. On surrebuttal, defendant again took the witness-stand, admitted the related visit of October 1 in his room but claimed that the only mention of narcotics there was Hoffman's request of defendant to "get us some stuff" and that he, defendant, refused. Defendant denied that there was any conversation relative to "a $35 paper."

[1,2] Defendant first contends that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the convictions. The "test on appeal is whether there is substantial evidence to support the conclusion of the trier of fact. It is not whether guilt is established beyond a reasonable doubt." People v. Daugherty, 40 Cal.2d 876, 885, 256 P.2d 911, 916; see also People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778. Applying this test first to the charge of furnishing narcotics to a minor (Health & Saf.Code, § 11714), the record clearly sustains the conviction. While there was conflicting testimony as to who supplied the heroin, the jury apparently chose to accredit Hoffman's version, and its determination will not be disturbed.

[3] Defendant makes a further objection to this conviction because the indictment did not include the name of the minor victim. But such omission did not render this count in the indictment defective. People v. Leiva, 134 Cal.App.2d 100, 102, 285 P.2d 46. There was no uncertainty on this matter as presented to the jury. True, there were two minors—Hoffman and Callies—involved in the criminal transaction with defendant, but it clearly appeared throughout the trial that the count specifically charging a violation of the narcotics law (Health & Saf.Code, § 11714) related to the minor Hoffman. Prosecuting counsel expressly so stated in his opening argument, and twice repeated the statement in his closing argument. Hoffman had testified that he was twenty years of age at the time involved, and as corroborating proof, his was the only birth certificate introduced on the minority issue. Defendant at no time during the trial demurred or offered any objection to the sufficiency of this charge in the indictment. Such condition of the record leaves no uncertainty as to the premise of defendant's conviction on this count, and would permit defendant to establish former jeopardy in the event of a subsequent accusation. In such circumstances, defendant's substantial rights were in nowise affected. People v. Leiva, supra, 134 Cal.App.2d at page 103, 285 P.2d at page 48.

[4,5] Nor can defendant prevail in his challenge of the sufficiency of the evidence to support his conviction of murder in the second degree. The furnishing, selling, or administering of narcotics to a minor is a felony. Health & Saf.Code, § 11714. Here there was uncontroverted testimony that Callies died from narcotics poisoning, and that taking a shot of heroin was an act dangerous to human life. Death resulting from the commission of a felony such as furnishing, selling or administering of narcotics to a minor constitutes murder of the second degree. Pen.Code, § 189; People v. Powell, 34 Cal.2d 196, 205, 208 P.2d 974. Defendant unavailingly argues that the evidence "at best" supports only a verdict of manslaughter, citing People v. Hopkins, 101 Cal.App.2d 704, 226 P.2d 74. In that case, as here, the decedent died from narcotics poisoning. But there a manslaughter conviction was deemed proper because the evidence showed defendant to have assisted the decedent "in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony." (Emphasis added, 101 Cal.App.2d at page 706, 226 P.2d at page 76; Health & Saf.Code, §§ 11721, 11009.)

[6,7] Defendant next contends that his convictions should be reversed because Hoffman was an accomplice within the meaning of section 1111 of the Penal Code, and the trial court failed to instruct on the necessity of corroboration of his testimony. But that section defines an accomplice as "one who is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant on trial." Here defendant was charged with two offenses, to-wit: The murder of one minor and the furnishing of narcotics to the other minor. The murder charge was prosecuted upon the theory that the death of the deceased minor resulted directly from defendant's feloniously selling, furnishing and administering narcotics to said deceased minor. Thus neither person to whom defendant furnished narcotics was an accomplice of defendant as to the underlying offenses of selling, furnishing and administering the narcotics to said persons. People v. Lamb, 134 Cal.App.2d 582, 285 P.2d 941. To be an "accomplice" within the meaning of the cited section, one "must stand in the same relation to the crime as the person charged therewith and must approach it from the same direction." People v. Baskins, 72 Cal.App.2d 728, 731, 165 P.2d 510, 511. Furthermore, both Hoffman and the deceased were minors to whom defendant feloniously sold, furnished and administered the narcotics. In the prosecution for such offenses, the minors are regarded as victims rather than as accomplices, and the testimony of the minors therefore does not require corroboration. People v. DePaula, 43 Cal.2d 643, 647, 276 P.2d 600; People v. Freytas, 157 Cal.App. 2d 706, 713-714, 321 P.2d 782; see also People v. Deibert, 117 Cal.App.2d 410, 427, 256 P.2d 355; People v. Stanley, 78 Cal. App.2d 358, 361, 177 P.2d 968. Since neither minor was an accomplice of defendant in the commission of the underlying offenses on which both counts were based, we are of the opinion that Hoffman should not be held in this prosecution to be an accomplice of defendant as to either count.

[8] Defendant next contends that the trial court improperly instructed on the crime of murder. In its instructions the court necessarily referred to the two degrees of murder, since the crime of murder of the second degree may only be defined by relating it to murder of the first degree. Section 189 of the Penal Code provides "and all other kinds of murders are of the second degree." Pen.Code, § 189. But both the prosecuting attorney in final argument and the trial court in the instructions expressly negated the possibility that the evidence could sustain a conviction of murder of the first degree, and expressly stated that a verdict of murder, if found, could only "be second degree." Defendant's claim that the evidence "at best" would support only a verdict of manslaughter, relying on People v. Hopkins, supra, 101 Cal.App.2d 704, 226 P.2d 74, has been discussed above and the situation here distinguished because of the felony involved. Health and Saf.Code, § 11714. The court plainly limited its instructions on the murder charge to accord with the facts presented at the trial, so that they could in no wise prejudice defendant's rights.

[9] Defendant finally contends that the trial court committed prejudicial error by failing to give of its own motion an instruction that evidence of an oral admission by defendant should be viewed with caution. Code Civ.Proc. § 2061, subd. 4; People v. Bemis, 33 Cal.2d 395, 202 P.2d 82. The oral admission in question relates to the testimony of a policewoman called to rebut defendant's testimony on cross-examination. Defendant had admitted on cross-examination that Hoffman and a woman companion had visited him in his hotel room on the evening preceding his arrest, but he denied that during such visit he had told Hoffman that he had sold "a $35 paper" of narcotics to Callies on the fatal night. In rebuttal, the policewoman testified that she was the woman who had accompanied Hoffman to defendant's room on the mentioned occasion, and that in her presence defendant told Hoffman that he had secured "a $35 paper" for Callies on the night he died. It is therefore clear that defendant's alleged oral admission was introduced by the prosecution for purposes of impeachment rather than as part of its case-in-chief. Such evidence appears relatively inconsequential in comparison with the remaining proof of defendant's guilt. In short, if the cautionary instruction had been given, it appears improbable that the jury would have discounted the testimony to such an extent that they would have returned a different verdict. Under the circumstances, it may be assumed that the instruction should have been given, though not requested by defendant, but we find no prejudicial error resulting from the failure to so instruct. People v. Letourneau, 34 Cal.2d 478, 492, 211 P.2d 865; People v. Koenig, 29 Cal.2d 87, 94, 173 P.2d 1; People v. Lowell, 77 Cal.App.2d 341, 349, 175 P.2d 846; People v. Macias, 77 Cal.App.2d 71, 80, 174 P.2d 895.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

Supreme Court of California.

Oct. 24, 1958.

Petition by liquor licensee for review of proceeding on an alternative writ of mandate for review of order revoking on-sale liquor license held by petitioner and another licensee. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Bayard Rhone, J., entered judgment denying relief sought and petitioner-licensee appealed. The Supreme Court, Schauer, J., held that mere fact that a hearing officer in his findings stated that licensee was convicted of a felony, whereas, in fact, his conviction due to sentence received, was to be considered conviction of a misdemeanor, did not mean that decision of the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control revoking the license was arbitrary or unlawful, in view of fact that record indicated that the Department's decision was based upon the acts committed by licensee which constituted a violation of statute, and upon the fact that he had been convicted of the violation, rather than upon any view or determination of the crime as a felony.

Judgment affirmed.

John J. Bradley, Los Angeles, for appellant.

SCHAUER, Justice.

The superior court, pursuant to an alternative writ of mandate issued upon the petition of Bruce Macfarlane (sometimes hereinafter called petitioner), reviewed proceedings theretofore had before respondent Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control (hereinafter termed the department) and rendered judgment upholding the findings and conclusions of the department as well as its order revoking an on-sale liquor license held by petitioner and one Faye M. Wine. (See Cal.Const. art. XX, § 22; Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, div. 9, ch. 7.) Petitioner has appealed, and as ground for reversal contends that the department and the hearing officer misconstrued the legal effect of a conviction suffered by petitioner of violation of subdivision 3 of section 337a of the Penal Code ("receiving, holding, or forwarding" wagers on horse races), and that such alleged misconstruction establishes that the decision of the department (which was affirmed by its appeals board) was not based upon the discretion which the law declares shall be exercised in the revocation of liquor licenses, but instead was arbitrary and unlawful. We have concluded that no showing has been made that the decision revoking the license was affected by any misconception as to the law, or that an abuse of discretion occurred. Accordingly, the judgment should be affirmed.

Section 22 of Article XX of the California Constitution declares, so far as here material, that "The department shall have the power, in its discretion, to * * * revoke any specific alcoholic beverage license if it shall determine for good cause that the * * * continuance of such license would be contrary to public welfare or morals, or that a person * * * holding a license has violated any law prohibiting conduct involving moral turpitude." (See also Bus. & Prof. Code, § 24200, subd. (a).)

It appears that a decision revoking liquor license, such as is here under attack, is "final, subject to review for excess of jurisdiction, errors of law, abuse of discretion and insufficiency of the evidence, and that where there is error the matter ordinarily should be remanded to the board for further proceedings." (Covert v. State Board of Equalization (1946), 29 Cal.2d 125, 132 [6, 7], 173 P.2d 545.)

The written accusation filed with the department stated as follows the "facts constituting ground for suspension or revocation of license": "On September 26, 1955, Bruce Macfarlane * * * was in the Superior Court * * * convicted of violation of section 337(a) subsection 3 thereof of the Penal Code of California as charged in an information on file therein accusing him with * * * on April 13, 1955, on his above-designated premises, where he and the other respondent co-licensee [Wine] were then the holders of * * * on-sale general license, * * * taking, holding, and forwarding bets upon horse races, and sentence being suspended, respondent licensee was placed upon probation for the term of one (1) year and ordered to pay a fine in the sum of $250.00."

Bruce's Cafe, located in Lennox, California, constitutes the premises referred to in the accusation. Following a hearing on the accusation, the hearing officer made the following proposed decision, which was thereafter adopted by the department and affirmed by the appeals board:

"Findings of Fact: * * * That it is true that on 9/26/55 respondent * * *

Macfarlane was in the Superior Court * * after jury trial, convicted of violation of Section 337(a) subsection 3 of the California Penal Code, a felony [italics added], as charged in an information filed with said court * * *; that following conviction of said offense, the said court * * on 10/31/55, did sentence the said Bruce Macfarlane to the County Jail * * * for a term of six months, sentence was then suspended, and said Bruce Macfarlane placed on probation for a period of one year and ordered to pay a fine in the amount of $250.00.

"That said Bruce Macfarlane was arrested on the above-licensed premises on 4/13/55, that said arrest was on the above charge and the events immediately preceding said arrest constituted the cause for said conviction; that said events were as follows:

"(a) On 4/12/55 a Deputy of the Los Angeles County Sheriff's office did attempt on the above-licensed premises to place a bet on a horse race with said Bruce Macfarlane; that on said occasion said Bruce Macfarlane did refuse to take said bet stating in effect that it was too late that day for him to get said bet in, that Bruce Macfarlane did then refer said Deputy to a patron in said premises whom Bruce Macfarlane stated would and who did in said premises take the said bet.

"(b) That on 4/13/55 said Deputy did again return to said premises and thereon did place with said Bruce Macfarlane a $2.00 bet on a horse running that day at Golden Gate Fields; that said Bruce Macfarlane did accept said bet and that said action did result in his arrest on said premises and the filing of the above information and the above conviction.

"That the taking of unlawful bets on horse races in premises licensed for the sale of alcoholic beverages and the taking of such bets by persons licensed to sell alcoholic beverages are both contrary to public welfare and morals.

"That continuance of the above license would be contrary to public welfare and morals.

"* * * [Petitioner has been] Licensed since 1945 with no prior record of disciplinary action."

Under the heading "Determination of Issues Presented" the subject decision declares, so far as here material: "2. That respondent Bruce Macfarlane did violate and respondent Faye M. Wine did permit a violation of California Penal Code Section 337(a) (3) on the above licensed premises; that said violation and act of permitting said violation constitute a grounds [sic] for the suspension or revocation of the license under Article XX Section 22 of the Constitution. * * * 3. That by reason of the conviction of * * * Macfarlane for violation of Section 337(a) (3) of the California Penal Code continuance of the license would be contrary to public welfare and morals within the meaning of Article XX Section 22 of the Constitution * * *." As above stated, the penalty imposed by the department was revocation of the liquor license.

Petitioner contends that the "finding" which recites that he was convicted of "violation of Section 337(a) subsection 3 * *, a felony, as charged in an information," is contrary to undisputed evidence which establishes that the conviction was of a misdemeanor rather than of a felony, and that as a result of the department's "misconception of the legal effect of the judgment of conviction" it "could not make a decision of what is just and proper" and "could not exercise a discretion in accordance with law, that was guided by fixed legal principles * * * in regard to the existence of 'good cause' to suspend or revoke" the subject license.

[1] Section 337a of the Penal Code, for violation of which petitioner was convicted, specifies that the punishment shall be "imprisonment in the county jail or state prison * * *." Section 17<sup>1</sup> of the same code provides that "A felony is a crime which is punishable with death or by imprisonment in the state prison. Every other crime is a misdemeanor. When a crime, punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, is also punishable by fine or imprisonment in a county jail, in the discretion of the court, it shall be deemed a misdemeanor for all purposes after a judgment imposing a punishment other than imprisonment in the state prison." Thus, after entry of the judgment imposing punishment on petitioner by imprisonment in the county jail, the crime of which he was convicted is to be deemed a misdemeanor for all purposes and he is not thereafter to be subjected to the statutory disabilities or deprivations which accompany or ensue from a felony conviction. (See also Pen. Code, §§ 2600, 2604; Pearson v. County of Los Angeles (1957), 49 Cal.2d 523, 543-544 [18], 319 P.2d 624, People v. Hamilton (1948), 33 Cal.2d 45, 50 [1, 2], 198 P.2d 873.) It follows that at the time of the hearing and the decision on the liquor license accusation here involved, to designate or treat as a "felony" the crime of which petitioner had been convicted would be erroneous.

[2] From the record herein it does not, however, appear that petitioner was regarded or treated as standing convicted of a felony after the county jail sentence had been imposed. The "finding" that "it is true that * * * [petitioner] was * * convicted of violation of Section 337(a) subsection 3 of the California Penal Code, a felony, as charged in an information" etc., by its express language has reference to the crime as charged in the information and to petitioner's conviction of that charge. Obviously the defendant was convicted of the crime "as charged" and it was not until the trial court, in the exercise of its discretion, had imposed a county jail sentence that the crime was to "be deemed a misdemeanor."

The record clearly indicates that the department's decision was based upon the acts committed by petitioner which constituted a violation of section 337a(3), and upon the fact that he had been convicted of the violation, rather than upon any view or determination that the crime was a felony on the one hand, or a misdemeanor on the other. Thus, as already quoted hereinabove, the department "found" that "the taking of unlawful bets on horse races in [licensed] premises * * * and * * * by [licensed] persons * * * are both contrary to public welfare and morals. That continuance of the above license would be contrary to public welfare and morals." And the "determination of issues" was that petitioner violated section 337a(3) on the licensed premises, that under the constitutional provisions such violation constitutes ground for suspension or revocation of license, and that by reason of the conviction of petitioner for such violation "continuance of the license would be contrary to public welfare and morals within the meaning of Article XX Section 22 of the Constitution." Moreover, the only reference made by either the hearing officer or the department to the conviction as being a "felony" appears in the recital in the "findings" to which petitioner objects, and the language used in that recital appears to have simply been copied from the minutes of the superior court which state the fact of the conviction of petitioner "of the crime of Violation of Section 337a, Subdivision 3, Penal Code of California, a felony, as charged in the information," and further set forth the sentence and the probation period.

[3] The proof of petitioner's conviction in the superior court was made by introducing into evidence the records of that court, including the quoted court minutes. Both the minutes of the superior court and the decision of the department set forth the sentence (imprisonment in county jail) which as a matter of law establishes the crime as a misdemeanor rather than a felony. Knowledge of the law is presumed. (People v. Munroe (1893), 100 Cal. 664, 670, 35 P. 326, 24 L.R.A. 33, 38 Am.St.Rep. 323; Allen v. Allen (1892), 95 Cal. 184, 199, 30 P. 213, 16 L.R.A. 646; see also Central Pacific Ry. Co. v. Droge (1915), 171 Cal. 32, 42, 151 P. 663; People v. Kehoe (1898), 123 Cal. 224, 228, 55 P. 911, 69 Am. St.Rep. 52; In re Estate of Carroll (1956), 138 Cal.App.2d 363, 365, 291 P.2d 976, 20 Am.Jur. 208, § 211; 18 Cal.Jur.2d 503.) Hence, it does not appear that the department was under a misapprehension as to the facts or the law, or that any such misapprehension entered into the determination that the continued holding of a liquor license by petitioner would be contrary to public welfare and morals or contributed to the decision that the license should be revoked rather than merely suspended. In this connection, petitioner properly concedes that "it, no doubt, is in the power of respondent Department to determine that the conduct of appellant in forwarding a $2 bet * * * was of such nature as to make his holding of an on-sale liquor license contrary to public welfare or morals * * * [and] such conduct may be a basis for a conclusion that 'good cause' existed for the Department to exercise its discretion in regard to whether" the license should be suspended or revoked.

It may be further noted that during the hearing in the department the only person who used the word "felony" was petitioner's then counsel. Twice while cross-examining the deputy sheriff who arrested petitioner such counsel apparently followed the language of the above quoted court minutes in referring to violation of section 337a as a felony.<sup>2</sup> This, of course, was not an incorrect reference by counsel and neither does it show that the department was under any misapprehension as to the nature of the crime charged or as to its character after sentence was pronounced.

[4] Petitioner also urges that revocation, rather than mere suspension, of license is too harsh. On the record this might appear to some of us to be a just criticism. But no such determination is within our proper function. The conduct for which the license was revoked constituted a crime under the laws of this State, and was thus at least technically contrary to public welfare or morals. The Constitution (art. XX, § 22) expressly authorizes license revocation in the discretion of the department under such circumstances, and this court is not free to substitute its own discretion as to the matter, even if it were inclined so to do.

In summary, we hold that no abuse of discretion is shown. The judgment denying the writ is therefore affirmed.

In prosecution under indictment charging defendant with crime against children, defendant was entitled to hear recordings of his conversation with police officers and of conversation between police officers and purported victim which were played to him during his questioning by police, to refresh his recollection so that his attorney could adequately prepare his defense. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 288.

John F. O'Laughlin, San Diego, for petitioner.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Asst. Atty. Gen., James Don Keller, Dist. Atty., and James J. Biggins, Jr., Deputy Dist. Atty., San Diego, for respondents.

McCOMB, Justice.

Petitioner seeks a writ of mandate to require respondents to order the District Attorney of San Diego County to permit him to inspect and hear certain electronic transcriptions in the possession of the district attorney.

Petitioner was charged by an indictment with violation of section 288 of the Penal Code (crimes against children: lewd or lascivious acts) and was arraigned in the Superior Court of San Diego County on May 16, 1958. He entered a plea of not guilty, and the matter was set for trial on June 20, 1958.

Petitioner was arrested May 12, 1958, and questioned extensively by police officers. During the questioning portions of a tape-recorded conversation between the purported victim, Judith Ann Kropf, and law enforcement officers were played to him; and petitioner alleges that he has reason to believe his conversation with the law enforcement officers was also recorded.

On May 28, 1958, after receiving a copy of the grand jury transcript, petitioner filed a motion, accompanied by affidavits, requesting the superior court to order the district attorney to produce transcriptions of the conversations which the law enforcement officers had with petitioner, as well as with Judith Ann Kropf.

The trial judge, after reading the affidavits presented by petitioner and the People, denied the motion, and the case is now set for trial.

Petitioner alleges that he does not remember what statements he made to the police officers and that his attorney has told him that in order to prepare his defense properly, it will be necessary for the attorney to know what was said in the conversation between petitioner and the police officers and in the conversation between the purported victim and the officers.

This is the sole question presented: Can petitioner require the prosecution to permit him to hear recordings of (a) his conversation with the police officers, which conversation he claims he does not now remember, and (b) a conversation between the purported victim and the police officers?

Yes. In a criminal case an accused is entitled to hear recordings of his conversations with police officers and recordings played to him at the time he was examined by them where he has forgotten what he said at the time he was examined and alleges that the recordings are necessary to refresh his recollection. (Powell v. Superior Court, 48 Cal.2d 704, 706 et seq., 312 P.2d 698; People v. Riser, 47 Cal.2d 566, 587, 305 P.2d 1.)

The foregoing rule is applicable to the present case. The record discloses that at the time petitioner was examined by police officers a recording of his conversation with the officers was made; that a recording of a conversation between the purported victim and the police officers was played to petitioner during his examination by the officers; that he does not remember what he said at the time of such examination; and that the recordings of the conversations are necessary to refresh his recollection so that his attorney can adequately prepare his defense.

Let a peremptory writ of mandate issue directing the respondents to permit petitioner to hear recordings of (a) his conversation with the police officers and (b) the conversation between the police officers and the purported victim which were played to petitioner during his questioning by them.

SHENK, Justice.

This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a judgment in favor of the defendant, the Terra Bella Irrigation District, in cross actions for declaratory relief and to quiet title to oil, gas and mineral rights in 240 acres of land near the town of Terra Bella in Tulare County. The case was presented both to the trial court and on appeal on an agreed statement of facts.

The plaintiffs' and the defendant's claims are based on transfers from Edward F. Halbert, a common grantor who held title to the property involved. On December 16, 1925, he entered into a contract with the district in which he agreed to sell the land to the district for $25,000 payable in installments. On the same date a deed to the district was placed in escrow and, after full payment under the contract, was recorded on January 16, 1932, and delivered to the district on the 3rd day of February 1932. The deed, in substantial compliance with the terms of the contract, contained a "reservation" of "all oil and gas and all minerals in or underlying said real property" together with the right in the grantor of free ingress to and egress from the property for the purpose of exploring for, drilling for, developing and producing oil, gas and minerals. The deed provides that the "reservation aforesaid as to oil, gas and minerals shall continue for the period of twenty-five years from the date of the actual delivery of this deed to the [Terra Bella Irrigation District], and as long thereafter as oil or gas or petroleum products or minerals shall be produced from said real property in paying quantities" subject to certain limitations with reference to interference with the district's development of water resources. The deed finally provides as follows: "Subject to the reservations and conditions aforesaid, [Edward F. Halbert] hereby grants, bargains, sells and conveys all of said real property aforesaid, to the [district], together with the tenements, hereditaments, and appurtenances thereunto belonging or appertaining, and the reversion and reversions, remainder and remainders, rents, issues and profits thereof."

The plaintiffs derive their title through a quitclaim deed executed and delivered to them by the common grantor on October 25, 1955. This deed describes the property as all the oil or gas "in and under, or that may be produced from" the real property involved, and was "made subject to all of the terms, conditions, covenants and agreements" contained in the prior deed from Halbert to the defendant district which was recorded on January 16, 1932. The complaint herein was filed on January 6, 1956. No oil, gas or minerals were produced during the term of the lease and up to and including the commencement of this action.

The foregoing appears as stipulated facts, and the court so found and concluded that the plaintiffs have no right, title or interest in and to oil, gas or mineral rights, and that the district is the owner and entitled to the possession of all of the real property. Judgment was accordingly entered quieting the district's title as against the plaintiffs. Neither the findings of fact nor the conclusions of law disclose the theory upon which the judgment was based.

The plaintiffs contend that the issues presented on this appeal are whether the deed in question provides for a valid reservation of the oil, gas and mineral rights, and whether there was created a future contingent estate which violated the rule against perpetuities. They contend that the so-called "reservation" in the deed is, in legal effect, an exception rather than a reservation; that title to the oil, gas and minerals thus remained in the grantor; that as to the oil, gas and minerals it was intended that the grantees receive only a remainder over to vest at the expiration of twenty-five years and the cessation of production in paying quantities; that because the cessation of production was an uncertain, dubious event, the remainder over was a future contingent estate falling within the rule against perpetuities in that its vesting was subject to a condition precedent which conceivably might not take place within lives in being plus twenty-one years; that the remainder over was therefore ineffective and void; that the interest in the remainder over reverted to the grantor, and that the grantor was thus left free to later convey his existing possessory interest and his reversionary interest in and to the oil, gas and minerals to the plaintiffs.

[1] The plaintiffs' theory suggests two issues, both of which must be determined in their favor, if, under their theory, they are to prevail. First, it is contended that we are here in reality dealing with an exception, as distinguished from a reservation. If so, then any residue ineffectively transferred would revert to the grantor rather than be vested in the grantee. As a general rule an exception concerns property which is excepted from the grant and does not pass to the grantee, whereas a reservation is a right newly created in favor of the grantor out of property which does pass to the grantee. "The word 'reserved' in a strict technical sense is not synonymous with 'exception.' The former term is applied to a clause in a deed which creates some right or privilege for the benefit of the grantor in the land described as granted, and withholds it from the operation of the grant, so that the title to the thing passes to the grantee, and the right of privilege concerning it is the only thing retained by the grantor. The latter term applies to something which constitutes a part of the thing described as granted and which would pass but for the excepting clause, the office of which is to exclude it from the thing described, and the title to the thing excepted remains in the grantor." Van Slyke v. Arrowhead Reservoir & Power Co., 155 Cal. 675, 679, 102 P. 816, 818. The defendant district contends that the limitation in the present case is, in legal terminology and effect, a reservation.

The plaintiffs next contend that the rule against perpetuities operates to void the remainder over and that such interest, failing to be effectively transferred, reverts to the grantor. The defendant district contends that the rule against perpetuities requires only a vesting of interest, regardless of when possession is acquired; that both the grantee and the interest conveyed are ascertainable and not subject to any contingencies, and that the grantee's ownership was thus vested.

[2, 3] We find it unnecessary to resolve either of the foregoing contentions and for that reason express no views thereon. If the plaintiffs were to prevail in their contentions, we would be required for other reasons to affirm the judgment. It is obvious that if the plaintiffs' contentions are correct the grantor was, as the plaintiffs claim, possessed of a reversionary interest in the oil, gas and mineral rights to take effect in possession upon the expiration of his determinable estate after twenty-five years and the cessation of profitable production. The rule against perpetuities, where it is applicable, voids an attempted conveyance as of the time of the execution of the deed. Sheean v. Michel, 6 Cal.2d 324, 328, 57 P.2d 127. In the present case an interest in the reversion was existent in the grantor upon the execution of the deed. Such an interest is one which is alienable by the grantor. Civ.Code, § 1111. It was in fact transferred to the district by the same deed which, the plaintiffs claim, failed to provide a valid remainder over and thus brought the reversion into being. As hereinbefore shown the deed provides for the transfer of the grantor's real property, "together with the * * * reversion and reversions, remainder and remainders * * * thereof." It clearly appears from a consideration of the agreement and the deed that the grantor intended to convey all of his reversionary rights to the district and that an effective conveyance thereof was made. When, in 1955, the grantor attempted to convey these same interests to the plaintiffs, he was no longer possessed thereof and the quitclaim deed was ineffective for that purpose.

If, on the other hand, the plaintiffs are in error as to the application of the rule against perpetuities then the conveyance to the district of the interest here in dispute was effective. In any event the interest in dispute was conveyed to the district by operation of one or the other clause of the deed of 1925.

The judgment is affirmed.

CALIFORNIA GASOLINE RETAILERS (a Nonprofit Corporation) and Phillip M. Hudson, Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

REGAL PETROLEUM CORPORATION OF FRESNO, Inc. (a Corporation), et al., Defendants and Appellants.

S. F. 19635.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.

Oct. 14, 1958.

Nonprofit corporation, which consisted of members distributing gasoline and related products of major oil companies, brought suit against independent gasoline service station operators to enjoin them from allegedly giving away their products in violation of the Unfair Trade Practice Act, from using allegedly fraudulent and misleading advertising, and from conducting alleged lottery in violation of the Penal Code. The Superior Court, Fresno County, George M. DeWolf, J., entered judgment in favor of the independent gasoline service station operators on causes of action charging unfair trade practices and fraudulent advertising, but in favor of the corporation on the cause of action charging the independent gasoline service station operators with conducting a lottery, and they appealed. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held that where independent gasoline service station operators, who engaged in give-away programs as an advertising scheme and to bring new patronage to their service stations, gave prize tickets away free to anyone who asked for them and to many, who did not ask for them, and tickets were given to persons away from the stations, and receipt of tickets was not dependent on purchase of merchandise or service, and prize winning tickets were honored regardless of a purchase of merchandise, there was no "lottery," since no "consideration" was paid by ticket holders.

Portions of judgment appealed from reversed.

Opinion, 322 P.2d 945, vacated.

1. Constitutional Law ☞32

Section of the Constitution providing that the Legislature shall have no power to authorize lotteries or gift enterprises for any purpose and shall pass laws to prohibit the sale in the state of lottery or gift enterprise tickets in any scheme in the nature of a lottery, though showing a legislative intention that lotteries are to be prohibited in the state, is not "self-enforcing" or "self-executing". West's Ann.Const. art. 4, § 26.

2. Trade-Marks and Trade-Names and Unfair Competition ☞88

Nonprofit corporation consisting of members selling gasoline and other related products was not a proper party plaintiff to bring action for injunctive relief against certain service station operators who were charged with giving away their products in violation of the Unfair Trade Practice Act, with using fraudulent and misleading advertising, and with conducting a lottery, where there was no allegation that corporation was authorized by members to bring the suit, and corporation was not, itself, engaged in selling gasoline and other related products and therefore was not "similarly situated" with its members. West's Ann. Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 17000-17101; West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 319-322; West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 382; West's Ann.Const. art. 4, § 26.

CARTER, Justice.

The original plaintiff in this action for injunctive relief was California Gasoline Retailers, a nonprofit California corporation consisting of members distributing the products of the major oil companies, Standard Oil, Shell Oil, Union Oil and others. The defendants, too numerous to name individually, are members of three groups of independent service station operators. For convenience, they have been, and will be, referred to as the Regal Group, the Norwalk Group and the Beacon Group.

Plaintiff, some 60 of whose members were in the Fresno area where this case arose, brought suit against the defendants charging them with giving away their products in violation of the Unfair Trade Practices Act (Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 17000-17101); with fraudulent and misleading advertising; and with conducting a lottery in violation of sections 320, 321 and 322 of the Penal Code. The trial court found in favor of defendants on the causes of action charging unfair trade practices and fraudulent advertising, but in favor of the plaintiff on the cause of action charging them with conducting a lottery. After the evidence had been concluded and both parties had rested, the plaintiff made a motion for leave to file an amendment to the complaint and to add one Philip M. Hudson as a party plaintiff. Hudson was president of plaintiff corporation and one of its members. Plaintiff's motion was denied with the court reserving the right to alter its ruling if it could be done without prejudice to the defendants. On the day the decision was rendered, the court granted plaintiff's motion to amend.

All defendants appeal, contending that (1) the plaintiff corporation was not a proper party plaintiff; (2) the court abused its discretion in permitting the amendment and joinder of Hudson as a plaintiff; (3) their advertising and merchandising program did not constitute a lottery as defined by section 319 of the Penal Code; (4) equity will not enjoin the commission of a crime unless the activities constitute a public nuisance, or direct pecuniary loss has been sustained by the plaintiff.

[1] It is also contended that article IV, section 26, of the California Constitution evidences a strong public policy against lotteries in this state. That section, so far as is here pertinent, provides: "The Legislature shall have no power to authorize lotteries or gift enterprises for any purpose and shall pass laws to prohibit the sale in this State of lottery or gift enterprise tickets or tickets in any scheme in the nature of a lottery." While the section just quoted shows a legislative intention that lotteries are to be prohibited in this state, it is obvious from the language thereof that it is not a "self-enforcing" or self-executing" provision such as is found in article I, section 14, of the Constitution (Rose v. State of California, 19 Cal.2d 713, 720, 721, 123 P.2d 505). The language shows that it was intended that the Legislature should have no power to authorize lotteries by legislation and that it was to enact legislation prohibiting lotteries. It is also apparent from a reading of the provisions that a lottery is not defined. Pursuant to the mandate of the just-quoted section, the Legislature has enacted legislation defining and prohibiting lotteries and these provisions are hereinafter discussed. Plaintiff Corporation as Proper Party Plaintiff;<sup>1</sup> Joinder of Hudson as Party Plaintiff:

1. This point was presented to the trial court by special demurrer and motion to dismiss.

Plaintiff corporation is composed of members who sell gasoline and other related products. Some 60 odd members reside in Fresno County and there are others elsewhere in the state. Plaintiff argues that it is a proper plaintiff by virtue of section 382 of the Code of Civil Procedure which provides that “* * * when the question is one of a common or general interest, of many persons, or when the parties are numerous, and it is impractical to bring them all before the Court, one or more may sue or defend for the benefit of all.” Defendants contend that there was no authorization to the plaintiff corporation to bring the suit; that plaintiff corporation is not, itself, engaged in selling gasoline; that there are more defendants than plaintiffs and that it would not be impracticable to bring them before the court. It is true, as stated by defendants, that the complaint does not allege that plaintiff was authorized to bring the suit on behalf of its members. It is alleged that plaintiff’s members have suffered loss of customers and loss of sales of gasoline and other products and related commodities and “have been injured in their property and businesses * * *”; that plaintiff will also suffer injury and loss by “reason of the inability of said members to pay dues and assessments and to participate as members of Plaintiff Corporation.”

[2] In Haggerty v. County of Kings, 117 Cal.App.2d 470, 477, 256 P.2d 393, 398, the court noted: “In the present case it is alleged in the complaint that plaintiff is the secretary of the California State Federation of Labor and has been authorized to bring this action in a representative capacity; that the Federation and its members are engaged in peaceful picketing; that the defendants have threatened to institute and are instituting prosecution of such pickets and members under the provisions of the two ordinances involved and that the members of the Federation constitute a class similarly situated with respect to the matters alleged. These allegations must be accepted as true where, as here, the demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend.” (Emphasis added.) It would appear that the court in the Haggerty case considered an allegation as to authorization to bring the suit necessary as well as an allegation to the effect that the members represented constituted a class similarly situated. There are no such allegations in the complaint under consideration. It appears that the interest of plaintiff corporation and its members may fall within the rule of Parker v. Bowron, 40 Cal.2d 344, 352, 353, 254 P.2d 6, 10: “The statutory provision [Code Civ.Proc. § 382] is based upon the doctrine of virtual representation and is an exception to the general rule of compulsory joinder of all interested parties. Weaver v. Pasadena Tournament of Roses Ass’n, 32 Cal.2d 833, 837, 198 P.2d 514. It is a codification of ‘the common law theory of convenience to the parties when one or more fairly represent the rights of others similarly situated who could be designated in the controversy.’ Fallon v. Superior Court, 33 Cal.App.2d 48, 50, 90 P.2d 858. ‘[R]egardless of which of the alternative conditions of the statute is invoked as authorizing a class proceeding, it has been uniformly held that there must be a well-defined “community of interest” in the questions of law and fact involved as affecting the parties to be represented.’ Weaver v. Pasadena Tournament of Roses Ass’n, supra [32 Cal.2d 833, 198 P.2d 517]; Jellen v. O’Brien, 89 Cal.App. 505, 509, 264 P. 1115.

“No facts have been alleged to bring Parker within this well established rule regarding class suits. He does not claim to be a member of the interested class, and there is nothing to indicate that he is ‘similarly situated’ with those whom he pretends to represent. There can be no ‘common or general interest’ in the subject matter of the controversy, Weaver v. Pasadena Tournament of Roses, supra, 32 Cal.2d at page 842, 198 P.2d at page 518, between Parker, who is not employed by the city, and city employees. Parker cannot give himself standing to sue by purporting to represent a class of which he is not a member." In other words if the rule of Parker v. Bowron, supra, 40 Cal.2d 344, 352, 353, 254 P.2d 6, is strictly applied, there is no community of interest between plaintiff and its members and they are not "similarly situated" since plaintiff is complaining of the inability of its members to pay dues and assessments, and the members are alleged to have been injured by defendants through loss of business. It would thus appear that plaintiff corporation is not a proper party plaintiff.

[3, 4] The amendment to the complaint and the inclusion of Hudson as a party plaintiff have the effect of curing the original defective pleading. Hudson is a member of plaintiff corporation and therefore "similarly situated" with the other members. Section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that "The court may, in furtherance of justice, and on such terms as may be proper, allow a party to amend any pleading or proceeding by adding or striking out the name of any party. * * *" In Feigin v. Kutchor, 105 Cal.App.2d 744, 747, 748, 234 P.2d 264, it was held that a court may, in its discretion, permit amendment of pleadings after the evidence is all in, pending argument of counsel, and even after submission of the cause. The statutory provision relating to amendments to the pleadings in the furtherance of justice has received a very liberal construction in the courts of this state (Klopstock v. Superior Court, 17 Cal.2d 13, 19, 108 P.2d 906, 135 A.L.R. 318). The amendment to the complaint stated no new cause of action against the defendants, nor did it state any new facts. It does not appear that defendants were prejudiced thereby and the court did not abuse its discretion in permitting the amendment and inclusion of Hudson as plaintiff so that the pleadings would conform to the proof. Foster v. Keating, 120 Cal.App.2d 435, 446, 261 P.2d 529.

Advertising and Merchandising Program as Lottery:

Section 319 of the Penal Code Provides: "A lottery is any scheme for the disposal or distribution of property by chance, among persons who have paid or promised to pay any valuable consideration for the chance of obtaining such property or a portion of it, or for any share or any interest in such property, upon any agreement, understanding, or expectation that it is to be distributed or disposed of by lot or chance, whether called a lottery, raffle, or gift-enterprise, or by whatever name the same may be known."

[5] It is agreed by all parties that three elements must be present to constitute a lottery: (1) a prize; (2) distributed by chance; and (3) consideration. All parties are also agreed that the first two elements are present under the facts here presented. It is the third element of consideration upon which the parties differ.

Inasmuch as all three groups of defendants operated in slightly different ways, the facts concerning their operations will be set forth separately.

The Regal Group:

The Regal Group operates three service stations in Fresno which conduct what is known as a give-away program as part of a merchandising and advertising scheme. Tickets were distributed to the Regal stations for redistribution to the public. They were given to persons before any purchase of gasoline or other service, or whether any sale was made; they were distributed with the stubs attached from house to house; they were distributed at drive-in theaters and at baseball games. Those who received the tickets away from the stations were required to go to one of the stations to deposit the ticket stub. Rules for the drawing were posted in each Regal station and provided that any person over the age of 18 years would receive, free of charge, an officially numbered ticket; that the winner did not have to be present at the time of the drawing; and that the winning numbers would be posted for a seven-day period at the Regal stations after the periodic drawings. The prizes to be won consisted of an automobile, cash and other personal property.

The Norwalk Group:

This, too, was a merchandising and advertising program and these defendants advertised in the newspaper, over the radio and by billboards that each month, commencing with May, 1955, the Norwalk stations would give away three Buick automobiles, and several household appliances. When this program was initiated, the distributors, to defray the expenses of the campaign, increased the price of gasoline to the retailers by one cent per gallon which increase was passed on to the consumers. Those Norwalk dealers who did not choose to participate in the program did not receive their gasoline at the increased rate. The Norwalk tickets were given away to anyone who asked for them regardless of whether any product or service offered for sale was purchased; tickets were also distributed from house to house, and some 5,000 of them were placed under windshield wipers of cars parked at the Fresno County Fair Grounds. One of the Norwalk dealers testified that he gave more tickets for larger purchases and that he passed along the one-cent increase in his cost of gasoline to the purchasers thereof. Another Norwalk dealer testified that he gave tickets to those driving into his station both before and after purchases. The ticket stubs were required to be deposited in a receptacle in a Norwalk station. There is evidence in the record that when Norwalk tickets were distributed away from the stations, the stubs were first removed so that the recipient did not have to go into the station to be eligible for one of the prizes. A drawing was held once a month and the winning list was posted for seven days at all Norwalk stations participating in the program. If no claimant appeared to call for his prize during the seven-day period, the prize was then awarded to the winning number next in line. Written rules were posted at each participating station and provided (Rule 1) that "Any person who is 18 years of age or over will be given free, on request, an official numbered ticket for any drawing. Giving of such ticket is unconditional and does not depend on the purchase of or payment for any merchandise or service."

The Beacon Group:

This was a similar advertising and merchandising operation entered into by the Beacon and Caminol Company in conjunction with United Stations, Inc., an association of gasoline stations formed by the operators for the purpose of operating give-away programs. Caminol did not raise the price of gasoline to the dealers, but the dealers, raised the price to the consumer by one cent per gallon and then remitted the extra one cent per gallon to Caminol to pay for the expenses and advertising of the give-away program. Tickets were distributed away from the station, to those who made no purchases at the station, and to those who did. The tickets given to persons away from the stations had the stubs attached causing the recipients to go to the station to deposit them. The rules provided that any person 18 years of age, or over, would be given free, on request, an official numbered ticket for any drawing; that the giving of the ticket was unconditional and did not depend on the purchase of any merchandise or services; that the winner did not have to be present at the drawing and that all winning numbers would be posted at the participating stations for a seven-day period. Drawings were held twice a month and prizes were distributed to those holding the winning tickets.

In People v. Cardas, 137 Cal.App.Supp. 788, 790, 791, 28 P.2d 99, 100, it was held that "An analysis of the section [Pen.Code, § 319] and an examination of the authorities construing it and other similar statutory provisions disclose that there are three elements necessary to constitute a lottery. These elements are: (1) The disposition of property, (2) upon a contingency determined by chance, (3) to a person who has paid a valuable consideration for the chance of winning the prize, that is to say, one who has hazarded something of value upon the chance. People v. Hecht, 119 Cal.App. Supp. 778, 3 P.2d 399; 17 R.C.L. 1222; 38 C.J. 289." (Emphasis added.) In the Cardas case the defendant was a motion picture theater operator. He advertised by means of programs, newspapers, placards and on the theater screen that on a certain date two fully paid round trip tickets to Santa Catalina Island would be given free to the holders of the lucky tickets which were to be drawn on a certain evening. The court stated the facts as follows: "The tickets were placed in the hands of the public by the distribution in the vicinity of the theater of five thousand theater programs, each containing one of the tickets, and by handing two thousand tickets to passing motorists. Also, an employee of the theater was stationed between the street and the entrance to the theater, who gave prize tickets to all who asked them, and offered them to any person who approached within proximity of her. No charge was made for any of these prize tickets, nor was it necessary that an admission ticket to the theater be purchased." The winner was announced both inside and outside the theater; stubs were deposited in a receptacle outside the theater. The court noted that stubs were deposited there by persons who purchased admission tickets, by those who were admitted to the theater free of charge, and by others who did not attend the show.

In the Cardas case, as in the one under consideration, "Counsel for the people argue that patronage from the ticket holders as a whole constituted consideration for the distribution of the prizes, even though the individual holders of tickets had not parted with consideration for the individual ticket held by them. This argument apparently proceeds upon the theory that the element of consideration is established by showing that the defendant received something of value in return for the distribution of the prizes. The question of consideration is not to be determined from the standpoint of the defendant, but from that of the holders of the prize tickets. The question is: Did the holders of prize tickets pay a valuable consideration for the chance? Certainly those who received prize tickets without buying an admission ticket did not pay anything for the chance of getting the prize. They did not hazard anything of value. It would then seem to follow that those who purchased admission tickets and received prize tickets, not at the box office, but from another employee, could not be said to have paid a consideration for the prize tickets since they could have received them free."

In People v. Carpenter, 141 Cal.App.2d 884, 887, 888, 889, 890, 297 P.2d 498, 500 (hearing denied), a bank night drawing was also involved. As an advertising technique to encourage theater patronage, the operators of Lakewood theater solicited registrations from house to house and gave registration blanks to people attending the theater who were asked if they would like to register for the bank night. Registration blanks were kept at the snack bar and sometimes at the box office and were given to anyone who asked for them. A ticket containing each number was put into a drum kept by the theater as the name to which it was assigned was placed in the registration book. Once a name was registered that person was eligible to win at any bank night held thereafter. Bank nights were held once a week and a ticket was drawn from the drum and given to the manager who compared it with the registration book. The winning name was then announced over loudspeakers within and outside the theater and the person winning was given two minutes to reach the stage and identify himself. Admission tickets were not necessary for persons wishing to enter the theater to see and hear the bank night drawing, or to go into the theater to claim the prize.

In the Carpenter case the court held that the element of chance was lacking inasmuch as under the facts of that case Carpenter, who arranged to have himself chosen as the one to draw the ticket, had palmed a ticket which he purported to draw from the drum on the stage. This was done according to a prearranged plan with two others. The court stated the "initial question" to be "Was the bank night drawing a lottery?" And after holding that the element of chance was missing due to the fraud of Carpenter, continued: "We come now to the third element in a lottery, viz.: consideration for the chance of winning the prize. The question of consideration is not to be determined from the standpoint of the defendant, but from that of the holders of prize tickets. The question is: Did the holders of prize tickets pay a valuable consideration for the chance? Certainly those who received prize tickets without buying an admission ticket did not pay anything for the chance of getting the prize. They did not hazard anything of value. It would then seem to follow that those who purchased admission tickets and received prize tickets, not at the box office but from another employee, could not be said to have paid a consideration for the prize tickets since they could have received them free.

"The court in the Cardas case, supra, relied on Cross v. People, 18 Colo. 321, 32 P. 821, 822 [36 Am.St.Rep. 292]. In discussing the element of consideration in a lottery, the Colorado Supreme Court stated: 'By the admitted facts it is shown that the plaintiffs in error gave business cards, which entitled the holders to a chance on a piano, to be distributed as the holders of such chances might elect. These tickets or chances were given indiscriminately to persons, whether they purchased goods of plaintiffs in error or not, to those who registered their names at their shoe store, and to those who, from a distance, sent the return postage. While it is admitted that Charles Linton purchased goods to the amount of one dollar at their store, and received one of these cards, it is admitted that such purchase, or any purchase of goods, was not a condition upon which the card was delivered. The fact that such cards or chances were given away to induce persons to visit their store with the expectation that they might purchase goods, and thereby increase their trade, is a benefit too remote to constitute a consideration for the chances. Persons holding these cards, although not present, were, equally with those visiting their store, entitled to draw the prize. The element of gambling that is necessary to constitute this a lottery within the purview of the statute, to wit, the paying of money, directly or indirectly, for the chance of drawing the piano, is lacking and the transaction did not constitute a violation of the statute.'" In holding that the element of consideration was also lacking the court had this to say: "Certainly those who registered upon request of a solicitor without attending the theater did not pay for the chance of getting the prize; neither did those who later registered without purchasing an admission ticket. Those who purchased admission tickets and then registered while they were at the theater as patrons, cannot be said to have paid a consideration for the privilege of registering, as they could have done so without buying an admission ticket. Once a person's name was registered, it might be drawn at any bank night thereafter, and it was not necessary that he purchase an admission ticket either to listen to or see the bank night drawing or to claim the award if his name was called.

"It therefore follows, under the principles of the Cardas case, supra, that no consideration was paid for the chance of winning the bank night prize in the instant case."

In the case at bar all three groups of defendants engaged in the so-called give-away programs as an advertising scheme and to bring new patronage to their service station. In all groups, prize tickets were given away free to anyone who asked for them, and to many who did not ask for them; in all groups the tickets were given to persons away from the stations; in all groups the receipt of the ticket or tickets was not dependent upon a purchase of merchandise or service and in all groups the prize winning tickets were honored regardless of a purchase of merchandise. The Norwalk and Beacon Groups raised the price of gasoline one cent per gallon to the consumer in order to finance the advertising program. However, in both of these groups tickets were given away free without respect to the purchase of any gasoline or other related products.

The People, as amicus curiae, make the following point: It is contended that there are two types of advertising schemes—"closed participation" and "flexible participation." A closed participation scheme is where those participating in the scheme have paid a consideration for a chance to win the prize; the flexible participation type is where some have paid a consideration and some have not. As in the case at bar, there were some customers of the gasoline stations who received prize tickets after purchase of the products offered for sale, and others who received the tickets at their homes, or at other places, and paid for no merchandise. In this latter connection, the argument is made that in all of the groups the major part of the tickets went to those who made purchases. It is pointed out that in People v. Gonzales, 62 Cal.App.2d 274, 278, 279, 285, 286, 144 P.2d 605, 607, the theater manager testified that one cash night prize ticket was given to each patron who purchased a ticket when he purchased the ticket and another was given to him as he left the theater. No tickets were distributed to persons who had not purchased admission tickets. The court noted that "There was no general or indiscriminate distribution of the drawing tickets to persons irrespective of whether they paid admission." The court, after discussing the Cardas case, supra, 137 Cal.App.Supp. 788, 28 P.2d 99, stated: "The decision in the Cardas case was a proper determination upon the facts therein that the drawing therein was not a lottery. That decision, however, is not determinative or at all persuasive that the drawing herein, involving facts vastly different from those therein, was not a lottery. The presence of certain facts in that case, as to free distribution, and as to announcements and participation outside the theater, was the basis for the decision therein that the drawing was not a lottery, but in this case those or similar facts are not present and an opposite state of facts exists." From the court's statement that "There was no general or indiscriminate distribution of the drawing tickets to persons irrespective of whether they paid admission" (emphasis added) the People argue that because a lesser number of tickets in the case at bar were given to persons away from the station and to those who made no purchases that this was more like a closed participation scheme, and hence a lottery, than it was the flexible participation scheme which was found not to constitute a lottery in the Cardas case.

Since it clearly appears from the record that any person could have received a ticket, or tickets, free for the asking, or even without a request and without any necessity of making any kind of purchase it would seem that the relative numbers of tickets distributed with purchases or without purchases should not be determinative of the issue involved which is whether the holder, or holders, of the tickets paid, or promised to pay a valuable consideration for the chance of winning a prize. As the court stated in the Carpenter case, supra, 141 Cal.App.2d 884, 888, 297 P.2d 498, 500: "It would then seem to follow that those who purchased admission tickets and received prize tickets, not at the box office but from another employee, could not be said to have paid a consideration for the prize tickets since they could have received them free." Also, in the Carpenter case, 141 Cal.App.2d at page 889, 297 P.2d at page 501, the court, quoting from Cross v. People, 18 Colo. 321, 32 P. 821, stated that " '* * * The element of gambling that is necessary to constitute this a lottery within the purview of the statute, to wit, the paying of money, directly or indirectly, for the chance of drawing the piano, is lacking and the transaction did not constitute a violation of the statute.' "

Plaintiffs and amicus curiae both argue that People v. Gonzales, 62 Cal.App.2d 274, 144 P.2d 605, laid down the rule that a closed participation program and thus a lottery exists where the distribution of tickets to persons other than customers is not "substantial" or is "negligible" in comparison with those distributed to customers. This rule, it is contended, has "emasculated" the holding of People v. Cardas, 137 Cal. App.Supp. 788, 28 P.2d 99. In view of the holding in People v. Carpenter, 141 Cal. App.2d 884, 889, 890, 297 P.2d 498, 501 that "Certainly those who registered upon request of a solicitor without attending the theater did not pay for the chance of getting the prize; neither did those who later registered without purchasing an admission ticket. Those who purchased admission tickets and then registered while they were at the theater as patrons, cannot be said to have paid a consideration for the privilege of registering, as they could have done so without buying an admission ticket," it would appear that this argument is without merit. If any person could receive a ticket or tickets without paying anything therefor, it would appear that the question of consideration should not rest on the percentage of those receiving tickets with purchases as opposed to those receiving tickets without such purchases.

Reliance is also placed on Holmes v. Saunders, 114 Cal.App.2d 389, 390, 391, 250 P.2d 269, 270 where tickets for a drawing where an automobile was the prize were distributed to all those who paid $1 for a six months' subscription to the "Associated Bulletin." It was there said: "The consideration to make such a transaction a lottery need not be paid exclusively for the chance to win the prize. It is sufficient that the consideration, as here, be paid for something else and the chance to win the prize. People v. Gonzales, 62 Cal.App.2d 274, 144 P.2d 605; People v. Miller, 271 N.Y. 44, 2 N.E.2d 38; and see the many cases collected in the notes in 48 A.L.R. 1115; 57 A.L.R. 424; 103 A.L.R. 866; 109 A.L.R. 709; 113 A.L.R. 1121. It is said in 34 Am.Jur. 650 'that no sooner is the term "lottery" defined by a court, than ingenuity evolves some scheme within the mischief discussed, although not quite within the letter of the definition given; but an examination of the many cases on the subject will show that it is very difficult, if not impossible, for the most ingenious and subtle mind to devise any scheme or plan, short of a gratuitous distribution of property, which has not been held by the courts of this country to be in violation of the lottery laws * * *. The court will inquire, not into the name, but into the game, however skilfully disguised, in order to ascertain if it is prohibited * * *."

Several cases from other states are cited by the People in an endeavor to show that the promotional scheme here involved did constitute a lottery. One somewhat factually similar is Featherstone v. Independent Service Station Ass'n, Tex.Civ. App., 10 S.W.2d 124, 125, 126, 127, where a prize ticket was distributed for each $1 spent by a customer of a service station. Apparently the plan was changed and some tickets were distributed to persons who did not make purchases of merchandise or service. The Texas court noted that a lottery was not defined by the laws of Texas and adopted the definition set forth in State v. Lipkin, 169 N.C. 265, 84 S.E. 340, 342, L.R.A.1915F, 1018: "A lottery, for all practical purposes, may be defined as any scheme for the distribution of prizes, by lot or chance, by which one, on paying money or giving any other thing of value to another, obtains a token, which entitles him to receive a larger or smaller value or nothing, as some formula of chance may determine." The court said [10 S.W.2d 127]: "While dealers, under the new plan, distributed tickets to non-customers as well as to customers, it seems that the scheme was to distribute tickets, in the main to customers, as the evidence discloses that only a few, negligible in number, were given to persons other than customers. That the giving of tickets, and the drawings and distribution of prizes, were inducements to patronage and unquestionably lured customers, is shown from the very satisfactory business results that followed. Patronage thus induced was the consideration that passed from the ticket holder for the chance received, in that the price paid, whatever it was, the amount being immaterial, constituted the aggregate price for the merchandise or service and the ticket that represented a chance to win the prize; in other words, for one undivided price both were purchased, the merchandise, or service, and ticket, the ticket being as much bought as though priced separately." (Emphasis added.) In other words, the court held that the benefit flowing to the sponsor of the scheme was the consideration which made the scheme a lottery. The Cardas case, supra, held that "The question of consideration is not to be determined from the standpoint of the defendant, but from that of the holders of the prize tickets" and section 319 very clearly so states: That it is the distribution of property by chance "among persons who have paid or promised to pay any valuable consideration for the chance of obtaining such property or a portion of it."

The People also cite Federal Communications Commission v. American Broadcasting Co., 347 U.S. 284, 293, 294, 74 S.Ct. 593, 595, 98 L.Ed. 699, where radio give-away programs were involved. The statute there involved (18 U.S.C. § 1304) provided: "Whoever broadcasts by means of any radio station for which a license is required by any law of the United States, or whoever, operating any such station, knowingly permits the broadcasting of, any advertisement of or information concerning any lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme, offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or any list of the prizes drawn or awarded by means of any such lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme, whether said list contains any part or all of such prizes, shall be fined * * *." Examples of the give-away programs were listed as "Stop the Music," "What's My Name" and "Sing It Again." The court, speaking through Mr. Chief Justice Warren, stated that the Federal Communications Commission "contends that consideration in the form of money or a thing of value is not essential, and that a commercial benefit to the promoter satisfies the consideration requirement * * *" and that the section involved did not define the type of consideration necessary. The court held: "We find no decisions precisely in point on the facts of the cases before us. The courts have defined consideration in various ways, but so far as we are aware none has ever held that a contestant's listening at home to a radio or television program satisfies the consideration requirement. Some courts—with vigorous protest from others—have held that the requirement is satisfied by a 'raffle' scheme giving free chances to persons who go to a store to register in order to participate in the drawing of a prize, and similarly by a 'bank night' scheme giving free chances to persons who gather in front of a motion picture theatre in order to participate in a drawing held for the primary benefit of the paid patrons of the theatre. But such cases differ substantially from the cases before us. To be eligible for a prize on the 'give-away' programs involved here, not a single home contestant is required to purchase anything or pay an admission price or leave his home to visit the promoter's place of business; the only effort required for participation is listening." (Emphasis added.) The People rely on the italicized portion of the above-quoted statement as a holding that when a participant is required to go to the sponsor's place of business to deposit his prize ticket stub the necessary consideration is established. The Supreme Court also noted that "We believe that it would be stretching the statute to the breaking point to give it an interpretation that would make such programs a crime." In view of our statute (Pen.Code, § 319) defining a lottery and which provides that the consideration necessary is a "valuable one" paid, or promised to be paid by the one receiving the ticket, the fact that a ticket holder must go to the place of business of the sponsor of the scheme to deposit the ticket stub cannot be considered the necessary consideration.

[6] We are also urged by the People to consider section 1605 of the Civil Code in defining the consideration necessary under the lottery statutes. That section provides that "Any benefit conferred, or agreed to be conferred, upon the promisor, by any other person, to which the promisor is not lawfully entitled, or any prejudice suffered, or agreed to be suffered, by such person, other than such as he is at the time of consent lawfully bound to suffer, as an inducement to the promisor, is a good consideration for a promise." It would again appear that, in view of the plain provisions of section 319 of the Penal Code, in order to constitute consideration within the definition of a lottery there must be a valuable consideration paid, or promised to be paid by the ticket holder. People v. Carpenter, 141 Cal.App.2d 884, 297 P.2d 498. We held in DeMille v. American Federation of Radio Artists, 31 Cal.2d 139, 156, 187 P.2d 769, 780, 175 A.L.R. 382, that "Penal statutes will not be given application beyond their plain intent. Such acts include only those offenses coming clearly within the import of the language." The "realistic approach" to the consideration necessary to constitute a promotion scheme a lottery which is urged upon us by the People in asking us to accept the definition of consideration as found in section 1605 of the Civil Code would seem to be an argument which should be directed to the Legislature rather than to this court.

[7] It is our conclusion that defendants' advertising and promotional scheme did not fall within the definition of a lottery as set forth in section 319 of the Penal Code because of the lack of consideration.

The portions of the judgment appealed from are reversed.

The SUPERIOR COURT of the State of California, IN AND FOR COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES, Respondent.

A. W. Woolverton et al., Real Parties in Interest.
L. A. 25060.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.
Oct. 24, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 19, 1958.

Proceeding on petition for a writ of mandate to compel a Superior Court to enter an order quashing service of summons in a civil action brought by plaintiffs, against petitioner, a foreign corporation. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that where foreign corporation actively undertook promotion and protection of its market in California by sending its agent to negotiate contracts in the state, and reaped the benefit of the local market, and had access to state courts to enforce any rights growing out of its transactions in the state, and plaintiffs' alleged cause of action against foreign corporation grew directly out of their relationship with foreign corporation's agent and its dealings with its local importer, the quality and nature of its activity in relation to the fair and orderly administration of the laws of state fully justified subjecting foreign corporation to jurisdiction of the state courts under statute providing for service on foreign corporations doing business in the state.

Alternative writ discharged and peremptory writ denied.

McComb, J., dissented.

Opinion, 325 P.2d 137, vacated.

1. Corporations $\S$ 642(1)

"Doing business" within meaning of section of Code of Civil Procedure dealing with service of process on foreign corporations is synonymous with the power of the state to subject foreign corporations to local process, and such term does not mean transacting intrastate business as defined in the Corporations Code, nor does such section of the Corporations Code effect a change in the jurisdiction provided over foreign corporations by the Code of Civil Procedure. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 411, subd. 2, 416.3; West's Ann.Corp.Code, §§ 6203, 6300, 6500-6504.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Doing Business".

2. Corporations 668(5)

Where an agent of a foreign corporation came to California, and performed important services for the foreign corporation in the state, namely, the establishment and maintenance of a satisfactory importing, distributing, and sales organization, regardless of how closely these activities might have been supervised from Germany, they nevertheless were activities of the foreign corporation through its agent in the state and were sufficient to constitute such agent the foreign corporation's general manager in the state for purposes of service of process if the foreign corporation were doing business in the state. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 411, subd. 2.

3. Corporations 642(4/2)

Where foreign corporation actively undertook promotion and protection of its market in California by sending its agent to negotiate contract in the state, and reaped the benefit of the local market, and had access to state courts to enforce any rights growing out of its transactions here, and plaintiffs' alleged cause of action against foreign corporation grew directly out of their relationship with foreign corporation's agent and its dealings with its local importer, the quality and nature of its activity in relation to the fair and orderly administration of the laws fully justified subjecting foreign corporation to jurisdiction of the state courts under statute providing for service on foreign corporations doing business in the state. TRAYNOR, Justice.

Petitioner, Carl F. W. Borgward G. M. B. H., a German corporation, seeks a writ of mandate to compel the Superior Court of Los Angeles County to enter its order quashing service of summons in an action brought by plaintiffs, the real parties in interest in this proceeding. See Code Civ. Proc. § 416.3. Earle C. Anthony, Inc., and Doe One to Doe Ten were joined as defendants in plaintiffs' action. Borgward was served by making personal service on Lutz Knemeyer in California as its alleged "general manager in this State." Corp.Code § 6500. It appeared specially and moved to quash the service of summons. Its motion was denied.

At the time they filed their action, plaintiffs were distributors and dealers selling Borgward automobiles and parts pursuant to a contract with Anthony, the exclusive importer of Borgward's products for the western United States. Anthony had announced its intention not to renew plaintiffs' contract at the end of its term on December 31, 1957. Plaintiffs alleged that Anthony had agreed that the contract would be renewed unless plaintiffs gave Anthony good cause for refusing to do so, but that the contract failed to express this agreement. They also alleged an oral contract with Borgward whereby plaintiffs agreed to enter into a franchise agreement with Anthony for distributing Borgward products and Borgward agreed that plaintiffs' franchise to market such products in the territory already developed in Southern California would not be terminated so long as plaintiffs performed their duties diligently and efficiently, and that Anthony's contract with Borgward was subject to this oral agreement.

Plaintiffs also alleged that Anthony and Doe One to Doe Ten entered a conspiracy to interfere with their oral contract with Borgward for the purpose of appropriating plaintiffs' business for themselves.

Plaintiffs prayed for reformation of their contract with Anthony and a declaration of their rights thereunder; for a declaration of the existence and terms of their oral agreement with Borgward; for injunctive relief against Anthony and Borgward to secure plaintiffs' rights under their contracts; and for compensatory and exemplary damages against Anthony and Doe One to Doe Ten.

[1] Borgward contends that it was not and is not doing business in this state within the meaning of Code of Civil Procedure, section 411, subdivision 2, and is therefore not subject to service of process pursuant to Corporations Code section 6500.

In Henry R. Jahn & Son v. Superior Court, 49 Cal.2d 855, 858-859, 323 P.2d 437, 439, we stated: "The statute authorizes service of process on foreign corporations that are 'doing business in this State.' That term is a descriptive one that the courts have equated with such minimum contacts with the state 'that the maintenance of the suit does not offend "traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice."' International Shoe Co. v. State of Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316, 66 S.Ct. 154, 90 L.Ed. 95, [161 A.L.R. 1057]. Whatever limitation it imposes is equivalent to that of the due process clause. "'[D]oing business" within the meaning of section 411 of the Code of Civil Procedure is synonymous with the power of the state to subject foreign corporations to local process.' Eclipse Fuel Engineering Co. v. Superior Court, 148 Cal.App.2d 736, 738, 307 P.2d 739, 741 * * *."

It is contended at the outset that we should re-examine the rule of the Jahn case in the light of Corporations Code sections 6203 and 6300. Code of Civil Procedure section 411(2) provides for service of process on foreign corporations "doing business in this State; in the manner provided by Sections 6500 to 6504, inclusive, of the Corporations Code." Those sections and sections 6203 and 6300 are all in part 11 of the Corporations Code. Section 6300 provides that "this part does not apply to corporations engaged solely in interstate or foreign commerce," and section 6203 provides that "'Transact intrastate business' means entering into repeated and successive transactions of its business in this State, other than interstate or foreign commerce." Accordingly, it is contended that no provision has been made for service on corporations engaged solely in interstate or foreign commerce and that "doing business in this State" within the meaning of section 411 must mean transacting intrastate business as defined in section 6203.

There is no merit in this contention. Section 6203 defines, not the words "doing business in this State," but the words "transact intrastate business." Since the Legislature was dealing specifically with the definition of terms, had it meant the two phrases to be equivalent, it would have said so. Moreover, by excluding acts done by a foreign corporation in this state in interstate or foreign commerce from its definition of the words "transact intrastate business," it clearly recognized that a corporation may do business in this state without transacting intrastate business.

Nor does section 6300 afford any basis for departing from the well established meaning of "doing business in this State," which was followed and applied in the Jahn case. It is true that if the service provisions of part 11 of the Corporations Code stood alone, section 6300 would prevent their application to corporations engaged solely in interstate or foreign commerce. Those provisions are applicable to such corporations, however, not ex proprio vigore, but because they are incorporated by reference in section 411(2) of the Code of Civil Procedure. To hold that section 6300 governs section 411(2) would require amending it to read "This part and section 411(2) of the Code of Civil Procedure do not apply to corporations engaged solely in interstate or foreign commerce."

In addition to the service provisions, part 11 of the Corporations Code contains detailed regulatory and penal provisions governing foreign corporations engaged in the transaction of intrastate business, and the legislative history of section 6300 makes clear that it was these latter provisions, not section 411(2), that are governed by it. Section 6300 was based on former Civil Code section 407, which provided that "The requirements of this chapter [now part 11 of the Corporations Code] as to foreign corporations shall not apply to corporations engaged solely in interstate or foreign commerce." (Italics added.) Section 407 thus referred only to the acts required to qualify to conduct intrastate business and made clear that foreign corporations engaged solely in interstate or foreign commerce were not required so to qualify. It is no way indicated, however, that such corporations doing business in this state were not subject to service of process here. Given this court's recognition in 1942 that a foreign corporation engaged solely in interstate commerce may be amenable to suit here (West Publishing Co. v. Superior Court, 20 Cal.2d 720, 729-731, 128 P.2d 777), and the legislative declaration when the Corporations Code was enacted in 1947 that the "provisions of this code, insofar as they are substantially the same as existing statutory provisions relating to the same subject matter, shall be construed as restatements and continuations, and not as new enactments" (Corp.Code § 2), the recasting of the wording of section 407 of the Civil Code in section 6300 of the Corporations Code cannot be interpreted as intended to effect a radical change in the jurisdiction provided over foreign corporations by section 411(2) of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Borgward contends, however, that even under the tests enunciated in the Jahn case and the cases there cited, it is not doing business in this state. Although it appears that several million dollars worth of its products are sold in this state annually, Borgward contends that such business is solely that of its independent importer Anthony, who purchases and takes title to its products in Germany. (See, Irvine Co. v. McColgan, 26 Cal.2d 160, 165-166, 157 P.2d 847, 167 A.L.R. 934.) Plaintiffs do not seek to found jurisdiction on the fact alone, however, that Borgward's products are sold in this state through Anthony, but on that fact coupled with the acts done in this state by Borgward's agent Knemeyer in negotiating and arranging for the distribution of Borgward products by independent contractors, and they point out that their alleged cause of action is directly related to Knemeyer's activities here.

Knemeyer visited California for periods of several days on three occasions in 1956 and 1957. In February 1956, with the approval of Borgward, he executed a contract in the form of a letter from Thomson to Borgward in Los Angeles appointing Walter J. Thomson Co., Ltd., as exclusive importer. It described Knemeyer's activities as follows:

"1. The territory which you originally granted to us as sole importers had been broadened by Mr. Knemeyer to include all of the trading area territory lying west of the Mississippi River.

"2. Mr. Knemeyer has removed Bob Knapp as distributor for California and has approved the appointment of Bob Knapp as exclusive dealer for the City of Pasadena. * * *

"3. Mr. Knemeyer has approved the appointment of Messrs. Ed. Van Horn and Gordon Reid (who are forming a new corporation) as distributors for Northern California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho and the northern part of Nevada. * * *

"4. Mr. Knemeyer has approved appointment of Mr. Whitney Lyon as distributor for all of the remaining territory not specifically mentioned in paragraph 3 above. * * *"

Approximately a year later, after a dispute had arisen between Thomson and some of its distributors including plaintiffs, Knemeyer returned to California and with Borgward's approval, terminated Thomson as importer, and appointed Anthony. At that time Knemeyer met with plaintiffs and other distributors and according to plaintiffs made the oral agreement that is the subject of their action against Borgward.

After Anthony informed plaintiffs that their contract would not be renewed, plaintiffs wrote Borgward and received a cable in reply stating that the matter was being referred to Knemeyer, then enroute to the United States and Canada, who would get in touch with plaintiffs in California. Process was served on Knemeyer shortly after he arrived in California on this trip.

[2] Disregarding the numerous affidavits setting forth extrajudicial statements of Knemeyer to California distributors and dealers that he had full authority to act for Borgward with respect to the importation, distribution, and sales of its products in California (see Hilyar v. Union Ice Co., 45 Cal.2d 30, 42, 286 P.2d 21; Code Civ.Proc. § 1870 (5)), we conclude from the foregoing evidence that Knemeyer performed important services for Borgward in California, namely, the establishment and maintenance of a satisfactory importing, distributing, and sales organization. Regardless of how closely these activities may have been supervised from Germany, they nevertheless were activities of Borgward through its agent here, and were sufficient to constitute Knemeyer Borgward's "general manager in this State" (Corp.Code § 6500) for purposes of service of process if Borgward was doing business here. Charles Ehrlich & Co. v. J. Ellis Slater Co., 183 Cal. 709, 713, 192 P. 526; Eclipse Fuel Engineering Co. v. Superior Court, 148 Cal.App.2d 736, 745-746, 307 P.2d 739; Milbank v. Standard Motor Const. Co., 132 Cal.App. 67, 71, 22 P.2d 271.

[3] It thus appears that Borgward is not merely a manufacturer who sells its products in Germany knowing they will reach this state. It has actively undertaken to promote and protect its market in California by sending its agent to negotiate contracts here. It reaps the benefit of the local market and has access to our courts to enforce any rights growing out of its transactions here. Plaintiffs' alleged cause of action grew directly out of their relationship with Borgward's agent here and Borgward's dealings with its local importer Anthony. Plaintiffs are not seeking needlessly to inject Borgward into a controversy concerning only them and Anthony. If plaintiffs are able to prove the existence of their contract with Borgward and its breach, they may nevertheless fail to prove that it is binding on Anthony or to establish any cause of action against Anthony. Obviously, however, it is preferable, if possible, to settle the entire controversy in one action, here or in Germany. Even if it is assumed that plaintiffs could secure jurisdiction over Anthony in a German court, since all of the relevant events occurred in California the burden on plaintiffs and Anthony of prosecuting and defending in Germany would far outweigh the burden on Borgward of defending here.

No point would be served by reiterating here the review of the recent authorities sustaining jurisdiction over foreign corporations set forth in the Jahn case. For the reasons stated above, however, and in the light of those authorities, we conclude that "the quality and nature of [its] activity in relation to the fair and orderly administration of the laws" fully justifies subjecting Borgward to the jurisdiction of our courts. International Shoe Co. v. State of Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 319, 66 S. Ct. 154, 90 L.Ed. 95.

Supreme Court of California,

Oct. 24, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 19, 1958.

Contractors, which were performing various research and production contracts relating to national defense, brought actions against county and cities to recover back county and city ad valorem personal property taxes paid, and the United States intervened. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Vernon W. Hunt, J., pro tem., entered judgments in favor of the contractors and the United States, and the county and the cities appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that contractors were not the owners of property in possession of contractors under cost-plus-fixed-fee contracts or fixed-price contracts for purposes of ad valorem personal property taxation.

Judgments affirmed.

1. Taxation ☞5

A private contractor's right to use government property may be made the subject of a nondiscriminatory tax measured by the value of property used, even though economic burden of the tax falls on the United States, and, a fortiori, a state may stop short of imposing such a tax and impose a tax on a privately held possessory interest in tax exempt property measured by the value of that interest. TRAYNOR, Justice.

Plaintiffs, General Dynamics Corporation and Aerojet-General Corporation, brought these actions to recover county and city ad valorem personal property taxes for the fiscal year 1953-1954. They assert that they had no taxable interest in the property. The United States intervened and alleged that the property assessed belonged to it and that it was obligated by contract to reimburse plaintiffs for the taxes paid. The trial court entered judgments for plaintiffs and intervener, and defendants appeal.

On the first Monday in March, 1953, plaintiffs were performing various research and production contracts relating to national defense. Some were prime contracts with the armed services, and others were subcontracts. Some were fixed-price contracts, and others were cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contracts. Aerojet operated its own plant, and General Dynamics operated a plant owned by the United States Navy. The tax on General Dynamics' possessory interest in this real property is not in issue here.

Under the terms of the contracts, title to all of the personal property involved was in the United States on tax day. It comprised tools and equipment used in producing goods or carrying out research for the armed forces, materials being fabricated into products to be delivered to the armed forces, and property held on a stand-by basis for use in the event of increased defense research or production.

Defendants contend that plaintiffs had taxable possessory interests in this government-owned personal property. They now concede, however, that the method of evaluation adopted by the assessor was erroneous and therefore seek a reversal of the judgment with appropriate directions for correctly evaluating and taxing plaintiffs' interests.

[1] It is now settled that a private contractor's right to use government property may be made the subject of a nondiscriminatory tax measured by the value of the property used even though the economic burden of the tax falls on the United States. (City of Detroit v. Murray Corporation of America, 355 U.S. 489, 78 S.Ct. 458, 2 L.Ed. 2d 441; United States v. City of Detroit, 335 U.S. 466, 78 S.Ct. 474, 2 L.Ed.2d 424; United States v. Township of Muskegon, 355 U.S. 484, 78 S.Ct. 483, 2 L.Ed.2d 436.) A fortiori, a state may stop short of imposing such a tax and impose a tax on a privately held possessory interest in tax exempt property measured by the value of that interest. Kaiser Co. v. Reid, 30 Cal.2d 610, 184 P.2d 879. The first question in these cases is whether the state has done so.

Defendants contend that there is no logical distinction between possessory interests in real and personal property. They point out that possessory interests in real property are taxable (De Luz Homes, Inc., v. County of San Diego, 45 Cal.2d 546, 290 P.2d 544; Kaiser Co. v. Reid, 30 Cal.2d 610, 184 P.2d 879; Rev. and Tax.Code, § 104) and invoke section 1 of Article XIII of the California Constitution and Revenue and Taxation Code, section 201 as establishing the same rule with respect to personal property.

Section 1 of Article XIII provides that "All property in the State except as otherwise in this Constitution provided, not exempt under the laws of the United States, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law, or as hereinafter provided. The word 'property,' as used in this article and section, is hereby declared to include moneys, credits, bonds, stocks, dues, franchises, and all other matters and things, real, personal, and mixed, capable of private ownership * *." Section 201 provides that "All property in this State, not exempt under the laws of the United States or of this State, is subject to taxation under this code." With respect to personal property, however, these general provisions are controlled by other constitutional and statutory provisions dealing expressly with the taxation of personal property and interests therein.

Section 14 of Article XIII provides in part that "The Legislature shall have the power to provide for the assessment, levy and collection of taxes upon all forms of tangible personal property, all notes, debentures, shares of capital stock, bonds, solvent credits, deeds of trust, mortgages, and any legal or equitable interest therein, not exempt from taxation under the provisions of this Constitution, in such manner, and at such rates, as may be provided by law, and in pursuance of the exercise of such power the Legislature, two-thirds of all of the members elected to each of the two houses voting in favor thereof, may classify any and all kinds of personal property for the purposes of assessment and taxation in a manner and at a rate or rates in proportion to value different from any other property in this State subject to taxation and may exempt entirely from taxation any or all forms, types or classes of personal property."

[2] Under these provisions the Legislature may provide for the taxation of "all forms of tangible personal property" and "any legal or equitable interest therein." We have concluded, however, that the Legislature has not provided for the taxation of limited interests in tangible personal property. It has not defined personal property as including a right to its possession as it has real property (see, Rev. and Tax.Code, §§ 104, 107), and this omission reflects not merely a lack of detail, but a consistent pattern of taxing tangible personal property as an entity or not at all.

[3, 4] Although taxable property may be assessed to a mere possessor (Rev. and Tax. Code, § 405; S. & G. Gump Co. v. San Francisco, 18 Cal.2d 129, 131, 114 P.2d 346, 135 A.L.R. 595) and such a possessor is required to file a statement of his possession (Rev. and Tax.Code, § 442), the property is assessed at "its full cash value" (Rev. and Tax.Code, § 401) and is listed on the assessment roll as personal property and not as a possessory interest therein.* No provision is made for declaring or assessing a possessory interest in tax exempt personal property. Moreover, section 612 provides that when "a person is assessor as agent, trustee, bailee, guardian, executor, or administrator, his representative designation shall be added to his name, and the assessment entered separately from his individual assessment." (Italics added.) The assessee is liable for taxes assessed against him under this section only in his representative capacity. County of Los Angeles v. Morrison, 15 Cal.2d 368, 371-373, 101 P.2d 470, 129 A.L.R. 443. Accordingly, if the property held in such capacity is tax exempt, any assessment of it would necessarily be self-defeating for the tax could not be enforced against the property or its possessor personally, at least in cases such as these, where the bailee's interest in the property could not be transferred.

It is true that from an economic viewpoint a bailee's right to use tax exempt personal property may be as valuable as the right to use tax exempt real property. In construing ad valorem tax legislation, however, we cannot overlook the historical distinction between real and personal property that is reflected not only in the statutory provisions but in common understanding of what sort of interest in property is necessary to qualify as property itself within the meaning of tax statutes. The distinction was recognized in Kaiser Co. v. Reid, 30 Cal.2d 610, 184 P.2d 879, and it was held in both Douglas Aircraft Co. v. Byram, 57 Cal.App.2d 311, 134 P.2d 15, and C. C. Moore & Co., Engineers v. Quinn, 149

* Revenue and Taxation Code, section 602 provides that the "local roll shall show:

"(a) The name and address, if known, of the assessee.

"(b) Land, by legal description.

"(c) A description of possessory interest sufficient to identify them. [Section 107 confines such interests to interests in real property.]

"(d) Personal property. * * *

"(e) The cash value of real estate, except improvements.

"(f) The cash value of improvements on the real estate.

* * * * *

"(h) The cash value of possessory interests.

"(i) The cash value of personal property, other than intangibles. * * *

Cal.App.2d 666, 308 P.2d 781, that possessory interests in tangible personal property were not taxable property. Timm Aircraft Corp. v. Byram, 34 Cal.2d 632, 213 P.2d 715, is not to the contrary for in that case the court concluded that the taxpayer was in fact the owner of the funds involved. The Timm case is consistent with the theory that it is the property rather than interests therein that is the subject of the tax, for the tax was sustained on the ground that the property was owned by the taxpayer, not the United States.

[5] The right to obtain an economic benefit from the use or possession of property may be a relevant consideration in determining who is actually its owner for tax purposes in doubtful cases (Timm Aircraft Corp. v. Byram, 34 Cal.2d 632, 638, 213 P.2d 715; Kaiser Co. v. Reid, 30 Cal.2d 610, 621, 184 P.2d 879), but the existence of such right is not controlling. No one would contend that a warehouseman was the owner of government property stored with him, or that a repair shop proprietor was the owner of government automobiles brought to him for repairs, even though their possessory interests in such government property were profitable to them. In accord with such common understanding, the assessor himself in the present cases did not assess to plaintiffs government property supplied to them by the government to enable them to perform their contracts.

Defendants now contend, however, that it is immaterial who has title so long as the essential economics of the transaction remain the same. What difference they ask, should it make that in one case the government may supply tools and material already owned by it, whereas in another it requires the contractor to acquire tools and material that immediately become government property, and in still another title remains in the contractor until the goods are delivered and the tools disposed of, if in all three cases the contractor receives essentially the same compensation for performing essentially the same services? Although there may be no difference of practical significance if the contract is carried out as planned, there may be a vital difference in the event of breach or termination. See, United States v. Ansonia Brass & Copper Co., 218 U.S. 452, 471, 31 S.Ct. 49, 54 L.Ed. 1107; In re Read-York, 7 Cir., 152 F.2d 313, 316. In one case the government as owner has the right to do with the property as it pleases subject only to such limitations as the contract imposes; in the other it is the taxpayer who has such right subject only to such limitations. However irrelevant such considerations might be to the application of a tax on the use or possession of property, they are not irrelevant to the application of an ad valorem tax on the property itself.

[6] Although in any given case the impact of a use tax and a property tax might appear identical, they are not the same thing, and we cannot sustain a property tax here on the ground that the Legislature could constitutionally provide for the levy of a tax of equal amount under a different scheme. To be valid a use or possession tax would have to apply to all tax exempt property so as not to discriminate against the private use or possession of property owned by the United States, and it is for the Legislature, not the court, to determine whether such a nondiscriminatory tax on possessory interests in tax exempt personal property should be adopted and to determine the measure of such a tax.

[7] The question remains whether plaintiffs retained such an interest in any or all of the property so that they were in fact the owners for tax purposes despite the clauses in the various contracts vesting title in the United States. A title clause standing alone is not conclusive of ownership for tax purposes when it appears that the taxpayer retains the essential indicia of ownership (American Motors Corp. v. City of Kenosha, 274 Wis. 315, 80 N.W.2d 363, 367, affirmed 356 U.S. 21, 78 S.Ct. 559, 2 L.Ed.2d 578; C. C. Moore & Co. v. Quinn, 149 Cal.App.2d 666, 670, 308 P.2d 781) or that the government title is for security only. Timm Aircraft Corp. v. Byram, 34 Cal.2d 632, 638, 213 P.2d 715, and cases cited. Accordingly, it is necessary to examine the terms of the contracts to determine whether plaintiffs retained rights in the property inconsistent with its ownership by the United States for tax purposes.

[8] The title clause of a typical cost-plus-fixed-fee contract provides that title to personal property acquired by the contractor passed to the government "(1) in the case of such property which is purchased by the contractor for the performance of this contract, upon delivery to the contractor at the contractor's plant or at the plant of the supplier on f. o. b. purchases if the Naval Inspector at the contractor's plant shall have given his approval or (2) in the case of property not so purchased, upon the allocation thereof to the contract by the commencement by the contractor of processing or use thereof or otherwise. Such passage and vesting of title shall not impair any right which the Government might otherwise have under this contract, including but not limited to the right to reject any supplies hereunder, and shall not relieve the contractor of any of its obligations under this contract." After title passed, such property was treated in essentially the same manner as government property supplied to the contractor directly by the government for use in carrying out the contract. It was to be used "by the contractor for the performance of this contract or of other contracts with" the government, and with certain limitations the risk of loss was borne by the government. The contractor retained no beneficial interest other than the right of use in carrying out its contract. Scrap or other property no longer needed was sold under close government supervision and the proceeds applied to the reduction of payments owing to the contractor from the government. If the contract was completed or terminated in whole or in part, property not already delivered to the government was either disposed of as the government directed for the government's sole benefit or made available for further use in performing other contracts. The government could and did remove its property at any time it saw fit, and even if such removal constituted a violation of the contractor's right to use the property, it does not appear that the contractor could prevent it or pursue other than purely contract remedies for the breach. Throughout plaintiffs' operations under the contracts the government exercised control fully consistent with its ownership of the property involved, and the trial court found on the basis of substantial evidence that its use was "under the close, direct and watchful immediate supervision and control of the representatives of the United States." Accordingly, in the case of property supplied by the government and property to which it took title under the cost-plus-fixed-fee contracts, plaintiffs neither secured nor retained the essential indicia of ownership and were therefore not the owners of such property for tax purposes.

The foregoing discussion with respect to government supplied property under cost-plus-fixed-fee contracts also applies to government property supplied under separate agreements for use by the plaintiffs generally in performing their contracts and to government property supplied for performing fixed-price contracts.

[9] Contractor-acquired property under fixed-price contracts, however, is treated in some respects differently, and requires separate discussion. Only plaintiff Aerojet had fixed-price contracts. A typical title clause provided:

"(1) Upon the payment of any progress payment to the Contractor under this contract, legal and equitable title to all materials, assemblies, subassemblies, parts, inventories, work in process, non-durable tools, completed work and other property acquired, produced or allocated by the Contractor for the performance of this contract shall vest absolutely in the Government forthwith upon acquisition, production or allocation by the Contractor of such property for such performance. Such passage and vesting of title shall not relieve the Contractor or the Government of any of their respective rights or obligations under this contract, nor shall it affect the responsibility of the Contractor in the event of loss or destruction of or damage to property.

"(2) Property, title to which is or hereafter may become vested in the Government under the provisions of this Section may be (i) incorporated in supplies to be furnished hereunder, (ii) disposed of by the Contractor as obsolete, worn out, or damaged, (iii) altered from time to time, (iv) expended in the production of such supplies. To the extent any such property is not incorporated in supplies delivered hereunder, or disposed of as obsolete, worn out or damaged, or expended in the production of such supplies title to such property shall pass to and vest in the Contractor when such property is no longer necessary or useful for the performance of this contract, subject, in the case of termination, to the provisions of the Sections hereof entitled, 'Termination for Convenience of the Government' and 'Default'."

Under the termination and default clauses the government could retain title and assume possession or otherwise direct the disposition of the property.

Under normal operations the distinction between the treatment of contractor-acquired property under fixed-price contracts and fixed-fee contracts was that in the former case the contractor had the right to dispose of or receive title to property no longer useful or necessary in the performance of the contract whereas in the latter case the government retained such rights; in the former the risk of loss was borne by the contractor, and in the latter, by the government. These distinctions, however, are not inconsistent with the government's ownership of the property for tax purposes during the crucial period when title was vested in it. Placing the risk of loss on the contractor benefits the government, not the contractor, and is not by itself inconsistent with government ownership. (United States v. Ansonia Brass & Copper Co., 218 U.S. 452, 466-467, 31 S.Ct. 49, 54 L.Ed. 1107.) While the property was still useful or necessary for the performance of the contract it could only be used in performance of the contract unless the government otherwise directed, and in practice the government exercised the same supervision and control over the disposal of scrap material under fixed-price contracts as it did under fixed-fee contracts.

In some respects the problem is the converse of that presented in Timm Aircraft Corp. v. Byram, 34 Cal.2d 632, 213 P.2d 715. In that case title to advance payments made to the contractor by the government was held to be in the contractor for tax purposes despite the government's right to reclaim those funds not necessary for the contract's performance and the balance of the funds in the event of the contract's termination. Conversely, in the present case, the parties have provided for the passage of title to materials before the delivery of the finished products, and there is a provision revesting title to unnecessary materials in the contractor. Just as in the Timm case, where the contractor received substantial interests in the advance payments before they were fully earned, so in this case the government received substantial interests in the property on making a progress payment, interests it would not have received in the absence of the title clause. It did not have solely a lien or security interest that could be defeated by the discharge of the obligation secured or whose enforcement might entail a sale terminating its interest in the property. To serve its best interests, the government could terminate the contracts in whole or in part and take possession of its property, and it could do likewise in the event of the contractor's default, whether or not such default constituted a breach of contract. In any such event, it was not dependent on the performance of the contractor's obligations to it to protect its rights, for the property was already its.

In American Motors Corp. v. City of Kenosha, 274 Wis. 315, 80 N.W.2d 363, 366-367, invoked by defendants, the court interpreted a fixed-price contract similar to the ones involved here and stated that "the Company's right to acquire [for itself] or dispose of the property [title to which had passed to the government] is subject to no restriction, the only requirement being that a price for such acquisition be agreed upon with the Contracting Officer and the amount involved be paid or credited to the Government as the Officer may direct." It concluded that "the unrestricted right of the Company under the contract to acquire and dispose of the property and the risk of loss are elements of ownership inconsistent with the vesting of such title in the Government as would render the property immune from taxation." The decision in the American Motors case, however, appears to have overlooked the fact that the contractor's right to acquire or dispose of the property other than scrap could only be exercised at the option of the government. Until such option was exercised in favor of the contractor, it, like Aerojet, had no right to acquire or dispose of government property. Moreover, as pointed out above, the mere fact that the risk of loss was borne by the contractor is not inconsistent with government ownership.

We conclude that plaintiffs were not the owners of any of the property here involved for the purposes of ad valorem personal property taxation under present California statutes.

The judgments are affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CARTER, and SPENCE, JJ. concur.

McCOMB, Justice (concurring).

I concur in the affirmance of the judgments for the reasons expressed by Mr. Justice TRAYNOR in the majority opinion and also for the reason that the property here involved upon which defendants had attempted to levy and collect taxes was not the property of plaintiffs.

Article XIII of the state Constitution authorizes the taxation of "property." The term "property" in the broadest meaning is ownership; the unrestricted and exclusive right to a thing; the right to dispose of a thing in every legal way, to possess it, to use it, and to exclude every one else from interfering with it. (Black, Law Dictionary (4th ed. 1951), p. 1382.)

In Douglas Aircraft Co. v. Byram, 57 Cal.App.2d 311, 317, 134 P.2d 15, 18, Mr. Justice Bishop says, "A common characteristic of a property right is that it may be disposed of, transferred to another."

In Yuba River Power Co. v. Nevada Irr. Dist., 207 Cal. 521, 524, 279 P. 128, 129, the definition of property is given as "the exclusive right of possession, enjoying, and disposing of a thing; it is 'the right and interest which a man has in lands and chattels, to the exclusion of others;'" and the term is sufficiently comprehensive to include every species of estate, real or personal."

In view of the foregoing definitions, the property involved in the instant cases was not property of plaintiffs since it did not have the attributes as defined above.

Plaintiffs could not use any part of the property without the consent of the government. Neither did plaintiffs have the ownership, that is, the unrestricted right to possess it, to use it, or to exclude every one else from interfering with it. Plaintiffs did not have the power to dispose of it, to transfer it, to pledge or to hypothecate it. The property, so far as plaintiffs were concerned, had no exchangeable value and did not go to make up part of plaintiffs' estate. Therefore, since the property in question was not the property of plaintiffs, it was not properly taxable by defendants.

v.

HO SING and Ho Lum Shee, Defendants and Respondents.

S. F. 19977.

Supreme Court of California,

In Bank.

Oct. 24, 1958.

Action by city and county against defendants to recover indemnity for the amount plaintiffs were compelled to pay pedestrian for injuries received when he fell over defective skylight in a sidewalk in front of the premises owned by the defendant. Judgment sustaining demurrers in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, John B. Molinari, J., and the plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held that where an adjoining property owner for the exclusive benefit of his own property places in a public street or sidewalk some artificial structure and a city is compelled to pay damages to a member of the public injured thereby the city has a right to recover the amount so paid from the property owner by way of indemnity.

Reversed.

Schauer and McComb, JJ., dissented.

Opinion, 323 P.2d 1054, vacated.

1. Municipal Corporations ⇨808(1)

An abutting landowner may be held liable for dangerous condition of public sidewalk which has been altered or constructed for his benefit and which serves a use independent and apart from the ordinary use for which the sidewalks are designed.

2. Municipal Corporations ⇨814

Where persons are injured by condition of portions of a public sidewalk which have been altered for the benefit of the abutting landowner, city and the landowner are joint or concurrent tort-feasors, and each is directly liable for his own wrong and each may be held liable for the entire damage suffered.

3. Indemnity ⇨13(1)

Where an adjoining property owner for the exclusive benefit of his own property places in a public street or sidewalk some artificial structure and a city is compelled to pay damages to a member of the public injured thereby, the city has a right to recover the amount so paid from the property owner by way of indemnity. ### CARTER, Justice.

This is an appeal by the City and County of San Francisco, a municipal corporation, from a judgment after defendants', Ho Sing and Ho Lum Shee, demurrer to its complaint had been sustained without leave to amend.

Mr. and Mrs. Ho purchased a building in San Francisco. Their predecessors in title had installed a sidewalk skylight in front of the building. This skylight was over a basement which was maintained by defendants Ho. During the course of defendants' possession of the building, the sidewalk skylight developed a crack two inches wide and 18 inches long. On August 24, 1952, one Mrs. Wagner tripped because of said crack and fell, breaking her hip. Mr. and Mrs. Wagner sued both the City and County of San Francisco and Mr. and Mrs. Ho for damages resulting therefrom (Wagner v. City & County of San Francisco, No. 423562) and recovered a final judgment against plaintiff city and defendants Ho in a total amount of $15,000 plus interest and costs. Plaintiff city paid Mrs. Wagner the sum of $5,000 plus $102.03 costs. Defendants paid Mrs. Wagner the sum of $10,000.

Plaintiff, in bringing this action, seeks to compel defendants to indemnify it in the sum of $5,258.87 ($5,000 plus costs and interest at 7%). As heretofore noted, the trial court sustained defendants' demurrer to plaintiff's complaint without leave to amend.

The only question involved is one of first impression in this state and may be stated as follows: Where an adjoining property owner for the exclusive benefit of his own property places in a public street or sidewalk some artificial structure and a city is compelled to pay compensation in damages to a member of the public injured thereby may the city recover the amount so paid from the property owner by way of indemnity?

This question was specifically left open in Peters v. City & County of San Francisco, 41 Cal.2d 419, 430, 260 P.2d 55, 62, where we said: "We are not presented with the problem whether the city might have a right over against the Duques in the event it pays the judgment and the jury returns a verdict against the property owners on a new trial, and nothing we say here should be taken as indicating our views on that matter." Both sides argue, however, that from certain statements made in the Peters case, there is, or is not, a right over against the property owner in the case at bar.

In the Peters case the plaintiff brought suit against both the city and the Duques, as property owners, for damages sustained by her from a fall occasioned by a ramp or slope extending from a building maintained by the Duques and which extended across the sidewalk and caused a depression therein. The jury found for the plaintiff against the city but against the plaintiff with respect to the Duques' liability. On appeal, we affirmed the judgment against the city and reversed that portion which exonerated defendant Duque from liability.

[1,2] We held that: (1) "The rule is that an abutting landowner may be held liable for the dangerous condition of portions of the public sidewalk which have been altered or constructed for the benefit of his property and which serve a use independent of and apart from the ordinary and accustomed use for which sidewalks are designed"; (2) "The duty to maintain portions of a sidewalk which have been altered for the benefit of the property runs with the land, and a property owner cannot avoid liability on the ground that the condition was created by or at the request of his predecessors in title"; (3) "The city is under a duty to keep sidewalks in safe condition, it is directly liable to pedestrians for failing to correct a dangerous condition of which it had notice, and it is not relieved of its responsibility in this regard merely because the condition was created or maintained by a property owner who might also be liable to pedestrians for injuries resulting therefrom"; and (4) "With regard to persons who are injured by such a condition, the city and the landowner are joint or concurrent tort-feasors; each is directly liable for his own wrong and each may be held liable for the entire damage suffered." Emphasis added; Peters v. City & County of San Francisco, 41 Cal.2d 419, 423, 427, 429, 260 P.2d 55, 61, and cases there cited.

From the emphasized portion (4) set forth above, defendants argue that since the abutting property owner and the city are joint, or concurrent, tortfeasors, the long established rule in this state against contribution between joint tortfeasors applies. The city, on the other hand, argues that this is not a question of contribution but of indemnity. We said in the Peters case that "Even if such a right to contribution or indemnity were recognized, however, it would not mean, as asserted by the city, that its liability to pedestrians is merely dependent or derivative from that of the landowner and not joint or direct. As noted above, the rule against contribution between joint tort-feasors admits of some exceptions, and a right of indemnification may arise as a result of contract or equitable considerations and is not restricted to situations involving a wholly vicarious liability, such as where a master has paid a judgment for damages resulting from the voluntary act of his servant." 41 Cal.2d 419, 430, 431, 260 P.2d 55, 61. The city contends that when an abutting landowner makes an unusual use of the public streets for his own private benefit it is with the permission, either express or implied, of the municipality; that such permission carries with it an implied condition that the landowner will exercise due care for the safety of the public and that it will hold the city harmless for any damages occasioned by the lack of due care. In other words, indemnity, as distinguished from contribution, exists because of some special relationship existing between the two tortfeasors and the entire loss is shifted to the one bound to indemnify. Prosser on Torts, 2d Ed., § 46, p. 249. In Runyon v. City of Los Angeles, 40 Cal.App. 383, 389, 180 P. 837, 840, it was held: "The abutting owner, whose title extends to the center of the street, may excavate a vault or cellar under the sidewalk. Such owner, with permission of the city authorities, express or implied—implied or inferred where, after a reasonable time, no objection has been made by the proper officials—may insert in the sidewalk, for the purpose of admitting light and air to the vault or cellar, an iron grating, or other similar device, if safely and properly constructed, and such contrivance in the sidewalk is not a nuisance per se. Rider v. Clark [132 Cal. 382, 64 P. 564] supra; Morrison v. McAvoy, 7 Cal.Unrep. 37, 70 P. 626; Hirsch v. James S. Remick Co., 38 Cal.App. 764, 177 P. 876; Fisher v. Thirkell, 21 Mich. 1, 4 Am.Rep. 422."

The City's Argument:

It is the position of the city that in the absence of conflict with the constitutional or statutory law of this state, the common law prevails (Civ.Code, § 22.2; Cole v. Rush, 45 Cal.2d 345, 355, 289 P.2d 450, 54 A.L.R.2d 1137) and that the common law is consistent throughout the United States that indemnity is allowed in such a situation as we have here.

The city cites many cases from out-of-state courts in which indemnity has been allowed. The theories relied on by such courts have differed as has been heretofore noted by us in the Peters case. We said there: "The opinions in those cases, however, recognize that the city has an independent duty to correct dangerous conditions of which it has notice, regardless of who created them, and the term 'secondary' is not used therein to indicate that the city is merely liable vicariously for the negligence of the landowner. Instead, it appears that the term is used as a means of indicating that, in the jurisdiction where the case arose, a city has a right to be indemnified by a landowner in the event it is compelled to pay damages resulting from a dangerous condition he created or maintained and for which he would be liable to pedestrians. In this regard it may be noted that a number of jurisdictions which adhere to the view that the city and the landowner are joint or concurrent tortfeasors make an exception to the general rule against contribution between joint wrongdoers and hold that a municipality has a right to be indemnified by the property owner in such a situation. City of Chicago v. Robbins, 2 Black. 418, 422-423, 425, 67 U.S. 418, 422-423, 425, 17 L.Ed. 298, 302-303; Washington Gaslight Co. v. District of Columbia, 161 U.S. 316, 16 S.Ct. 564, 568, 40 L.Ed. 712; Salt Lake City v. Schubach, 108 Utah 266, 159 P.2d 149, 157-158, 160 A.L.R. 809, 821-822; City of Tuscaloosa v. Fair, 232 Ala. 129, 167 So. 276, 279; Gulf, Mobile & Ohio R. Co. v. Arthur Dixon Transfer Co., 343 Ill.App. 148, 98 N.E.2d 783, 785; 19 McQuillin, Municipal Corporations [1950], § 54.19, pp. 91-94; Prosser on Torts [1941], p. 1116; 1 Freeman on Judgments [5th ed.], § 477, p. 980." 41 Cal.2d 419, 430, 260 P.2d 55, 62.

In Washington Gas. Co. v. District of Columbia, 161 U.S. 316, 325, 327, 328, 16 S.Ct. 564, 40 L.Ed. 712, the district had given the gas company permission, for which it was paid a dollar, to open the sidewalk to install a gas box which contained a cock in the service pipe. The box had an iron cover which when locked in place was flush with the surface of the sidewalk. After the installation of the box, the district caused the sidewalk to be widened so that the box was approximately in the center thereof. The gas box was left open by the company and a pedestrian fell as a result thereof and was injured. She brought suit against the district and recovered a judgment for such damages. The district thereafter brought an action for indemnity against the gas company to recover the damages it had been forced to pay. The Supreme Court of the United States, in affirming a judgment for the plaintiff district against the gas company, held:

"It would be unreasonable to infer that congress, when it authorized the use of the streets or sidewalks for the purposes of the gas company's business, contemplated that the city of Washington, or its successor, the District of Columbia, should keep in repair such apparatus, the continued location of which in the sidewalks of the city was permitted, not only as an incident to the right to make and sell gas, but also for the pecuniary benefit of the gas company. We conclude, therefore, that the duty was imposed upon the gas company to supervise and keep the gas box in repair. This duty not only does not conflict with the charter of the company, but on the contrary is sanctioned by its tenor, and is imposed as an inevitable accessory of the powers which the charter confers * * *.

"2. Had the District a cause of action against the gas company, resulting from the fact that it had been condemned to pay damages occasioned by the defective gas box, which it was the duty of the gas company to supervise and repair?

"An affirmative answer to this proposition is rendered necessary by both principle and authority. This court Cal.Rep. 329-330 P.2d-65 said in City of Chicago v. Robbins, 2 Black, 418, 422 [17 L.Ed. 298]: 'It is well settled that a municipal corporation having the exclusive care and control of the streets, is obliged to see that they are kept safe for the passage of persons and property, and to abate all nuisances that might prove dangerous; and if this plain duty is neglected, and any one is injured, it is liable for the damages sustained. The corporation has, however, a remedy over against the party that is in fault, and has so used the streets as to produce the injury, unless it was also a wrongdoer.' And the same doctrine is reiterated, in almost the identical language in Robbins v. Chicago, 4 Wall. 657, 670, [18 L.Ed. 427].

"The principle thus announced qualifies and restrains within just limits the rigor of the rule which forbids recourse between wrongdoers. In the leading case of Inhabitants of Lowell v. Boston & Lowell Railroad, 23 Pick., Mass., 24, 32, the doctrine was thus stated: 'Our law, however, does not in every case disallow an action, by one wrongdoer against another, to recover damages incurred in consequence of their joint offense. The rule is, "In pari delicto, potior est conditio defendentis." If the parties, are not equally criminal, the principal delinquent may be held responsible to his codefinquent for damages incurred by their joint offense. In respect to offenses, in which is involved any moral delinquency or turpitude, all parties are deemed equally guilty, and courts will not inquire into their relative guilt. But where the offense is merely malum prohibitum, and is in no respect immoral, it is not against the policy of the law to inquire into the relative delinquency of the parties, and to administer justice between them, although both parties are wrongdoers.'" 161 U.S. at pages 325, 327, 328, 16 S.Ct. at page 567.

In the "Statement of the Case" (161 U.S. at pages 318, 319, 16 S.Ct. at page 565) it was noted that it was the district's duty to inspect, at the first of each month, the various gas boxes in the sidewalks.

Cases from other jurisdictions also draw a distinction between "active" and "passive" negligence in holding that the municipality is entitled to indemnity from the landowner using the public ways for his own personal benefit and thereby causing injury to a member of the public entitled to use the sidewalk or street in the customary way. City of Spokane v. Crane Co., 98 Wash. 49, 167 P. 63, 64; Salt Lake City v. Schubach, 108 Utah 266, 159 P.2d 149, 155, 160 A.L.R. 809.

The following quotations demonstrate the city's position that in a situation such as we have in the case at bar, courts of other jurisdictions generally agree that the municipality has, or should have, a right of action over against the landowner whose negligent use of the public ways has caused it to become liable in damages to a member of the general public. In 19 McQuillin, Municipal Corporations, Third Edition, section 54.19, pages 91-94, it is said: "Indeed, 'the right of a municipality to recover over against the party primarily liable for the negligence has been established so long that it is not now questioned,' the leading authority in support of this rule being a decision of the United States Supreme Court, which has been approved or followed in numerous cases." In 4 Dillon, Municipal Corporations, Fifth Edition, section 1728, page 3032, it is said: "If a municipal corporation be held liable for damages sustained in consequence of the unsafe condition of the sidewalks or streets, it has a remedy over against the person by whose wrongful act or conduct the sidewalk or street was rendered unsafe, unless the corporation was itself a wrong-doer, as between itself and the author of the nuisance * * *." And in Prosser on Torts, Second Edition, page 250, it is noted that "Again, it is quite generally agreed that there may be indemnity in favor of one who was under only a secondary duty where another was primarily responsible, as where a municipal corporation, held liable for failure to keep its streets in safe condition, seeks recovery from the person who created the condition or a property owner who permitted it."

In Monsch v. Pellissier, 187 Cal. 790, 792, 793, 794, 204 P. 224, 225, where plaintiff was injured because of the defective condition of a light-well in the sidewalk in front of defendant's property, the court said:

"Inasmuch, therefore, as the light-wells, as such, were, as we have seen, constructed for the benefit of defendant and her property and for a use independent, of and apart from, the ordinary and accustomed use of the sidewalk, the law casts upon her the duty, to be discharged with reasonable care, of keeping it in proper and safe condition. * * *

"* * * In other words, under the facts of this case, the duty was, in the first instance, independent of notice to or by the city, cast upon the defendant to repair the gratings." (Emphasis added.) See, also, Sexton v. Brooks, 39 Cal.2d 153, 157, 245 P.2d 496; Granucci v. Claasen, 204 Cal. 509, 269 P. 437, 59 A.L.R. 435.

The city also contends that the municipality's right of action over against the landowner in such a situation should be allowed in the interests of equity and justice; that it is inequitable to hold the taxpayers liable for the negligent maintenance of a structure in the public sidewalk which injures only to the landowner's private benefit.

The city also argues that to hold the city liable in damages for such landowner's negligence constitutes a gift of public funds in violation of article IV, section 31, of the Constitution of California which provides, in part, that "The Legislature shall have no power to give or to lend * * * the credit of * * * any * * * city and county * * * in aid of or to any person * * * or to pledge the credit thereof, in any manner whatever, for the payment of the liabilities of any individual * * *."

As a final argument the city contends that in the enactment of section 875 of the Code of Civil Procedure which became effective on January 1, 1958, the Legislature expressly recognized that there is a distinction in California between the right to indemnity and the right to contribution. Section 875, which provides for contribution between joint tortfeasors, sets forth in subdivision (f) that "This title shall not impair any right of indemnity under existing law, and where one tortfeasor judgment debtor is entitled to indemnity from another there shall be no right of contribution between them."

The Defendants' Argument:

Defendants contend that the Peters case laid down the rule that the city and the landowner are each liable for their separate wrongful acts; that they are joint and concurrent tortfeasors; that there is no right to contribution among joint tortfeasors in California.<sup>1</sup>

Defendants rely on Smith v. Fall River J. U. High School Dist., 1 Cal.2d 331, 334, 335, 34 P.2d 994, 996. In the Smith case, plaintiff was injured as the result of a collision between a school bus owned and operated by one Fitzwater in which she was a passenger and an automobile driven by one Pratt. Fitzwater had an agreement with the school district whereby it paid him so much per month to transport pupils, living within the district, by bus to school. Plaintiff sued the school district, Fitzwater, the driver of the bus, and Pratt, on account of their concurring negligence as the cause of her injuries. She recovered judgment against all three defendants. All three defendants appealed, but only the district and Fitzwater gave a bond on appeal to stay execution. The Independence Indemnity Company was the surety on the bond. The judgment was affirmed and the Independence Indemnity Company paid plaintiff the full amount of the judgment. The satisfaction of judgment executed by the plaintiff was not filed until Pratt moved the court to compel its entry. The motion was granted by the trial court and the indemnity company appealed. At the time of the hearing of the motion, it appeared that prior to the accident Independence Indemnity Company had contracted in writing with the school district to insure it and Fitzwater against any such loss occasioned by the use of the school bus. The indemnity company contended that it was entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the plaintiff against all three defendants because of the stay bond given by it. The court held that if the "appellant's sole liability to the parties herein was that incurred under said stay bond, its position is undoubtedly correct." It was held that "As appellant cannot recover from either the district or Fitzwater by reason of its indemnity bond, can it recover against the respondent [Pratt] whose negligence concurred with that of Fitzwater in causing plaintiff's injuries? It is well settled in this state that there is no right of contribution between joint tortfeasors whose concurrent negligence has made them jointly liable in damages. Adams v. White Bus Line, 184 Cal. 710, 195 P. 389. Therefore, had either of the two defendants, the school district or Fitzwater, paid said judgment, no claim for contribution against the respondent could have been made by the defendant making said payment. Neither could the appellant, after paying the judgment as the indemnitor of the two defendants, the school district and Fitzwater, compel contribution or recover anything from the respondent, a joint tort-feasor with the other two defendants. This was the point involved and definitely settled in the case of Adams v. White Bus Lines, supra." (Emphasis added.) The court went on to hold that had the indemnity company had only the stay or appeal bond and had there been no indemnity insurance the holding in La Fleur v. M. A. Burns Lumber Co., 188 Cal. 321, 205 P. 102, would have applied. In the La Fleur

1. As heretofore noted, this rule was changed by the Legislature in 1957 by the addition of section 875 of the Code of Civil case the surety upon the appeal or stay bond paid the judgment and was held entitled under section 709 of the Code of Civil Procedure to be subrogated to all the rights of the plaintiff in the action in which its principal had been defendant.

Defendants rely on Dow v. Sunset Tel. & Tel. Co., 162 Cal. 136, 138, 139, 121 P. 379, in support of their position that the California courts do not draw a distinction between "passive" and "active" negligence. In the Dow case plaintiff was the employee of the Sunset Telephone and Telegraph Company. The facts showed that the telephone company had originally strung its wire too close to wires of the Oakland Gas, Light and Heat Company. The wires of the Oakland light company were improperly insulated and the contact between the installations of the two companies produced a dangerous supercharge of electricity. An employee of the Oakland company reported the danger to his superior but it took no steps either to correct the trouble or to warn the telephone company. Plaintiff was assured by his superior in the telephone company that the wire was not supercharged with electricity and while making an investigation of some trouble with the telephone wire was seriously injured as a result of an electric shock received from one of the telephone wires. He brought an action against both companies and recovered a judgment which was affirmed on appeal (Dow v. Sunset Tel. and Tel. Co., 157 Cal. 182, 106 P. 587). Plaintiff collected the entire judgment from the Oakland Gas, Light and Heat Company and thereafter it sought contribution from the telephone company. The court held [162 Cal. 136, 121 P. 380]: "Both companies were liable, but appellant insists that it was only passively guilty of a tort, and that, therefore, it comes within an exception to the general rule above stated. With this view we cannot agree. It was the separate duty of each to take thorough precautions. Any accident due to neglect of such duty made the corporations jointly liable." The court in the Dow case cites Forsythe v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 149 Cal. 569, 573, 87 P. 24, and Fowden v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co., 149 Cal. 151, 157, 68 P. 178, in support of its statement that there is no contribution between joint tortfeasors. In all three of these cases contribution was sought by one joint tortfeasor against the other. It is conceded that the rule in California has always been that there can be no enforced contribution between joint tortfeasors. In the case at bar, however, the city seeks indemnity from defendants because of the special licensor- licensee relationship existing between them with respect to the use of the public ways.

Defendants contend that the Public Liability Act of 1923 (Govt.Code, §§ 53050, 53051) "evidenced a strong public policy in favor of placing financial responsibility on a City for failure to keep its public ways in safe condition"; that if the city is entitled to indemnity from the property owner it will exonerate the city from all responsibility for its own neglect. We held in the Peters case, 41 Cal.2d 419, 429, 260 P.2d 55, that the city was directly liable to pedestrians for failing to correct a dangerous condition of which it had notice and "it is not relieved of its responsibility in this regard merely because the condition was created or maintained by a property owner who might also be liable to pedestrians for injuries resulting therefrom." We also held that "Even if such a right to contribution or indemnity were recognized, however, it would not mean, as asserted by the city, that its liability to pedestrians is merely dependent or derivative from that of the landowner and not joint or direct." 41 Cal.2d 430, 431, 260 P.2d 61.

[3] We conclude that where an adjoining property owner for the exclusive benefit of his own property places in a public street or sidewalk some artificial structure and a city is compelled to pay compensation in damages to a member of the public injured thereby the city has a right to recover the amount so paid from the property owner by way of indemnity. In so holding, we do not depart from our holding in the Peters case quoted just above. We affirm our statement there that in holding that the city has a right over against the property owner we do not mean that the city's liability to the injured member of the public is merely dependent or derivative and not joint or direct.

The judgment is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, TRAYNOR and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

SCHAUER, Justice (dissenting).

It is my view that inasmuch as the city was held liable to the injured pedestrian, Mrs. Wagner, because of its own failure to perform obligations owed directly to her, no recovery over should be permitted in the city's favor as against the abutting property owner. This conclusion is emphasized by the further fact that Mrs. Wagner would not have sustained her injury if the city had not neglected to perform the duty it owed to her. As hereinafter shown the majority ruling creates a new right and enforces it retroactively.

By adoption of the Public Liability Act in 1923 (now Gov.Code, § 53051) the Legislature imposed upon municipalities liability to persons injured from the dangerous or defective condition of streets and sidewalks "if the legislative body, board, or person authorized to remedy the condition: (a) Had knowledge or notice of the defective or dangerous condition. (b) For a reasonable time after acquiring knowledge or receiving notice, failed to remedy the condition * * ." (Gov.Code, § 53051; see also, Fackrell v. City of San Diego (1945), 26 Cal.2d 196, 203, 208[9], 157 P.2d 625, 158 A.L.R. 773; Ackers v. City of Los Angeles (1940), 40 Cal.App.2d 50, 53, 104 P.2d 399; Jones v. City of South San Francisco (1950), 96 Cal. App.2d 427, 430-433, 216 P.2d 25.) The Streets and Highways Code provides in section 5610 that "The owners of lots * * * fronting on any portion of a public street * * * when that street * * * is improved * * *, shall maintain any sidewalk in such condition that the sidewalk will not endanger persons * * *." The same code in section 5611 directs that "When any portion of the sidewalk is out of repair * * * and in condition to endanger persons * * * in the use of such sidewalk, the superintendent of streets shall notify the owner or person in possession of the property fronting on that portion of such sidewalk so out of repair, to repair the sidewalk," and (section 5615) "If the repair is not commenced and prosecuted to completion with due diligence, as required by the notice, the superintendent of streets shall forthwith repair the sidewalk." (See, also, Sexton v. Brooks (1952), 39 Cal.2d 153, 157-158, 245 P.2d 496; Laurenzi v. Vranizan (1945), 25 Cal.2d 806, 809-812, 155 P.2d 633; Schaefer v. Lenahan (1944), 63 Cal.App.2d 324, 326-327, 146 P.2d 929; Barton v. Capitol Market (1943), 57 Cal.App.2d 516, 517-518 [1], 134 P.2d 847.) It follows that by the judgment entered in favor of the pedestrian, Mrs. Wagner, and against the city it became established as a matter of law that the city had knowledge or notice of the dangerous and defective sidewalk condition and permitted such condition to continue to exist beyond a reasonable time and until she was injured thereby. (See Arellano v. City of Burbank (1939), 13 Cal.2d 248, 254 [1], 89 P.2d 113.)

This court has specifically declared that "The duty of the landowner is to use due care not to create or maintain a dangerous condition for the benefit of his property, while that of the city is to use due care to discover and remove defective conditions. [Citations.] Thus, the liability of each type of defendant is based upon his individual wrongful act or omission, and it is possible to have a valid verdict exonerating one and holding the other. [Citations.] * * *" (Peters v. City & County of San Francisco (1953), 41 Cal.2d 419, 428-429 [14], 260 P.2d 55.)

In the Peters case the city argued that the judgment against it should be reversed because there was no judgment against the landowner, but we there stated that "We do not agree. The city is under a duty to keep sidewalks in safe condition, it is directly liable to pedestrians for failing to correct a dangerous condition of which it had notice, and it is not relieved of its responsibility in this regard merely because the condition was created or maintained by a property owner who might also be liable to pedestrians for injuries resulting therefrom. [Citations.] With regard to persons who are injured by such a condition, the city and the landowner are joint or concurrent tortfeasors; each is directly liable for his own wrong and each may be held liable for the entire damage suffered. [Citations.]” ( Peters v. City & County of San Francisco (1953), supra, 41 Cal.2d 419, 429 [14, 15, 16], 260 P.2d 55; see also, Douglass v. City of Los Angeles (1935), 5 Cal.2d 123, 128 [2], 53 P.2d 353; Bosqui v. City of San Bernardino (1935), 2 Cal.2d 747, 764 [9], 43 P.2d 547; Marsh v. City of Sacramento (1954), 127 Cal.App.2d 721, 723-725 [1], 274 P.2d 434; Wilkes v. City etc. of San Francisco (1941), 44 Cal.App.2d 393, 397 [5], 112 P.2d 759; Mulder v. City of Los Angeles (1930), 110 Cal.App. 663, 668, 294 P. 485.) Thus, it is not for any act or neglect of the property owner that the city is liable; it is liable, if at all, not on any such theory as that of respondeat superior, but, rather, solely for the breach of its own duty. And, perhaps more important, it must be recognized that the acts of both original defendants (the property owners and the city) were necessary to produce the injury to the pedestrian, Mrs. Wagner. If either the property owner or the city had discharged the duty respectively imposed on them the accident would not have happened.

Under these circumstances it appears to me that to require the landowner not merely to answer for his own negligence but also to indemnify the city for its independent tort will tend to defeat the Legislature's purpose in making the city liable for its own negligence in failing to vigilantly inspect and diligently maintain, or require owners of abutting property to maintain, sidewalks in a safe condition. If such a right is created and enforced by this court, a most natural result will be encouragement of laxity on the part of the city in carrying out its obligation of inspection, discovery of patent defects, and proper maintenance of sidewalks for the safety of the public. The proposal of the city that it should be indemnified by the property owner for what it terms its own “passive” negligence in permitting a dangerous condition to continue should be promptly and positively rejected.

This matter obviously presents no such case as San Francisco Unified School Dist. v. California Bldg., etc., Co. (1958), 162 Cal. App.2d 434, 328 P.2d 785, wherein the court expressly recognized the rule that there is no right of contribution among joint tortfeasors but properly held that in the circumstances of that case the rule was inapplicable because of the contractual relations of the parties. “The contract * * * provided that the [defendant] * * * ‘is held responsible for payment of any and all damages resulting from its operations.’ [Italics added.] Even if this did not amount to an express contract to indemnify the school district for damages caused to it by a breach of the contract by the [defendant] * * *, such a warranty or agreement to indemnify would necessarily be implied. Whether the school district [plaintiff] should be precluded from recovery by reason of its conduct, that is, whether the conduct of the district helped to bring about the damage, is at least a question of fact and should have been left to the jury. Under such circumstances it was error to grant a nonsuit.” (At page 449 of 162 Cal.App.2d, at page 794 of 328 P.2d.)

The case before us not only does not show any agreement by the property owners to indemnify the city for the breach of its duty but makes clear, as a matter of law, the fact that “the conduct of the [city] helped to bring about the damage.” The case at bar, therefore, is fundamentally indistinguishable from, and should be governed by, Dow v. Sunset Tel. & Tel. Co. (1912), 162 Cal. 136, 138-140, 121 P. 379, and cases there cited. (See also 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 413.) In this case, as in Dow, the independent negligence of both tortfeasors was necessary to cause the pedestrian's injury. From the fact that the judgment in the basic personal injury action was entered in favor of the plaintiff therein and has become final as against both the city and the property owners, it follows as a matter of law (implicit in the determination adverse to the respective defendants in such basic action) that the subject injury would not have occurred if either (a) the property owner had not created the condition or (b) the city had not permitted the condition to continue after it had notice and was bound to correct it. Thus the right of the city to claim indemnification for the consequences ensuing from its own tort is a new right of recovery, not heretofore known to the law of this state, and it is enforced retroactively by the same decision which creates it. Such rulings should not find favor with the court.

I would affirm the judgment denying recovery to the city.

Suit brought by trustee of an inter vivos trust for declaratory and other relief relating to construction of trust instrument, administration of trust, and distribution of income and corpus. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Philbrick McCoy, J., rendered judgment which was, in part, favorable to German beneficiaries, and the Attorney General of the United States, as successor to the Alien Property Custodian, appealed. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that inter vivos trust requirement that interest of any beneficiary be paid to him "personally, solely and individually" would not be satisfied by payment to Attorney General under vesting order; and held that since vesting orders had prevented payments to German beneficiaries in manner required by trust, gift over provisions of trust had become operative and rights of German beneficiaries had terminated. The Court held, however, that since the American beneficiaries who were, under its decision, entitled to entire beneficial interest in trust had not appealed, the lower court judgment, providing that income and corpus impounded or becoming distributable on or after date of issuance of General License releasing property previously blocked under Executive Order should be paid to all of beneficiaries, including German beneficiaries, according to trust instrument, was final as to them.

By implication, Joint Resolution, terminating state of war between United States and Germany and providing that German property which had been vested, or which, before January 1, 1947, was subject to vesting, would retain its prior status in that respect, terminated power of Attorney General to vest property which was not subject to vesting prior to that date; and, subject to certain exceptions, Joint Resolution and General License, releasing property previously blocked, brought to an end public policy preventing former enemies from holding assets in United States, and, therefore, after date of General License, public had no interest in withholding property from German beneficiaries which would entitle Attorney General to appeal in public interest from judgment that inter vivos trust income and corpus becoming distributable on or after date of General License were payable to beneficiaries, including German beneficiaries, according to trust instrument. Joint Resolution Oct. 19, 1951, 50 U.S.C.A. Appendix, preceding section 1.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

Security-First National Bank, as trustee of an inter vivos trust, instituted an action for declaratory and other relief relating to construction of the trust instrument, administration of the trust, and distribution of income and corpus. The problems involved on this appeal arise solely from the attempted seizure by the Attorney General of the United States, as successor to the Alien Property Custodian, of the interests of certain beneficiaries of the trust and their successors in interest who were residents of Germany. The Attorney General appeals from the parts of the judgment which disposed of these problems adversely to his contentions.

The facts are undisputed. The trust was created in the year 1922 by J. M. Brockman, who reserved a life estate in the trust property and made the following provisions relevant to this appeal. Paragraph 9 provides that after the death of the trustor the Robinson and Brockman buildings in Los Angeles, which the trustee carries on its books at $5,056,540 and $2,176,000 respectively, will be retained in trust to pay the income to 24 named nieces and nephews of the trustor and to the issue and widows of those of them who die, until the death of the last survivor of the 24 named beneficiaries, at which time the two buildings will be distributed to the issue of these beneficiaries. Under paragraph 11 the beneficiaries mentioned in paragraph 9 will, in addition, receive distribution of the corpus of a separate trust fund, created by the instrument in the amount of $200,000, at the death without issue of Mrs. Margaret Thompson, who is to receive the income during her life. Paragraph 13 contains a spendthrift provision and provides as "an express term and condition" of the trust and as "a limitation upon the right, title, interest, estate, income or moneys payable to each and every beneficiary" that his interest shall be payable exclusively to him personally, solely and individually, and the personal receipt therefor from the beneficiary is made a condition precedent to the payment or delivery by the trustee.<sup>1</sup> Paragraph 16 provides that if the trustee shall be "unable, for any reason whatsoever, to pay" any portion of the income or principal to a beneficiary "in accordance with all the express terms of this trust" the trustee shall forthwith convey or deliver such part to the beneficiary designated in paragraph 9, anything to the contrary in the trust notwithstanding.<sup>2</sup>

The trustor died in 1925. Of the 24 beneficiaries named in paragraph 9, the five who were citizens and residents of Germany are all deceased. Three of them left issue now living as citizens and residents of Germany. Seven of the American beneficiaries named in paragraph 9 and Mrs. Margaret Thompson are also still alive. The latter has no issue.

From April 3, 1940, interrupted communications due to war conditions prevented the continuation of payment of trust income to the German beneficiaries, and since that date the trustee has impounded their portions. On June 14, 1941, by the provisions of Executive Order 8389 as amended (see note following § 95a of 12 U.S.C.A.), it became unlawful for the trustee to distribute such income to them; their

1. Paragraph 13 of the declaration of trust reads: "It is an express term and condition of this trust, and a limitation upon the right, title, interest, estate, income or moneys payable to each and every beneficiary hereunder that such rights, titles, interests, estates and incomes of each and every beneficiary shall not be subject to assignment, pledge, mortgage, hypothecation, attachment, execution, judgment, anticipation or other disposition or impairment, nor shall the same pass to or be paid to any receiver, trustee or officer in bankruptcy, or appointed by any court or otherwise, but same shall be payable, transferable and deliverable solely, only and exclusively to each and every beneficiary hereinabove specifically designated and named, according to the terms of this trust, personally, solely and individually, and the personal receipt therefor from the herein designated beneficiaries entitled to the same shall be a condition precedent to the payment or delivery thereof by said Trustee."

2. Paragraph 16 of the declaration of trust reads: "If and in the event that this trust shall, for any reason, or at any time prior to its final termination fail, in whole or in part; or said Trustee shall be unable, for any reason whatsoever, to pay any portion of the net income and/or the trust estate, in accordance with the terms hereof, and to the beneficiaries hereinabove designated and entitled to receive the same, the Trustee shall, at the time of the failing of this trust, in whole or in part, or its inability to pay the income and/or principal, in whole or in part, to the beneficiaries designated herein and entitled to receive the same, in accordance with all the express terms of this trust, forthwith convey, transfer and deliver such part of the income and/or trust estate so failing, to the beneficiaries and in accordance with all the provisions hereinabove specifically named, set forth and expressed in Paragraph IX of this Declaration of Trust, anything to the contrary in this trust notwithstanding."

funds in the United States were "blocked." When on December 11, 1941, the United States declared war on Germany, the Trading With the Enemy Act (50 U.S.C.A. Appendix, § 1 et seq.) became operative to permit seizure of enemy property. In 1949 and 1952 the Attorney General, under the authority of that act, executed Vesting Orders Nos. 13539 and 19000 respectively, by which he vested in himself for the benefit of the United States "all right, title, interest and claim of any kind or character whatsoever" of the German beneficiaries "in and to and arising out of or under" the Brockman trust. On June 24, 1953, General License No. 101 was issued, releasing property previously blocked under Executive Order No. 8389 but providing that the License would not affect property which had been vested by the Attorney General. 8 C.F.R. (1958), § 511.101.

The judgment, insofar as pertinent here, declares that the funds impounded prior to June 24, 1953, were distributable to the beneficiaries designated in paragraph 9 other than the German beneficiaries and that the income and corpus impounded or becoming distributable on or after June 24, 1953, should be paid to the beneficiaries, including the Germans, according to the trust instrument.

The language of paragraphs 13 and 16 of the trust instrument leaves no doubt that the trustor intended that they be treated as a unit, and, when so treated, they clearly provide, by means of a gift over to the beneficiaries designated in paragraph 9, for the termination of any interest in the trust or its income which a beneficiary, because of a disability like the one involved here, cannot personally receive at the time the property becomes distributable. It is also clear that the trustor intended that those beneficiaries whose interests are terminated by the operation of paragraphs 13 and 16 would not be entitled to take under the reference in the gift over provision to the persons designated in paragraph 9.

[1,2] Obviously the requirement of paragraph 13 that payment must be made to each beneficiary "personally, solely and individually" would not be satisfied by a payment to the Attorney General under the vesting orders. Since the vesting orders prevented payment to the German beneficiaries in the manner required by paragraph 13, the gift over provisions contained in paragraph 16 became operative and the rights of the German beneficiaries were terminated. The Attorney General could not acquire as a result of the vesting orders greater rights or interests than those held by the aliens (In re Estate of Knutzen, 31 Cal.2d 573, 578, 191 P.2d 747), and when their rights were terminated nothing remained which the Attorney General could obtain. Insofar as concerns the acquisition of the German interests by the government, the vesting orders, which terminated them, were self-destructive.

It is true that paragraph 13 is what is commonly called a spendthrift provision, and it has been held that such a provision, standing alone, will not prevent a vesting order from reaching the interests of beneficiaries of a trust. In re Estate of Zuber, 146 Cal.App.2d 584, 596, 304 P.2d 247; see 2 Scott on Trusts (2d ed. 1956), § 157.4, pp. 1123-1124. However, our determination that the Attorney General cannot obtain anything from the trust is not based on paragraph 13 alone but, as we have seen, upon the gift over provision contained in paragraph 16 read in conjunction with paragraph 13.

It may be noted that the trust was created in 1922, a few years after the first world war, during which the property of enemy aliens had been seized by the United States Government, and at a time when the collapse of the German currency created a danger of seizure by the German government of the foreign assets of German residents. The trustor, in drafting paragraphs 13 and 16, may thus have had in mind the purpose of avoiding seizure of the interests of the German beneficiaries. In any event, the provisions are clearly applicable to the vesting orders and prevent the obtaining of any part of the income or corpus by the Attorney General.

A similar conclusion was reached in the only two cases which present comparable facts. In In re Estate of Thramm, 80 Cal. App.2d 756, 183 P.2d 97, the testatrix had made bequests to American and German nationals and provided that if it were impossible to settle her estate "with Germany" a year after her death, everything should go to certain American relatives. The Alien Property Custodian issued a vesting order with respect to the interests of the German legatees. The court held that it was the intention of the testatrix that if her German relatives could not actually receive the bequests made to them, her relatives in the United States, and not some governmental agency, should take the bequests and that the American relatives and not the Alien Property Custodian were entitled to the property. In Harvard Trust Co. v. Attorney General, 329 Mass. 79, 106 N.E.2d 269, 271, in which a testamentary trust contained a gift over to "my then heirs-at-law" operative upon the trustee's inability "to distribute as hereinbefore provided," it was held, even in the absence of a provision requiring payment to the beneficiaries personally, that payment to the Attorney General would not fulfill the intention of the testatrix and that the vesting order caused the gift over to become effective.

The cases of In re Estate of Neumeister, 146 Cal.App.2d 290, 304 P.2d 67, and In re Estate of Zuber, 146 Cal.App.2d 584, 304 P.2d 247, on which the Attorney General relies, are not contrary to our conclusion. These cases, applying the rule stated in Sinclair v. Crabtree, 211 Cal. 524, 528, 531, 296 P. 79, that contingent future interests are property interests capable of transfer and inheritance, recognized the right of the Attorney General to certain contingent future interests of enemy aliens as to which he had issued vesting orders. Although in the present case the German beneficiaries acquired contingent future interests in the income and corpus of the trust at the time the trust was created, these interests, as we have seen, were terminated as a result of the gift over provision, and the cases cited by the Attorney General are distinguishable because they did not involve such provisions.

[3] The basis of the distinction is clearly shown in the recent case of Kammholz v. Allen, D. C., 155 F.Supp. 511, 515-516, where the court stated that it would be against public policy to sanction the circumvention of the intent of Congress by deferring the payment to enemy aliens until such payments once again become legal, but that it is clearly not against public policy to avoid confiscation by providing that, if a gift to an alien fails, a gift over is made to an alternate legatee who is not barred from taking by virtue of the Trading With the Enemy Act. In re Estate of Neumeister, 146 Cal.App.2d 290, 304 P.2d 67, and In re Estate of Zuber, 146 Cal.App.2d 584, 304 P.2d 247, come within the first part of this statement because the instruments involved in those cases did not contain any provision for absolute termination of the interests of incapacitated beneficiaries but instead provided for the preservation of the interest of such beneficiaries until the incapacity be removed. On the other hand, the instruments involved in Re Estate of Thramm, 80 Cal.App.2d 756, 183 P.2d 97; Harvard Trust Co. v. Attorney General, 329 Mass. 79, 106 N.E.2d 269, and the present case, contain termination and gift over provisions of the type declared to be valid in the second part of the statement in the Kammholz case.

[4] We find no merit in the contention of the Attorney General that, even if the construction of the trust instrument which denies him any right to enjoyment of the income and principal of the trust were correct, the vesting orders nevertheless would entitle him to the property interests of the German beneficiaries as distinguished from the enjoyment of the property. When the interest of a beneficiary of a trust is devoid of any possibility of present or future enjoyment, it lacks all substantiality and cannot be recognized.

[5] Our determination that the rights of the German beneficiaries were brought to an end by the vesting orders leads to the conclusion that the American beneficiaries were entitled to the entire beneficial interest in the trust, but the Americans have not appealed, and the judgment is final as to them.

[6] Although the Attorney General has no right to any part of the income or corpus of the trust and no appeal has been taken by the persons whose pecuniary interests have been adversely affected by the judgment, the Attorney General nevertheless contends that he has been injured by it, giving him the right to appeal, on the theory that he is entitled to appear in the public interest to prevent the German beneficiaries from taking anything.

In our opinion the public did not have an interest in withholding property from the German beneficiaries after June 24, 1953, the date from which the trial court ordered that payments and distributions to the German beneficiaries be resumed. On October 19, 1951, a joint resolution of Congress (65 Stats. 451), 50 U.S.C.A. Appendix, preceding section 1 terminated the state of war between the United States and the government of Germany, and it provided that German property which had been vested, or which, before January 1, 1947, was subject to vesting, would retain its prior status in that respect. By implication it terminated the power of the Attorney General to vest property which was not subject to vesting prior to that date.

3. The reservations in the joint resolution and the General License with respect to property which had already been vested were made for the sole purpose of having the vested property available for the payment of war claims. (War Claims Act, 50 U.S.C.A. Appendix, §§ 2001-2013; see letter of President Truman, dated July 9, 1951, 97 Cong. Rec. 7762, asking that Congress terminate the state of war with Germany and, among other things, retain federal control of vested property for the purpose of paying war claims.) Since, as we have seen, the Attorney General cannot obtain any of the trust property, and since, therefore, the property will

On June 24, 1953, as we have seen, General License No. 101 was issued releasing property previously blocked under Executive Order No. 8389 but providing that the License would not affect property which had been vested by the Attorney General and making certain other exceptions not pertinent here.<sup>3</sup> 8 C.F.R. (1958), § 511.101.

The obvious conclusion is that, subject to the exceptions referred to above, the joint resolution and the General License brought to an end the public policy of preventing former enemies from holding assets in the United States. This is in accord with the following statement of President Truman in a letter dated July 9, 1951 (97 Cong. Rec. 7762), asking that Congress terminate the state of war with Germany: "This action * * * will * * * create a firmer foundation for the developing structure of peaceful and friendly relationships and will remove disabilities to which German nationals are subject. * * *" [Italics added.]

The public interest thus will not be affected by any transfers of property to the German beneficiaries subsequent to the effective date of the General License. It was not until after that date that the German beneficiaries were given interests in the trust by the judgment of the trial court, and the judgment provides that only such property as has or will become available for distribution on or after that date will be distributed to the Germans. The public, therefore, has no interest in preventing the distributions to the German not be available for the payment of war claims, the reservations contained in the joint resolution and the General License have no bearing upon this case.

Another exception in the General License is that it does not apply to any property blocked by reason of the interest of any individual or organization "which on December 31, 1946, was in any of the areas of Germany under control or administration of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics * * *," but the parties have agreed that all the German beneficiaries of the trust were in the Western Zone of Germany at that date.

beneficiaries which are directed by the judgment, and the Attorney General cannot properly be regarded as having been injured by the distributions in which, as we have seen, he has no pecuniary interest.

The judgment is affirmed.

Hearing Denied Dec. 17, 1958.

Breach of contract action. The Superior Court, San Mateo County, Edmund Scott, J., rendered judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, St. Clair, J. pro tem., held that where there have been intentional major deviations from terms of contract the "good faith" required by the substantial performance rule is lacking; and held that on remand for trial on issue of damages only after appellate court determination that contract had been breached, defendant had had no right to prove, or attempt to prove, substantial performance.

Affirmed.

1. Contracts Ⓒ295(1)

Under the "substantial performance rule," where builder exercised good faith and substantially performed contract, omissions and deviations have not substantially affected usefulness of building for intended purposes, owner has taken possession of building and is enjoying fruits of builder's work, and failure to make full performance can be compensated in damages, builder may, in an action on contract, recover contract price, less amount allowed as damages.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Substantial Performance Rule".

2. Appeal and Error Ⓒ1195(1) Contracts Ⓒ295(1)

Where there have been intentional major deviations from terms of contract the "good faith" required by the substantial performance rule is lacking; and on remand for trial on issue of damages only after appellate court determination that, by virtue of intentional deviations, contract had been breached, defendant was foreclosed by law of case from proving, or attempting to prove, substantial performance.

3. Appeal and Error Ⓒ171(1)

On appeal in breach of contract action, defendant was bound by his theory in trial court and on appeal that lack of willfulness was a necessary prerequisite to invoking the "value" rule (measuring damages by difference in value between building as constructed and as it should have been constructed) instead of the "cost" rule (making cost of reconstruction measure of damages).

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Cost Rule" and "Value Rule".

4. Damages ⇨120(3)

Where there had been intentional major deviations from terms of contract, builder could not successfully claim the "lack of willfulness" which, under theory advanced by him, was a necessary prerequisite to invocation of the "value" rule for measuring damages.

5. Damages ⇨163(1)

Defendant seeking to invoke the "value" rule for measuring damages for breach of building contract has burden of proving that economic waste would result from replacement of omissions and defects; and defendant himself advancing theory that the "value" rule can be applied only if a substantial part of what has been done must be undone in order to meet contract requirements had burden of proving that such condition was met.

Ropers & Majeski, Redwood City, for respondents.

ST. CLAIR, Justice pro tem.

Defendant appeals from a judgment against him in the amount of $47,400 in favor of the 24 plaintiffs.

The defendant is a builder-contractor. Plaintiffs are third party beneficiaries of a contract between the defendant and the United States Government and sue for a breach thereof.

Plaintiffs, twelve couples, bought similar houses in a tract built by defendant. The complaint originally alleged causes of action for fraudulent misrepresentation and breach of contract. On a prior appeal, the court held that the causes of action for fraudulent misrepresentation were not proved as to nine couples, but that causes for breach of contract were established for all. The judgments were "reversed with instructions to the trial court to retry the issue of damages only, and when such damages have been ascertained, to enter judgments in favor of respondents in the amounts so fixed." Shell v. Schmidt, 126 Cal.App.2d 279, 294, 272 P.2d 82, 91.

At the second trial plaintiffs waived their separate and individual causes of action for fraud and went to trial on a single cause of action by all plaintiffs, as third party beneficiaries, for breach of contract.

There was and is some difference of opinion as to what the law of the case is, as decided by the first opinion. All parties agreed, however, that it is the law of the case that defendant breached the contract. The principal problem was the choice of the applicable measure of damages.

The first opinion established the measure of damages, in the general words of Civil Code, section 3300, and the trial court here quite properly instructed in those words. However, that did not answer the refinement thereof raised by the defendant.

At this trial it was the theory of the plaintiffs that the proper measure of damages was what will hereafter be referred to as the cost theory, i. e., the cost of making the work conform to the contract. The defendant vigorously advanced what will hereafter be referred to as the value theory, i. e., the measure of damages is the difference between the value of the structure as planned and its value as built.

Before examining the contentions of the parties, a review of the record at the second trial is necessary; first, to look at certain offers of proof made by the defendant and, secondly, to determine if the defendant was in fact precluded from proving parts of his offer and the resultant effect, on defendant's position, of the proof he made.

The principal items of deviation from the specifications that constituted the admitted breach of the contract were: (1) the exterior walls had no wood sheathing and consisted of construction paper covered with chicken wire and thereon an application of stucco; (2) the installation of one floor furnace of 35,000 B.T.U. capacity instead of two furnaces of 30,000 B.T.U. capacity each; and (3) the use of sheet rock with taped joints for the interior walls instead of gypsum lath and plaster.

In the first opinion the court said: "All testified that their homes were not only underheated, but that, because of the inadequate exterior walls, they became damp and cold, and that mold and mildew grew on the back room walls. The evidence is ample and substantial to the effect that largely because of the inadequate exterior walls, and partly because of the inadequate heating equipment, the plaintiffs were made quite uncomfortable, and did not receive a house of the quality and type called for by the plans and specifications." 126 Cal.App.2d 279, at page 284, 272 P.2d 82, at page 86, supra.

Plaintiffs advance this as the law of the case. Defendant disagrees.

Plaintiffs, without objection, at the second trial testified at length to the same facts. Some testified to the inferences referred to by the court. Certainly the defendant had in mind such inferences as he put in evidence to rebut them.

In addition to the above, plaintiffs put in experts who testified as to the cost of correcting the major breaches of the contract.

At the end of the plaintiffs' case the defendant made several offers of proof. The offers were formalized twice, in chambers, and there was a great deal of discussion concerning them. The following would appear to be a fair statement of what the defendant offered to prove.

As to the three breaches.

1. Exterior wood sheathing. Defendant made every effort to obtain sheathing but was unable to do so. None was available. Experts would testify that the type of construction used (somewhat exotically known as bellyband type of construction) and the manner in which it was done was equally as good as wood sheathing, in fact it was better because, at the time, only green lumber was available and its shrinking would crack the stucco. Experts would say that the dampness was not a result of using bellyband construction instead of wood sheathing; it is a matter of atmosphere, a condition caused by the manner in which the houses were vented; it is a humidity problem that arises from many factors.

2. Interior walls. Defendant made every effort to obtain plastering labor and materials essential to plastering the walls but was unable to obtain the same. The wall board that was substituted for the plaster is equally as good and can be used under the applicable F.H.A. regulations.

3. The furnace. Defendant provided what he had been advised was a better heating system than the one called for in the contract. One floor type of 50,000 B.T.U. capacity is preferable for heating a house to two 30,000 B.T.U. capacity wall type furnaces. Defendant was able to put in the floor type furnace because he had put in the much better conventional type of foundation rather than the slab type called for in the specifications.

As to the measure of damages.

Willfulness.

1. There was no willfulness or intentional action on defendant's part in making the first two omissions in question. He was compelled to complete the houses the way he did because of the shortages of labor and material. Defendant orally reported his inability to get materials to F.H.A. and was orally authorized to go ahead with what he could get. (Exhibit A attached to plaintiffs' complaint, a copy of application by defendant to F.H.A. for increase in selling price; this application showed some of the changes.)

2. Substantial performance. The houses, as built, are superior to the houses called for in the specifications, are of better construction and built on a better foundation.

3. Value. The houses as built were more valuable than the houses called for in the specifications. Certain of the plaintiffs sold their houses at a higher price than was paid the defendant for them.

Defendant's evidence at the second trial.

The exterior wooden sheathing's function would have been "backing" for the plaster; it had no insulating function or value at all. The boards are not put on close together. The sheet rock used in the interior is composed of the same material as plaster but is preformed in a factory instead of put on wet on the wall. It is taped together.

Dampness and mildew is a matter of ventilation. When by some circumstances of the location of windows and doors a dead air space prevails in a room, that creates dampness.

As to the exterior, it was not necessary to remove the stucco; plywood could be placed over the stucco, wire netting over the plywood and then stucco over that.

On the interior, one could leave the plasterboard up, put wire netting over it and then plaster.

The cost of the last two operations would be $1,391 plus 11% profit, or a total of $1,544.

After the above two procedures, the houses would be superior to the original proposed house.

There is nothing in the original specifications that says anything about how the exterior sheathing and interior plastering are to be applied.

If the houses had the exterior sheathing they would not (1) save any loss of heat through the walls, (2) act as a vapor barrier, or (3) be any warmer. Construction methods of walls have no effect on moisture and mildew in a house. It is a condition that comes from heating the house. As the temperature inside is raised, humidity is raised and a dew point is reached; condensation occurs, strikes a cold wall and causes mold.

Nowadays wooden sheathing is not often used on account of the cracking that comes from the wood.

The jury quite evidently did not believe much of the testimony.

All during the trial and up to the time of oral argument, the defendant took the position that he had substantially performed the contract, and from that fact certain hereinafter referred to matters flowed. During the offer of proof, counsel for defendant said: "Now, it seems to me that we should be entitled to elicit evidence to show that what was done is equally as good as what was called for and that, from that standpoint, we have substantially complied with our contract."

[1,2] There are many statements of the rule of substantial performance. Thomas Haverty Co. v. Jones, 185 Cal. 285, 197 P. 105, is a leading case in California and was cited by both parties to the trial court. The rule as laid down there reads: "It has now been greatly relaxed, and it is settled, especially in the case of building contracts, where the owner has taken possession of the building and is enjoying the fruits of the contractor's work in the performance of the contract, that if there has been a substantial performance thereof by the contractor in good faith, where the failure to make full performance can be compensated in damages, to be deducted from the price or allowed as a counterclaim, and the omissions and deviations were not willful or fraudulent, and do not substantially affect the usefulness of the building for the purposes for which it was intended, the contractor may, in an action upon the contract, recover the amount unpaid of his contract price, less the amount allowed as damages for the failure in strict performance." (185 Cal. at page 289, 197 P. at page 107).

It was to this rule that the defendant's offers of proof were addressed. He maintained that if he could show that he had no bad faith, his deviation from the contract would not be "willful" within the meaning of the rule. The learned trial judge took the position that "willful" meant "intentional" (as indeed Black's Legal Dictionary says it does) and that the deviations were obviously "intentional"; that he would not permit proof of the excuses for nonperformance as he was faced with the prior decision and the law of the case that these deviations constituted breaches of the contract for which the defendant was liable.

Although not expressed in so many words, it appeared to be the theory of counsel for plaintiffs, and acquiesced in by the court, that to permit the defendant so to do would be retrying the matter of liability whereas it was the law of the case that defendant was liable.

The trial court's logic was impeccable. If one of the necessary components of substantial performance was that the deviations from the contract were not willful and if willful means intentional, and if the defendant obviously acted intentionally, then it could not be substantial performance.

In none of the California cases discussing the rule of substantial performance is mention made of whether or not there is a breach of the contract when there is substantial performance. There is a remarkable lack of definiteness of the legal status of the contract vis-à-vis the legal status of the contracting parties.

In Joseph Musto Sons-Keenan Co. v. Pacific States Corp., 48 Cal.App. 452, 192 P. 138, the problem came up as a matter of pleading and findings. Plaintiff, the contractor, had alleged full performance of the contract. He proved substantial performance. The court made detailed findings, perhaps probative, that showed substantial performance by plaintiff and the amount of recoupment by defendant and then made an ultimate finding that the work was done in accordance with the contract.

Defendant insisted on reversal. The court said: "Since a substantial performance is performance (Rowe v. Gerry, 112 App.Div. 358, 98 N.Y.S. 380), and all that is required to sustain an allegation of performance, and since the probative findings referred to show such performance, it follows that, instead of being inconsistent with the allegation of full performance, the findings to that effect are in full accord with

If "substantial performance" is "performance" then, in the instant case, the ruling that the contract had been breached would seem to preclude the defendant from advancing substantial performance at the second trial.

In addition to the difficulties created for the defendant's theory of substantial performance by the logic of the trial judge's position and by the Musto case, he was faced with Perry v. Quackenbush, 105 Cal. 299, 38 P. 740. In appellant's reply brief he dismisses the case, claiming it is not applicable because it is a contractor's action for compensation without any cross-complaint for damages.

Appellant is in error. It was a suit by the purchaser against the contractor, to cancel a note and mortgage given defendant as consideration for building a house.

The trial court in the Perry case found, in effect, that there had not been substantial performance. After an extended discussion of the equitable rule of substantial performance the court said: "Since the rule as to what shall constitute performance has become so indefinite, it is an important consideration, in determining whether there has been a substantial performance, that the deviations are so slight that they might have been made by one who was honestly endeavoring to comply with his contract.

"Good faith, however, on the part of the contractor, is not enough. The owner has a right to a structure in all essential particulars such as he has contracted for; and, to authorize a court or jury to find that there has been a substantial performance, it must be found that he has such a structure. The court cannot say that any thing is immaterial which the parties have made material by their contract. One has the right to determine for himself what he deems a good foundation, or what materials he desires to be used; and, if he contracts for them, neither the contractor nor the court has the right to compel him to accept something else, which may be shown by the witnesses to be just as good, or even better." (105 Cal. at pages 309-310, 38 P. at page 742.)

Another hurdle facing the defendant in his attempt to invoke the value rule as the measure of damages based on an alleged substantial performance of the contract is that the degree of deviation must be minor. In the Thomas Haverty Co. case, supra, the court, in analyzing the rule of substantial performance, and its growth, uses the word "trivial" to describe the degree of deviation that is permitted. The word "trivial" is used in the same way in the Corpus Juris Secundum statement of the rule of substantial performance, Contracts, § 509, page 1087 of Vol. 17. The Musto case, supra, also uses the word trivial to describe the permissible deviations.

The trial judge time and again considered the application of the component of triviality and repeatedly pointed out that these were major deviations, not trivial.

It is difficult to see how deviations major enough to constitute a breach of the contract could be, in any semantic or actual sense, trivial.

The defendant repeatedly offered to prove that the deviations from the contract had been in good faith, either by direct proof thereof or the negative thereof, by proving that the deviations were not willful. At the oral argument on appeal defendant's position was that the cases used willful or intentional in the sense of being wanton or almost intentional disregard of the other person's rights; not an intentional adjustment to something that makes performance difficult or impossible.

Can there be "good faith" where there have been deviations from the contract sufficient to constitute, as a matter of law, breaches of the contract?

At 6 A.L.R., 137 there is an annotation entitled "Willful or intentional variation by contractor from terms of contract in regard to material or work as affecting measure of damages."

All the cases in the annotation (California, D.C., Mass., Minn., Mont., New York, N.D., Penn.) (the California case was Perry v. Quackenbush, supra) indicate that the majority rule is that whether or not the deviation from the contract was intentional is relevant in determining if there has been substantial performance. They do not indicate that there need be malice or fraud on the part of the contractor to show a lack of substantial performance, nor that the absence of such a finding alone would entitle the contractor to a different measure of damages.

Tracing the annotation through the A.L.R. Blue Book, we find the 1941 California case of Henderson v. Oakes-Waterman, Builders, 44 Cal.App.2d 615, 112 P.2d 662, cited as part of the annotation. One of the reasons this is of especial interest is that Henderson v. Oakes-Waterman, Builders, was cited to the trial court in the second trial and relied upon, in part, by him.

These cases hold there cannot be the "good faith" required by the substantial performance rule if there have been willful and intentional major deviations from the terms of the contract.

There is no question that the defendant's position was and is that although he did not do what was called for, he did something equally as good and that that was substantial performance of the contract.

No case was cited by defendant, and none found, that held that major deviations from the contract, that had been held to constitute a breach of the contract, could constitute substantial performance.

We hold that under the law of the case, and the factual developments, including the facts defendant offered to prove, the defendant was not entitled to prove or attempt to prove, substantial performance of the contract on his part.

The above holding does not, however, dispose of the appeal. In his reply brief, defendant advanced another theory as to why he was entitled to instructions on the value theory instead of, or at least alternatively to, the cost theory.

On appeal, the defendant, to all intents and purposes, abandoned his contention that he should have been permitted to prove substantial performance, and claims the right to prove lack of willfulness for another reason. At the oral argument, defendant said: "If there is an inexcusable or willful violation, then the cost of reconstruction is the measure of damages, no matter how high. If there is not a willful violation, then the cost of reconstruction is the measure of damages, unless it is disproportionately high—I will come to that in a moment—in which case, if it is disproportionately high, and there is no willful breach, the measure of damages is the difference in value between the houses as constructed and as they should have been constructed."

Nowhere in the cases cited by defendant, or in any cases or authorities found by the court was there found a rule expressed in exactly this way. In the books there are many expressions of what circumstances or set of circumstances are required to "trigger" the change from the cost rule to the value rule.

Professor Williston, in his work on Contracts (Revised Edition) section 1363, pages 3825-3826 of Vol. 5, advances a rule that does not require "good faith" or "lack of willfulness"; only requiring that the defect not be remediable from a practical standpoint to "trigger" the change. The Restatement of Contracts, section 346, pages 572-573, does not require good faith or lack of willfulness but does require a showing of "unreasonable economic waste."

Corbin on Contracts, Vol. 5, page 408, sections 1089 et seq. states that the cost theory prevails "if this is possible and does not involve unreasonable economic waste" (p. 409). The author goes on to say, at page 410: "Without question, the contract breaker should pay the cost of construction and completion in accordance with his contract unless he proves affirmatively and convincingly that such construction and completion would involve an unreasonable economic waste."

The defendant does not invoke, or seek to invoke the Williston, Restatement, or Corbin rules but cites, in his Reply Brief, the rule laid down in American Jurisprudence, Vol. 9, Building and Construction Contracts, section 152, page 89. The full statement of this rule is: "The fundamental principle which underlies the decisions regarding the measure of damages for defects or omissions in the performance of a building or construction contract is that a party is entitled to have what he contracts for or its equivalent. What the equivalent is depends upon the circumstances of the case. In a majority of jurisdictions, where the defects are such that they may be remedied without the destruction of any substantial part of the benefit which the owner's property has received by reason of the contractor's work, the equivalent to which the owner is entitled is the cost of making the work conform to the contract. But where, in order to conform the work to the contract requirements, a substantial part of what has been done must be undone, and the contractor has acted in good faith, or the owner has taken possession, the latter is not permitted to recover the cost of making the change, but may recover the difference in value. In some jurisdictions, however, it seems to be the rule that the measure of damages for defective work under a building contract is such a sum as is required to make the building conform to the plans and specifications, regardless of whether it is necessary to tear down and reconstruct part of the work already done."

[3] It would appear that defendant is bound by his theory of the case in the trial court and here on appeal. Proof of lack of willfulness is a necessary component, amongst others, which he must prove to "trigger" the invoking of the value rule, vis-à-vis the cost rule, on which latter the trial judge instructed.

While neither side has come up with a California case in which the upper court reversed or affirmed on the precise narrow point of choice between the cost or value rule of measure of damages, it is clear that in California the difference is understood and applied.

In the leading case of Thomas Haverty Co. v. Jones, supra, the court at page 296 of 185 Cal., at page 110 of 197 P. said: "We do not think the findings sustain the contention of the defendant that the court measured the damages by the difference in the service value of the building rather than by the difference in the market value thereof. For the defects classed as remediable the damage was measured by the reasonable cost of correction thereof. For the other defects, it is plain that the damages allowed did not consist of the difference in cost, but were measured by the difference between the value of the building with those imperfections and its value without such imperfections. This contention, therefore, is not sustained by the record."

There is an excellent collection of cases from the various jurisdictions and an annotation on the cost and value theories in 123 A.L.R. 515. It is probably true, as stated therein, that the majority of the jurisdictions use the cost theory vis-à-vis the number of jurisdictions that use the value theory only. However, almost all of the jurisdictions that use the cost theory also present the exception either in the terms of the Williston, Restatement, Corbin or the American Jurisprudence versions of the rule.

There is an interesting variation on the general rule, to wit, the defendant is entitled to either the cost or value rule, whichever is the lower or less burdensome to him. Corbin, supra, refers to the rule and cites Texas Pacific Coal and Oil Co. v. Stuard, Tex.Civ.App., 7 S.W.2d 878, and Bigham v. Wabash-Pittsburg Terminal Ry. Co., 223 Pa. 106, 72 A. 318.

Texas Pacific Coal and Oil Co. v. Stuard, supra, is not authority for the statement, and is distinguishable on a peculiar set of facts. The plaintiff had pleaded and proved that either of two measures of damages would fully compensate him for his loss and the court said that under either or both theories the defendant was entitled to have the less expensive chosen.

Bigham v. Wabash, supra, adopted the measure of damage set out in the earlier Pennsylvania case of Seely v. Alden, 61 Pa. 302, 100 Am.Dec. 642, which latter case was a tort case for pollution of a stream. No comment was made re adopting a tort rule for a contract case. In later cases, Pennsylvania followed the general rule.

The applicability of the above minor variant rule to the instant case is that the defendant leans heavily on the New York case of Bellizzi v. Huntley Estates, 1 A.D. 2d 683, 147 N.Y.S.2d 74, 76. This case adopts the variant rule. The court said: "The court excluded evidence offered by defendant as to the value of the property, charged the jury that the measure of damages was the cost of making the driveway as the parties agreed, refused to charge that the rule of damages 'is the difference between the value of the building as constructed and its value had it been constructed conformably to the contract or the cost of repairs, whichever is the lesser.' In our opinion, such proof was erroneously excluded. The evidence should have been received, and the jury should have been instructed that if there was substantial performance of the whole contract on the part of the defendant, or if there was a breach of the contract by defendant and the failure to perform was not in bad faith, and destruction and reconstruction were necessary to get a driveway as was agreed to be built, the jury could not allow the cost thereof if such cost would exceed the difference between the value of the premises as they were with the driveway as built and the value with a driveway as it should have been built."

The New York court cited the Restatement, Williston, Corbin and the early New York case of Walter v. Hangen, 71 App. Div. 40, 75 N.Y.S. 683. As quoted above, it is clear that neither the Restatement nor Williston supports such a variant rule. We have previously discussed the Corbin reference to the variant rule and the paucity in number and lack of real support that his two cited cases give to the variant rule. Walter v. Hangen, supra, supports the variant rule.

In logic, the variant rule would not seem proper and certainly it is by way and far the minority rule.

Cases relied on by defendant.

Walsh v. Cornwell, 272 Mass. 555, 172 N.E. 855. Defendant relies heavily on this case, arguing that it is peculiarly persuasive under the facts. There, the selling price of the house was $13,400 and the cost of the reconstruction was "at least $4,000." Here, the selling price was $12,000 and the jury fixed the cost of reconstruction at $3,950.

The difficulty with the defendant's argument is that the Walsh case did not hold that the cost of reconstruction was so high as to bring into play the value rule.

The auditor (a fact finder) found that because of the defendant's "failure to build according to the plans and specifications serious defects resulted in the finished house" and that "it would have cost * * * at least $4000 to tear down parts of the structure and rebuild it to accord with * * * the contract * * *", but "it would not be practicable and economical to make all alterations necessary to make the house conform * * *." (172 N.E. at page 856.)

The court expressly said that the case was not tried or argued on the theory of any "intentional departure from the contract in a material matter." (172 N.E. at page 857.)

The court then applied the value rule, citing some Massachusetts cases and Williston, sections 1480-1483, 1485.

The "trigger" in this case was the finding that it was not "practicable and economical to make all alterations * * *." This would seem quite close to the Williston statement of the rule. H. P. Droher and Sons v. Toushin, 250 Minn. 490, 85 N.W. 2d 273.

Here, it was the builder that was suing for the balance of the contract price, the total price being $44,000.

The trial court found that plaintiff did not construct the house according to the plans and specifications.

The principal, practical difficulty was that a steel pole in the basement which acted as a support for a beam on which the floor joists rested was lower than it should have been.

Plaintiff insisted that he had installed the pole according to the specifications but the trial court findings were against it.

It was uncontradicted that it would cost in excess of $20,000 to repair the house. The court said: "On the cost of repair, James H. Speckmann, Severt Eric Olson, Robert W. Johnson, and Henry A. Anderson all testified that, in order to correct the defects existing in the house so as to make it plumb, level, and straight as it should have been built, it would be necessary to jack up the low beam in the basement in the center of the house and that the result of so doing would cause the plaster to crack, parts of the house would have to be rebuilt, and the whole job would require a great deal of work and expense and that in their opinion it would cost in excess of $20,000 to repair the damage. Olson, who is a builder during many years' experience, testified that he would not take the job on a contract for $20,000." (85 N.W.2d at page 282.)

The court, after citing the aforementioned rules from the Restatement and from American Jurisprudence said: "It would seem that the better rule and the one followed by a majority of the courts is that, where there is a substantial good-faith effort to perform the contract but there are defects of such a nature that the contract has not been performed according to its terms, which defects can be remedied without the destruction of a substantial part of the building, the owner is entitled to recover the cost of making the work conform to the contract but, where it appears that the cost or remedying the defects is grossly disproportionate to the benefits to be derived therefrom, the owner is entitled to recover the difference between the value of the property as it would have been if the contract had been performed according to its terms and the value in its condition as constructed. Cases such as we have here, where the evidence establishes a substantial good-faith performance, are to be distinguished from those where has been a wilful failure to perform at all, such as we had in Groves v. John Wunder Co., 205 Minn. 163, 286 N.W. 235, 123 A.L.R. 502."

The case was sent back for retrial on a very confused issue. The trial court, in its opinion, had indicated it was considering the cost rule as a measure of damages. In its findings it had used the value rule.

The court said (85 N.W.2d at page 281): "In view of the extensive damage which would have occurred as a result of any effort to correct the defects in this house, it was proper to apply the difference-in-value theory in assessing damages."

The only evidence put in to support the value rule was that one of the defendants testified that if the house had been built in accordance with the specification it would have been worth $65,000 to $68,000; that as it was constructed it was worth $48,000.

The court sent it back for a retrial in the difference in value.

It would appear that the court applied the majority rule and did not reverse the case because the cost rule had been adopted in a case where the cost of replacement was "disproportionately high."

The only case cited by defendant which explicitly states that substantial performance has nothing to do with actions for damages by the owner against the builder is Karlinski v. P. R. and H. Lumber and Construction Co., 1938, 68 N.D. 522, 281 N.W. 898. It is unlikely that substantial performance could have been found in that case. The contract was to repair and build an addition to a house, and install a furnace. The defendant cut through some joists, weakening the floor and causing the house to sag, the walls to crack, the stairway and a clothes-chute to sag, and the plaster to crack. The downstairs floors were not level. Some of the upstairs floor boards did not meet. The corner of the house sagged. In an attempt to jack up the house, the cellar wall gave way and collapsed into the basement. The cement in the basement was soft and full of holes. The chimney was cracked on three sides. Nails and joints were uncovered. Plaster fell out. The floors were not scraped. Some of the steps were loose and squeaked. The court held it was error to instruct the jury that the measure of damage was the difference in the value of the house as constructed and as contracted for, and that the jury should have been required to determine whether the defects were remediable, and if they were without taking down and reconstructing a substantial portion of the building, the damages were to be the cost of reconstruction, and if not, the damages were to be the difference in value. This case would appear to follow the Williston rule, not defendant's.

Hansen v. Andersen, 246 Iowa 1310, 71 N.W.2d 921, 923, quotes the language from 9 Am.Jur. 89, section 152 which seems to use "good faith" as an alternative to "substantial performance" to invoke the difference in value rule as to the damages. However, the court apparently believed this to be a case of substantial performance because it also quoted the language at 9 Am.Jur. 33, section 43 regarding the measure of damages in a substantial performance case as the same rule "in a somewhat different form."

The instant case was tried below and argued on appeal on the basis that the trial court refused to let the defendant prove "lack of wilfulness." In the trial court the defendant wanted to prove lack of willfulness, in the main, to bring himself within the substantial performance rule.

It would appear that defendant seeks to make "lack of wilfulness" the same as the good faith in which the defendant contractor is required to have acted under the general rule set forth in American Jurisprudence.

In the leading case of Thomas Haverty Co. v. Jones, supra, 185 Cal. at page 289, 197 P. at page 107, the court said that the omissions or deviations must not be "willful or fraudulent" (emphasis added). It is true that the court was there talking of the conduct necessary for a contractor to bring himself within the substantial performance rule and not the problem of whether to use the cost or value theory.

In Perry v. Quackenbush, supra, again talking about bringing oneself within substantial performance, the court said the failure must not have resulted from design or bad faith.

One of the obvious deductions from the above two leading California cases is that, in substantial performance cases, the word "willful" or "design" has no connotations of fraud or bad faith; else there would be no necessity to add the disjunctive of "or fraudulent" in the Thomas Haverty case, or of the "bad faith" in the Perry v. Quackenbush case.

The "lack of wilfulness" or "good faith" that defendant sought to prove would appear to be the negative of the "fraudulent" of the Thomas Haverty Co. case, supra, or the "bad faith" of the Perry case, supra, and not the negative of the simple willful in the sense of intentional.

The Haverty and Perry cases, although substantial performance cases, are particularly relevant to this discussion as the defendant vigorously contended that, in effect, he can prove substantial performance twice: once in the main case of liability and once in the choice between the cost or value theories as to the measure of damages.

In our previous discussion of whether or not the defendant had the right to prove, or attempt to prove, substantial performance, we found that the majority and better rule is that there cannot be the "good faith" required by the substantial performance rule if there have been intentional major deviations from the terms of the contract. See 6 A.L.R. 137.

[4] We hold that under the law of the case, and the facts proved and offered to be proved, there has been or would be a complete failure to prove, and it would be impossible to prove the "good faith" or "lack of wilfulness" required under the rule contended for by the defendant in the instant case.

In addition, it should be noted that the defendant did not prove, or offer to prove, the other factors of the American Jurisprudence rule, to wit: "a substantial part of what has been done must be undone." To the contrary, defendant's expert witness Albert Leroy testified that it would not be necessary to undo any of the work. He would simply (1) put the missing wood sheathing over the existing exterior stucco and re-stucco and (2) put plaster over the existing interior boards.

[5] As quoted, Professor Corbin argues that the burden is on the defendant to affirmatively and convincingly prove that economic waste would result from the replacement of the omissions and defects. In all fairness this would appear proper as it is the defendant who is seeking to prove a situation whereby he will get equitable relief from a rule of law. The same reasoning would apply as to proof that a substantial part of what has been done must be undone.

The judgment is affirmed.

164 Cal.App.2d 619

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Louie Ellis WESTON, Jr., Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 2845.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Oct. 28, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of offense of taking the motor vehicle of another without consent of owner and with intent to temporarily deprive owner of the possession of vehicle in violation of statute after prior conviction for a similar offense. The Superior Court, Mendocino County, Hale McCowen, J., rendered judgment, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that the evidence supported conviction.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ¶641(1)

On appeal from conviction for taking motor vehicle of another without consent of owner and with intent to temporarily deprive owner of possession of vehicle in violation of Vehicle Code, record showed that defendant was duly defended and that he received a fair trial. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 503.

2. Automobiles ¶355(10)

Evidence supported conviction for taking the motor vehicle of another without consent of owner and with intent to temporarily deprive owner of possession of vehicle in violation of Vehicle Code. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 503.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Defendant above named was charged with a violation of section 503 of the Vehicle Code, the information alleging that he did "take a motor vehicle not his own, to-wit, the motor vehicle owned by Doyle Crane, without the consent of the said Doyle Crane and with intent to temporarily deprive the said Doyle Crane of the possession of said motor vehicle." He was also charged with a prior conviction of a similar offense. He pleaded not guilty to the offense charged, but admitted the prior conviction. Following a trial, at which he was represented by the public defender, the jury returned a verdict of guilty. Judgment was pronounced and defendant has appealed from the judgment.

Upon appellant's request that an attorney be appointed to represent him upon the appeal, the court appointed Mr. Douglas C. Busath of the Sacramento Bar. Mr. Busath has informed the court that after a thorough review of the record it is his opinion that appellant had a fair trial and there are no meritorious grounds of appeal.

[1, 2] However, we have made a careful study of the entire record and agree that the appeal is without any merit whatever. The evidence is overwhelming that appellant took an automobile belonging to Doyle Crane in the city of Ukiah and, without the owner's permission, drove it to Clear Lake in Lake County where he was apprehended while in possession of the automobile. The record shows that appellant was ably defended; that he received a fair trial and that the evidence fully supports the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

Proceeding wherein plaintiff levied execution on defendant's wages pursuant to judgment. The Superior Court, Alameda County, Allen G. Norris, J., entered order denying defendant's claim of exemption, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that under statute providing that all earnings of debtor are exempt from execution or attachment if necessary for use of debtor's family residing within state unless debts are incurred by debtor, his family, or wife, for common necessities of life, burden of proof was upon defendant to establish his right to such an exemption, and where defendant's summary of obligations listed one obligation simply as "incidentals", and another as "installment contracts" which were not shown to be reasonably necessary for defendant or his family, and wife earned a certain amount of money per month which when added to the family balance sheet showed an excess of income over expenses, trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that certain amount of defendant's income was subject to execution.

1. Appeal and Error ☞770(1)

Where appellee filed no brief on appeal from trial court's order to effect that certain amount of appellant's monthly wages were subject to execution, District Court of Appeal could accept as true statement of facts in appellant's opening brief and could assume that appellant's claim that all of his wages were entirely exempt because necessary for support of his family was meritorious. West's Ann. Rules on Appeal, rule 17(b).

2. Appeal and Error ☞773(5)

Appellee's failure to file brief on appeal of case to District Court of Appeal does not mean that case will automatically be reversed, since burden to show error is on appellant, and therefore District Court of Appeal must examine appellant's brief to see if points raised are meritorious, and, if found not to be meritorious, should affirm. West's Ann. Rules on Appeal, rule 17(b).

3. Exemptions ☞48(1), 68

Basic theory underlying statute exempting all of earnings of debtor if necessary for support of debtor's family residing within state unless such debts were incurred by debtor, his wife or family, for common necessities of life, is that a debtor and his family, regardless of the debtor's improvidence, will retain enough money to maintain a basic standard of living in order that the debtor may have a fair chance to remain a productive member of the community, and statute should be liberally construed in order to effectuate this purpose. West's Ann. Code Civ. Proc. § 690.11.

4. Exemptions ☞148

Burden of proof is upon judgment debtor to establish his right to exemption under statute exempting from execution all the earnings of debtor if necessary for use of his family residing within state and supported in whole by debtor, unless debts for which execution is sought were incurred by debtor, his wife, or family, for common necessities of life. West's Ann. Code Civ. Proc. § 690.11.

5. Exemptions ☞68

The determination of what is necessary for the use of the debtor's family under statute exempting from execution all of the earnings of debtor if necessary for use of his family residing within state and supported in whole by debtor, unless debts for which exemption is sought were incurred by debtor, his wife, or family, for common necessities of life, must be largely left to the discretion of the trial court. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 690.11.

6. Exemptions § 123

Under statute exempting from execution all the earnings of debtor if necessary for use of his family residing within state and supported in whole by debtor, unless debts for which execution is sought were incurred by debtor, his wife, or family, for common necessities of life, defendant's summary listing of one obligation as "incidentals" and another as "installment contracts" without any further explanation by defendant whether they were necessary for defendant or his family, plus fact that defendant's wife earned a certain amount per month which if added to family balance sheet would show excess of income over expenses, did not entitle defendant to exemption of all of his earnings. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 690.11.

Jane H. Van Hook, Oakland, for appellant.

Stanley M. Fernwood, Oakland, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff has a final judgment against defendant for over $3,800. Plaintiff levied execution on defendant's wages. Defendant claimed that such wages were entirely exempt because all of his earnings were necessary for the support of his family, supporting such claim by the required affidavit. Plaintiff filed an affidavit in opposition. A hearing was had. No transcript of that hearing has been filed. The trial court entered a minute order to the effect "that Thirty-eight Dollars ($38.00) of the monthly wages is subject to execution." Defendant appeals.

[1,2] Plaintiff has failed to file a brief in support of the order. In such event, under Rule 17(b) of the Rules on Appeal "the court may accept as true the statement of facts in the appellant's opening brief." The court may assume that the point urged on appeal is meritorious. Postin v. Griggs, 66 Cal.App.2d 147, 151 P.2d 887; Bendlage v. Kohlsaatt, 54 Cal. App.2d 136, 128 P.2d 691. But this does not mean that the case will automatically be reversed. The burden to show error is on appellant. Therefore, the court must examine appellant's brief to see if the points raised are meritorious, and, if found not to be meritorious, should affirm. See, generally, 4 Cal.Jur.2d § 496, p. 334.

In his affidavit claiming the exemption defendant lists his income as $348 per month and his "necessary monthly expenses" as $375.50. Included in the list are "Installment Contracts—$71.00" and "Incidentals—$25.00." Appellant states in his brief that he and his wife testified at the hearing as the only witnesses; that appellant testified that he is regularly employed by Crown Paint Company and receives from them $348 monthly as wages; that his wife works intermittently as a domestic, averaging about $16 a week from this source.

Appellant claims that on such a record, as a matter of law, he is entitled to an exemption of all of his wages under section 690.11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section provides that one-half of the earnings of a wage earner for a fixed period are exempt from execution without filing a claim and that "All of such earnings, if necessary for the use of the debtor's family, residing in this State, and supported in whole or in part by such debtor" are exempt, upon filing a claim therefor unless the debts are incurred "for the common necessities of life" or for personal services of an employee of the debtor. Of course, whether such earnings are "necessary for the use of the debtor's family" presents a question of fact.

[3-5] The basic theory of such exemption is that a debtor and his family, regardless of the debtor's improvidence, will retain enough money to maintain a basic standard of living in order that the debtor may have a fair chance to remain a productive member of the community. Bailey v. Superior Court, 215 Cal. 548, 11 P.2d 865; Avilla v. Avilla, 81 Cal.App.2d 210, 183 P.2d 668. The statute should be liberally construed in order to effectuate this purpose. Holmes v. Marshall, 145 Cal. 777, 79 P. 534, 69 L.R.A. 67; Van Lue v. Wahrlich-Cornett Co., 12 Cal.App. 749, 108 P. 717. But the burden of proof is upon the judgment debtor to establish his right to such an exemption. Carter v. Carter, 55 Cal.App.2d 13, 130 P.2d 186; Bertozzi v. Swisher, 27 Cal.App.2d 739, 81 P.2d 1016; Murphy v. Harris, 77 Cal. 194, 19 P. 377. In determining whether the debtor has met this burden of proof the trial court is necessarily vested with wide discretion. This is so because the determination of what is "necessary for the use of the debtor's family" is not subject to precise definition, and differs with each debtor. Thus, the determination must be largely left to the discretion of the trial court. Sanker v. Humborg, 48 Cal.App.2d 205, 119 P.2d 433; see also Los Angeles Finance Co. v. Flores, 110 Cal.App.2d Supp. 850, 243 P.2d 139.

The trial court has impliedly found that the debtor has not met the required burden, and that $38 a month of his income is subject to execution, i. e., not "necessary" for him or for his family. In attacking this finding we are not supplied with a reporter's transcript. We are furnished with the two affidavits, and appellant's opening brief, which purports to summarize the evidence produced at the hearing. According to the affidavit and summary, appellant's obligations exceed his income by $27.50. But one such obligation is listed as "Incidentals" for which $25 is allocated. This does not prove, as a matter of law, that such "incidentals" were reasonably necessary for the debtor or his family. Another ambiguous and unexplained item is "Installment Contracts—$71.00." What the installments were for and whether the articles involved were necessary for the family does not appear. Appellant also concedes that his wife earns over $64 per month as a domestic. If this figure be included, the family balance sheet shows an excess of income over expenses.

[6] Under these circumstances it cannot be held that, as a matter of law, the trial court abused its discretion in finding that $38 a month of the debtor's income was subject to execution. The appellant has failed to meet the burden of establishing that all of his wages, including the $38, were "necessary" for the use of his family.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

Affirmed.

1. Contracts ☞350(1)

In action by plastering subcontractor against general contractor and its surety for extra work allegedly done by subcontractor at general contractor's direction in construction of certain buildings, evidence sustained finding that extra leveling coat of cement plaster which subcontractor applied to the exterior concrete surfaces of buildings was necessitated by failure of general contractor to properly prepare surfaces to receive the two coats of plaster called for by specifications.

2. Contracts ☞232(2)

"Extra work" as used in connection with a building contract means work arising outside of and entirely independent of the contract, something not required in its performance and not contemplated by parties, and not controlled by contract.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Extra Work".

3. Contracts ☞232(1)

Extra work as used in construction contract may be performed by contractor for owner or by subcontractor for general contractor.

4. Contracts ☞232(7)

Where extras in construction job are of a different character from work called for in the contract and no price is agreed on for extra work, their reasonable value may be recovered.

5. Contracts ☞350(1)

In action by plastering subcontractor against general contractor and its surety for extra work allegedly done at request of general contractor, evidence sustained finding that extra leveling coat of plaster placed on outside concrete surfaces because of failure of general contractor to prepare such surfaces properly was extra work required by general contractor.

In action by plastering subcontractor against general contractor and its surety to recover for extra work done in performance of subcontract, evidence sustained findings that extra leveling coat of plaster on concrete exterior surfaces of building was done at general contractor's direction, that extra coat was necessitated by imperfect performance of concrete work for which general contractor was responsible, and that general contractor was fully aware that architect's requirements could not be fulfilled without doing extra work.

7. Appeal and Error ☞991

Resolution of purely factual questions respecting performance of extra work by building subcontractor was for the trial court.

8. Appeal and Error ☞996

Since findings on factual questions were supported by substantial evidence, District Court of Appeal was without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial judge.

9. Contracts ☞332(3)

Requirement that waiver of condition that authority for extra work be in writing must be pleaded, is satisfied by allegations of facts which would constitute a waiver.

10. Contracts ☞332(3)

In subcontractor's action against general contractor for extra work done in performance of subcontract which provided that claims for extra work would not be allowed unless approved in writing, complaint incorporating subcontract and alleging that in addition to the work required to be done under the terms of subcontract and at the special instance and request of general contractor, subcontractor applied a leveling coat of cement plaster to the building, constituted sufficient pleading of waiver of requirement of written authority.

11. Contracts ☞232(4)

Where subcontractor required by building specifications to apply two coats of plaster to exterior surfaces submitted written offer to apply an extra leveling coat in order to cure imperfections in general contractor's work and general contractor thereafter directed subcontractor to proceed without referring to necessity of compliance with requirement of subcontract for written authority, general contractor's action constituted a waiver of provision that no claim would be allowed for extra work unless authorized by a written order.

12. Appeal and Error §§991, 996, 1011(1)

Generally, existence of an implied contract is usually a question of fact for trial court and where evidence is conflicting or where reasonable conflicting inferences may be drawn from evidence which is not in conflict, question of fact is presented for decision of trial court.

Monteleone & McCrory, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Mantalica, Barclay & Teegarden, Lewis C. Teegarden, Los Angeles, for respondent.

HERNDON, Justice.

In the court below plaintiff, C. F. Bolster Co., a subcontractor, recovered judgment against defendant, J. C. Boespflug Construction Company, the general contractor, and The Travelers Indemnity Company, its surety, for extra work allegedly done by plaintiff at defendant contractor's direction in the construction of certain school buildings for the Los Angeles City High School District. By the terms of a subcontract, dated October 12, 1954, plaintiff undertook to do the interior and exterior plastering work on the project in conformity with and subject to the plans and specifications for the agreed sum of $201,914.

The trial court made findings which sustained plaintiff's allegations that an extra leveling coat of cement plaster which it applied to the exterior concrete surfaces of said buildings was necessitated by the failure of the defendant properly to prepare them to receive the two coats of plaster called for by the specifications; that this extra work was done at defendant's direction and that the reasonable value of the labor and materials utilized therein was $8,135.96. Plaintiff took judgment for this amount with interest and attorneys' fees.

The subcontract incorporates by reference the plans and specifications on the project which were prepared by the architect, Mr. A. C. Zimmerman. See Enochs v. Christie, 137 Cal.App.2d Supp. 887, 889, 291 P.2d 200; Bell v. Rio Grande Oil Co., 23 Cal.App.2d 436, 440, 73 P.2d 662. Under the terms of the specifications so incorporated, all materials furnished and work done were subject to the architect's inspection and approval for the owner. The architect was declared to be the interpreter of the specifications and the judge of the quality of materials, workmanship and performance.

An entire section of the specifications, section "K", deals with the plastering work which was plaintiff's responsibility under the subcontract. This section required plaintiff to apply two coats of plaster: first a "brush coat" which was essentially a coat of paint consisting of colored stucco without sand; and, second, a "dash coat", which was described in the testimony as a soupy mortar mix sometimes applied with a "dash brush." The specified thickness of the dash coat was  $\frac{3}{8}$  of an inch and it was provided that "[t]he dashing shall be done with a plasterer's dash brush using a strong whipping motion to secure a good bond." It was provided in paragraph 56 of section "K" that "[a]t least one week prior to starting the work, the contractor shall make up samples of stucco work under the direction of the architect. The finished work shall match the approved samples in color and texture."

The specifications (section K) require that "Concrete surfaces to be plastered shall be finished, cleaned and sandblasted as specified in the section on Portland Cement Concrete. Before starting plastering, the subcontractor for the work of this section shall inspect all surfaces to be plastered and report to the contractor and inspector any surfaces to be plastered which have not been prepared for plastering as specified

* * *"

On February 11, 1955, plaintiff wrote defendant a letter reading as follows: "On the above project, we would like permission to machine apply the exterior stucco coat. It has been our experience, and the experience of the industry as a whole, that machine application produces a finished surface that is much superior to hand application. There will be no change in price." It will be noted that the foregoing requested a change from the method of application required by the above quoted section of the specifications which provided for application of the dash coat "with a plasterer's brush." Defendant transmitted the above letter to the architect on February 15, 1955, who wrote defendant as follows:

"Where stucco dash coat is specified, (Par. 55, Sec. K, Contract Specifications), the Architect will approve the application of stucco by machine, provided it is an air spray machine and the exterior woodwork is properly masked. A demonstration of the method of masking and application will have to be approved by the Inspector and the Architect before starting the stucco work. If the methods are approved, the Architect will process a change order to the above-referenced paragraph. Par. 56, Sec. K, Contract Specifications, requires samples of stucco work. If possible, these samples should be made at the time the machine application is demonstrated. As to the texture of the dash coat, the Architect has in mind a texture produced by a slight troweling of the dash coat. When you get ready to make the samples, the Architect will give you the address of a building to look at."

Defendant promptly transmitted the architect's letter to plaintiff, and subsequently notified plaintiff of the building to which the architect referred. By appropriate change order the specifications were modified to permit plaintiff to apply the stucco by means of a gun instead of by hand.

The section of the specifications on Portland Cement Concrete, section "E" (to which the above quoted plastering specifications referred), deals with the requirements of the concrete work for which defendant was responsible in this case. The provisions of this section required defendant to grind down or otherwise remove fins, pour lines, bulges, stains and irregularities of surfaces, and to sandblast the concrete surfaces which were to be plastered. It was further provided that "In addition, all exterior surfaces to be plastered with a dash coat shall have all irregularities removed which will show through the dash coat of plaster * * *."

There is substantial evidence in the record, both testimonial and photographic, tending to prove the unsatisfactory conditions of the concrete surfaces of the exterior walls which defendant constructed and on which plaintiff was obligated to apply plaster. There is testimony as to the existence of excessive numbers of ridges, protrusions, indentations, and other irregularities on the surface of the concrete which had to be removed by grinding or sandblasting operations conducted by defendant. And there is evidence that as a result of the sandblasting operations, there was considerable pitting and scoring of the concrete surfaces on which plaintiff was required to work.

Plaintiff offered expert testimony to prove that two coats of plaster, consisting of a brushcoat and a 3/32-inch dash coat, as called for by the specifications, would not cover the irregularities and imperfections in the concrete surfaces as prepared by defendant. There is testimony by an ex-employee of defendant which gives substantial support to plaintiff's contention that defendant was having serious difficulty in bringing the concrete surfaces up to specifications. This witness testified that at the time the concrete work was done he was defendant's construction superintendent on the job; that when the forms were removed "the concrete was in fair condition, except, when we started sandblasting, it opened a lot of voids, and that required a lot of filling"; that in his opinion a  $\frac{3}{32}$ -inch dash coat of stucco would not have been sufficient to cover the imperfections, and that his estimate of the cost of putting the concrete in shape so that the imperfections would be satisfactorily covered by the specified dash coat "would run around ten to twelve cents a square foot." The witness testified to conversations with plaintiff's representatives in which various methods of preparing the concrete surfaces for the application of plaster were discussed.

In June, 1956, plaintiff's employees prepared a number of samples of external stuccoing on a wall of one of the buildings which defendant had constructed. Among these samples were examples of both hand and machine application, including one consisting of a brush coat and a dash coat applied by hand as called for in the specifications. When these several samples were submitted to the architect for his approval, he rejected all except one which had been prepared by machine application with three coats of plaster. This sample had been prepared by the application of a machine-applied base or "float" coat of plaster considerably thicker than the dash coat called for in the specifications, followed by two machine applied dash coats.

In late July or early August defendant requested a bid from plaintiff for preparing the external concrete surfaces for the admitted purpose of avoiding any dispute as to responsibility for preparing the concrete surfaces. On August 18, 1955, plaintiff replied by letter with an offer to apply a "leveling coat" of plaster to the external concrete surfaces at an additional cost of $11,368. Defendant did not immediately respond to this offer. However, on September 28, 1955, defendant wrote to plaintiff as follows:

"With reference to your letter of August 18, 1955, regarding application of a leveling coat to exterior concrete surfaces, this is to advise that no such change was requested or authorized by this office.

"Subsequent to receipt of your letter the architect inspected the concrete surfaces of the buildings to receive dash coat and has approved the surfaces as fully complying with the requirements for preparation of concrete surfaces outlined in Section E of the contract specifications.

"The architect, at the same time, selected and approved one of the samples that you applied over said surfaces. This application of stucco dash coat will be applied by you in strict accordance with the specifications, particularly, Section K, and must meet with the architect's approval. Earlier in the year the architect gave conditional approval of a machine application for the dash coat, provided that such application first be approved by him. If it is impossible for you to secure a satisfactory and approved job, using mechanical methods, it may be necessary to revert to hand methods outlined in the specifications, which is your responsibility under the terms of our subcontract."

Plaintiff replied the following day as follows: "In accordance with our subcontract for plastering on the above mentioned construction, we are now, and have been for some time, ready to proceed with the application of dash coat of plaster on exterior concrete walls but have been unable to do so because surfaces have not been prepared for plastering. Pursuant to our contract and the specifications, we do hereby report to you that the concrete surfaces to be plastered have not been prepared for plastering as specified in the section of specifications on concrete Portland Cement. This surface preparation to be done is a part of Portland Cement concrete work as set forth in Section E, Paragraph 1-G and Section E, Paragraph 77 of specifications. This report is hereby given you pursuant to Section K, Paragraph 48 of specifications. When surfaces have been prepared, we shall proceed forthwith with the dash coat. Delay on your part is preventing us from proceeding and is resulting in additional costs to us in performance of our subcontract."

The foregoing assertions by plaintiff that the concrete surfaces were not properly or adequately prepared provoked a reply from defendant on October 4, 1955, in which defendant insisted that the concrete surfaces fully complied with the requirements of section "E" of the specifications, and proceeded to identify the buildings which were or would be ready to receive the plaster. The letter concluded: "You are herewith requested to proceed with your work as directed and cooperate in a proper manner to complete this job to our mutual advantage and preclude any further delays." (Emphasis added.)

Plaintiff replied to the letter of October 4 by letter dated October 13, 1955, stating: "Pursuant to the request contained in your letter of October 4, 1955, we are 'proceeding with the work as directed' by you. Before we can properly apply the dash coat as provided in the specifications, it is necessary that certain preparatory work be done to put the surfaces in a condition to receive the dash coat. At your request, we have begun such preparation, which consists of applying a stucco float finish to cover imperfections and irregularities in the concrete. Obviously there is a dispute between us concerning responsibility for doing the work above described, and it is our contention that such preparatory work is not a part of the plastering specifications. However, at your request we are proceeding with the work. The dispute can be resolved upon completion of the contract. In the meantime for our own protection, we are treating this preparatory work as extra work and will bill you accordingly."

It does not appear that defendant made any reply to the last quoted communication. Plaintiff thereafter proceeded with the plastering of the exterior walls of the four buildings utilizing the base or "float" coat described above followed by the application of two "dash" coats. In other words, plaintiff followed the method of application used in producing the sample which the architect had approved.

Both in the trial court and on this appeal, defendant has insisted most vigorously that the exterior plastering work for which plaintiff is compensated by the judgment at bar was neither requested by defendant nor necessitated by defective concrete surfaces, but was required by the inspector and architect as a condition of granting plaintiff's request for permission to apply the plaster by a machine method in lieu of the hand method called for in the specifications. This contention centers upon an issue of fact and constitutes an attack upon the trial court's Finding of Fact No. IX which reads as follows: "In addition to the work required of plaintiff under the terms of said subcontract and at the request of the defendant, J. C. Boespflug Construction Company, the plaintiff performed extra services and supplied extra materials consisting of an additional coat of cement plaster to all of the exterior concrete surfaces of the buildings at Westchester High School. By reason of said extra work, plaintiff's costs were increased and the reasonable value of said labor and materials is the sum of $8,135.96. Said sum became due and payable on September 16, 1956."

[1] Our review of the record convinces us that the challenged finding is amply sustained by substantial evidence.

It is clear from the recited evidence that as late as mid-October, 1955, plaintiff and defendant were in disagreement as to what performance by plaintiff would be necessary in order to produce exterior wall surfaces which would conform to the requirements of the specifications and meet with the approval of the architect. There was abundant evidence that the concrete surfaces as they appeared in August were quite unsuitable to receive the application of plaster. Defendant's request for plain-tiff's bid on the job of preparing the concrete could be construed most reasonably as indicating defendant's recognition that extra work was necessary. It bears repetition that the architect previously had rejected the sample of stucco work consisting of two coats applied in the manner prescribed in the original specifications and had approved a three-coat sample applied in the manner later followed by plaintiff in completing the work. It may be inferred from the evidence that defendant was fully informed concerning the architect's declarations in this regard. Defendant was advised by plaintiff's letter of October 13 that plaintiff considered itself under direction to apply the plaster in the manner which the architect had approved. In these circumstances, particularly in view of the urgency of the situation then existing, the last paragraph of defendant's letter of October 4 instructing plaintiff to proceed "as directed" was susceptible to interpretation as a demand that plaintiff proceed without further delay to apply the stucco in a manner that would satisfy both the architect and the specifications.

[2-8] Extra work as used in connection with a building contract means work arising outside of and entirely independent of the contract—something not required in its performance, not contemplated by the parties, and not controlled by the contract. *Frank T. In the instant case, as we have pointed out, the finding that extra work was required by the defendant is supported by substantial evidence to be found in the circumstances, in the communications attending the controversy and in the construction apparently placed on the contract by the parties as indicated by their conduct. Cf. Wyman v. Hooker, 2 Cal. App. 36, 41, 83 P. 79; Punton v. Sapp Bros. Construction Co., supra, 143 Cal. App.2d 696, 701, 300 P.2d 271; Frank T. Hickey, Inc., v. Los Angeles Jewish Community Council, supra, 128 Cal. App.2d 676, 681-683, 276 P.2d 52. Considering all the circumstances appearing from the record, it was not unreasonable for the trial judge to conclude that the extra work on the building was done at defendant's direction, that it was necessitated by imperfect performance of concrete work for which defendant was responsible and that defendant was fully aware that the architect's requirements could not be fulfilled without doing the extra work. See Bavin & Burch Co. v. Bard, 81 Cal. App. 722, 728-729, 255 P. 200; Frank T. Hickey, Inc., v. Los Angeles Jewish Community Council, supra; 9 Cal. Jur.2d 296, § 13. The resolution of these purely factual questions is within the exclusive province of the trier of the facts. See Greenwald v. Royal Indemnity Co., 112 Cal. App.2d 183, 185, 245 P.2d 1115; Lowry v. Law, 27 Cal. App. 483, 492, 150 P. 660. Since the findings are supported by substantial evidence this court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial judge. Primm v. Primm, 46 Cal.2d 690, 693-694, 299 P.2d 231; Crawford v. Southern Pacific Co., 3 Cal. 2d 427, 429, 45 P.2d 183; New v. New, 148 Cal. App.2d 372, 383, 306 P.2d 987.

[9-11] Defendant contends that a provision of the subcontract requiring a written change order specifying any extra work to be done bars any recovery by plaintiff. Section 12 of the subcontract provides as follows: "No claims for extra work * * will be recognized or paid for unless agreed to in writing before the work is done * * * in which writing shall be specified in detail the extra work or changes desired, * * *." Since no written authorization of this character was given, it is defendant's argument that plaintiff was required to plead and prove a waiver of this condition. See 25 Cal.Jur. 931, § 6. It is settled, however, that this requirement of pleading is satisfied by the allegation of facts which would constitute a waiver. Estrada v. Queen Ins. Co., 107 Cal.App. 504, 508, 290 P. 525. In the instant case the complaint incorporated the subcontract, including the requirement of a writing in connection with any extra work, and alleged "that in addition to the work required to be done by plaintiff under the terms of said subcontract, and at the special instance and request of the defendants, the plaintiff applied a leveling coat of cement plaster to the * * * buildings * * *." This pleading of a waiver is sufficient. Estrada v. Queen Ins. Co., supra, 107 Cal.App. 504, 508, 290 P. 525.

The second phase of defendant's argument on this point is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding of a waiver by defendant of the required writing. However, we have found the evidence sufficient to support the finding that the extra work was done at defendant's special instance and request. Plaintiff previously had submitted a written offer to do this work for a specified amount. Defendant thereafter directed plaintiff to proceed without referring to the necessity of compliance with the requirement of section 12 of the subcontract. It has been held that proof of similar conduct is sufficient to support the finding of a waiver. Wilson v. Keefe, 150 Cal.App.2d 178, 181, 309 P.2d 516; Cf. Frank T. Hickey, Inc., v. Los Angeles Jewish Community Council, supra, 128 Cal.App.2d 676, 682-683, 276 P.2d 52; and see 9 Cal.Jur.2d 296, § 13. As stated in Wyman v. Hooker, 2 Cal.App. 36, 41, 83 P. 79, 81: "The evidence showed that the extra work on the building was done with the knowledge and consent of defendant and his agent, and that they waived the written stipulation that a separate written estimate of extra work should be submitted, by orally agreeing to and countenancing the work without written estimates."

It was a purely factual question whether plaintiff adequately complied with the contractual provision requiring it to report to the contractor any surfaces not properly prepared before starting to plaster. It is implicit in the findings that the trial court resolved this issue in plaintiff's favor. Apart from the written communications from which we have quoted in our recital of the evidence, the record reveals that there were various discussions between the parties during the summer of 1955 in which the imperfections in the concrete surfaces were extensively discussed. Obviously, we cannot say that this evidence was insufficient to support a finding that the condition under discussion was adequately fulfilled. The same disposition must be made of defendant's argument that the extra work was occasioned solely by the change from the hand method to the machine method of application.

While it is true that the architect was constituted "the judge of the quality of materials and workmanship", his approval of the concrete surfaces could not properly be regarded as a binding adjudication of the issues which the trial court was called upon to decide in this case. There was no reason to believe that the architect as representative of the school district would ultimately have accepted buildings which failed to measure up to prescribed standards. It seems reasonable to conclude that as of mid-October, 1955, neither plaintiff nor defendant could predict with assurance whether or not the architect would accept the buildings after an application of the stucco in the manner provided by the original specifications. Indeed, the architect's rejection of a sample prepared in that way was a fact sufficient to support a finding that he probably would not have accepted them. At that time both plaintiff and defendant were faced with the necessity of making immediate decisions on the basis of their respective evaluations of the requirements of the specifications and of the conditions presented. Completion time was running out, and there appeared to be ample basis for apprehension of substantial liabilities in the event of further delay. It was within the sole province of the trial court to determine the factual questions upon which liability here depended: what quality of performance was being demanded of plaintiff; what methods were appropriate or essential to accomplish acceptable performance; whether extra work was necessary, and, if so, whether it was necessitated by faulty concrete surfaces or by plaintiff's choice of method, and whether plaintiff reasonably complied with the conditions on its part to be performed.

[12] "It is generally held that the existence of an implied contract is usually a question of fact for the trial court. Where evidence is conflicting, or where reasonable conflicting inferences may be drawn from evidence which is not in conflict, a question of fact is presented for decision of the trial court." Medina v. Van Camp Sea Food Co., 75 Cal.App.2d 551, 555-556, 171 P.2d 445, 448; Caron v. Andrew, 133 Cal. App.2d 412, 416, 284 P.2d 550.

The judgment is affirmed.

Divorce action. The Superior Court, San Mateo County, A. R. Cotton, J., entered an order pendente lite, enjoining defendant husband from entering the dwelling house

The District Court of Appeal, St. Clair, J. pro tem., held that where, subsequent to the appealed order, an interlocutory decree was entered awarding the house to plaintiff wife, and no appeal was taken from the interlocutory decree, and the time for filing notice of appeal therefrom had run, question presented by appealed order was moot and the appeal would be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

In divorce action, where an interlocutory decree awarding house to plaintiff wife was entered subsequent to an order enjoining defendant husband from entering the house, and no appeal was taken from the interlocutory decree, and the time for filing notice of appeal therefrom had run, question of propriety of restraining order was moot and an appeal therefrom would be dismissed.

ST. CLAIR, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from an order pendente lite in a divorce action.

The order in question, issued after a hearing on an order to show cause, read, in part: "Wherefore, It Is Hereby Ordered, Adjudged And Decreed that the defendant be and he is hereby restrained and enjoined from entering the dwelling house of the parties hereto at 232 Twenty Seventh Avenue, San Mateo, California from and after 5:00 o'clock P. M. of Friday, September 13, 1957 and until the further order of this court."

The action came to trial and an interlocutory decree was entered on March 4, 1958, awarding the house to plaintiff. No appeal has been taken from the interlocutory decree.

[1,2] The questions presented by this appeal are now moot. An appeal from an injunction pendente lite does not affect the power of the court to hear and decide the case on the merits, even though some of the same issues as were involved in the injunction pendente lite were disposed of by the later judgment. Doudell v. Shoo, 159 Cal. 448, 455, 114 P. 579; Gray v. Bybee, 60 Cal.App.2d 564, 571, 141 P.2d 32. The interlocutory decree in this case has awarded the home to plaintiff. An adjudication that the court should not have restrained defendant from entering it between September 13, 1957 and March 4, 1958, the date of the decree, could now have no real consequences. The order being prohibitory in form, but mandatory in its nature, its effect would have been stayed by the appeal. See Food & Grocery Bureau of Southern California v. Garfield, 18 Cal.2d 174, 177, 114 P.2d 579; Smith v. Smith, 18 Cal.2d 462, 465, 116 P.2d 3. The decree would supersede the restraining order, and defendant would not be entitled to possession now. Any determination of whether he should have been entitled to enter during the six months from September to March would be futile. The question might still have some vitality had an appeal been taken from the interlocutory decree, but no such appeal has been taken, and the time for filing the notice of appeal has now run.

[3] Either on the motion of one of the parties (Mortgage Guarantee Co. v. Kolkey, 30 Cal.App.2d 629, 630, 86 P.2d 1073) or on the court's own motion, appeals may be dismissed as involving only moot questions. Piru Citrus Ass'n v. Williams, 95

The question being moot, the appeal is dismissed.

CITY OF SAN JOSE, a Municipal Corporation, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 17901.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 29, 1958.

Action to recover for personal injuries sustained in fall allegedly caused by defect in city sidewalk. The Superior Court, County of Santa Clara, M. G. Del Mutolo, J., entered judgment for plaintiff and city appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Draper, J., held that evidence, consisting mainly of photographs showing condition of sidewalk, was sufficient to sustain findings of jury as to existence of a dangerous defect in sidewalk which was sufficient to give city constructive notice thereof.

Affirmed.

1. Evidence ⇄380

In action for personal injuries allegedly caused by fall on defective sidewalk, admission of photographs, which were identified by attendant at adjoining parking lot as accurately showing the condition of the sidewalk, did not constitute an abuse of discretion, notwithstanding fact that photographer did not testify, that there was no evidence of date pictures were taken, and that parking lot attendant stated he could not remember whether pictures accurately showed condition of sidewalk as it had been on day of accident.

2. Evidence Ⓒ380

Testimony of a photographer is not necessary to establish admissibility of a photograph and all that is required is the testimony that photograph is a correct representation of the objects it portrays.

3. Appeal and Error Ⓒ970(2)

Evidence Ⓒ382

Whether photograph accurately represents an object or scene is primarily a question for the trial court, and its ruling will be sustained unless an abuse of discretion is apparent.

4. Municipal Corporations Ⓒ791(2)

A city may be charged with constructive notice of defect in sidewalk if condition has existed for some time and is sufficiently conspicuous to have been discovered by reasonable inspection. West's Ann. Gov.Code, § 53051.

5. Municipal Corporations Ⓒ768(1), 791(2)

Where defect in sidewalk is minor, constructive notice does not follow from its existence over a period of time, nor does a minor or trivial defect amount to a dangerous or defective condition within meaning of statute respecting municipal liability for injuries caused by defective sidewalks. West's Ann. Gov.Code, § 53051.

6. Municipal Corporations Ⓒ821(6, 16)

Whether a given condition in sidewalk is dangerous or defective is normally a question of fact as is the question of whether condition was such as to impart constructive notice.

7. Appeal and Error Ⓒ930(1), 989

If matters are treated as question of fact, sole function of appellate court is to determine whether there is substantial evidence to support verdict upon such issues, and in such determination court must accept evidence most favorable to respondent together with every reasonable inference which may be drawn therefrom.

8. Municipal Corporations Ⓒ819(1, 6)

In pedestrian's action for personal injuries received in fall allegedly caused by defect in sidewalk, evidence sustained findings of jury that there was a dangerous defect in sidewalk and that such defect had existed long enough to give city constructive notice thereof.

DRAPER, Justice.

This is an action for damages for personal injuries sustained in a fall assertedly caused by defects in a sidewalk of defendant city. Jury verdict was for plaintiff, and defendant appeals from judgment entered upon that verdict.

The court admitted in evidence three photographs of the sidewalk area at the scene of the accident. They were identified by an employee of the parking lot which immediately adjoined the sidewalk. The owners of that lot were joined as defendants in this action. Although their motion for nonsuit was later granted, they were parties at this time and their employee was called as an adverse witness. Code Civ.Proc. § 2055. He identified the photographs as fairly representing the area where the accident occurred although, on voir dire, he testified that he did not remember whether they accurately showed the condition of the sidewalk as it had been on the day of the accident. Upon his testimony, and over appellant's objections, the photographs were admitted. The photographer did not testify and there was no evidence of the date the pictures were taken. Appellant assigns these rulings as error, contending that no adequate foundation was laid.

[1-3] The testimony of the photographer is not necessary to establish admissibility of a photograph. People v. Doggett, 83 Cal.App.2d 405, 409, 188 P.2d 792. All that is required is testimony that the photograph is a correct representation of the objects it portrays. Berkovitz v. American River Gravel Co., 191 Cal. 195, 201-202, 215 P. 675; see also Diller v. Northern Cal. Power Co., 162 Cal. 531, 538, 123 P. 359; 18 Cal.Jur.2d 705-707. Whether a photograph accurately represents an object or scene is primarily a question for the trial court, and its ruling will be sustained unless an abuse of discretion is apparent. Olson v. Meacham, 129 Cal.App. 670, 673, 19 P.2d 527; Hayes v. Emerson, 110 Cal.App. 470, 473, 294 P. 765. No such abuse appears here, and the trial court's ruling that the photographs accurately show the scene of the accident is accepted by us. Evidence of this scene was relevant. Barone v. Jones, 77 Cal. App.2d 656, 660, 176 P.2d 392, 177 P.2d 30.

Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict, arguing that it shows the sidewalk defect to be but minor or trivial, and thus not actionable. The only evidence relating in any way to the extent or nature of the defect consists of the testimony of plaintiff, that of the parking lot attendant, and the above photographs. Plaintiff testified "I stubbed my toe on a bad place in the sidewalk and I went down," and stated that the photographs showed the place in the sidewalk where she caught her foot. The parking lot attendant testified that there was "a little eruption" in the sidewalk. As to the photographs, we have pointed out that before their admission the attendant said he could not remember the condition of the sidewalk on the day of the accident, two years before trial, sufficiently to state whether the pictures accurately represent that condition. However, following admission of the photos, he testified that the sidewalk had been in the condition shown by them for about a year before the accident. Appellant relies upon the witness' testimony that he did not remember the condition of the sidewalk as showing that the later testimony is not reliable. However, the statements as to his lack of memory present only a conflict with the testimony last referred to. Under the well-established rule, conflicts in the testimony are to be resolved by the trier of the fact, rather than by an appellate court. When the photographs were admitted, the judge pointed out that the weight to be given them was "up to the jury." The jury's implied finding is that the photographs accurately portray the sidewalk at the date of the accident, and we have no occasion to disturb that finding.

Appellant, however, contends that even if the photographs were properly before the court, the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict.

[4,5] To sustain the verdict, the evidence must show (a) that the injury resulted from a dangerous or defective condition of the sidewalk, (b) which was known to defendant and (c) which defendant did not repair within a reasonable time after acquiring knowledge thereof. Gov.Code, § 53051. Here there was no express notice to the city of any defective condition of the walk. However, a city may be charged with constructive notice if the condition has existed for some time, and is sufficiently conspicuous to have been discovered by reasonable inspection. Peters v. City & County of San Francisco, 41 Cal.2d 419, 427, 260 P.2d 55. Of course, where the defect is minor, constructive notice does not follow from its existence over a period of time. Nicholson v. City of Los Angeles, 5 Cal.2d 361, 54 P.2d 725. Nor does a minor or trivial defect amount to a dangerous or defective condition within the meaning of the statute. Whiting v. City of National City, 9 Cal.2d 163, 165, 69 P.2d 990.

[6,7] Whether a given condition is dangerous or defective is normally a question of fact (George v. City of Los Angeles, 11 Cal.2d 303, 308, 79 P.2d 723), as is the question whether the condition was such as to impart constructive notice (Van Dorn v. City & County of San Francisco, 103 Cal.App.2d 714, 717, 230 P.2d 393; Hook v. City of Sacramento, 118 Cal.App. 547, 5 P.2d 643). If these issues are treated as questions of fact, our sole function as an appellate court is to determine whether there is some substantial evidence to support the verdict upon such issues. 4 Cal.Jur.2d 482. In this determination, we must accept the evidence most favorable to respondent, together with every reasonable inference which may be drawn therefrom. 4 Cal.Jur.2d 487. Upon careful study of the photographs (particularly defendant's Exh. 3) in the light of these rules, we are satisfied that there is sufficient evidence to support the verdict.

[8] Appellant, however, suggests that these issues present questions of law, to be determined by this court. It is true that what constitutes a minor defect "is not always a mere question of fact." Whiting v. City of National City, supra, 9 Cal.2d 163, 165, 69 P.2d 990, 991. A like rule has been applied in determining whether the defect is sufficiently conspicuous to charge the city with constructive notice. Barrett v. City of Claremont, 41 Cal.2d 70, 256 P.2d 977; Nicholson v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 5 Cal.2d 361, 54 P.2d 725. However, treating the question as one of law, to be reviewed by the appellate court without regard to the finding of the trial court (Beck v. City of Palo Alto, 150 Cal.App.2d 39, 42, 309 P.2d 125), our study of the photographs here precludes our determining that the defect was not dangerous or that it was not sufficient to give the city constructive notice. Peters v. City & County of San Francisco, supra, 41 Cal.2d 419, 260 P.2d 55.

Appellant cites decisions in which defects of less than specified depths have been held minor (see cases collected in Beck v. City of Palo Alto, supra, 150 Cal.App.2d 39, 43, 309 P.2d 125). Here, however, there is no testimony as to the dimensions of the sidewalk defect. Thus we cannot apply the rules of those decisions. We have before us only the photographs. As we have pointed out, our study of them leads us to the conclusion that the jury's verdict cannot be disturbed upon this appeal.

Appellant also argues that there is no evidence to show the existence of the defect for a period sufficient to charge the city with constructive notice. This contention overlooks the testimony of the parking lot attendant that the sidewalk had been in the same condition as shown in the photographs "for about a year" before the accident.

Whether viewed as a question of fact or of law, the evidence is sufficient to sustain the verdict.

PEEK, Justice.

This controversy arises out of an accident which occurred on May 20, 1954, when Jay Peterson, a minor, while riding his bicycle, was struck by an automobile owned and operated by the defendant, Mrs. Bailey. She reported the accident to her insurance company, the defendant, Allstate, and was informed that the company declined to defend upon the ground that her liability policy had been cancelled for nonpayment of premium. Thereafter an action was commenced against Mrs. Bailey by Ivan F. Peterson individually and as guardian ad litem for his son, Jay, which resulted in a judgment in favor of plaintiffs for damages growing out of the accident.

The present action was brought by plaintiffs against Mrs. Bailey and Allstate to recover on the previous judgment. Mrs. Bailey cross-complained against Allstate, alleging that she had complied with all of the provisions of the policy and that the same was in full force and effect at the time of the accident. At the conclusion of the trial the court granted plaintiffs' motion to amend to conform to proof by adding the further allegation that Allstate, by its conduct, had waived its right to cancel the policy for nonpayment of premium and was thereby estopped from asserting such defense. Allstate, by its answer, admitted the issuance of the policy but denied that Mrs. Bailey had complied with all of its terms and asserted it had cancelled the policy for cause before the accident. The trial court found in accordance with the allegations of the complaint and cross-complaint and gave judgment against Allstate in the sum of $5,000, the amount recovered against Mrs. Bailey in the first action, together with attorney fees incurred by her in defending the first action.

On appeal Allstate urges (1) that there was insufficient evidence to support the finding of a valid, uncanceled policy; (2) that the first action was not an "actual trial" as required by condition six of the policy; and (3) that there is no evidence to support the finding and judgment relating to Mrs. Bailey's right to attorney fees incurred by her in defending the first action.

The record discloses that on April 5, 1953, Allstate issued to Mrs. Bailey an automobile liability policy for the term ending April 5, 1954. It provided that the premium therefor should be paid in installments. Although the premium was ultimately paid in full, each deferred payment, as shown by the cost ledger sheet of her account which was placed in evidence by Allstate, was late for periods of a few days to more than a month.

On April 5, 1954, Allstate issued a certificate extending Mrs. Bailey's previous auto liability coverage to April 5, 1955, for a total premium of $80.25 payable as follows: $33.25 on delivery of the certificate;

$24 three months after delivery of the certificate; and $24 six months after delivery thereof.

On April 12, 1954, Mrs. Bailey paid $16.58 to Allstate at its Modesto office. On April 13, 1954, Allstate mailed to her a cancellation notice for nonpayment of premium, giving her no credit for the partial payment made. On April 14, 1954, Allstate, having received the payment of $16.58 at its Menlo Park office, mailed a notice of reinstatement to her notwithstanding that a portion of the amount due remained unpaid. On May 3, 1954, Allstate mailed a notice of cancellation for nonpayment of premium which stated that $23.25 was past due on the first installment. This was erroneous since only $16.67 was past due. Cancellation was declared to be effective May 15, 1954. Each notice of cancellation was in accordance with the provision of paragraph five of the contract allowing cancellation not less than 10 days after receipt of the notice by the assured. The accident in question occurred, as previously noted, on May 20, 1954.

The case was tried upon the theory that Allstate's purported cancellation was the result of a mistake or that by its actions it had waived its right to cancel the policy for nonpayment of premium, and hence in either event the policy was in full force and effect at the time of the accident. The memorandum opinion of the trial court treats the case in this same fashion.

[1,2] Allstate's first contention is that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the finding that the policy was in force on May 20. In this regard it attacks certain findings as being improper as well as unsupported by the evidence. Here it should be noted that no objections were made in the trial court to such findings, nor were other or more definite findings proposed. Hence any objection thereto was waived. Kalmus v. Cedars of Lebanon Hospital, 132 Cal.App.2d 243, 281 P.2d 872. It is the further rule that on appeal a reviewing court will liberally construe the findings in support of the judgement (Metcalf v. Hecker, 127 Cal.App.2d 634, 274 P.2d 188) and indulge in all reasonable inferences in support thereof.

[3,4] Although it was established that Allstate mailed, and Mrs. Bailey received, the cancellation notice of May 3, there is ample evidence to support the trial court's finding that the policy was " * * * on the 20th day of May, 1954, in full force and effect and was uncanceled and unrevoked" and the implied finding that Allstate's purported cancellation was the result of a mistake. The cancellation notice of May 3, stating that $23.25 remained past due implied that only $10 had been paid, when in fact she had paid $16.58, indicates on its face that Allstate was mistaken regarding the amount paid by her. Moreover it may properly be inferred from the evidence and the cancellation notice that the policy was being cancelled because a portion ($23.25) of the deferred premium payment was past due and unpaid; that if some amount less than that sum had been due, the cancellation notice would not have been sent when it was. This latter inference is supported by testimony elicited from one of Allstate's officers, James Mundell, the manager of its accounting division, who testified: " * * * this is merely a situation where we attempted to cancel her [Mrs. Bailey] as soon as possible because the money had run out as far as we were concerned, * * *" Mr. Mundell's statement reveals that Allstate attempted to cancel only because of its mistaken belief that Mrs. Bailey's payment covered her only to April 20, which in turn led to the mistaken belief that she was not covered on May 3, the date of the cancellation notice. As a matter of fact, her payment of $16.58 covered her through May 12, 1954, and hence had not the 10-day notice been sent prematurely through mistake, she would have been covered on the day of the accident, May 20. Research has revealed no California case directly in point; however, we are impressed with the rule expressed in Richmond Ins. Co. v. Zettwoch, 216 Ky. 463, 287 S.W. 964, and Fisher v. Globe & Rut- gers' Fire Ins. Co., 147 La. 984, 86 So. 417, that a cancellation by mistake is no cancellation at all.

The record as summarized, when viewed in light of the cited rule, amply supports the conclusion of the trial court that had the insurer known the true state of affairs it would not have sent the notice of cancellation on May 3, and that since the cancellation notice was sent under a mistake of fact, it was consequently ineffective.

[5-7] Likewise without merit is the further contention of Allstate that there is no evidence to support the implied finding of the trial court that, by its conduct, it had waived its right to cancel the policy for untimely and incomplete payment of premium so long as the payments made and accepted exceeded the premium earned. As previously noted there can be no question that from the due date of the very first premium installment payment on the initial policy Mrs. Bailey had failed to perform in accordance with the terms of the contract. The record further shows that Allstate, with full knowledge of such facts, continued to recognize the policy as being in full force and effect by accepting delinquent, as well as insufficient, payments thereon. Such acts on the part of Allstate were wholly inconsistent with any intent to insist upon a forfeiture. It therefore waived such ground as a basis for cancellation of the policy. (See 16 Appelman Ins. L. & P. 812.) Having so waived strict compliance with the deferred payment terms, it was bound to give Mrs. Bailey a reasonable notice to thereafter comply strictly with scheduled premium payments before it could depart from its usual procedure and cancel the policy for nonpayment of premium. Frad v. Columbian National Life Ins. Co., 2 Cir., 191 F. 2d 22, certiorari denied 342 U.S. 904, 72 S.Ct. 294, 96 L.Ed. 677.

[8] Allstate further contends that the judgment which formed the basis for the present action was not recovered after an "actual trial" as provided in condition six of the policy. It is not denied that Mrs.

Bailey, in accordance with the provisions of the policy, informed Allstate of the accident and that the company refused to defend. By its breach, Mrs. Bailey was thereby placed on her own and compelled to protect herself as best she could. The company having breached its agreement, she was entitled to proceed in whatever manner seemed to her to be proper under the circumstances. Accordingly, if it appeared that plaintiffs' claim should be compromised, and if in good faith it appeared to her that the proposed settlement was just, reasonable and prudent, her acceptance thereof cannot now be attacked. The contention of Allstate places it in the anomalous position of contending on the one hand that the contract was breached by defendant for failure to pay premiums and therefore was of no force and effect; and yet on the other hand of contending that Mrs. Bailey was bound by the terms of the breached contract relative to "actual trial." This is not the general rule (see 142 A.L.R. 812), nor is it the rule in California.

"The denial of liability on the part of the insuring company and its refusal to defend the suits constituted such a breach of the contract that the insured was released from his obligation to leave the management thereof to it, and was justified in proceeding to defend on his own account. [Citing cases.]" Lamb v. Belt Casualty Co., 3 Cal.App.2d 624, 630-631, 40 P.2d 311, 314; see also Ritchie v. Anchor Casualty Co., 135 Cal.App.2d 245, 286 P.2d 1000.

[9] Allstate's final contention is likewise without merit. It is clear that where it is found that an insurance company has failed to defend an action on behalf of the assured, while legally obligated to do so, a reasonable award of attorney fees in defending the initial liability suit is appropriate. O'Morrow v. Borad, 27 Cal.2d 794, 167 P.2d 483, 163 A.L.R. 894; Ritchie v. Anchor Casualty Co., supra. The finding of the trial court that $350 was a reasonable attorney fee is amply supported by the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 23220.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.
Oct. 27, 1958.

Purchaser's action for specific performance of real estate agreement. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, J. Howard Ziemann, J., entered judgment for purchaser and vendors appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourn, J., held that where real estate broker, negotiating for purchase of realty on behalf of corporate purchaser, opened escrow account at bank and both vendors signed escrow instructions which described realty, parties and purchase price, and broker deposited $1,000 check in escrow on behalf of purchasers and the same was cashed, there was an irrevocable offer by vendors to sell realty.

Affirmed.

1. Specific Performance — 121(8)

In action for specific performance of escrow agreement respecting purchase of realty wherein vendors claimed misrepresentations by real estate broker negotiating for purchase of property on behalf of corporate purchaser, evidence sustained finding that there was no misrepresentation by broker as to purchase price of building which vendors had shown some interest in purchasing with proceeds.

2. Vendor and Purchaser ⇨16(1)

Where real estate broker, negotiating for purchase of realty on behalf of corporation, opened escrow account at bank and both vendors signed escrow instructions which described realty, parties and purchase price, and broker deposited $1,000 check in escrow on behalf of corporation and such check was cashed, there was an irrevocable offer to sell by vendors and portion of escrow instructions stating that purchaser would hand to vendors $25,500, was sufficient consideration to make the signing of escrow instructions by vendors an irrevocable offer.

3. Escrows ⇨8(1)

Where real estate broker negotiating for purchase of realty on behalf of corporation opened escrow account by agreement which stated that purchaser would hand bank the sum of $25,500 and authorized bank to accept the sum of $1,000, bank at time of signing of escrow instructions was agent of vendors and was authorized to receive payments under instructions.

4. Principal and Agent ⇨92(1), 117(1)

An offer and acceptance may be transmitted by an agent between the offeror and the offeree and authority of such agent need not be in writing.

5. Principal and Agent ⇨143(2), 145(2)

Generally, an undisclosed principal can either sue or be sued on contract made by his agent.

6. Frauds, Statute of ⇨103(1), 106(2)

Escrow instructions signed by vendors of realty which contained a description of the property, names of the parties and the price, was sufficient to satisfy statute of frauds.

7. Frauds, Statute of ⇨115(4)

It was not necessary that purchaser sign escrow instructions respecting sale of realty in order to enable purchaser to enforce it against vendors who had signed the same, since statute of frauds requires contract, note or memorandum thereof, to be in writing, subscribed only by party to be charged.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment in an action for specific performance. The defendants were directed to execute and deliver a deed to certain real property to the plaintiff and to perform under an agreement made between the parties.

The following is a summary of the facts of the case. In 1956, the defendants, brother and sister, were the owners of certain real property in Redondo Beach, California, which was located between the United States post office building and a building owned by a telephone company. The telephone company desired to have a building constructed on the lot owned by the defendants according to its plans and specifications and to lease the same under a long-term lease agreement. It engaged Harold Von Rolf, a real estate agent, to work out the transaction. The defendants resided upon the property in question. In February or March of 1956, Von Rolf, the real estate agent, called at the Griffiths' home and asked Miss Griffiths whether they were willing to sell their property. He was told to communicate with Mr. Griffiths, who was not at home at that time.

Later Von Rolf called again and talked over the matter with Mr. Griffiths who stated that he would think about it. Von Rolf did not, at that time, tell the defendants that he was working for any particular company or concern. Some thirty days later Von Rolf called the Griffiths and was told by Mr. Griffiths that he and his sister had talked it over and would sell for $25,000 net to themselves. The real estate agent advised Mr. Griffiths that he would let him know whether a sale could be made at that price. The agent asked Mr. Griffiths if they would pay him a commission for the sale of the real estate and Mr. Griffiths replied that they would not pay any such commission.

Von Rolf obtained the plans and specifications from the telephone company for the construction of a proposed building upon the defendants' property, if the same could be purchased, and also secured construction costs for the building from a contractor. In May or June of 1956, Von Rolf contacted Hugh Darling, the secretary of the plaintiff corporation and told Mr. Darling of the price of defendants' property and the costs for the proposed building. Darling informed Von Rolf that the transaction was satisfactory to him and told Von Rolf to contact William Ehni, the president of the plaintiff corporation and explain the matter to him. The real estate agent did so and Ehni told Von Rolf that the transaction was satisfactory to him. In August of 1956, Darling and Ehni told Von Rolf to consummate the purchase of the defendants' property on behalf of the plaintiff corporation.

On September 12, 1956, Von Rolf telephoned Mr. Griffiths and told him that he was prepared to enter into an escrow and to consummate the sale of the real property. On September 19, 1956, at the Griffiths' suggestion the real estate agent drove defendants to the Bank of America, Redondo Beach branch, to open the escrow. A thirty-day escrow was opened and both defendants signed the escrow instructions on that date, as well as a grant deed with the corporation as the grantee, and placed the deed in the escrow. At the time of the signing of the escrow instructions the defendants were told for the first time that the plaintiff was the purchaser of the property. At this time Von Rolf unconditionally deposited a $1,000 check in the escrow on behalf of the plaintiff, for which he received a receipt from the bank. The check was cashed. The escrow instructions contained the following statements by the buyer: "I will hand you or cause to be handed you the sum of $25,000," and immediately below, "and authorize you to accept for my account from Harold Von Rolf the sum of $1000.00."

Von Rolf had received the $1,000 check from Ehni on September 18, 1956, with instructions to deposit it in the escrow on behalf of the plaintiff. The defendants asked the real estate agent why the selling price was set forth in the escrow at $26,500, instead of $25,000, and further, made inquiries about the real estate agent's fee of $1,500, which was set forth in the escrow instructions. Von Rolf explained that the fee was for services in putting together the entire transaction. The agent had previously secured the approval of Darling and Ehni as to his fee in this particular transaction. On September 20, 1956, the agent mailed to Darling the buyer's instructions. Darling signed the same on September 21, 1956, and on the same day mailed them to Ehni. Ehni signed the escrow instructions and on September 26, 1956, mailed them to the Bank of America, which received them on September 27, 1956.

On September 24, 1956, Miss Griffiths telephoned Mrs. Tolley, who was in charge of the escrow for the bank, and asked Mrs. Tolley if the defendants could withdraw from the escrow because of Miss Griffiths' health. Mrs. Tolley told Miss Griffiths to set forth the request in writing, and on the same day Miss Griffiths wrote a letter and personally delivered it to the Bank. The letter in question stated in the first paragraph thereof, "I should like to withdraw from my escrow 221-15022 dated September 19, 1956;" then followed several paragraphs concerning her sick leave from her work and her termination on permanent disability, about her doctor's advice, and her inability to sleep and her inability to move because of her ailment, and concluded, "I certainly hope I can withdraw and quit worrying. Had I known it would have affected me this way I would never have considered a move at this time."

Mrs. Tolley forwarded a copy of this letter to Ehni's office on September 24, 1956, and Ehni responded to the letter on September 28, 1956, in which he refused for the corporation to consent to Miss Griffiths' request to withdraw from the escrow. Ehni did not see Miss Griffiths' letter of September 24, 1956, until after he had signed and mailed the buyer's escrow instructions to the bank.

On October 17, 1956, Ehni mailed the plaintiff's check for $25,500, and it was received by the bank the next day. On October 16, 1956, the defendants consulted their attorney who prepared a notice of rescission and a letter which was to the effect that the defendants rescinded the agreement upon the grounds that Von Rolf had made certain misrepresentations to the defendants in connection with the contemplated purchase of an apartment house located in Redondo Beach. This was the first time the defendants had set forth with particularity any such a contention.

Von Rolf testified that he and the defendants had first discussed the purchase of the apartment house on September 19, 1956, after the escrow instructions had been signed. The defendants made no independent inquiry regarding the price of the apartment house until after the instructions had been signed by them and after they had consulted an attorney. It was conceded by both defendants that the health of Miss Griffiths was a factor in their wanting to withdraw from the escrow. Miss Griffiths testified that at the time she wrote the first letter she knew she could not obtain the apartment on the terms purportedly represented to her by the real estate agent, yet she made no reference to that fact in her letter. Another real estate agent testified that about September 19, 1956, Miss Griffiths had indicated she was interested in income property and inquired about properties which the agent had for sale. About one week later she told that same agent that she had changed her mind about buying any income property as she didn't think she would sell her own property.

The Griffiths thereafter refused to close the escrow and an action was filed by the plaintiff in specific performance to compel them to comply with their agreement. The Griffiths answered claiming first that they had cancelled and revoked the instructions prior to the signing of the instructions by the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff had been so advised; secondly that there was no consideration for the signing of the escrow instructions, and thirdly that they had rescinded such instructions upon the grounds that the same had been signed by mistake and because of fraudulent representations. The trial court found against the Griffiths on substantially all of their contentions.

The appellants now contend: (1) that the first letter of Miss Griffiths to the bank constituted a revocation of the escrow agreement; (2) that Miss Griffiths had a right to revoke the contract upon the ground that the plaintiff had not accepted their offer at the time of revocation, and that the contract was not the result of any prior oral agreement with the plaintiff; (3) that the deposit of $1,000 by Von Rolf in the escrow was not the payment of a down payment under the escrow, and (4) that they had a right to rescind, as they did by their letter of October 16, 1956, because of their misunderstanding as to the price of the apartment house in which they had shown some interest as to purchasing.

[1] We believe that there is no merit to any of the contentions of appellants. It is true that there was some testimony which, had it been accepted as true by the trial court, might have sustained some of their assertions; however, there was substantial testimony and evidence adverse to their contentions which the trial court believed and upon which the trial court based its findings, conclusions and judgment.

Considering the contention that appellants could revoke the escrow instructions because no consideration was paid: Von Rolf deposited unconditionally a $1,000 check (which was cashed) on behalf of the plaintiff in connection with the escrow. A reading of the instructions also convinces us that the $1,000 was deposited and under the circumstances of this case made a binding escrow. The instructions provided that the buyer, "will hand you or cause to be handed you the sum of $25,500.00," and below this it is stated, "and authorize you to accept for my account from Harold Von Rolf the sum of $1000.00."

[2, 3] The words "will hand you" refer to the $25,500, and not to the $1,000 check. The check was delivered and cashed and the money therefrom stayed with the bank. We believe that under the circumstances this made a sufficient consideration to make the signing of the escrow instructions by the defendants an irrevocable offer. The bank, at the time of the signing of the escrow instructions, was the agent of the defendants and was authorized to receive payment under the instructions. It was said in Gelber v. Cappeller, 161 Cal.App.2d 113, 326 P.2d 521, 525:

"Under the instructions given by the parties the escrow holder became the common agent of both parties and held all monies and documents deposited with it for the benefit of both until either its powers under their instructions were terminated, or the conditions under which the escrow was to be closed by it had occurred in which latter event it became agent and trustee for the vendors as to the monies and documents deposited by the vendees and agent and trustee for the benefit of the vendees as to the instruments of conveyance of the other documents deposited by the grantor."

As we view it, the vendee made a partial payment, and when accompanied by a writing such as was present in this case, there was then an irrevocable offer for the time set forth in the instruments. See, Copple v. Aigeltinger, 167 Cal. 706, 709, 140 P. 1073; Boehle v. Benson, 150 Cal.App.2d 696, 701, 310 P.2d 650; Holland v. McCarthy, 173 Cal. 597, 604, 160 P. 1069; Benson v. Shotwell, 87 Cal. 49, 54, 25 P. 249, 681.

[4] However, as asserted by the respondent, there was evidence to the effect that there was an oral agreement between the plaintiff, as an undisclosed principal, and the defendants with reference to the sale of the property prior to the execution of the instructions. The Griffiths said they would sell their property for $25,000 net to them; the corporation told Von Rolf to go ahead and conclude the purchase at such price; Von Rolf told the Griffiths he was ready to conclude the purchase at the price asked. Arrangements were then made for the escrow with Von Rolf acting for the corporation. An offer and acceptance may be transmitted by an agent between the offeror and offeree and the authority of such agent need not be in writing. Wright v. Lowe, 140 Cal.App.2d 891, 896-897, 296 P.2d 34; King v. Stanley, 32 Cal.2d 584, 588, 197 P.2d 321.

[5] In Cowan v. Tremble, 111 Cal. App. 458, at page 462, 296 P. 91, at page 93, it was said:

"It is well settled as a general rule that an undisclosed principal can either sue or be sued on the contract made by his agent (1 Cal.Jur., Agency, § 131, p. 854; Parker v. Otis, 130 Cal. 322, 62 P. 571, 927, 92 Am.St.Rep. 56, (sic); Schader v. White, 173 Cal. 441, 160 P. 557); and the fact that plaintiff brought the action thereon was a sufficient ratification of the acts of Jacobson (2 Corp.Jur., Agency, § 132, p. 513; Argenti v. Brannan, 5 Cal. 351; Thompson v. Spray, 72 Cal. 528, 14 P. 182)." (See, Purviance v. Shostak, 90 Cal.App.2d 295, 297, 202 P.2d 755; 2 Cal.Jur.2d 873 (Agency).)

[6] The execution of the escrow instructions constituted a sufficient memorandum of the oral agreement for the sale of the property in that it did give the names of the parties, the price, a description of the property, and was subscribed by the owners or parties to be charged. It was appropriately said in Boehle v. Benson, supra, 150 Cal.App.2d 696, at page 701, 310 P.2d 650, at page 653:

"We do not agree with appellant's contention that the agreement does not satisfy the Statute of Frauds. In the case of Cavanaugh v. Casselman, 88 Cal. 543, 26 P. 515, 516, the court said:

[7] "It was not necessary that the plaintiff should himself sign the agreement * * * in order to enable him to enforce it against the defendant. The statute of frauds requires the contract, or some note or memorandum thereof, to be in writing, but it need be subscribed only by the party to be charged [Citation.] * * * The "writing" in question is sufficient to satisfy the statute. It sufficiently names the parties and the price, and gives a complete description of the property. It is also subscribed by the defendant, who is the party to be charged.'" See also, Steel v. Duntley, 115 Cal. App. 451, 453, 1 P.2d 999; Cowan v. Tremble, supra, 111 Cal.App. 458, 462-463, 296 P. 91; Williams v. Rush, 134 Cal.App. 554, 558, 25 P.2d 888; Gelber v. Cappeller, supra, 161 Cal.App.2d 113, 326 P. 2d 521; Tuso v. Green, 194 Cal. 574, 581, 229 P. 327.

The monies, in addition to the $1,000 deposited by Von Rolf unconditionally in the escrow were deposited well within the limits provided. Bullock v. McKeon, 104 Cal.App. 72, 78, 285 P. 392; Shreeves v. Pearson, 194 Cal. 699, 707-708, 230 P. 448; Quinn v. Dresbach, 75 Cal. 159, 161, 16 P. 762; Hoskins v. Swain, 61 Cal. 338, 341; Holland v. McCarthy, supra, 173 Cal. 597, 604, 160 P. 1069.

As to fraudulent representations made by Von Rolf, the evidence was contradictory. The judge had a right and a duty to determine the truth as it appeared to him, and apparently he believed Von Rolf. A reading of the transcript of the testimony would indicate that if Von Rolf was believed then there was no fraud or misrepresentation in any respect.

The judgment is affirmed.

Plaintiffs appeal from an adverse judgment after verdict in an action for personal injuries arising out of a collision of automobiles.

Fifth Avenue in Los Angeles extends north and south. It intersects 70th Street at right angles. There are no traffic signals or stop signs at the intersection. On June 16, 1955, plaintiffs Michael Halleck, Mary Elizabeth Halleck and Sharon Halleck, who are minors, were passengers in a Ford station wagon driven by their mother, Mrs. Margaret L. Halleck. Coming from the west on 70th Street it was struck in the intersection by an Oldsmobile car owned and driven by defendant Brown. The Oldsmobile had come up Fifth Avenue from the south, had entered onto 70th Street and came into collision with the Halleck station wagon in the southeast portion of the intersection. The children were injured; Michael was the most seriously hurt, suffering a long cut on his cheek which left a permanent scar. Plaintiffs being passengers in their mother's automobile, the factual question was whether Brown was guilty of negligence that was a proximate cause of the collision; it was not contended that plaintiffs were guilty of contributory negligence.

70th Street is comparatively level. Commencing at Florence Avenue, one block south of 70th Street, Fifth Avenue rises abruptly, then slopes downward to its intersection at 70th Street, after which it becomes level. The downward slope begins about seven or eight houses south of 70th Street. Brown testified that before proceeding up Fifth Avenue, his car had been parked on the east side of the street just above Florence, facing north; as he reached a point seven or eight houses from 70th Street, he was traveling about 15 or 20 miles per hour; he increased his speed to 25 miles per hour as he descended the slope; another car, which had been going west on 70th Street, made a left turn onto Fifth Avenue and passed him at a point about six houses south of the corner; at that point, he could not see into 70th Street; he slowed down as he passed the other car and approached the intersection at approximately 15 to 20 miles per hour, looking in both directions; at a distance of about a car length from the intersection he saw the station wagon approaching from the west; it was likewise about a car length from the corner; he put on his brakes but was unable to stop in time to avoid a collision. It was established that his Oldsmobile laid down 9 feet of four wheel locked skidmarks leading to the point of impact. On cross-examination, Brown admitted stating in his deposition that he entered the intersection at between 20 and 25 miles per hour and that he might have been traveling at that speed.

Robert Wright, a witness for plaintiffs, was the driver whom Brown saw turning left onto Fifth Avenue. Robert was a high-school student, living with his parents in the fourth house to the south of the intersection on the west side of Fifth Avenue. He testified that he stopped at the intersection and saw Brown's car at the top of the incline. As he drove slowly past the second house from the corner, Brown's car passed him in the opposite direction at a speed of between 25 and 35 miles per hour. After parking in front of his own house, Robert heard a crash, looked through his rear-view mirror, and saw the station wagon for the first time. The front of the Oldsmobile had struck it broadside between the front and second doors and caused it to swing completely around and come to rest facing west with its right wheels on the north curb of 70th Street.

Mrs. Halleck testified that after stopping for a traffic signal on Sixth Avenue, she proceeded normally along 70th Street; she could not recall her rate of speed. She slowed down on approaching the Fifth Avenue intersection, and as she did so, she saw the Oldsmobile at the top of the incline, about six or seven houses to the south; at that time, she was about one and a half car lengths west of the intersection. Mrs. Halleck then proceeded into Fifth Avenue. At no time did she see Wright's car. She again saw the Oldsmobile just before it collided with her station wagon; she did not attempt to swerve or apply her brakes. On cross-examination, Mrs. Halleck admitted stating in her deposition that when she first saw the Oldsmobile it was only about six or seven cars lengths from the corner but she added that she "always said" it was at the top of the incline when it came into view.

In urging a reversal of the judgment, plaintiffs contend that the court committed error in instructing the jury.

[1,2] The Hallecks first assign error to the giving of an instruction on the doctrine of unavoidable accident. We have set forth the instruction in the margin.<sup>1</sup> This cause was tried before the decision of the Supreme Court in Butigan v. Yellow Cab Co., 49 Cal.2d 652, 320 P.2d 500, in which it was held, that with possible exceptions, it is error to instruct the jury as to unavoidable accident in cases involving negligence.

However, the court said in Butigan, supra, 49 Cal.2d at pages 660-661, 320 P.2d at page 505: "The determination whether, in a specific instance, the probable effect of the instruction has been to mislead the jury and whether the error has been prejudicial so as to require a reversal depends on all the circumstances of the case, including the evidence and the other instructions given. No precise formula can be drawn."

It was error to give the instruction on unavoidable accident. The question on the appeal is whether the error was prejudicial. We believe it was.

Each driver could have seen the other in time to slow down or stop and thus avoid a collision. The accident could not have happened if neither driver had been negligent. It is sheer nonsense to say that both drivers could be found free of negligence. If it was a common practice to drive into intersections blindly, taking a chance that they would be found clear, there would be thousands of collisions at intersections, where now there is but one.

It is well settled that the giving of the unavoidable accident instruction is prejudicial where the evidence discloses no condition and no action or conduct apart from the conduct of the parties that could reasonably have been found sufficient to acquit them of negligence. Martz v. Ruiz, 158 Cal.App.2d 590, 322 P.2d 981; Britton v. Gunderson, 160 Cal.App.2d 66, 324 P.2d 938; Brenner v. Beardsley, 159 Cal.App.2d 304, 323 P.2d 841; Emerton v. Acres, 160 Cal.App.2d 742, 325 P.2d 685; Grant v. Mueller, 160 Cal.App.2d 804, 325 P.2d 680. These cases, applying the doctrine declared by the Supreme Court in the Butigan case,

1. "In law we recognize what is termed an unavoidable or inevitable accident. These terms do no mean literally that it was not possible for such an accident to be avoided. They simply denote an accident that occurred without having been proximately caused by negligence. No one may be held liable for injury resulting from an unavoidable accident. Whether or not the accident in question in this case was unavoidable is, of course, a question of fact for you to determine; and in giving the foregoing instruction I do not imply any opinion or suggestion as to what your finding should be."

are controlling upon the facts of the present case. This will appear clearly from a reading of the cases and a comparison of the facts upon which the several courts held the instruction to be prejudicial. We, therefore, refrain from encumbering our opinion with an extended analysis of the facts of those cases or with quotations from the cogent and forceful reasoning of the courts' opinions.

Defendant relies upon Rayner v. Ramirez, 159 Cal.App.2d 372, 324 P.2d 83, in which the court did not hold that the instruction was properly given, but only that under the evidence the error was not prejudicial. We are in agreement with that holding. The testimony was that the vehicles of the defendants momentarily entered the wrong side of the highway upon the sudden appearance from a side road of a boy on a bicycle, and that the drivers quickly endeavored to return to the right side. Although it had been held prior to the decision of the Supreme Court in the Butigan case that it was proper to give the questioned instruction in such circumstances, such is no longer the law. In cases such as the present one, where the issue is whether negligence is attributable to one participant or the other, or to both, the question is not whether it was error to instruct on unavoidable accident, but whether the error was prejudicial. And the question in every case is whether, upon the facts of the case, the party complaining of the error was deprived of a fair trial.

Since the collision would not have occurred if both drivers had been exercising due care, and contributory negligence was not in issue, the question with respect to the liability of the defendant was whether Mrs. Halleck was guilty of negligence which was the sole proximate cause of the accident. The children who are the plaintiffs here had a right to have the jury determine that issue, uninfluenced by the instruction that introduced the false theory of unavoidability. It was an issue of fact that could reasonably have been decided in their favor. We are convinced that it was not tried fairly. The error, therefore, requires a reversal of the judgment.

In view of the foregoing, it is unnecessary to discuss other points urged by appellants.

The judgment is reversed.

STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION of the State of California, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 9320.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Oct. 28, 1958.

Action by seller of concrete and asphalt against state board of equalization to recover taxes assessed under sales and use tax law. The Superior Court, Sacramento County, Gordon A. Fleury, J., entered judgment for seller and board appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that where corporation purchased dry ingredients of concrete and asphalt, paid sales tax on raw materials, and compounded them at its plant, and, upon receiving order, combined raw ingredients of cement with water according to specifications, transported cement and asphalt from plant to building site and discharged mixed wet cement or asphalt in accordance with contractor's instructions, corporation was not construction contractor, within statute exempting such from sales and use tax, but retailer subject to sales and use tax.

Reversed.

PEEK, Justice.

This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought by it to recover taxes alleged to have been improperly assessed under the Sales and Use Tax Law (section 6001 et seq. of the Revenue and Taxation Code).

There is no dispute as to the essential facts, which appear by stipulation of the parties. Additional facts in amplification of the stipulation appear from the testimony of the one witness called by plaintiff, its president. The record so presented shows without conflict that plaintiff was in the business of furnishing wet-mix concrete and asphalt to construction contractors. Its method of operation was to purchase the dry ingredients of the concrete, such as cement, rock, sand, gravel and other additives, which it would compound at its plant. Upon receiving an order for concrete, the raw ingredients, according to specifications, were combined with water in a rotating drum attached to a truck and transported from the plant to the building site. By the time of arrival the mixture had become wet-mix concrete, ready to be discharged from the mixing drum on the truck into forms at the job site. Plaintiff did not in any way participate in the building of the forms, their location at the job site, or their removal after the concrete had hardened. All tamping, troweling, leveling, finishing of the concrete, or other handling when required, was done by the contractor. The only employee of plaintiff customarily at the job site was the truck driver whose sole duty was to spot the truck and pour the concrete into the forms as directed by the contractor.

The procedure followed as regards the asphalt sold by plaintiff was substantially the same. The total mixing operation, however, took place in plaintiff's plant, and thereafter the asphalt was transported by dump truck to the job site. In accordance with the contractor's instructions, the asphalt was dumped either on the ground or in front of a paving machine which did the spreading. Any spreading, leveling or compacting was done by the contractor and not by the plaintiff.

During the period from July, 1946, to September, 1949, plaintiff furnished various construction firms with $902,302.29 worth of wet-mix concrete and asphalt. Plaintiff paid a sales tax on the raw materials at the time they were purchased. No sales tax was collected on the subsequent sale of the prepared product to various construction firms. Defendant State Board of Equalization, upon a redetermination under the Sales and Use Tax Law, characterized the latter transactions as retail sales under the Revenue and Taxation Code, section 6051, and assessed additional taxes on the gross receipts of the 1946-49 period amounting to $27,904.73. Pursuant to the redetermination, plaintiff paid the additional tax assessed and subsequently filed a claim for refund with the defendant board. The claim was denied and this action was filed in the superior court where judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant board for the amount paid under the redetermination plus interest.

Sales and Use Tax Ruling No. 11 (Calif. Administrative Code, Title 18, section 1921) provides in part as follows:

"Definitions: The term 'contractor' as used herein includes both general contractors and subcontractors and includes contractors engaged in such building trades as carpentry, brick-laying, cement work, steel work, plastering, sheet metal work, roofing, tile and terrazzo work, electrical work, plumbing, heating, air conditioning, painting and interior decorating.

"The term 'construction contract' as used herein means a contract for erecting, remodeling, or repairing a building or other structures on land and includes lump-sum, cost-plus, and time-and-material contracts. The term 'construction contract' does not include a contract for the sale and installation of machinery or equipment.

"The term 'materials' as used herein means tangible personal property which when combined with other tangible personal property loses its identity to become an integral and inseparable part of the completed structure.

* * * * *

"Materials Used by Contractors: Contractors are the consumers of materials used by them in fulfilling construction contracts and the tax applies to the sale of such materials to the contractors * * *."

We are constrained to view the question presented as much less complex than would appear from plaintiff's brief. In this we must agree with the defendant board that the uncomplicated issue is whether or not plaintiff was a construction contractor with respect to its sales of wet-mix concrete and asphalt. If it was, then it could be taxed only as a consumer and hence is entitled to a refund of the taxes paid. If not, then it should be taxed as a retailer and hence is entitled to no refund.

In accordance with its statement of the case, it is the primary contention of the board that plaintiff is simply selling at retail two products which it manufactures—wet-mix concrete and asphalt—and that the only service which it performs is the delivery of the product to the job site; that the consumer of these products is the contractor who renders the service involved in preparing the forms, tamping, troweling, finishing, spreading and leveling the concrete or asphalt as the case may be; and that therefore plaintiff is not a contractor within the meaning of Ruling No. 11.

The record shows without conflict that plaintiff renders two distinct services. The first involves the compounding of raw materials in transit or at its plant. The second is the transportation and discharge of the finished product at the construction site. Although it appears that the trial court considered the service rendered sufficient to constitute engaging in the actual building construction and erection of structures on land, thus bringing the plaintiff within the provisions of Ruling No. 11, we cannot agree that the evidence, which is undisputed, was sufficient to warrant such finding by the court.

In support of the judgment plaintiff contends that it was rendering a service within the meaning of Ruling No. 11. At the outset of this argument it indulges in an unwarranted assumption that it was a subcontractor performing a service for the general contractor by obtaining the ingredients, apportioning and mixing them, having them ready at the proper time and ultimately pouring the concrete into the forms or the asphalt onto the road bed, something which the general contractor could have done for himself, and hence the only transaction to which the tax could apply would be the sale of the ingredients. The obvious answer to such argument is that the contractor, rather than doing those things for himself, chose to purchase the finished product from plaintiff. The illustration used by the Attorney General in answer to plaintiff's argument is most apt. "Thus, if one were to purchase lumber to make a ping-pong table, obviously the tax would be measured by the cost of the lumber. On the other hand, if one were to purchase a completed ping-pong table, clearly the tax would be measured by the price of the table without deduction for '* * * labor or service cost * * *' as provided in section 6012." This is the difference which always exists where a customer purchases raw materials rather than a finished product.

Furthermore from an examination of the transactions between plaintiff and its customers, it is apparent no construction contracts were either intended or negotiated. The sole document offered in evidence, a purchase order from one of plaintiff's customers, is conceded to be typical of the orders received. It is apparent therefrom that plaintiff's customers simply ordered material for their construction projects and nothing more. Nothing contained in the purchase order can be construed to evidence an intent to engage plaintiff as a construction contractor. The testimony of the plaintiff's president was that most of the concrete was delivered without any document; that most orders were received orally or by telephone and thereafter some, but not all, were confirmed; that many times the job was finished before plaintiff received a purchase order; and that such purchase orders were issued for the convenience of the issuer and not for the convenience of the seller. In other words, plaintiff was not performing work pursuant to construction contracts, but was merely selling a product—wet-mix cement or asphalt.

It necessarily follows that plaintiff is not a contractor and hence not a consumer within the provisions of Ruling No. 11, and therefore the tax would apply to it as a retailer of the products which it manufactures and sells.

The judgment is reversed.

Civ. 23190.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Oct. 28, 1958.

Hearing Denied Dec. 23, 1958.

Action involving the distribution of a condemnation award. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, J. H. Ziemann, J., the defendant wife appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J. pro tem., held that where spouses owned realty in joint tenancy and husband without wife's knowledge executed a mortgage thereon, such execution did not terminate the joint tenancy in favor of the husband's interest from that of the wife, and hence upon his death wife was entitled to distribution of the entire condemnation award of the property.

Judgment reversed.

1. Joint Tenancy $\S$ 1, 6

In order that a joint tenancy may exist, unity of interest, of title, time and of possession are required, and so long as such unities exist, the right of survivorship is an incident of the tenancy, and upon death of one joint tenant, the survivor becomes the sole owner in fee by right of survivorship and no interest in the property passes to the heirs, devisees or personal representatives of the joint tenant first to die.

2. Mortgages ⇨1, 137, 187

A "mortgage" is but a hypothecation of the property mortgaged and it creates but a charge or lien upon the property hypothecated without the necessity of a change of possession and without any right of possession in the mortgagee and does not pass the legal title to the mortgagee. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 2920.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Mortgage".

3. Husband and Wife ⇨14(3, 10)

Where joint tenancy in fee simple existed between spouses at time of execution of mortgage, mortgage executed by the husband without knowledge of wife was but a lien upon husband's interest and did not transfer title to the mortgagee, or entitle the mortgagee to possession and hence estate in joint tenancy was not severed and spouses did not become tenants in common and as mortgage lien attached only to such interest as husband had in the property, when his interest ceased to exist, the lien of the mortgage expired with it.

4. Joint Tenancy ⇨6

The right of survivorship is chief characteristic that distinguishes a "joint tenancy" from other interests in property, and while both joint tenants are alive each has a specialized form of life estate, with what amounts to a contingent remainder in the fee; such contingency being dependent upon which joint tenant survives.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Joint Tenancy".

5. Joint Tenancy ⇨12

The only distinction between a judgment lien and a lien of a mortgage executed by one joint tenant is that the mortgage lien is a lien upon specific property, while a judgment lien is a general lien upon all the real property of the judgment debtor.

6. Eminent Domain ⇨152(1)

Husband and Wife ⇨14(10)

Where spouses owned realty in joint tenancy and husband without wife's knowledge executed a mortgage thereon, such execution did not terminate the joint tenancy in favor of the husband's interest from that of the wife, but the mortgage was a lien upon the husband's interest as a joint tenancy only, and hence upon his death his interest having ceased to exist the lien and mortgage terminated and the wife was entitled to distribution of the entire condemnation award of the property exclusive of the sums distributed to other lienholders. Ward Sullivan and D. C. C. Kembitskey, Los Angeles, for defendants and respondents.

NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

This appeal presents but one question: Is a mortgage upon real property executed by one of two joint tenants enforceable after the death of that joint tenant?

The facts are not in dispute. The appellant, Elaine R. Wilson, hereinafter called "Elaine," and Calvert S. Wilson, hereinafter called "Calvert," were husband and wife. On April 10, 1950, they acquired the real property in question as joint tenants and the record title remained in them as joint tenants until the death of Calvert. In July 1954 Elaine and Calvert separated. On October 11, 1954, Calvert executed his promissory note to his parents, the respondents, Frank H. and Alice B. Wilson, hereinafter called "respondents." This note was in the sum of $6,440. At the same time he executed and delivered to respondents a mortgage upon the real property in question. Elaine did not have knowledge of or give her consent to the execution of this mortgage. On June 23, 1955, Calvert died. On May 8, 1956, the People of the State of California commenced an action to condemn the subject real property. By its complaint the condemner alleged that Elaine R. Wilson was the owner of the subject real property and that respondents were mortgagees thereof. By her answer Elaine alleged that she was the owner of the property, that respondents had no right, title or interest therein. Respondents by their answer alleged that they were the owners and holders of the mortgage executed by Calvert and prayed that the mortgage be satisfied from the proceeds of the condemnation award. By agreement the fair market value of the property was fixed at $13,800 and that amount together with interest was paid into court by the condemner. Thereafter trial was had as to the rights and interests of Elaine and the respondents. No formal findings were made by the court but by a memorandum ruling the court found that there was owing to respondents the sum of $6,440 upon the promissory note executed by Calvert and secured by the aforesaid mortgage and ordered that sum plus interest disbursed to respondents out of 50 per cent of the funds remaining in the hands of the trustee (the county clerk) after the payment of certain liens which were concededly a charge upon the joint estate. Judgment was entered accordingly. As a practical matter this resulted in distribution of 50 per cent of said balance to respondents as the amount found due them was in excess of one-half of the balance remaining after the payment of other liens.

It is appellant's contention that execution of the mortgage by Calvert did not operate to terminate the joint tenancy and sever his interest from that of Elaine but that the mortgage was a charge or lien upon his interest as a joint tenant only and that therefore upon his death his interest having ceased to exist the lien of the mortgage terminated and that Elaine was entitled to the distribution of the entire award exclusive of the sums distributed to other lienholders.

[1] We have reached the conclusion that appellant's contention must be sustained. In order that a joint tenancy may exist four unities are required; unity of interest, unity of title, unity of time and unity of possession. Hammond v. McArthur, 30 Cal.2d 512, 514, 183 P.2d 1 and authorities there cited. So long as these unities exist the right of survivorship is an incident of the tenancy and upon the death of one joint tenant the survivor becomes the sole owner in fee by right of survivorship and no interest in the property passes to the heirs, devisees or personal representatives of the joint tenant first to die. King v. King, 107 Cal.App.2d 257, 236 P.2d 912; In re Estate of Zaring, 93 Cal.App.2d 577, 579-580, 209 P.2d 642.

It is undisputed in the present case that a joint tenancy in fee simple existed between Elaine and Calvert at the time of the execution of the mortgage, that at that time there existed all of the four unities, that consequently Elaine upon the death of Calvert became the sole owner of the property in question and under the doctrine of equitable conversion to the entire award in condemnation, unless the execution by Calvert of the mortgage destroyed one of the unities and thus severed the joint tenancy and destroyed the right of survivorship.

[2] Under the law of this state a mortgage is but a hypothecation of the property mortgaged. It creates but a charge or lien upon the property hypothecated without the necessity of a change of possession and without any right of possession in the mortgagee and does not operate to pass the legal title to the mortgagee. Civ.Code, § 2920; McMillan v. Richards, 9 Cal. 365, 406, 411; Dutton v. Warschauer, 21 Cal. 609, 621; 33 Cal.Jur.2d 423-424.

[3] Inasmuch as the mortgage was but a lien or charge upon Calvert's interest and as it did not operate to transfer the legal title or any title to the mortgagees or entitle the mortgagees to possession it did not destroy any of the unities and therefore the estate in joint tenancy was not severed and Elaine and Calvert did not become tenants in common. It necessarily follows that as the mortgage lien attached only to such interest as Calvert had in the real property when his interest ceased to exist the lien of the mortgage expired with it. Application of Gau, 230 Minn. 235, 41 N.W.2d 444; Power v. Grace, 1 D.L.R. 801; Zeigler v. Bonnell, 52 Cal.App.2d 217, 219-221, 126 P.2d 118, cited with approval in Hammond v. McArthur, supra, 30 Cal.2d 512, 183 P.2d 1.

[4] In Zeigler v. Bonnell, supra, it was directly held that a judgment lien upon the interest of a joint tenant terminated on the death of the judgment debtor joint tenant. In so holding the court said (52 Cal.App.2d at page 219, 126 P.2d at page 119): "The right of survivorship is the chief characteristic that distinguishes a joint tenancy from other interests in property. The surviving joint tenant does not secure that right from the deceased joint tenant, but from the devise or conveyance by which the joint tenancy was first created. (Citation.) While both joint tenants are alive each has a specialized form of a life estate, with what amounts to a contingent remainder in the fee, the contingency being dependent upon which joint tenant survives. The judgment lien of respondent could attach only to the interest of his debtor, William B. Nash. That interest terminated upon Nash's death. After his death there was no interest to levy upon. Although the title of the execution purchaser dates back to the date of his lien, that doctrine only applies when the rights of innocent third parties have not intervened. Here the rights of the surviving joint tenant intervened between the date of the lien and the date of the sale. On the latter date the deceased joint tenant had no interest in the property, and his judgment creditor has no greater rights. * * * This rule is sound in theory and fair in its operation. When a creditor has a judgment lien against the interest of one joint tenant he can immediately execute and sell the interest of his judgment debtor, and thus sever the joint tenancy, or he can keep his lien alive and wait until the joint tenancy is terminated by the death of one of the joint tenants. If the judgment debtor survives, the judgment lien immediately attaches to the entire property. If the judgment debtor is the first to die, the lien is lost. If the creditor sits back to await this contingency, as respondent did in this case, he assumes the risk of losing his lien."

[5] We are unable to distinguish between the effect of a judgment lien and of a lien of a mortgage executed by one joint tenant only. The only distinction between the two liens is that the mortgage lien is a lien upon specific property while the judgment lien is a general lien upon all real property of the judgment debtor. McMillan v. Richards, supra, 9 Cal. 365, 409.

In Hammond v. McArthur, supra, in discussing the operation of a mortgage as a severance of joint tenancy, the Supreme Court, in what is undoubtedly dictum, as a mortgage was not there involved, said (30 Cal.2d at page 515, 183 P.2d at page 3): "In jurisdictions where a mortgage ordinarily operates to transfer the legal title, a mortgage by a joint tenant causes a severance of the joint tenancy. (Citation.) Also, in some states where a mortgage is regarded as mere security, a mortgage by a joint tenant brings the tenancy to an end. (Citation.) However, that conclusion is not in accord with the common-law authorities to the effect that the creation by a joint tenant of a mere charge upon the land is a nullity as against the right of survivorship of the other joint tenant. (Citation.)"

Respondents have directed our attention to decisions of other jurisdictions which they assert support their contention that a joint tenant has a right to mortgage his interest and that this operates to sever the joint tenancy. Examination of each of the cases relied upon by respondents discloses that all except one of them were rendered in jurisdictions where a mortgage operated not merely as a lien or charge upon the mortgagor's interest but as a transfer or conveyance of his interest, the conveyance being subject to defeasance upon the payment of the mortgage debt. It is evident that in those jurisdictions where a mortgage operates to convey title to the mortgagee the unity of title is destroyed and in those jurisdictions where it operates not only to transfer title but the right of possession to the mortgagee both the unity of title and of possession are destroyed and that in either case there is a severance of the joint tenancy.

Respondents place their main reliance upon Wilken v. Young, 144 Ind. 1, 41 N.E. 68, 590, decided by the Supreme Court of the State of Indiana. At the time this decision was rendered Indiana adhered to the lien theory of mortgages and the case undoubtedly strongly tends to support respondents' position. We do not, however, feel bound by it.

In the first place the Supreme Court of Indiana based its holding that a joint tenant might mortgage his interest and that the lien of the mortgage survived his death upon two cases; York v. Stone, 1 Salk 158 and Simpson's Lessee v. Ammons, 1 Bin. Pa., 175. We will comment further on these opinions later in this opinion, but direct attention here to the fact that both of them were rendered in jurisdictions where a mortgage operated as a conveyance of the mortgagor's interest.

In the second place the Supreme Court of Indiana did not hold that the execution of the mortgage operated as a severance of the joint estate so as to destroy the right of survivorship but expressly held that there was no severance and that upon the death of the mortgagor life tenant the surviving joint tenant took by virtue of the tenancy but as to one-half of the property she took only the right of redemption from the mortgage created by the deceased joint tenant.

The decision seems to us entirely illogical and the result of it unjust for under it one joint tenant might, as in the case at bar, mortgage and obtain the full value of an undivided one-half of the joint tenancy property and yet retain his right to the entire property as the surviving joint tenant should his cotenant be the first to die; while that cotenant, if the survivor, would take but the right to acquire from the mortgagee the one-half interest to which she had the right as the survivor. Further, the mortgagee would by the mortgage obtain a lien upon an undivided one-half interest which would not be defeated by the death of the mortgagor but also be a lien upon the whole property were the mortgagor to be the survivor.

York v. Stone, supra, was decided by the chancery court in England and in that jurisdiction the mortgage operated to transfer the legal title to the mortgagee and gave the mortgagee the right to immediate possession.

In Simpson's Lessee v. Ammon, supra, 1 Bin. 175, decided by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in 1806, the court without citation of authority for the statement or the statement of any reason therefor stated (at page 177): "* * * the court are of the opinion that the mortgage was a severance of the joint tenancy. The interest of Baynton and Morgan passed by it, but the interest of Wharton was not affected." While there is some conflict in the decisions of the Pennsylvania courts as to whether a mortgage operates merely as a charge or lien upon the property mortgaged or as a transfer of the title of the mortgagor, undoubtedly, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in rendering its decision in the Simpson case considered a mortgage as vesting title in the mortgagee for in Moliere's Lessee v. Noe, 4 Dall. 450, 1 L.Ed. 450, which was decided by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in the same year that it decided the Simpson case, Mr. Justice Tilghman who was the author of the opinion in the Simpson case said: "Before I dismiss this subject, I will give my opinion concerning debts due by mortgage, which were mentioned in the course of the argument. I conceive them to stand on a different footing from judgments, because the mortgagee is strictly speaking, the owner of the land, and may recover it in an ejectment. The mortgagor has no more than an equity of redemption * * *." See also Martin v. Jackson, 1856, 27 Pa. 504, 67 Am.Dec. 489.

Counsel have also directed our attention to Wolf v. Johnson, 157 Md. 112, 145 A. 363, 366. This case was decided by the Supreme Court of Maryland. In the opinion, the question as to whether the execution of a mortgage by a joint tenant terminated the joint tenancy is not discussed but is assumed. The entire question discussed by the court was whether the estate there in question was one "by the entireties" or one of joint tenancy. We assume that the reason the question as to severance was not argued or discussed is that under the law of Maryland a mortgage operates to transfer the legal title to the mortgagee and in the absence of contract gives him the right to possession and would therefore necessarily destroy the unities of both title and possession. Kramer v. United States, 4 Cir., 190 F.2d 712; Williams v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co., 167 Md. 499, 175 A. 331, 333.

Respondents also rely upon the decision of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin in Goff v. Yauman, 237 Wis. 643, 298 N.W. 179, 134 A.L.R. 952. There the court held that a statutory lien upon the interest of a joint tenant of real property created under the old age assistance statutes of Wisconsin survived the death of the joint tenant. The decision of the court was based entirely upon the construction of the statute and the court expressly stated that it was not determining as to whether or not a severance would be created by the execution by a joint tenant of a mortgage. It may be pointed out that under a similar statute and in a much better reasoned decision the Supreme Court of Minnesota reached the opposite conclusion to that reached by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin and held that a statutory lien upon the interest of a joint tenant terminated with the death of that tenant. Application of Gau, 230 Minn. 235, 41 N.W. 2d 444.

[6] There is nothing inequitable in holding that the lien of respondents' mortgage did not survive the death of the mortgagor. Their note was payable upon demand and they could have enforced the lien and mortgage by foreclosure and sale prior to the death of the mortgagor and thus have severed the joint tenancy. If they chose not to do so but to await the contingency of which joint tenant died first they did so at their own risk. Under that event the lien that they had expired. If the event had been otherwise and the mortgagor had been the survivor the security of their lien would have been doubled.

The judgment is reversed.

Hearing Granted Dec. 10, 1958.

Child custody case. From that part of an order entered by Elmer D. Doyle, J., and modifying decrees of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, and from an order regarding costs and attorney's fees, an appeal was taken. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that mere fact that one of children of parties had reached age of discretion and chose to live with other parent did not constitute such change of circumstances as would warrant a change in custody of other child of tender years; and held that because of disparity in ages between 6 year old boy and his 14 year old sister and evidence bearing on subject of welfare of younger child, it was an abuse of discretion to modify custody provisions as to younger child when older child expressed a preference to live with her father.

Part of order modifying decrees reversed; order regarding costs and attorney's fees affirmed in part and reversed in part with direction.

That one of children of parties had reached age of discretion and chose to live with other parent was not such a change of circumstances as would warrant a change in custody of other child of tender years; and because of disparity in ages between 6 year old boy and his 14 year old sister and evidence bearing on subject of welfare of younger child, it was an abuse of discretion to modify custody provisions as to younger child when older child expressed a preference to live with her father.

2. Divorce ⚭303(3)

To warrant modification of custodial order, general rule is that there must be substantial evidence of a change of circumstances after entry of original decree, except in a case where, despite fact that there is no change of circumstances, welfare of child nevertheless requires or justifies change in previous order of custody.

3. Divorce ⚭303(3)

One seeking modification of prior custodial order has burden of proof to show facts warranting change in custody and that it is for child's best interests. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 138(2).

4. Parent and Child ⚭2(3.2)

There is no fixed and certain age of minority which can be said to constitute a child of "tender years" for purposes of Civil Code section providing that mother should have custody of child of "tender years". West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 138(2).

5. Divorce ⚭303(2)

That mother had sold family home and moved with children to another part of state was not such change in circumstances as would warrant modification of child custody order.

6. Divorce ⚭182, 194

Wife should have been allowed costs and attorney's fees on appeal which was meritorious and taken in good faith in child custody case.

VALLÉE, Justice

Appeal by plaintiff-mother from that part of a custody order modifying interlocutory and final decrees of divorce, and from an order awarding $100 attorney's fees for past services and denying attorney's fees and cost on appeal.

The parties were married February 12, 1942 and separated November 3, 1953. Plaintiff was awarded an interlocutory judgment of divorce on February 18, 1955. Custody of the two children of the parties, Denise and Hans, then aged 12 and 4, respectively, was awarded to plaintiff, with the right of reasonable visitation in defendant, and defendant ordered to pay plaintiff $300 a month for the support of each child. The interlocutory decree provided, among other things, that "the defendant may visit and have the possession of the children between the hours of 12:00 noon and 7:00 p. m. on alternate Sundays and alternate national holidays; and that the defendant shall have the duty of calling for and returning said children to their home." The decree is silent concerning the place where the children are to live, and there was no injunction with respect to where plaintiff could reside. The final decree was entered April 19, 1956, incorporating the provisions of the interlocutory decree respecting the custody and support of the children.

In July 1955 plaintiff moved to Oakland, California, with the children. She resigned her position as a physician with the Los Angeles City Schools and went to work as a civilian physician for the Army in Oakland. In June 1956 plaintiff remarried and has been living in Carmel, California, where the children also lived until the orders were entered in this proceeding.

In September 1956, on application of defendant, an order was made requiring plaintiff to show cause why custody of the children should not be awarded to defendant, or that plaintiff be required to return the children to Los Angeles county so that he could exercise his visitation rights as granted by the decree. On October 29, 1956, the matter was referred to a commissioner who postponed hearing to January 16, 1957, pending an investigation and report by a court investigator. An interim order was made on October 29 that "during the period of continuance the defendant shall be entitled to physical possession of the minor children on the week-end of Friday the 16th to November 18 and from December 19 to December 27 providing the defendant pays for and provides airplane transportation for the minor children from Carmel to Los Angeles and return."

1. The recommendation of the court investigator was: "That the care, custody and control of the minor children, Denise and Hans Goto, be retained by the mother at this time; that the father be allowed rights of liberal visitation and that, because of the distance between the two homes, the father have physical custody on one weekend each month, as well as one week of the Christmas vacation, one-half of the Easter vacation, and one-half of the summer vacation.

"That neither parent say anything derogatory concerning the other in the presence of the minor children, and that the children not be taken out of the State of California without further order of Court."

The investigator said: "The mother is employed on a half day basis at a nearby Army base and has a net income of $250. per month. The stepfather is em-

At the hearing on January 16, 1957, the judge heard the testimony of the parties and the court investigator, and received the report of the investigator in evidence.<sup>1</sup> The court then made the following order:

"Custody of the minor children is to remain with plaintiff until the end of the school term, in June, with right of reasonable visitation to the defendant, as heretofore ordered; defendant may have physical custody of the children one-half of the Easter vacation and during the summer vacation, with the exception of the first week in August, when plaintiff may have the children. Further hearing on custody is to be had at a date prior to next September, to be agreed upon by the parties. Plaintiff is ordered to pay her own attorney's fees and costs, on the ground that she was responsible for taking the children to Oakland, and by reason of that fact it was necessary for defendant to bring this modification."

The matter was again heard on August 28, 1957. After testimony of the parties and with approval of both parents the children were privately interviewed by the court in chambers. On August 29, 1957 the court made the following order:

"After talking with the two minor children of the parties in chambers, the employed as a field man with the Chester Packer and Wheeler Nurseries in Watsonville, California, 30 miles distant from the home, and has an average income of $10,000. per year. * * * The father has not remarried and care of the children during their visits with him is by the paternal aunt or the paternal grandmother. * * *

"Since her [the mother's] remarriage she has a good home for the children and she is doing everything possible to provide the proper atmosphere for their growth and development. * * *

"There appears to be no reason to believe that the mother is not a fit or proper person to provide for the care of her children, and it is also believed that the father is equally fit and proper and that he should be allowed rights of liberal visitation."

Court makes the following order and findings: The Court finds that both parents are fit and proper persons to have custody of the minor children. The Court further finds that the daughter being over the age of 14 years has expressed a preference to live with the defendant and that both children should remain together under the custody of the same parent. It is therefore ordered that custody of the minor children is awarded to the defendant; the plaintiff may have physical custody of the minor children during the months of July and August of each year, at which time the defendant shall have rights of reasonable visitation. The order for support of the minor children is vacated except for the months of July and August when the children are with the plaintiff at which time the defendant shall pay support to the plaintiff in the same amounts he has been paying. Plaintiff is to have physical custody of the minor children for one-half of the Christmas vacation and one-half of the Easter vacation to alternate each year so that the children will actually be with her on Christmas Day of one year and on Easter of the following year."

Plaintiff appeals (1) from the order of August 29, 1957, insofar as it awards the custody of Hans to defendant and insofar as it modifies the final decree that defendant support Hans, and (2) from an order directing defendant to pay $100 attorney's fees for services performed and denying plaintiff's motion for attorney's fees and costs on appeal.

Appeal from Modification of Custody Order

The issue is whether the court abused its discretion in the order of August 29, 1957 modifying the decrees.

[1] Plaintiff contends the decrees awarding her custody of the young boy cannot be modified in the absence of evidence establishing a change of conditions detrimental to the welfare of the child. In this connection she argues that evidence one of the children of the parties has reached the age of discretion sufficient to choose to live with the other parent is not such a change of circumstances as would warrant a change in custody of the other child of tender age. We agree. Because of the disparity in ages between Hans, the 6-year-old boy, and his 14-year-old sister and the evidence bearing on the subject of the welfare of this child under such change in custody, we must conclude that it was an abuse of the court's discretion to modify the custody provision of the decrees as to Hans.

[2, 3] To warrant modification of a custodial order the general rule is said to be there must be substantial evidence of a change of circumstances after the entry of the original decree (Davis v. Davis, 41 Cal.2d 563, 565, 261 P.2d 729), except in a case where, despite the fact that there was no change of circumstances, nevertheless the welfare of the child requires or justifies the change in the previous order of custody. Gantner v. Gantner, 39 Cal.2d 272, 276, 246 P.2d 923; Foster v. Foster, 8 Cal.2d 719, 726, 68 P.2d 719; Juri v. Juri, 69 Cal.App.2d 773, 778, 160 P.2d 73. The one seeking modification has the burden of proof to show facts warranting the change in custody and that it is for the child's best interests. Johnson v. Johnson, 72 Cal.App.2d 721, 724, 165 P.2d 552; Stagliano v. Stagliano, 125 Cal.App.2d 343, 348, 270 P.2d 91.

Civil Code, section 138, states the considerations which should guide a court in the exercise of its discretion in determining the custody of children. Subdivision (2) provides:

"As between parents adversely claiming the custody, neither parent is entitled to it as of right; but other things being equal, if the child is of tender years, custody should be given to the mother * * *."

[4] There is no fixed and certain age of minority which can be said to constitute a child of "tender years." Russell v. Russell,

20 Cal.App. 457, 461, 129 P. 467. In Taber v. Taber, 209 Cal. 755, 290 P. 36, a child of six was held to be a child of tender years. The court pointed out that the sex of the child is to be considered as well as its physical development in determining whether it is a child of tender years. In Bemis v. Bemis, 89 Cal.App.2d 80, 200 P.2d 84, this court reversed an order of a trial judge who had refused to award two children, aged 5½ and 7, to their mother who was a fit person. We stated (89 Cal.App.2d at page 83, 200 P.2d at page 86):

"The 'other things' [referred to in Civ.Code, § 138] that are to be weighed and considered are a good home, congenial surroundings, intelligent attention and direction in matters affecting the health, growth and development of the children—these are the principal advantages that must be looked for. The court has a broad discretion in determining whether such advantages are offered by the respective parents, and whether they are equal, but if the evidence clearly establishes that the children will have equal advantages in the home of the mother and that the mother has demonstrated her ability and willingness to perform her maternal duties properly, the law requires that young children be placed with her. * * *

"[89 Cal.App.2d at page 90, 200 P.2d at page 90.] Upon the undisputed evidence in the case, section 138 of the Civil Code is controlling. When facts are established which clearly make applicable the quoted provision of the section that custody should be awarded to the mother, it is not within the discretion of the court to ignore it. There is no more sound or universally recognized rule of law to be found in the books. Where the court finds that 'other things' are equal, young children are invariably given into the custody of their mother. We say 'invariably' because we have not found in our reported cases a single instance in which the custody of young children has been awarded to their father upon evidence that the mother was a fit and proper person to have their custody and was able to give them advantages equal to those that they would enjoy in the home of the father. We need not elaborate upon the reasons which underlie this sound policy of the law. They are stated with great clarity and completeness in many cases, and we shall therefore refer only to Juri v. Juri, 69 Cal.App.2d 773, 160 P.2d 73, and cases therein cited." (Emphasis added. Also see Ex parte Elliott, 115 Cal.App.2d 536, 254 P.2d 135; Sorrels v. Sorrels, 105 Cal.App.2d 465, 468, 234 P.2d 103.)

In the divorce action the parties waived findings. Inferentially, the court found that other things were equal; that plaintiff was a fit and proper custodian; that the welfare of the children required she have their custody. It awarded custody of Denise and Hans, then 12 and 4 years of age, respectively, to plaintiff with the right of reasonable visitation to defendant, including possession of the children on alternate Sundays and holidays. At the hearing of August 1957, the court specifically found that both parents were fit and proper persons to have custody of the children. There has never been any question as to the fitness of either parent. Nevertheless, having found the mother to be a fit and proper person, the court changed the custody award of this 6-year-old boy, taking him away from his mother and giving him to his father, stating as its only reason that since the boy's 14-year-old sister had expressed a preference to live with the father it was for the best interests of both children that they remain together under the custody of the same parent, chosen by the older child. The court did not say in what way the interests of this young child would be benefited by removing him from the loving care of his mother in order that he might be with his teen-age sister in the home of the father where he would have no maternal care. We do not think a teen-ager's influence is superior to that of the natural mother in guiding a child through its formative years. Defendant testified he has a four-bedroom home; Denise has a private bedroom, and he sleeps with Hans; he has no housekeeper to care for the children; on Mondays he is with both children all day; on most other days Denise goes to the hospital and to his office with him, and Hans is picked up by his (defendant's) sister and taken to her home.

In Ashwell v. Ashwell, 135 Cal.App.2d 211, 286 P.2d 983, the interlocutory decree awarded the custody of four children between the ages of 2 and 6 to the mother. During the interlocutory period the trial court changed the custody to the father. Reversing, the court stated (135 Cal.App.2d at page 213, 286 P.2d at page 984):

"If the order is to be supported upon the ground alleged in the notice of motion it can only be because, if such findings had been made, they would have been sustained by the evidence, for, unless that be so, then it seems clear to us that the change in custody constituted an abuse of discretion in view of the previous and recent adjudication that Norma was a fit and proper custodian and that the welfare of the children required that she have their custody and control; that is, there must be sufficient evidence that a change had taken place after the granting of the interlocutory decree and that thereby the welfare of the children was endangered. Munson v. Munson, 27 Cal.2d 659, 166 P.2d 268; Prouty v. Prouty, 16 Cal.2d 190, 193, 105 P.2d 295, 297—there the court said: 'It must be borne in mind that in every proceeding to modify a provision for the custody of a minor child the burden is on the moving party to satisfy the court that conditions have so changed as to justify the modification.' [Citations]—'until some change of circumstance arises which makes a modification of the former order of custody advisable from the point of view of the welfare of the child, the court will give effect to the former order and will refuse to make any modification of such order.'"

"In the case of a child of tender years, experience has taught that in the vast majority of cases there is no one who will give such complete and selfless devotion, and so unhesitatingly and unstintingly make the sacrifices which the welfare of the child demands, as the child's own mother. The record herein abounds in evidence showing the anxious desires of a mother to care for her child. Under such circumstances fairness alone requires that she and not a third person be allowed the opportunity to carry out the trust she as a mother owes her child. Juri v. Juri, 69 Cal.App.2d 773, 778, 779, 160 P.2d 73; In re Estate of Lindner, 13 Cal. App. 208, 212, 109 P. 101." Robertson v. Robertson, 72 Cal.App.2d 129, 135, 164 P.2d 52, 56. Reversing an order awarding the custody of two children, 4 and 5 years of age, to the father, the court in Juri v. Juri, 69 Cal.App.2d 773, at page 780, 160 P.2d 73, at page 76, stated:

"[W]here the ability, willingness and eminent fitness of a mother to take custody of her infant offspring are unquestioned, as is the case before us, we believe that in denying these children an opportunity to know, to learn to respect and to receive the care and affection of their mother for at least a part of each year, the trial court abused its discretion."

In Washburn v. Washburn, 49 Cal.App.2d 581, 122 P.2d 96, the divorce decree gave custody of a girl 9 and a boy 15 to the mother. A modification order was made giving custody to the father. On appeal the order was reversed. The court said (49 Cal. App.2d at page 586, 122 P.2d at page 99):

"So far as the evidence goes there is not one iota to indicate that the children did not have the best of care from their mother * * *. The father is active in this business and employs a housekeeper * * * and so if the children were to reside in his home they would be largely under the immediate care of a housekeeper or of a governess if he employed one, as he stated he would if awarded the custody."

Here, the boy is of an age which imperatively requires that he have the care and attention of his mother rather than that of a teen-age sister or third persons, and this is a compelling reason for separating him from his sister with whom he has few, if any, interests in common.

[5] Defendant contends the evidence supports a change in circumstances warranting the modification of the custody order by reason of plaintiff's sale of the family home, in which she and the children were living at the time of the interlocutory decree, and moving with the children to Oakland. He argues the move was made for the purpose of depriving him of his visitation rights and in order to be near the man whom she subsequently married. There was no injunction in the decree which purported to govern where the mother and children should reside. Simply because plaintiff moved her residence, remarried, and practiced her profession half-time while Hans was in school does not warrant an inference that she has neglected Hans. A parent to whom custody has been awarded has the right to select any reasonable place in which the child shall reside with him. 17A Am. Jur. 23, § 831. Defendant is a man of means and the distance to Carmel is not so great as to work a hardship on him in arranging transportation in order to have Hans with him during visitation periods.

The court in effect held that a 14-year-old child can determine not only where she is going to live and with which parent but that she also can determine who shall have the custody of her 6-year-old brother, thus pre-empting the statutory and natural right of a fit mother to rear her child. As counsel for plaintiff states, "This determination flies in the face of common sense and the natural law."

There is no evidence of a change in circumstances as to Hans to warrant the modification order and it can only be sustained, therefore, on proof of facts from which it can be inferred that his welfare requires that he be removed from plaintiff's custody. The only other evidence offered by defendant bearing on Hans' welfare was his testimony concerning the material advantages he is able to offer the child. This is not sufficient to warrant modification of the order. Plaintiff is able to offer equal advantages. She has remarried and her husband has indicated an interest in the welfare of both children. Their home is in a good residential area in Carmel. Hans was settled in school there and apparently doing well. He attended the local Japanese Presbyterian Church. Plaintiff now practices her profession only half days and is able to be home with Hans all during the time he is not in school. There is no evidence of the possibility that Hans will develop a hostile attitude toward his father if allowed to remain in the home of his mother. The record reveals Hans evidences a normal, natural love for both parents. There is nothing in the record showing any relationship between the 14-year-old girl and the young boy, 8 years her junior, that would justify an inference that her companionship would be better for Hans than the constant love, devotion, daily care, and companionship of his mother. Nor is there anything which justifies depriving the mother of the love, comfort, and rearing of Hans.

Defendant's home conditions have not greatly changed since the interlocutory decree. Besides his own practice as a physician he works at a Japanese hospital. He does not employ a housekeeper. He would be with Hans very little of the time. He is dependent upon his relatives, who have homes and children of their own, and the older girl to assist in the care of Hans. There is nothing in the record indicating that the welfare of Hans requires or justifies a change in the previous order awarding his custody to plaintiff. It was an abuse of discretion to take this 6-year-old boy from the custody of his mother and place him in the custody of his father solely so that he might be with his 14-year-old sister.

Appeal from Order
re Attorney's Fees and Costs

[6] On September 24, 1957, plaintiff applied for an allowance of attorney's fees for services performed in connection with the application of defendant for an order giving him custody of the children and for an allowance of costs and attorney's fees for services on her appeal from the order of August 29, 1957. The application for attorney's fees for past services performed was submitted on affidavits of plaintiff and defendant. On November 6, 1957, the court ordered defendant to pay $100 attorney's fees to counsel for plaintiff for services rendered to the date of the order and denied the application for costs and attorney's fees on plaintiff's appeal on "the grounds that the appeal has not been taken in good faith." Plaintiff appeals from this order.

While the allowance of $100 appears to be extremely meager, we cannot say the court abused its discretion in not allowing a greater sum. The court erred in denying plaintiff's application for an allowance of costs and attorney's fees on the appeal from the order of August 29, 1957. From what has been said, it appears that the appeal was meritorious and taken in good faith. It is plain that the refusal to make plaintiff a reasonable allowance to prosecute the appeal on the ground it had not been taken in good faith was an abuse of discretion. Kyne v. Kyne, 74 Cal.App.2d 563, 568-569, 169 P.2d 272.

The parts of the order of August 29, 1957, appealed from are reversed. The order of November 6, 1957, insofar as it allows $100 attorney's fees, is affirmed; insofar as it denies plaintiff's application for costs and attorney's fees on appeal, it is reversed with directions to allow plaintiff a reasonable sum therefor. Appellant shall recover her costs on appeal.

Civ. 9404.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Oct. 29, 1958.

Taxpayers' actions against county officials and others to obtain a decree that a certain contract was invalid. From a judgment of the Superior Court, Tuolumne County, Ralph McGee, J., the plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held, inter alia, that in taxpayers' action to obtain a court decree adjudging that contract between county and board of administration of state retirement system was void because of certain alleged irregularities in the proceedings based upon theory that resolution summary was not sufficiently complete and detailed and that confusion resulted because of it, evidence supported trial court's findings that asserted confusion did not exist and that in all essential matters proceedings taken by the county measured up to requirements of the statutes, that election was fairly conducted and that ensuing contract was valid.

Affirmed.

1. Counties ⇐69(3)

A summary of county's intention to participate in state retirement system, which appeared in resolution of intention, adequately met statutory requirements where, though summary was brief, within approximations necessitated by statutory scheme, it told county employees essential features of the plan, including how much the plan would cost them, how much they would receive, and when they would receive it. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 20450, 20457.

2. Counties ⇐69(3)

A paragraph of summary of county's intention to participate in state retirement system was properly omitted from summary which appeared upon ballots given to miscellaneous employees, where paragraph had to do solely with contributions required of police officers who voted separately as a group and was of no concern to the miscellaneous employees who were entitled to separate ballots to be used by members of that group. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 20450, 20457.

3. Counties ⇐69(3)

The so-called "contract" which a public agency, such as a county, enters into with board of administration of state retirement system when its employees are blanketed into the system is not the type of contract which is the subject of rule that where a statute prescribes procedure by which a public agency may enter into a contract, procedure must be strictly followed. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 20450, 20457.

4. Counties ⇐69(3)

Under statute providing that a public agency, such as a county, may participate in and make all or part of its employees members of state retirement system, by proceedings leading to a contract between its governing body and board of administration of the system, substantial compliance with statutory requirement is sufficient. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 20450, 20457.

5. Counties ⇐69(3)

There was no inconsistency between summary in resolution of intention of county to participate in state retirement system and ballot summary on ground that two different base periods for computing final compensation were designated in the two summaries, where anyone reading the resolution of intention would recognize paragraph of contract form exhibit thereto as a proviso or exception to the more general language found in the resolution, and a reading of resolution and of exhibit showed that county proposed to use three-year period rather than the five-year period as a base. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 20024.01, 20025, 20450, 20457, 20804.5, 21250, 21251, 21252.

6. Counties ⇐69(3)

A county resolution of intention to participate in state retirement system was not invalid because a paragraph of resolution stated that 10 years of service was required to be eligible for such benefit where paragraph also made reference to another paragraph which provided that a member who had $500 on deposit was eligible for disability benefits. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 20450, 20457.

7. Counties ⇐69(3)

In action to obtain decree adjudging that contract between county and board of administration of state retirement system was void because of certain alleged irregularities in the proceedings based upon theory that resolution summary was not sufficiently complete and detailed and that confusion resulted because of it, evidence supported trial court's findings that asserted confusion did not exist and that in all essential matters proceedings taken by the county measured up to requirements of the statutes, that election was fairly conducted and that ensuing contract was valid. VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

The County of Tuolumne took proceedings to participate in, and to make its employees members of, the State Retirement System, hereinafter called "system". When the statutory proceedings had been completed, the county entered into the statutory "contract" with the Board of Administration of the system, hereinafter called "board". This action was brought by certain taxpayers of the county to obtain a court decree adjudging that the contract was void because of certain alleged irregularities in the proceedings. Section 20450 of the Government Code provides that any public agency, such as a county, may participate in and make all or part of its employees members of the system by proceedings leading to a contract between its governing body and the board. The following sections provide that when the governing body of a public agency desires to consider the participation of the agency in the system it shall ask the board for a quotation of approximate contribution to the system which would be required of the agency for such participation. When the agency has received this information and if it then desires to participate its governing body is required to adopt a resolution giving notice of such intention. This resolution is required to contain a summary of the major provisions of the proposed retirement plan. The agency must then hold an election to permit its employees proposed to be included in the system to express by secret ballot their approval or disapproval of the retirement proposal. Sec. 20457, Gov.Code. Prior to the election the agency must receive and make available to its employees a schedule of the rates of contribution of members. The ballot used at the election must include the summary of the retirement plan as set forth in the resolution and the election must be conducted by the agency in such manner as it prescribes, which shall be such as to permit the firemen, the policemen, the county peace officers, and the other employees proposed to be included in the system, to express separately their approval or disapproval. Sec. 20457, Gov.Code. The agency may not include in the system any of the said four groups, the majority of whose members vote to disapprove the proposed plan.

The trial court entered a judgment, upholding the validity of the statutory contract, the execution of which followed the statutory proceedings, and the plaintiffs appealed.

Although in their pleadings the appellants asserted a number of irregularities had occurred in the proceedings, most of these claims were either expressly abandoned in open court or were impliedly abandoned by the failure of appellants to introduce any evidence in support thereof. The issues tried revolved around appellants' contentions that the ballots used at the election did not include the summary of the retirement plan as set forth in the resolution of intention and that the election was not conducted in such manner as to permit each employee proposed to be included in the system to express by secret ballot his approval or disapproval of the proposed plan.

There were two groups of county employees proposed to be included. Of the first group made up of county peace officers there were five. Of the second group made up of all other county employees, hereinafter called "miscellaneous employees", there were one hundred and thirty-eight. Only two of the peace officers appeared and voted. By the miscellaneous employees there were cast 92 votes in favor of the plan and 26 votes in disapproval thereof.

[1] Both the resolution of intention and the two ballot forms used by the two groups of employees contained summaries. Appellants do not complain that the summary of the proposed plan contained in the resolution of intention was not sufficient in itself to meet the requirements of the statute. Our examination of that summary convinces us that it was adequate. It cannot be expected that in summarizing the 1,500 or so sections of the Government Code whereby the legislature has provided for the retirement of state employees, which statutory plan for retirement necessarily furnishes the basis for the retirement proposal to be voted on by the electors when a public agency desires to participate in the state plan, the summary could be anything other than a most abbreviated one. That of necessity it must be much abbreviated is also shown by the requirement that the summary be printed on the ballot forms. Only the barest outline of the retirement plan would be intelligible to the voting employees. The summary appearing in the resolution of intention adequately met the statutory requirements and served their purpose. It was brief, but within the approximations necessitated by the statutory scheme it told the employees the essential features of the plan, including how much the plan would cost them, how much they would receive, and when they would receive it.

[2-4] While not challenging the adequacy of the summary appearing in the resolution, appellants do say that the summary appearing on the ballot forms differed in material points from the summary appearing in the resolution and, therefore, the statutory requirements were not met. There were some differences, but we agree with the trial court which found that these differences were neither substantial nor apt to confuse the voters. We cannot agree with appellants in their argument that the statutory requirements must be followed to the letter else the resulting statutory "contract" will be void. We will first discuss the major variations which do appear. Paragraph 11 of the resolution summary was omitted from the summary that appeared upon the ballots given to miscellaneous employees. This omission was proper since the paragraph had to do solely with the contributions required of safety members, and was of no concern to the miscellaneous employees. There were in effect under the statutes as many separate elections to be held as there were groups of employees proposed to be included. In this case there were two groups and it was proper to give to each group ballots to be used by members of that group. This was done. The paragraph having to do with contributions to be made by peace officers was included in the summary that appeared upon ballots prepared for them. It was omitted and should have been omitted from the ballots of the miscellaneous employees, for to have included it in those ballots would only have been confusing. It is true that the summary which thus appeared on the ballots of the miscellaneous employees was not "the summary" appearing in the resolution of intention in so far as it thus omitted the paragraph pertinent to peace officer participation. The statutory requirement that the summary contained in the resolution of intention must also appear on the ballots was substantially complied with and that was enough. This was not, as appellants contend, a situation calling for the application of the rule that where a statute prescribes the procedure by which a public agency may enter into a contract the procedure must be strictly followed, since in such cases the mode is the measure of the power to contract. The so-called "contract" which a public agency enters into with the board when its employees are blanketed into the system is not at all the type of contract which is the subject of the stated rule. The statutory "contract" here involved possesses few of the essentials of a commercial contract. The system is one whereby contributions by the employees and by the state (or, as here, by the participating agency) purchase certain benefits determined, and periodically redetermined as to cost, by actuarial computations. The employee gets what the employee and the state or the agency pay for. The public contributions become a part of employee compensation for services. When a public agency blankets its employees into the system, the so-called "contract" which it executes is nothing more than its undertaking to collect the required contributions from its employees and, adding thereto the requisite amount of its own funds, pay the money to the board. The amount it must turn over to the board is initially computed and from time to time recomputed by the same actuarial methods used in computing and re-computing the contributions of the state's employees and of the state. The amount of contributions required for agency participation may differ from, may even exceed, the contributions of the state's employees and of the state, because the actuaries must, in computing the cost of the benefits to be derived, consider the smaller number of employees involved and the differing risks of their environment. We think that these considerations make it clear that we have not here the type of contract wherein the statutory procedure must be literally complied with, but, on the other hand, have a situation where substantial compliance is sufficient. So we say as to the variance or irregularity we are now discussing that the omission from the miscellaneous ballot forms of the paragraph of the resolution of intention which concerned only peace officers amounted to no material irregularity and, in fact, in our view, its omission was proper in order that the purpose of the statutory requirement that the ballots contain the resolution summary could be achieved, which purpose, of course, was to give information to be considered by the electors in casting their ballots.

[5] Appellants' second claim of irregularity again has to do with a supposed inconsistency between the resolution summary and the ballot summary. They charge that two different base periods for computing final compensation were designated in the two summaries. As originally enacted, the retirement law provided only what is known as the  $\frac{1}{60}$ th at 65 money value formula which was designed to provide the employee who retires at age 65 with 35 years of service a retirement allowance that in theory should approximate one-half of the average salary earned by him during his last five years of service. There was no guarantee that the allowance would equal one-half the salary, but rather the amount was dependent upon the employee's contributions. Through the years the law was liberalized until at the present time the most advantageous plan provides a guaranteed retirement allowance at age 60 after 30 years of service of one-half of the average salary of the three highest consecutive years paid to the employee. These more liberal provisions were added to the law not in place of the earlier provisions but in addition thereto. The result is that a contracting agency may choose one of several plans which will vary slightly in the amount of contributions required to obtain the varying benefits being purchased. There are also optional provisions which may be included in the plan adopted. These statutory provisions allow, (1) the use of a three-year base period rather than a five-year period (Gov.Code, § 20024.01), (2) the inclusion of all of the employees' compensation in computing retirement benefits rather than limiting benefits to the first \$416.66 per month (Gov. Code, § 20025), and (3) the granting to employees of the right to receive retirement credit for time spent in service prior to becoming a member of the system (Gov.Code, § 20804.5). All three of these optional features were adopted by Tuolumne County. The nonguarantee  $\frac{1}{60}$ th at 65 formula remains as the basic plan and a local agency whose agreement with the system did not specify otherwise would be afforded coverage on this basis. Gov.Code, §§ 21250, 21251 and 21252. The resolution summary, apparently attempting to give as much information as possible, was designed to fit the basic plan, while noting that certain other features were available on an optional basis. The summary appears to be a standardized form of summary furnished public agencies by the board, and it seems to have been the practice to use this standardized summary in all cases and to note the optional provisions proposed to be adopted by the contracting agency in each case in a copy of the proposed contract attached as an exhibit to the resolution of intention.

In paragraph 3 of the resolution summary the following appears: "3. The monthly retirement allowance payable upon retirement for service is dependent upon such factors as age, sex, salary, and years of service. For Local Safety Members retiring at age 55 in paragraph 2, or at a higher age with 20 years of service, the monthly allowance is approximately one-half the average monthly salary (salary over \$416.66 being excluded unless agency elects otherwise) during the five years immediately preceding retirement, unless the Public Agency elects to provide prior service benefits at less than the full amount. For other Agency employees, the monthly allowance, upon retirement at age 65 if the Agency elects 60 as the lowest optional service retirement age, is  $\frac{1}{10}$ th of the average monthly salary during the five years immediately preceding retirement, for each year of service after the effective date of participation, plus approximately  $\frac{1}{10}$ th, or less as may be provided in said contract by the Public Agency for its employees, of 'Final Compensation' or the average monthly salary during the three years immediately preceding the effective date of participation, for each year of service prior to that date. Upon retirement at age 60, if the Agency elects 55 as the lowest optional service retirement age, the fraction is approximately  $\frac{1}{10}$ th instead of  $\frac{1}{10}$ th, or exactly  $\frac{1}{10}$ th, if the guaranteed fraction also is elected. The fractions are reduced for both current and prior service if retirement is below 60, and increased only for current service, if retirement is above 60."

Paragraph 14 of the contract form reads as follows: "14. The provisions of Section 20024.01 of the State Employees' Retirement Law, which provide that 'final compensation' shall mean the highest average annual compensation earnable by a member during any period of three consecutive years during his membership in the System, Shall Apply to employees of Public Agency who become members of said Retirement System."

Government Code, § 20024.01, which allows the use of a three-year base period, is, as has been mentioned, an optional provision in the retirement law and the county adopted it rather than the standard five-year period. Anyone reading the resolution of intention would recognize paragraph 14 of the contract form exhibit thereto as a proviso or exception to the more general language that is found in paragraph 3 of the resolution. A reading of the resolution and of the exhibit shows that the county proposed to use the three-year period and the contract executed does so. There is thus no discrepancy between the summary and the ballot for miscellaneous employees. What has been said also applies to appellants' contention that there is no indication as to whether salary over $416.66 should be excluded for retirement purposes. The contract form showed that a part of the proposed plan was the adoption of, and the county did adopt, the provisions of Government Code, § 20025, providing that where the contracting agency so elects the entire salary of the employee shall be considered for retirement purposes.

[6] Appellants' third specification of irregularity is designated as "eligibility for disability retirement." Under this point it is argued that paragraph 5 of the resolution of intention states that 10 years of service is required to be eligible for this benefit. Paragraph 5 of the resolution does so state, but it also makes reference to paragraph 10 thereof, which provides that a member who has $500 on deposit is eligible for disability benefits. This and other designations of alleged irregularity are really attacks upon the resolution summary as not being sufficiently complete and detailed. A sufficient answer has already been made herein. The statute requires only a summary. The entire statutory scheme for retirement is far too extensive and far too complicated to permit all details to be given in an intelligible summary.

[7] As noted, the statute requires that the resolution of intention contain a summary, that the summary be repeated in the ballot forms, and that there be made available to the electors a schedule of contribution of members. These requirements were met. The statute also provides that the election shall be held in such manner as the agency shall decide. It appears in evidence that prior to the election all of the employees of the county were required to attend a meeting at which they were addressed by a speaker familiar with the state retirement system. Most of the employees attended this meeting. Other information in the form of brochures and pamphlets were distributed prior to the election. There appears to have been an effort on the part of the county and of those interested in the proceedings to procure and make available to the county employees all information necessary to enable them to vote intelligently. Seizing upon various minor discrepancies in the brochures and pamphlets, when compared with the summaries, appellants argue that the result was the utter confusion of the employees who were to vote. Strangely enough, however, if such confusion did exist no one who voted was sworn to testify as to its existence. The trial court found that the asserted confusion did not exist. We think it unnecessary to follow appellants further in their arguments based upon these matters. The trial court found that in all essential matters the proceedings taken by the county measured up to the requirements of the statutes, that the election was fairly conducted and that the ensuing contract was valid. From the record presented we hold that these findings of the trial court are amply supported.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Prosecution for robbery. The Superior Court, San Diego County, John A. Hewicker, J., entered judgment of conviction and denied a motion for new trial, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that where jury was properly admonished and instructed by court that testimony consisting of statements of co-defendants made to a police officer to the effect that the defendant was with them at the time of the robbery could be considered only as against the co-defendants making the statements, there was no error in admitting such statements in evidence.

Judgment and order denying new trial affirmed.

3. Criminal Law §338(1)

In criminal prosecution, trial court did not err in permitting prosecution to introduce evidence that counsel for defendant at one time represented another individual, in view of fact counsel for defendant, in cross-examining a witness who identified defendant, was asked if he knew such other individual and if he might have confused defendant with such other individual.

In robbery prosecution, instructions would not be deemed prejudicial on theory that court singled out particular evidence for comment and gave undue prominence to particular issues, especially in view of instruction that jury was to be the exclusive judge of the credibility of the witnesses, and of all questions of fact submitted.

MUSSELL, Justice.

Defendant Ralph Charles Mendoza was charged with two counts of Robbery (Pen. Code, Sec. 211) and with two prior felony convictions. In a separate information his co-defendants, Joe Lloyd Goessman and Richard Brown, were also charged with two counts of robbery based on the same facts alleged in the information against Mendoza. It was also alleged in the latter information that at the time of the commission of the offense the defendant Goessman was armed with a deadly weapon. A motion for a new trial was denied and the three defendants were sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison. Defendant Mendoza appeals from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

During the early morning hours on February 12, 1958, David Miramontes and Edwin Austin, students at the San Diego State College, were working part time at the P & R Liquor Store in San Diego. As was their custom, they removed all money in the cash register in excess of $100 and placed it in the safe, leaving $15 or $20 in silver and the rest in currency in the cash register for the next day. Fifteen or twenty minutes later appellant and defendant Goessman entered the store. Austin asked them if he could help them. Austin and appellant went to the wine section of the store and appellant picked out a bottle of wine. When Austin reached for the bottle, appellant told him to stand still and then told him to lie down on the floor behind the counter with his hands stretched out. Goessman then told Miramontes not to move and pulled an automatic pistol from his jacket pocket and told Miramontes to open the cash register. After Miramontes had complied with this order, he was ordered to go over and lie down next to Austin and stretch his arms out. Appellant then took wrist watches from Austin and Miramontes and Miramontes heard some one taking money from the cash register. Appellant and Goessman then left the store and the police were called. All of the bills and 50¢ pieces were taken from the cash register.

On March 11, 1958, defendant Goessman was arrested and when questioned by a police officer, stated that he knew nothing about the robbery. He was asked "who he was with" and stated that he was with Mendoza and Brown; that he had received some money and that he had thrown the robbery gun in the bay approximately two days before his arrest.

On March 11, 1958, defendant Brown, when questioned by a police officer relative to his participation in the robbery, stated he was the driver of the car and did not go into the store; that he had received money for his part in the robbery but did not remember the exact amount. When asked "who he was with" he stated that he was with appellant and Goessman.

[1] Appellant first contends that the court erred in admitting into evidence the statements of Goessman and Brown made to the police officer to the effect that appellant was with them at the time of the robbery. There is no merit to this contention. Where, as here, the jury were properly admonished and instructed by the court that such testimony could be considered only as against the defendant making the statement and the statements implicated the defendant, Goessman and Brown in the commission of the robbery, there was no error in admitting the questioned statements in evidence. People v. Mullins, 145 Cal.App.2d 667, 671, 303 P.2d 58; People v. Matthew, 194 Cal. 273, 279, 228 P. 424; People v. Gidney, 10 Cal.2d 138, 144, 73 P.2d 1186; People v. Koenig, 29 Cal.2d 87, 94, 173 P.2d 1.

[2] It is next contended that the trial court erred in permitting the prosecution to introduce evidence of appellant's bad conduct in school. The record shows in this connection that the witness Miramontes identified appellant as one of the two men who entered the store and committed the robbery. He also testified that he recognized the appellant when he entered the store and that he saw him at Kearny High School in about 1948 or 1949 when he (Miramontes) was a student there. Counsel for appellant cross-examined Miramontes extensively as to the nature of his acquaintance with appellant at the Kearny High School and his reasons for identifying him. On redirect examination the deputy district attorney asked Miramontes if there was something about Mendoza when he was in the high school with appellant that would enable him to remember him better than the average classmate and Miramontes replied that he (appellant) was always in trouble. The deputy district attorney then asked the following question: "As a matter of fact, he got kicked out of school?" An objection to this question was sustained by the trial court and it was not answered. Moreover, the court instructed the jury as follows:

"* * * and if any counsel intimated by any of his questions that certain hinted facts were, or were not, true, you must disregard any such intimation, and must not draw any inference from it. * * *"

While the question was improper, no reversible error resulted therefrom.

[3] Appellant next argues that the court erred in permitting the prosecution to introduce evidence that counsel for appellant at one time represented one Rudolph Mendoza. This argument is likewise without merit. Counsel for appellant in cross-examining Miramontes was asked if he knew a Rudy Mendoza at the Kearny High School and if he felt that it was Rudy Mendoza that he knew at the school. The prosecution then introduced evidence that Rudy Mendoza was in jail at the time the robbery was committed and that he had requested the services of appellant's counsel. There was positive identification of the appellant and the error, if any, did not result in prejudice to him. People v. Watson, 35 Cal.App.2d 587, 590, 96 P.2d 374; People v. James, 40 Cal.App.2d 740, 746, 105 P.2d 947.

Finally, appellant claims that the court erred in its instructions to the jury. He contends in this connection that the court singled out particular evidence for comment and gave undue prominence to particular issues. However, we have examined all the instructions given and are not in accord with this claim. The jury was told that "If it has appeared to you that any remark of mine has expressed an opinion concerning the testimony or credibility of any witness, or the significance or effect of any of the evidence, I would caution you that it is your right and duty to exercise the same independence of judgment in weighing the judge's comment on the evidence, as you are entitled to exercise in weighing the testimony of the witnesses and the arguments of counsel.

"You will keep in mind that you are the exclusive judges of the credibility of the witnesses and of all questions of fact submitted to you. Such authority as the trial judge has to express his personal thought on any of these matters is confined to the sole purpose of aiding you in arriving at a verdict, and may not be used, and is not used in this case, to impose his will upon you or to compel a verdict."

"If, during the course of the trial, I have said or done anything which may have suggested to you that I am inclined in favor of the claims or positions of either party, you will not suffer yourselves to be influenced by any such suggestion. I have not expressed, nor intended to express, nor have I intended to intimate any opinion as to which witnesses are, or are not worthy of belief, or what inferences should be drawn from the evidence. If any expression of mine has seemed to indicate an opinion relating to any of these matters, I instruct you to wholly disregard it."

[4, 5] In People v. Friend, 50 Cal.2d 570, 327 P.2d 97, it is held that a judge may restrict his comments to portions of the evidence or to the credibility of a single witness and need not sum up all the testimony, both favorable and unfavorable; that he may not withdraw material evidence from the jury's consideration or distort the testimony, and his comments should be temperately and fairly made, rather than being argumentative or contentious to a degree amounting to partisan advocacy. The jury, as required by the constitutional provision, must remain as the exclusive arbiter of questions of fact and the credibility of witnesses, and the judge should make clear that his views are not binding but advisory only.

[6] The instructions in the instant case and the comments of the trial judge did not violate the rules announced in People v. Friend, supra, and no reversible error appears in this connection.

Judgment and order denying new trial affirmed.

Hearing Denied Dec. 17, 1958.

Action to establish resulting trust in proceeds of sale of real property, which plaintiff claimed to have actually purchased and owned but which had been partly held in name of defendant's intestate. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Thomas P. O'Donnell, J., rendered judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that even if trial court, ruling on defendant's motion for nonsuit at close of plaintiff's case and taking all of evidence as true, had concluded that agreement had existed but that there had been nothing illegal about it, such court could nevertheless find on merits, after hearing and considering all of evidence, that no agreement had in fact existed that property allegedly paid for by plaintiff was to be taken in decedent's name so that plaintiff might claim veteran's tax exemption through decedent.

Affirmed.

Findings are required on all material issues raised by pleadings and evidence, unless they are waived, and if court renders judgment without making findings on all material issues, case must be reversed.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨1071(6)

If findings are made upon issues which determine cause, other issues become immaterial and failure to find thereon does not constitute prejudicial error.

3. Trial ⇨384

On motion for nonsuit, court is bound to disregard conflicting evidence, to give plaintiff's evidence all of value to which it is legally entitled, and to indulge every legitimate inference which may be drawn from evidence in plaintiff's favor.

4. Trial ⇨384

Even if trial court, ruling on defendant's motion for nonsuit at close of plaintiff's case, in action to establish resulting trust, and taking all of evidence as true, had concluded that agreement had existed but that there had been nothing illegal about it, such court could nevertheless find on merits, after hearing and considering all of evidence, that no agreement had in fact existed that property allegedly paid for by plaintiff was to be taken in defendant's intestate's name so that plaintiff might claim veteran's tax exemption through such decedent.

5. Trial ⇨391

Even if legality of consideration for agreement once existed as an "issue", on motion for nonsuit at close of plaintiff's case in action to establish resulting trust such "issue", not having been raised by pleadings or pursued further on defendant's case, disappeared at end of trial and no longer existed when case was decided on its merits; and it was not a material issue on which trial court, finding that no agreement in fact existed, was required to make a finding in making determination on merits.

6. Appeal and Error ⇨931(1)

In reviewing conflicting evidence, reviewing court will presume that evidence in support of finding is true and will construe it and resolve every substantial conflict as favorably as possible in support thereof.

7. Trusts ⇨86, 89(2)

In action to establish resulting trust in proceeds of sale of real property, which plaintiff claimed to have actually purchased and owned but which had been partly held in name of defendant's intestate, burden was on plaintiff to prove that he had in fact paid consideration for property, and, on record presented, trial court was fully justified in finding that such burden had not been sustained. #### 8. Trial ⇨66

A motion to reopen case in chief after both sides have rested and matter has been submitted is directed to sound discretion of trial court. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 662.

9. Trial ⇨66

It was not an abuse of trial court's discretion to refuse, after submission, to reopen case to permit plaintiff to introduce additional cumulative evidence.

Crispus A. Wright, Los Angeles, for respondent.

LILLIE, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of defendant in an action to establish a resulting trust in the proceeds of the sale of real property.

The following facts are undisputed. Plaintiff Joab Virtue, his wife Patience and her brother, Emmon Drake, both now deceased, moved onto certain real property on June 5, 1937. It was purchased from the Orange Savings & Loan Association on that date for $1,700 and title thereto was taken in the name of Emmon Drake. Plaintiff worked for the city as a common laborer and earned approximately $125 per month. During this time Emmon operated a shoe shine stand. Patience died in August, 1943. After final payment on the property, and on June 7, 1945, Emmon executed to plaintiff a "joint tenancy" deed conveying to him a one-half interest in the property, the other one-half remaining in Emmon's name. Both parties continued to live thereon until Emmon died August 5, 1950. Defendant Olivia Flynt, his niece, was appointed administratrix of Emmon's estate. She inventoried as part of the estate the one-half interest in the property standing in Emmon's name and on July 8, 1952, sold it for $2,500, the court confirming the sale on July 29, 1952. Two months later, on September 24, 1952, the purchaser thereof filed a partition suit naming plaintiff herein as owner of the other one-half interest, and the entire property was sold. The plaintiff received and cashed a check for $900 for his one-half interest.

On February 19, 1954, plaintiff filed this action against defendant individually, and as administratrix of the estate of Emmon Drake, to establish a resulting trust in the proceeds of the sale of Emmon's one-half interest, claiming that although he agreed to permit the record title to be held in Emmon's name, plaintiff actually paid the consideration for the entire property. The trial court held that plaintiff's evidence fell short "of the clear and convincing proof that the law demands"; made findings that substantially all of the allegations of plaintiff's complaint were not true; and directed judgment for defendant.

[1-5] As his first ground for reversal, appellant urges that the trial court erred in failing to make a finding "that the contract was legal" on the theory that although not raised by the pleadings, an issue relating thereto was raised at the trial.

Plaintiff's amended complaint alleged in substance that in June, 1937, he requested Emmon to purchase the real property in his name for plaintiff's benefit and delivered $200 to him for that purpose, that Emmon did so, plaintiff paid the balance due, and although held in Emmon's name the property actually belonged to plaintiff and was held by Emmon in trust for him. In her answer defendant denied the allegations of the complaint, in effect denying any such transaction took place. The defendant maintained throughout the trial that the interest held by Emmon was his own.

However, after plaintiff testified that he had made all of the payments on the property, defendant on recross-examination asked him why, if he paid the full consideration therefor, he permitted the property to be held in Emmon's name. It was then for the first time that there was any suggestion by plaintiff that he might have wished to claim a veteran's tax exemption through Emmon. No issue concerning the matter was raised by the pleadings. Several questions on recross-examination were asked plaintiff concerning this, but his answers were for the most part vague, incoherent and contradictory. Defendant did not pursue the subject further. At the close of plaintiff's case defendant moved for a nonsuit mainly on the ground that there was no evidence to sustain a trust. The trial judge then raised the question of an illegal consideration. To permit him to read the authorities on the point the court deferred the ruling on the motion for nonsuit to the end of the trial.

Defendant on her case offered no evidence of any kind on the matter of tax exemption but proceeded on the single theory that the half interest in the property standing in the name of the deceased belonged to him alone and no such transaction alleged by plaintiff ever existed. At the close of the trial the judge in a memorandum opinion stated, "plaintiff's contention that the evidence in this case does not disclose an illegal transaction seems well founded." (Emphasis added.) There is in the record no further mention of this matter, and no finding relative to the "legality of the contract" was made.

Appellant in his opening brief made the sweeping statement that "it is reversible error not to make a finding on an issue raised at the trial," for which he cited several cases. They are no authority for any such proposition but do hold, in accordance with the well-established law of this state, that findings are required on all material issues raised by the pleadings and evidence unless they are waived and "if the court renders judgment without making findings on all material issues, the case must be reversed." Sharove v. Middleman, 146 Cal.App.2d 199, 201, 303 P.2d 900, 901, citing James v. Haley, 212 Cal. 142, 147, 297 P. 920, and Fairchild v. Raines, 24 Cal.2d 818, 830, 151 P.2d 260. It is well settled that if findings are made upon issues which determine the cause, other issues become immaterial and failure to find thereon does not constitute prejudicial error. Devers v. Greenwood, 139 Cal.App.2d 345, 293 P.2d 834; Metcalf v. Hecker, 127 Cal.App.2d 634, 274 P.2d 188; Vidler v. De Bell, 125 Cal.App.2d 326, 270 P.2d 120.

It is clear from the record that, although briefly mentioned by defendant in her opening statement to the court, the "issue" of legality arose primarily upon the motion for nonsuit as the result of the belated recross-examination of plaintiff. After plaintiff rested his case no further evidence on the subject of veteran's tax exemption was offered or received and no further point was made concerning it, the defendant at all times contending that deceased in his own right owned one-half of the property and that no transaction of any kind which could create a trust existed between him and plaintiff. Plaintiff argues that in holding, on the motion for nonsuit, that the evidence did not disclose an "illegal transaction" the court in effect found that a "contract" between plaintiff and deceased in fact existed contrary to its later written findings. We find no merit in this contention for when the court considered the matter of illegal consideration it was on the motion for nonsuit, even though the court's ruling thereon was deferred to the end of the trial. On such a motion the court is bound to disregard conflicting evidence and give to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled and indulge every legitimate inference which may be drawn from the evidence in plaintiff's favor. Golceff v. Sugarman, 36 Cal.2d 152, 222 P.2d 665; Lehman v. Richfield Oil Corp., 121 Cal.App.2d 261, 263 P.2d 13; Imperial-Yuma Production Credit Ass'n v. Shields, 88 Cal.App.2d 328, 198 P.2d 951; Biondini v. Amship Corp., 81 Cal.App.2d 751, 185 P.2d 94. In following this rule the trial court then could, and did, properly conclude that a transaction concerning the property existed between plaintiff and the deceased and that there was nothing illegal about it. Even then the trial court did not use the term "contract" or "agreement." The use of the term "contract" is exclusively appellant's. This however did not preclude the court, after hearing and considering all the evidence, from later holding against the plaintiff on the merits and finding that he did not prove any transaction existed between him and the deceased. In the case of Price v. Mason-McDuffie Co., 50 Cal.App.2d 320, 122 P.2d 971, the plaintiff urged that since defendant's motion for nonsuit was denied, and defendant thereafter offered no evidence, plaintiff was entitled to judgment. The court in holding otherwise said, 50 Cal.App.2d at pages 326-327, 122 P.2d at page 975: "But in making this point plaintiff apparently overlooks the fact that in ruling on a motion for nonsuit all testimony introduced by the plaintiff must be taken as true; whereas in deciding the case on the merits, no such rule prevails." In deciding the instant case on its merits the lower court then, as it was unable to do on the motion for nonsuit, could weigh the evidence and determine the credibility of the witnesses, and from the evidence found that plaintiff had not proved the existence of any "contract" or "transaction" from which a trust resulted. If the legality of consideration once existed as an "issue" on the motion for nonsuit, it not having been raised by the pleadings or pursued further on defendant's case, disappeared at the end of the trial and no longer existed when the case was decided on its merits. Under these circumstances it could not constitute a material issue on which the trial court was required to make a finding in a determination on the merits, the court having found from the entire evidence that no transaction existed between plaintiff and decedent.

[6,7] As his second point, appellant contends the evidence shows a resulting trust in his favor, he having actually purchased and owned the property, although partly held in the name of decedent. The court below held against plaintiff on the basis that he had failed to sustain his burden of proof. The findings declared that the allegations of his complaint were not true. In reviewing conflicting evidence this court will presume that the evidence in support of the findings is true and will construe it and resolve every substantial conflict as favorably as possible in support thereof. Bancroft-Whitney Co. v. McHugh, 166 Cal. 140, 134 P. 1157; De La Motte v. Rucker, 55 Cal.App.2d 226, 130 P.2d 444.

At the outset, to prevail in the lower court, the plaintiff had the burden of proving that he paid the consideration for the real property held by Emmon Drake. (Section 853, Civil Code.) After hearing all of the witnesses, observing their demeanor, determining their credibility and weighing the evidence, the trial judge concluded that plaintiff's proof (particularly the "testimony of plaintiff himself") fell "short of the clear and convincing proof that the law demands of one endeavoring to establish such a trust," and made findings of fact accordingly—in effect finding that Emmon Drake owned the property held in his name.

The rule relating to the "uncontradicted testimony of a witness" alluded to by appellant has no application in a situation such as this in which contradictions occurred in plaintiff's own testimony and in the testimony of defense witnesses. The record before us discloses that although plaintiff without difficulty testified that he paid for the property in question; as to material details and matters surrounding the payments, execution of the two deeds and the sale of the property he was vague and indefinite, contradictory and failed to remember, frequently resorting to the answer: "I don't know nothing about it."

Although claiming to have made all payments on the property, plaintiff could not give the court the amount of the monthly payments nor had he any receipts therefor. At first he said his counsel had them, then later admitted he had none. He gave a variety of reasons why he permitted the property to be placed in Emmon's name, finally listing as one of the main ones that "he was living with us and wasn't paying rent like he should." As to his relationship with Emmon, plaintiff said he was to pay plaintiff $5 a week, but that he did not pay it regularly. The evidence shows Emmon was steadily engaged at his shoe shine stand, working every day as a bootblack, and made the real property his home from 1937 to the day he died. The court may well have inferred that Emmon paid the taxes and/or payments on the property in lieu of rent. Beulah Thomas, plaintiff's niece and his own witness, who lived with plaintiff, Patience and Emmon, testified that Emmon told her, "(T)his is my brother's and sister's home; our home," and that she had a home with them as long as she wanted one; and that she heard Emmon once say concerning the property that "they had to make some payment" on it and that "(B)rother and I have got to see somebody" about it.

Plaintiff testified he could not remember having had any conversation with Emmon when he executed to plaintiff the deed to the one-half interest in 1945, and denied going to a lawyer with Emmon, discussing the matter and having the deed prepared; yet, under oath plaintiff alleged in his original complaint that on June 7, 1945, he asked Emmon to execute and deliver a deed to him, Emmon retained a lawyer to prepare it, and before doing so the attorney told plaintiff that because Emmon paid the taxes he should be entitled to an interest in the land, and that he would draft a joint tenancy deed, to which plaintiff agreed.

Plaintiff also had no memory of talking to defendant after Emmon's death about buying Emmon's half of the property, and then denied having talked to her about it at all; nor did he remember talking to James Gannon, attorney for the estate, about buying Emmon's half interest. Questioned further about it and other matters along that line plaintiff said: "I don't know nothing about it." When asked if he received $900 as a result of the partition sale his counsel stipulated he had and when he denied cashing the check, she stipulated further that it had been cashed.

Of significance is evidence that on occasions when Mr. Gannon, defendant and the buyer of the estate's interest discussed with plaintiff Emmon's ownership of the one-half interest he remained silent and at no time asserted a claim to it, from which the trial court was free to infer that plaintiff, fully aware of the circumstances, willingly accepted the deed from Emmon in 1945, never actually believed the entire property belonged to plaintiff or that he had a right to believe it did, and that up to the filing of his complaint recognized Emmon's interest and conceded ownership of the one-half interest in the deceased.

Contrary to plaintiff's testimony James Gannon, attorney for Emmon's estate, testified that in 1951 or 1952 before the estate sold Emmon's one-half interest, he wrote to plaintiff asking him to sell his one-half interest along with the estate's interest so that the entire property could be sold at a better advantage, to which plaintiff replied he did not want to sell his interest; that thereafter he talked to plaintiff and tried to persuade him to sell his interest with Emmon's, but he again refused; that after the estate sold it, he again talked to plaintiff and asked him if the buyer had been around to collect rent from him and, upon being told he had not, he advised plaintiff to contact the buyer and either sell his interest to him or make a deal with him, to which plaintiff replied he did not want to sell. At no time did plaintiff ever assert ownership to the entire fee, nor did he claim Emmon's interest as his own.

Along this same line and contrary to the testimony of plaintiff, Olivia Flynt, defendant, testified that in 1951 she frequently visited plaintiff "nearly every day" and asked him what he wanted to do about the property and whether he wanted to buy the one-half interest in the estate, to which inquiries she either received no answer or a negative reply. At no time did plaintiff ever tell her he owned or claimed Emmon's one-half interest.

About two months after the estate sold its interest, the buyer in September, 1952, brought a partition suit against plaintiff which resulted in a sale. $900 of the proceeds thereof went to and were accepted by plaintiff as his share. The record is silent that at any time during this suit plaintiff ever questioned the ownership of the other half of the property or claimed it as his own. Nor did plaintiff do anything about his alleged claim, but instead accepted the benefits of the partition sale; and it is obvious that he had legal advice during this period because his present counsel stipulated at the trial herein that the $900 check plaintiff received from the partition sale "was cashed through the attorney that he had gone to at that time."

It is entirely reasonable to believe that plaintiff's conduct in connection with the ownership of the property may well have been the natural result of his full knowledge and understanding of the circumstances, his satisfaction with the deed and his recognition of Emmon's interest in the property when he accepted the deed from him in 1945 giving him only the one-half interest therein. It is obvious that the defense presented quite another side of plaintiff's story—plaintiff's silence as to his alleged ownership of the property at critical times; his adverse claim to Emmon's half interest asserted for the first time in 1954, almost ten years after the joint tenancy deed was executed and two years after the sale of Emmon's one-half interest by the estate; his failure to claim the property in the partition suit and his acceptance of the $900 for his interest in the property.

Of course, all of this served to create a factual question which the trial judge, after hearing all of the evidence, had to resolve. He had little or no confidence in the plaintiff's story for he held that his evidence, particularly his testimony, did not measure up to the clear and convincing proof he needed to prevail. Considering the entire record the trial court was fully justified in holding there were not sufficient facts to sustain a resulting trust.

[8,9] Appellant urges that the trial court erred in denying his motion to reopen the case to present further evidence. After trial and after the lower court filed its memorandum opinion, but before judgment was entered, plaintiff moved to reopen his case in chief for the purpose of offering in evidence a copy of a bank draft and photostat of a cashier's check in the sum of $289.58 to show he made the final payment on the property.

A motion to reopen a case in chief after both sides have rested and the matter is once submitted is directed to the sound discretion of the trial court. Section 662, Code of Civil Procedure; Willett & Crane v. City of Palos Verdes Estates, 96 Cal. App.2d 757, 216 P.2d 85; Badover v. Guaranty Trust & Savings Bank, 186 Cal. 775, 200 P. 638; Axe v. County of Los Angeles, 98 Cal.App.2d 578, 220 P.2d 781; Gelberg v. Consolo, 51 Cal.App.2d 516, 125 P.2d 74. No abuse of discretion is here apparent. Plaintiff testified on direct examination that he transmitted final payment on the property by way of certified check in the sum of $287.08, purchased with his own funds. No one testified to the contrary. The proposed evidence was merely cumulative adding nothing to plaintiff's case. It is not an abuse of the trial court's discretion to refuse to reopen the case after submission to permit a party to introduce additional cumulative evidence. Kataoka v. Hanselman, 150 Cal. 673, 89 P. 1082; In re Estate of Walker, 148 Cal. 162, 82 P. 770; Nulty v. Price, 202 Cal. 279, 260 P. 291.

In view of our disposition of appellant's contentions, we deem it unnecessary to discuss his final point relating to the duty of a trustee to reconvey property to the true owner.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Appellant, John Danko, and one Adolph Guidi were charged by information with the crime of robbery, it being alleged that on October 27, 1957, they did wilfully, unlawfully, feloniously and forcibly take $351 in money from Al Gonsalves, and that they were at the time armed with a 45-calibre Colt revolver. Both Danko and Guidi pleaded not guilty, but prior to the date set for the trial Guidi withdrew his plea of not guilty and entered a plea of guilty. Appellant Danko was tried alone, and the jury returned a verdict of guilty of robbery in the first degree. Judgment was pronounced, and Danko has appealed from the judgment.

The only contention made upon this appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment. Before discussing this contention, we shall summarize briefly the evidence as shown by the record.

Alfred M. Gonsalves, a part owner of a tavern located at 2333 S Street in the City of Sacramento, was in his office about 10:30 a. m., October 27, 1957, when he was confronted by a man whose face was covered with a handkerchief. The man, who had a gun, demanded money. Gonsalves gave the man a cigar box which contained checks stamped for deposit, a lady's wristwatch, currency and coin. The robber threw the checks on the floor, retained the other items, and forced Gonsalves out of the office. The robber took some surplus change out of another cigar box and then compelled Gonsalves to empty the cash register. He then forced Gonsalves and two other men into a storeroom where he made them lie down on the floor. The robber then fled.

About this time a Mrs. Verna Murphy was driving west on S Street, near 24th Street. She saw a man running down S Street and saw him jump into a bluish-grey sedan. The car was then driven away. She became suspicious and memorized the license number and stopped her car. Soon two other men came running down the street and she asked them if they were looking for a car and she gave them the license number of the bluish-grey sedan.

Two friends of Gonsalves entered the bar on the morning of October 27, 1957. Before they entered they noticed a 1949 Hudson parked on the street. The motor was running, and there was someone in the vehicle. As they entered the bar a man came out. They entered the bar, learned of the robbery, rushed out, and observed the man who had come out of the bar jump into the Hudson. They got into their car, obtained the license number of the car from a woman, and pursued the Hudson. The Hudson was kept in sight most of the time except at the very end of the chase when they lost it, but after circling the block they saw the Hudson parked in an alley. They drove down the alley, parked their car, and then one of them called the police.

Appellant and one Guidi were seen leaving the car by three witnesses. One testified that Guidi was driving the car. Two testified that the two men entered the home of a Clyde Mead.

The police found appellant and Guidi in a bedroom of Mead's home. Appellant was on the bed, and Guidi was lying on the floor under it. The police searched the room and found money in the bed, under the mattress, and under a blanket on the bed. They also found money and a lady's wristwatch in a cigar box on a chair which was covered with clothes. Sixty dollars were found in appellant's pocket. A loaded gun was also found in another room. The total amount of money found was $383.37; the total taken from the bar was $385.84. The watch was identified by its owner as the one she had left at the bar.

Guidi, who was the sole witness called by the defense, testified that he had committed the robbery by himself. He also testified that appellant entered his car just before he entered the alley. No one was able to identify appellant as the man in the Hudson when it was parked near the tavern.

Appellant contends that there is such a dearth of evidence connecting appellant to the commission of the offense as to make his conviction an injustice. Appellant argues that of all the witnesses who testified for the prosecution, not one identified appellant as the man who robbed the tavern owner. Appellant argues also that the jury was not entitled to disregard the uncontradicted testimony of Guidi that appellant was in no way connected with the robbery.

We are unable to agree with appellant that the evidence is insufficient to support the conviction. Gonsalves' testimony establishes an armed robbery. If the evidence is sufficient to connect appellant with it he would be subject to the same punishment as the actual robber. Conceding that no one could identify appellant as a participant, the question is whether there was sufficient evidence from which the jury could infer that he was. There was ample testimony that there was a person in the Hudson automobile before Guidi entered it after the robbery. The Hudson was followed immediately after it was driven away, and the pursuers did not lose sight of it for any appreciable length of time. There was evidence that after the Hudson was parked in the alley two men got out of it and entered Mead's home. Mead testified that Guidi and appellant entered his home together. Appellant and Guidi were found in a room together where the watch and the approximate amount of money taken in the robbery were found. Considering that at least one item was definitely identified as coming from the place of the robbery, the time factor, and the fact that one man was waiting in the car which was used in the robbery and the fact that Guidi and appellant were together when the Hudson arrived in the alley, the jury could conclude that appellant was a participant. Guidi's testimony that appellant had no part in the robbery was refuted by the testimony of the other witnesses, and the jury was not required to believe Guidi's testimony in the face of the other testimony from which the jury could well conclude that appellant was the man who was in the get-a-way car and drove it away after Guidi got into it. Furthermore, it is to be noted that appellant did not take the witness stand.

We are satisfied from a review of the entire record that the appellant received a fair and impartial trial and that the evidence is ample to support his conviction of robbery in the first degree.

The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 23211.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
 Division 1, California.

Oct. 16, 1958.

Action by city against telephone and telegraph company to recover value of street occupancy. From an order of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Kenneth N. Chantry, J., denying defendant's motion for change of venue the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held, inter alia, that under statute allowing either party in action brought by city against a resident of another county, city and county, or city, or a corporation "doing business in the latter" to move for change of venue, a corporate defendant doing business in county in which an action is brought against it by city located therein, regardless of where else in the state it is also doing business, is not entitled to change of venue.

Roger Arnebergh, City Atty., Bourke Jones, Asst. City Atty., Ralph J. Eubank, Deputy City Atty., Los Angeles, for respondent.

LILLIE, Justice.

Plaintiff, city of Los Angeles, filed an action in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County against defendant, The Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company, a corporation, to recover the value of street occupancy. Its answer was filed and after plaintiff's demand for a jury defendant noticed its motion for a change of place of trial under section 394, Code of Civil Procedure. Defendant sought a change of venue to either Alpine or Mono County where it claimed it does not do business. From the minute order denying the motion, defendant appeals.

Section 394, Code of Civil Procedure, reads in pertinent part as follows: "Whenever an action or proceeding is brought by a * * * city, against a resident of another county, city and county, or city, or a corporation doing business in the latter, the action or proceeding must be, on motion of either party, transferred for trial to a county * * * other than that in which the plaintiff is situated * * * and other than that in which the defendant resides, or is doing business, or is situated."

The factual situation controlling the issue whether The Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company is entitled to the benefit of a change of venue under this section is a simple one. It is conceded that the corporate defendant does business in the county of Los Angeles as well as in other counties of the state. Its principal place of business is the city and county of San Francisco. The city of Los Angeles has sued the defendant in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, a proper forum.

Appellant contends that since it is doing business in more than one county, and section 394 is silent concerning the corporate defendant also doing business in the county in which it is sued, it is entitled to a literal interpretation of the section to invoke a mandatory application requiring a change of place of trial from the county of Los Angeles. On the other hand, respondent claims that under the section a corporate defendant doing business in a county other than that in which the action is brought by a municipality situated therein is not entitled to the benefit of the change of venue therein provided if it is also doing business in the county in which the action is brought.

It is apparent from the phraseology employed in the controlling portion of section 394 that an ambiguity arises because of the nature of a corporate entity and its business operations, which if literally applied would be neither reasonable nor in keeping with the purpose and intent of the statute. This situation is the result of the difference in factors determining the mandatory application of the section. In the case of an individual the determining factor is his "residence"; in the case of a corporation it is the fact of "doing business." When an individual defendant is a "resident of another county" (other than that in which the action is brought), it is clear from the statutory language that he may invoke the benefit of the change of venue—because legally he has only one county of residence. But since a corporate entity may do business in more than one county of the state, the use of the phrase "doing business in the latter" creates an indeterminate meaning, particularly when the corporate defendant is also doing business in the county in which the action has been properly brought. The meaning and language of this section is not as "clear-cut" as appellant would have us believe. Does the terminology employed, "doing business in the latter," mean that, if a corporation is doing business in more than one county, it is entitled to a change of venue regardless of whether it also does business in the county in which it is sued by a city located therein, as contended by appellant; or does it mean, as urged by respondent, that a corporate defendant doing business in a county in which an action is brought against it by a city located therein, regardless of where else in the state it is also doing business, is not entitled to a change of venue?

[1, 2] " * * * (I)t is a cardinal rule of construction that words must be given such interpretation as will promote rather than defeat the general purpose and policy of the law * * *." Department of Motor Vehicles of California v. Industrial Accident Commission, 14 Cal.2d 189, 195, 93 P.2d 131, 134; People v. Industrial Accident Commission, 14 Cal.2d 189, at page 195, 93 P.2d 131, at page 134.

[3] For many years our courts have freely acknowledged the purpose of the legislature in passing section 394. In City of Stockton v. Wilson, 79 Cal.App. 422, 249 P. 835, in interpreting the second sentence of section 394 in its application to an individual defendant, the court stated at page 424, of 79 Cal.App., at page 836 of 249 P.: "The question to be determined is whether it (request for transfer) comes within the spirit and intent of that section. The evident purpose is to guard against local prejudices which sometimes exist in favor of litigants within a county as against those from without and to secure to both parties to a suit a trial upon a neutral ground." The statute as applied to an individual defendant is clear in its meaning and although the court therein did not transfer the cause because it was pending in a neutral county, it pointed up the purpose of the statute—to protect against local bias which might exist in favor of litigants within a county "as against those from without." Obviously, if both parties, whether defendant be an individual or corporation, are "within" the same county either as a resident or doing business therein "local prejudice" or bias is not likely to exist; and if in a given case there is probability that a disadvantage will result, defendant is entitled to invoke the remedy under section 397, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides for a change of venue upon the ground of inability to obtain a fair trial.

The Supreme Court in Finance and Construction Co. of California v. City of Sacramento, 204 Cal. 491, 269 P. 167, 168, voiced its approval of City of Stockton v. Wilson, 79 Cal.App. 422, at page 493, 249 P. 835, at page 836: "It is apparent from the terms of this section of the Code that the Legislature was of the opinion that a person doing business in a county would have an unfair advantage over a city situated without said county, in the trial of an action in which such person and such city were arrayed against each other." (Emphasis added.) The opinion discloses that the plaintiff therein designated as a "person" actually was a corporation. From this it appears entirely reasonable that if a corporation, doing business in a county in which a city is located, brings suit against it in that county, that no "unfair advantage" would result. The converse would also seem to be true.

Of interest also is City of Oakland v. Darbee, 102 Cal.App.2d 493, at page 498, 227 P.2d 909, at page 912: "The purpose of the statute is that of protecting either party from local bias," and Nevada County v. Phillips, 111 Cal.App.2d 428, 244 P. 2d 495, in which an individual was sued. The court therein said at page 429 of 111 Cal.App.2d, at page 496 of 244 P.2d: "We construe the foregoing section (394) as providing that an action such as this, brought by a county against defendants who, for aught that appears, are residents of the same county, is properly triable in that county, and that it is only when the defendants or one of them is a resident of another county that the court is obligated to change the place of trial * * *"; and again at page 430 of 111 Cal. App.2d, at page 496 of 244 P.2d: "The intent of the foregoing statute is, apparently, to permit the trial of an action brought by a county to be tried in that county when the defendants reside therein, on the assumption that where all parties are in effect residents therein no disadvantage to either would result."

[4, 5] We believe that this reasoning applies as well to a corporate defendant also doing business in the county in which an action is brought against it by a city located therein. An interpretation of the statute imparting a right to a corporation which it denies to an individual is not, in the absence of good reason, justifiable. Common sense dictates that it is not the "resident" individual or the corporation "doing business" in the county of the forum that the section seeks to protect against "local" bias or prejudice, but the person residing in, or a corporation doing business in, another county than that in which the defendant has been sued. The purpose of the section is to provide a change of place of trial where local bias may be presumed to arise because the defendant is wholly from "without the county." A corporate defendant can be wholly from "without the county" only if it is not doing business therein. In the instant case defendant is doing business in Los Angeles County.

Appellant has cited Yuba County v. North America Consol. Gold Min. Co., 1909, 12 Cal.App. 223, 107 P. 139, 140, in support of its position. At the outset, it is interesting to note in the instant case that nowhere in the motion, affidavit, or appellant's briefs does it directly advise the court that it is actually doing business in the county of Los Angeles. In its attempt to take advantage of the literal wording of section 394 and bring it technically within the exact language of the Yuba County case, appellant has been careful to couch its motion, and affidavit in support thereof, in the very terms of the statute itself and those used by the court in the opinion, without any factual elaboration. Actually Yuba County v. North America Consol. Gold Min. Co., supra, lends little aid to appellant. It does not appear in the court's opinion that the corporate defendant was also doing business in Yuba County, the county in which the action was brought against it. Yuba County filed an action against defendant corporation which the court stated was "doing business in another county." The court followed the exact language of the statute and a careful reading of the opinion discloses that in doing so, it actually meant "doing business in a county other than Yuba County." The court at no time declared the corporation was also doing business in Yuba County. One of the major points decided by the court was the county's contention that if section 394 permitted a corporation not doing business in Yuba County to transfer the trial while a corporation doing business in Yuba County was denied such right, then the statute was in violation of the constitutional provisions prohibiting special legislation. The court recognizing this effect theorized as follows: "This discrimination is found in other sections where the right to have the place of trial changed is placed upon the distinct ground that the defendant resides in a county other than the county in which the action is commenced, and this although, had the defendant been a resident of the latter county he could not have the venue changed." It seems apparent that had the court determined the corporation was also doing business in Yuba County, the county could not have properly raised this contention, nor would the court have considered it. We do not deem this case to be persuasive here.

[6] We have been directed to no case deciding the precise question here involved, but considering the obvious purpose and intent of the statute, the protection it seeks to impart, and previous judicial construction of its language, we believe that the legislature did not ever intend that a corporate defendant doing business in a county in which it is sued by a municipality located therein, as well as without the county, should have the benefit of the change of venue provided in section 394, Code of Civil Procedure. We conclude that the venue provisions under this section may not be invoked by a corporation defendant doing business in a county in which an action is brought against it by a city situated therein.

This conclusion justifies only brief mention of appellant's other contention that the affidavit supporting its motion, alleging it is not doing business in Alpine and Mono Counties, establishes a neutral area in which the action should be tried.

The applicable part of section 394 provides that "the action or proceeding must be, on motion of either party, transferred for trial to a county * * * other than that in which the plaintiff is situated * * * and other than that in which the defendant resides, or is doing business, or is situated."

Defendant's affidavit alleged the following conclusion: "Said corporation at all said times has been and now is doing business within each of the counties located within the State of California except Alpine County and Mono County. Said corporation has not during said times done and does not now do any business within said Alpine and Mono Counties." Nothing further was alleged in support of this conclusion. Plaintiff on the other hand filed a lengthy counteraffidavit alleging among other things that defendant possesses a "franchise to construct, maintain and operate telephone and telegraph lines on the public roads, highways and other public places throughout the State of California," and that defendant had represented and successfully established in prior litigation before the State Public Utilities Commission that "we (The Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company) are offering public mobile radio telephone service in effect throughout the state where anyone applies for it to us." It described in detail the manner in which defendant holds itself out as engaged in the selling of those services.

[7-9] The burden of proof justifying a change of venue rests on the moving party. Clapp v. Kramer, 162 Cal.App.2d 237, 328 P.2d 510; Lakeside Ditch Co. v. Packwood Canal Co., 50 Cal.App. 296, 195 P. 284; Ward Mfg. Co. v. Miley, 131 Cal.App.2d 603, 281 P.2d 343. Plaintiff's counteraffi-davit relates numerous facts showing, among other things, that defendant itself in prior litigation claimed and successfully established certain activities tending to show its business operations throughout the state. Implicit in the lower court's minute order is the finding that there is no county in California in which defendant does not do business. In view of the bare conclusion contained in defendant's affidavit, the trial court may well have believed no factual conflict existed and made its determination solely from the averments of the counteraffidavit. However, if in the mind of the trial judge the affidavits raised a factual conflict, it is obvious that he resolved it adverse to the defendant. Upon the issue of change of venue the averments of the affidavit of the prevailing party may be deemed to be the findings of the court below (Swartz v. California Olive Growers' Packing Corp., 56 Cal.App.2d 168, 133 P.2d 20; Gordon v. Perkins, 203 Cal. 183, 263 P. 231; Parker Co., Inc., v. Exeter Refining Co., 26 Cal.App.2d 610, 79 P.2d 1114); and such findings will not be disturbed on appeal unless it is clear that the order was the result of arbitrary action. Clapp v. Kramer, 162 Cal.App.2d 237, 328 P.2d 510; Miller v. Collins, 8 Cal.App.2d 10, 47 P.2d 334; Hubbard v. Mt. Raymond Mining Co., 33 Cal.App.2d 474, 92 P.2d 411, 93 P.2d 95. In consideration of the record before us, the acknowledged intent of section 394 and the authorities, we are unable to say that the order was the result of arbitrary action.

Application of section 394 to a corporate defendant doing business in every county is discussed by the court in City of Oakland v. Darbee, 102 Cal.App.2d 493, at pages 501-502, 227 P.2d 909, at page 914: "There is implicit in appellant's argument the view that if the record showed that the Bank of America was doing business in every county of this state * * * there would be no county to which the court could transfer the proceeding in response to respondents' (an individual defendant) motion. That would not necessarily follow. It might mean merely that the bank could not invoke the statute, * * * simply because there would be no county, or other county, in which the bank was not doing business." It would appear from this that if defendant is doing business in every county in the state the denial of its motion, on this ground alone, was proper.

In determining what constitutes "doing business" as that term is used in section 394, a broad construction was permitted by the Supreme Court in Finance and Construction Co. of California v. City of Sacramento, 204 Cal. 491, at page 494, 269 P. 167, at page 169: "We think it is more in keeping with the remedial purpose of section 394 to give the words this broader and more liberal meaning than to restrict them, as contended for by the appellant, to the narrow meaning of signifying those only who are engaged in trade or commerce." Appellant has cited several authorities dealing primarily with foreign corporations and service of process which we deem not controlling here. In line with the broad construction permitted by the court in the Finance and Construction Co. of California v. City of Sacramento, supra, case we are inclined toward the definition of the court in Helvering v. Highland, 4 Cir., 1942, 124 F.2d 556, at page 561: "* * * 'carrying on any trade or business' is now said to mean 'holding one's self out to others as engaged in the selling of goods or services'. See Deputy v. Du Pont, 308 U.S. 488, 499, 60 S.Ct. 363, 369, 84 L.Ed. 416, quoted with approval in Helvering v. Wilmington Trust Co., 3 Cir., 124 F.2d 156; cf. Higgins v. Commissioner, 312 U.S. 212, 61 S.Ct. 475, 85 L.Ed. 783."

For the foregoing reasons, the order is affirmed.

Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Daniel Wesley JOHNSON, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 3391.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 22, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of drawing and uttering checks knowing that he had insufficient funds for their payment upon presentation and from a judgment of the Superior Court, County of Alameda, Marvin Sherwin, J., the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, St. Clair, J. pro tem., held that the evidence did not establish that the defendant was not adequately represented by counsel and that other alleged errors were without merit.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⚖️27

Under the statute penalizing the willful intent to defraud by drawing or uttering a check for payment of money knowing at the time that the maker has not sufficient funds in the bank for the payment thereof, and providing that if the total amount of all such checks does not exceed $50 the offense is punishable only by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one year, each violation of the statute may be a "felony" regardless of the amount of the individual check but the offense is not punishable as a felony unless the aggregate of the bad checks involved in the offenses is more than $50. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 476a.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Felony".

2. Criminal Law ⚖️27

Where an offense is punishable either as a felony by imprisonment in the state prison or as a misdemeanor by fine or imprisonment in a jail, the offense is a "felony" up to the time the sentence is imposed. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 16, 17.

3. Criminal Law ⚖️1166½(1)

In prosecution for uttering checks knowing that the defendant had insufficient funds for their payment upon presentation wherein defendant pleaded guilty, evidence did not justify setting aside judgment on the plea on the ground that defendant was allegedly represented by incompetent counsel in the trial court. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 476a.

4. Criminal Law ⚖️1166½(1)

Bad judgment by counsel concerning possible sentence for the offense for which defendant is prosecuted is not ground for a reversal of a judgment.

5. Criminal Law ⚖️245

Contention that defendant was committed without reasonable or probable cause was waived by failure of defendant to move to set aside the information on such grounds. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 995, 996.

Marvin Stender, San Jose, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Doris H. Maier, Lloyd Hinkelman, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent.

ST. CLAIR, Justice pro tem.

Defendant was charged in an information with three violations of Penal Code, section 476a, drawing and uttering checks in the amount of $20, $20, and $12.50, knowing that he had insufficient funds for the payment of the checks upon their presentation. After first pleading not guilty to all three counts, defendant withdrew this plea and pleaded guilty to the three counts. Defendant appeals from the judgment entered on the guilty pleas.

Counsel has been appointed for this appeal whose sole contention is that the face of the record shows that defendant was represented by incompetent counsel in the trial court. Defendant has also filed two briefs in this matter, urging this ground and others. The Attorney General has filed two briefs, one responsive to the defendant's opening brief, and one responsive to counsel's opening brief.

I.

Was defendant denied effective aid of counsel because of incompetence of his chosen counsel?

Defendant was first arraigned on the information involved in this appeal on November 2, 1956. Mr. Nunes, of the Public Defender's Office, appeared with him. Defendant pleaded not guilty to all three counts, and the trial was continued to November 13. At that time another continuance was granted at the request of Mr. Nunes to permit defendant to employ private counsel.

The next hearing was held on November 23. An attorney named Robert P. Brorby of the firm of Dodge and Evans appeared, and stated that "arrangements have practically been completed for this firm to represent Mr. Johnson." The matter was continued to November 30. On that date defendant was represented by Mr. Nunes, who stated that he had been informed that Mr. Dodge would take the case. The clerk said that he had received a telephone call that "the man's coming in from out of town and that he'll be here by eleven o'clock." The matter was continued.

On December 3, 1956, the case was set for trial. Defendant was present at this hearing but his counsel, a Mr. White, did not make a personal appearance. During this hearing, White telephoned the clerk, who repeated his statements to the judge. White was substituted in as defendant's attorney.

On December 19, the date set for trial, White arrived before court convened. He advised the clerk that he had another trial scheduled for that day and they agreed on a date for continuance. White also advised the clerk that defendant would waive time. Defendant, when questioned by the Court, stated that his attorney's statement was correct, i. e., he would and did waive time of trial.

On January 21, 1957, White appeared and stated that he had had a conference with his client the previous day and that the defendant intended to change his plea.

The defendant did not appear on February 4 and a bench warrant issued. When the defendant surrendered on March 7, White was not present but the defendant stated that he had consulted with him by phone the previous Monday.

On March 11, in the presence of the defendant, White represented that the defendant had consulted with him, and that he had advised him before defendant's rearrest on the bench warrant. White stated that the defendant had "indicated now he's perfectly willing to change his plea" and asked permission to withdraw the previous plea. The defendant thereupon pleaded guilty to the first count of the information, which was described as "a felony." Then the following colloquy took place. This is the passage relied upon to show incompetence as a matter of law:

"The Clerk: Daniel Wesley Johnson, to the crime of a felony, to-wit, a—

"Mr. White: Before we proceed any further, Mr. Merrill is at a disadvantage, but the commitment is such, as to one count, the usual—

"Mr. Merrill: Well, the problem is, I think, on the amount here, Clint. If I'm not mistaken, that is the problem, with the amount, to keep the jurisdiction in this Court, because they're all—they're all small checks.

"Mr. White: What is the problem, then?

"Mr. Merrill: Well, to keep it within the jurisdiction of this Court there would have to be a plea to the three, because they total—they just total over fifty, I think, or a hundred, whatever the code section reads, since the code section's been amended this last year. Actually they are such small checks I don't think it would make much difference.

"Mr. White: That is true, but in each instance they are a felony.

"Mr. Merrill: No, that is not true, not unless—

"Mr. White: Well, educate me, because I only assumed that he would plead to one, as so often is the case.

"The Court: Well, I don't assume there would be any consecutive sentence involved.

"Mr. White: All right.

"Mr. Merrill: Here is the point, under the code, the way it is, a plea to one would be a misdemeanor and take it out of the jurisdiction of the Court." The defendant thereupon pleaded guilty to the other two counts of the information.

[1] Penal Code, section 476a, provides that any person who "wilfully, with intent to defraud, makes or draws or utters or delivers any check * * * upon any bank * * * for the payment of money, knowing at the time of such making, drawing, uttering or delivering that the maker * * * has not sufficient funds in, or credit with said bank or depository * * * for the payment of such check * * * in full upon its presentation, although no express representation is made with reference thereto, is punishable by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one year, or in the state prison for not more than 14 years." The second paragraph contains a proviso that "if the total amount of all such checks * * * that the defendant is charged with and convicted of making, drawing, or uttering does not exceed fifty dollars ($50), the offense is punishable only by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one year," except when the defendant has certain previous convictions not applicable here. Thus Mr. White was correct in stating that each violation of 476a may be a felony, regardless of the amount of the individual check, but the District Attorney was correct in stating that the offense is not punishable as a felony unless the aggregate of the bad checks involved in the offenses for which defendant is convicted is more than $50.

Counsel on appeal argues that the above quoted colloquy demonstrates that "counsel had not read and was not familiar with the contents of the statute which his client was accused of violating," that "he was unfamiliar with the mechanics of that fundamental distinction in the criminal law between misdemeanor and felony," and therefore that White was incompetent. The first inference might be drawn, although it is not the only possible inference in the context of the discussion, but there is no evidence of the second contention.

White suggested that the defendant plead only to one count. Mr. Merrill objected because of the "problem, with the amount." White's question, "What is the problem then?" could indicate an unfamiliarity with section 476a, but it could also be a rhetorical question asking for a clarification of the prior statement from Mr. Merrill, which was somewhat disjointed. After Mr. Merrill's reference to the $50 qualification of the code section, White said, "That is true, but in each instance they are a felony." This statement was correct, but Mr. Merrill disagreed with it. White's answer, "Well, educate me, because I only assumed that he would plead to one, as so often is the case," could be interpreted as an admission of ignorance, but in context, it also could be interpreted as an explanation of White's disagreement with Merrill's prior statement, and as an expression of concern over protection of his client against consecutive sentences. The trial court adopted this latter interpretation, as evidenced by the court's response that "I don't assume there would be any consecutive sentence involved."

As support for the contention that White was unfamiliar with the felony-misdemeanor distinction counsel cites White's construction of the statute. ("That is true, but in each instance they are a felony.") White's interpretation is correct as the statute expressly says the uttering of any "bad" check is punishable by "imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one year, or in the state prison for not more than 14 years."

Penal Code, section 16, reads:

"Crimes, How Defined. Crimes are divided into:

- "1. Felonies; and,
- "2. Misdemeanors."

The first three sentences of Penal Code, section 17, read:

"A felony is a crime which is punishable with death or by imprisonment in the state prison. Every other crime is a misdemeanor. When a crime, punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, is also punishable by fine or imprisonment in a county jail, in the discretion of the court, it shall be deemed a misdemeanor for all purposes after a judgment other than imprisonment in the state prison, unless the court commits the defendant to the California Youth Authority."

[2] Where an offense is punishable either as a felony by imprisonment in the state prison or as a misdemeanor by fine or by imprisonment in a jail the offense is a felony up to the time the sentence is imposed. See Fricke, California Criminal Law (5th Ed.), pages 5-6.

Subsection (b), Penal Code, section 476a is a peculiar statute; it reads:

"However, if the total amount of all such checks, drafts, or orders that the defendant is charged with and convicted of making, knowing, or uttering does not exceed fifty dollars ($50), the offense is punishable only by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one year, except that this subdivision shall not be applicable if the defendant has previously been convicted of a violation of Sections 470, 475, or 476 of this code, or of this section of this code, or of the crime of petty theft in a case in which defendant's offense was a violation also of Sections 470, 475, or 476 of this code or of this section. * * *

At the oral argument, counsel for defendant conceded, as indeed he must, that the defendant was charged with three felonies. If he was convicted (or pleaded guilty) to one or two of the charges, he would be pleading guilty to felonies but, at the time of sentence, the court bound by subsection (b) of section 476a could do nothing but convert it into a misdemeanor.

At the time of the colloquy in question, the defendant had pleaded guilty to count one, i. e., to a felony. The Assistant District Attorney was in error when he said that it was not true that each count was a felony. It was to his incorrect statement of the law that Mr. White made the statement that defendant seizes upon, "Well, educate me, * * *" It would appear that Mr. White was more familiar with the statute in question than the Assistant District Attorney.

All that happened was that the District Attorney refused to accept a plea that would tie the court's hand; he would only accept a plea that would permit the court to decide at the time of sentence whether it would be a felony or misdemeanor.

[3] Counsel also makes much of the fact that "at no time during this proceeding did counsel confer with his client to inform him of the import of a felony plea; * * * nor is there any indication that appellant understood this." There is nothing in the record to indicate that the defendant and his counsel did not confer fully on the case before the proceeding, or that defendant did not understand what he was doing. On the contrary, the record indicates that White and the defendant conferred several times and that defendant intended to plead guilty to a felony, but did not want consecutive sentences imposed. This is exactly what happened. Even if appeal counsel's contention is accepted that White was ignorant of the terms of the statute, only by assuming further that White was incapable of understanding what the District Attorney had told him, and had inadequately consulted with the defendant upon his possible defenses to all three counts, can the conclusion urged by appeal counsel be reached.

[4] Defendant, speaking for himself in his brief and not through his attorney, has an additional complaint: that he "was told by his attorney to admit to the court and to him of such violation of the charges by the D.A. Office at Berkeley and that if I did he would promise probation or a fine for any such action." Even if this were the case, which is not supported by the record, bad judgment by counsel concerning the possible sentence is not a ground for reversal of the judgment. "[W]here an accused is represented by counsel and the basis of his claim is that he received poor advice, indicative of poor judgment on the part of his attorney, and acted thereon to his detriment, those facts, even if substantiated, do not amount to a denial of the right of representation. People v. Miller, 114 Cal. 10, 45 P. 986; People v. Lennox, 67 Cal. 113, 7 P. 260; People v. Kirk, 98 Cal.App.2d 687, 220 P.2d 976; People v. Gilbert, 25 Cal.2d 422, 154 P.2d 657; People v. Ynostroza, 105 Cal.App.2d 332, 232 P.2d 913; People v. Morton, 100 Cal.App.2d 269, 223 P.2d 259." People v. Logan, 137 Cal.App. 2d 331, 335, 290 P.2d 11, 13.

In People v. Miller, 114 Cal. 10, 45 P. 986, the court affirmed an order denying leave to change a plea from guilty to not guilty where the affidavit in support of the motion stated that defendant pleaded guilty "without due deliberation, and without fully realizing his position, and in the hope that by so doing the punishment to which he would be exposed, were he tried before a jury, would thereby be mitigated." 114 Cal. at page 14, 45 P. at page 987. The court said at page 16 that a hope or belief of a lesser punishment, or being led by counsel to such a belief, would be an insufficient reason to require withdrawal of a plea. People v. Lennox, 67 Cal. 113, 7 P. 260, was a similar case where the defendant was induced to plead guilty by advice of his father and his attorney that he would receive a lesser punishment.

People v. Gilbert, 25 Cal.2d 422, 443, 154 P.2d 657, 668, approved of such cases as People v. Miller, supra, but added an exception: "The most critical point is substantial deprivation of the exercise of the free will and judgment of the party through an act participated in by the state. Mere advice and persuasion or the expression of matters of opinion by his own attorney will not suffice to vitiate the plea. Neither will unwarranted or even wilfully false statements of factual matters by his attorney suffice. The private attorney is selected by the party and is his agent. But if the representation of the private attorney presents a purported commitment by a responsible state officer which if actually made would vitiate the plea and if the acts or statements of such state officer, although innocently done or made, apparently corroborate the representation, are in good faith and without negligence relied upon by the defendant, and in truth operate to prevent the exercise of his free will and judgment, then the state in its solicitude for fairness will not accept the benefit of a plea so given." Kirk*, 98 Cal.App.2d 687, 693, 220 P.2d 976, holding the defendant did not bring himself within the Gilbert exception in a coram nobis proceeding; People v. Ynostroza, 105 Cal.App.2d 332, 333, 232 P.2d 913, same, where the alleged inducements were by the attorney and uncorroborated by any acts of state officials; People v. Loeber, 158 Cal.App.2d 730, 323 P.2d 136, "deal" not proved, appeal from judgment of conviction. There is no contention that this case comes within the Gilbert exception, inasmuch as the Deputy District Attorney made it clear in open court that he would only accept a felony plea.

II.

Defendant, in his own briefs, alleges the occurrence of numerous errors. His contentions, none of which are meritorious, will be summarized below.

A. Dismissal of the Information.

[5] Defendant states that counts one and three of the information should have been dismissed because of certain testimony at the preliminary examination. His contention would appear to be that he was committed without reasonable or probable cause on these counts, a contention that has been waived by a failure to move to set aside the information on these grounds. Penal Code, sections 996, 995.

B. Double Jeopardy.

[6] Defendant feels that he has been twice in jeopardy because he had been charged with counts one and three, but not committed on those offenses because of a defect of proof at the preliminary examination. Dismissal of an information is not a bar to a subsequent prosecution for the same offense. Penal Code, section 999.

C. Denial of Due Process.

The first part of this argument is somewhat obscure. Defendant cites People v. Lenore, 139 Cal.App. 40, 33 P.2d 892, wherein it was held that a portion of Penal Code, section 476a, concerning presumptions attaching to notice of protest, and which has since been deleted, was constitutional.

[7] Defendant also cites People v. Spinato, 100 Cal.App. 600, 280 P. 691, holding that defendant must personally waive trial by jury and cannot do so through counsel alone. This requirement is not applicable to a plea of guilty. In re Jingles, 27 Cal.2d 496, 499, 165 P.2d 12; Dale v. City Court of City of Marced, 105 Cal. App.2d 602, 607, 234 P.2d 110; People v. Keeton, 130 Cal.App.2d 334, 335, 278 P.2d 961.

D. Confrontation of Witnesses.

[8] Defendant is apparently arguing that he was denied the right to confront witnesses against him, because no witnesses appeared in the superior court. See Penal Code, section 686. Inasmuch as there were no issues to be tried after the plea of guilty, there was no necessity for confrontation of witnesses.

Defendant also sets forth some quotations from McKinney's Digest, Criminal Law, section 1340, concerning harmless and reversible error. There being no error, these sections are inapplicable.

E. Miscellaneous Contentions.

[9] The Attorney General also gleans from the defendant's briefs the following complaints:

1. Denial of a speedy trial. The record shows a waiver of this right.

[10] 2. Denial of a second preliminary hearing. An illegal commitment is waived by failure to move to set aside the information. Penal Code, sections 996, 995.

[11] 3. Improper denial of probation. When the defendant is eligible, the granting of probation is a matter of discretion with the trial court. Penal Code, section 1203.

The record does not establish that White was incompetent or failed to adequately represent defendant. Even if it did, to say that this is sufficient to require reversal would be a significant extension of prior California cases. The other errors urged by defendant have no merit.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Civ. 23273.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 17, 1958.

Action for specific performance, damages, declaratory judgment and other relief with respect to provision in a lease providing for an option to purchase for a sum certain payable "as mutually agreed by both parties". From an adverse judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Clarence M. Hanson, J., the plaintiff and another appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that the agreement was void for uncertainty and could not be enforced.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨846(5)

Where the parties waived findings, it must be presumed on appeal that the trial judge found in favor of the prevailing party every fact necessary to sustain the judgment.

2. Landlord and Tenant ⇨92(1)

Where lease contained option for purchase of premises for a sum certain payable "as mutually agreed by both parties", a later agreement upon terms of payment and security therefor would have cured the defect in the writing.

3. Contracts ⇨25

An agreement to make an agreement is nugatory and this is true of material terms of any contract.

4. Contracts ⇨9(1)

The law does not favor the destruction of contracts because of uncertainty and it will if feasible so construe agreements as to carry into effect the reasonable intentions of the parties if that can be ascertained.

5. Vendor and Purchaser ⇨21

Failure to specify or furnish a standard for determination of terms of payment and of securing the unpaid balance of the purchase price of property is fatal to enforceability of contract.

6. Landlord and Tenant ⇨92(1)

Where lease contained option to purchase premises for a sum certain payable as mutually agreed by both parties, fact that lessee was prepared and offered to pay cash upon exercise of the option did not cure any uncertainty about the terms of payment.

7. Specific Performance ⇨28(2)

Specific performance of an option provision contained in a lease to purchase the premises for a sum certain "payable as mutually agreed by both parties" would not lie since the agreement as to terms of payment was void for uncertainty.

Cooney & Cooney, Matt D. Cooney, Sherman Oaks, for appellants.

Earl J. Opsahl, Studio City, for respondent.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Action for specific performance, damages, declaratory judgment and other relief. From a judgment in favor of defendant Adams, plaintiff appeals.

A lease from Adams, as lessor, to plaintiff Roberts, as lessee, covering certain real property in Van Nuys, California, and for a term of five years from March 23, 1954, contains an option reading as follows: "It shall be a condition of this tenancy that the lessee Charles Roberts shall have the option to purchase the said property as per map reported in Book 19, pages 1 to 34 for the total sum of $85,000.00, payable as mutually agreed by both parties." Emphasis has been added to the words which engendered this controversy.

[1] Plaintiff swore that this paragraph was in the lease when signed; defendant was equally positive that it was not there and that he at no time gave plaintiff an option to buy the property. After the court had ruled in defendant's favor the parties waived findings, with the result that it must be presumed upon appeal that the judge found in favor of the prevailing party every fact necessary to sustain the judgment. Gray v. Gray, 185 Cal. 598, 599, 197 P. 945; Bekins Van Lines, Inc., v. Johnson, 21 Cal. 2d 135, 137, 130 P.2d 421. Application of this rule would imply a finding that the option paragraph was not in the lease and there was never an option of any sort. But the trial judge's oral ruling was placed squarely upon the unenforcibility of the option paragraph, assuming it to be a part of the lease. The attorneys have presented that as the controlling issue upon this appeal and we prefer to decide the cause upon that basis. We therefore proceed upon the assumption that the option was at all times a part of the lease,—an option to purchase for the total sum of $85,000 "payable as mutually agreed by both parties."

[2] Of course a later agreement upon terms of payment and security therefor would have cured the defect in the writing. Laughlin v. Haberfelde, 72 Cal.App.2d 780, 785, 165 P.2d 544; 6 Cal.Jur.2d § 150, p. 227. But there was no subsequent oral or written agreement. Defendant at all times repudiated the alleged obligation.

Plaintiff-appellant testified that there were certain conversations about terms of payment, defendant insisting that he wanted part of the purchase price "under the table" and he would specify the details when the time for payment arrived. But the evidence shows that these conversations (if they occurred) were merged into the writing when at defendant's request plaintiff placed in the agreement the phrase, "payable as mutually agreed by both parties."

[3-5] It is Hornbook law that an agreement to make an agreement is nugatory, and that this is true of material terms of any contract. But the law has progressed to the point that it "'does not favor, but leans against, the destruction of contracts because of uncertainty; and it will, if feasible, so construe agreements as to carry into effect the reasonable intentions of the parties if that can be ascertained.'" California Lettuce Growers v. Union Sugar Co., 45 Cal.2d 474, 481, 289 P.2d 785, 790, 49 A.L.R.2d 496. This softening of the original concept of nudum pactum has extended to a failure to state the price of a purchase. "Unexpressed provisions of a contract may be inferred from the writing or external facts. Thus it is well settled that a contract need not specify price if it can be objectively determined." Id., 45 Cal. 2d at page 482, 289 P.2d at page 790. But, in the absence of internal or external indicia of what the parties would have agreed upon, the court cannot supply the omitted provision, for that would amount to making a contract for the parties. It is firmly established as the law of California that failure to specify or furnish a standard for determination of terms of payment and method of securing the unpaid balance of the purchase price of real or other property is fatal to its enforceability notwithstanding any desire of the courts to be liberal and helpful.

Ablett v. Clauson, 43 Cal.2d 280, 272 P. 2d 753, 755, an action for declaratory relief, trespass and injunction, dealt with an option for a renewal lease for a period of five years "upon terms to be then agreed upon." Holding the option to be unenforceable the court said, 43 Cal.2d at page 284, 272 P.2d at page 756: "The general rule regarding contracts to agree in the future is stated to be as follows: 'Although a promise may be sufficiently definite when it contains an option given to the promisor or promisee, yet if an essential element is reserved for the future agreement of both parties, the promise can give rise to no legal obligation until such future agreement. Since either party by the terms of the promise may refuse to agree to anything to which the other party will agree, it is impossible for the law to affix any obligation to such a promise.' 1 Williston, on Contracts (Rev. Ed. 1936) 131, § 45. The rule is well established in this state [citations], and, in conformity with the weight of authority in other states [citation], it has been held that an option agreement which leaves an essential term to future agreement is not enforceable. [Citations.]" annually." 175 Cal. at page 39, 165 P. at page 4. It was held that the quoted clause was too vague and ambiguous to support that form of action as it failed to indicate the number of such payments or the amount of each; also, that failure to provide how the obligation for deferred payments was to be evidenced or secured was equally fatal to specific performance. It appears, however, from the Ablett case, supra, and authorities hereinafter cited, that an agreement to agree upon a material term of a contract, as distinguished from mere silence on the particular subject, renders the instrument unenforceable in any form of action because it is a mere nullity.

Klein v. Markarian, 175 Cal. 37, 165 P. 3, was an action for specific performance of an option to buy land for $45,000, payable $11,000 within ten days after notice of acceptance and the balance "in quarterly yearly payments with interest at 6 per cent.

Five cases decided by this court affirm and apply the principle announced in the Ablett decision. They are Bonk v. Boyajian, 128 Cal.App.2d 153, 274 P.2d 948; Burgess v. Rodom, 121 Cal.App.2d 71, 262 P.2d 335; Kline v. Rogerson, 80 Cal.App.2d 158, 181 P.2d 385; Avalon Products, Inc., v. Lentini, 98 Cal.App.2d 177, 219 P.2d 485; and Vangel v. Vangel, 116 Cal.App. 2d 615, 254 P.2d 919.

Bonk, though a specific performance action, announces rules which preclude any form of relief based upon a mere agreement to make an agreement. That case involved an option to purchase property for $7,000 with a down payment of $3,000 or more and "monthly payments on the balance due to be agreed upon at the time of purchase." [128 Cal.App.2d 153, 274 P.2d 949.] At page 155 of 128 Cal.App.2d, at page 950 of 274 P.2d the court said: "'Uncertainty, as to the terms and conditions of deferred payments is fatal to a claim for specific performance.' [Citations.] Where, in a business transaction, an important item is reserved for future determination no enforceable obligation is thereby created for 'neither law nor equity provides a remedy for a breach of an agreement to agree in the future.' [Citations.] In the Ablett case, * * * the court points out that 'an option agreement which leaves an essential term to future agreement is not enforceable.' The court may not imply or speculate upon what the parties will agree. [Citations.] A statement of the rule and the reason therefor is to be found in 1 Williston, Contracts (1936), sec. 45, p. 131, where the author says: '* * * if an essential element is reserved for the future agreement of both parties, the promise can give rise to no legal obligation until such future agreement. Since either party by the very terms of the promise may refuse to agree on anything to which the other party will agree, it is impossible for the law to affix any obligation to such a promise.'"

Burgess was an action for damages for breach of a contract to purchase realty. The document provided for a deposit of $200 and a balance of $5,000 to be paid within 30 days from date, to wit: "Terms to be made as soon as new purchaser arranges for new mortgage now held by * * * Bank to Burgess (the seller)." 121 Cal. App.2d at page 73, 262 P.2d at page 335. This instrument was held to be fatally uncertain, the court saying at page 73 of 121 Cal.App.2d, at page 336 of 262 P.2d: "An action for damages for breach of contract for the purchase or sale of real property will not lie unless the writing contains the essential terms and material elements of such an agreement without recourse to parol evidence of the intention of the contracting parties. [Citations.] The law does not provide a remedy for breach of an agreement to agree in the future, and the court may not speculate upon what the parties will agree." Referring to the language of the particular agreement it was further said, 121 Cal.App.2d at page 74, 262 P.2d at page 336: "How this balance would be paid, whether in monthly, quarterly, semi-annual or annual installments, or at the end of a specified term of years does not appear. Likewise, absent is the rate of interest. The security, if any, to be provided for this balance, whatever it might be, is not specified. These are all important items, yet agreement with respect to each of them was 'left open for future settlement.' It is therefore established from the language which the parties painstakingly wrote into the blank space in the deposit receipt that their minds had not met upon these essential and material terms of the deal. They had simply agreed to agree upon terms in the future. In such circumstances there was no binding obligation upon the buyer to accept and pay for the land."

Kline v. Rogerson, supra, was an action at law. A deposit receipt provided for payment of the balance of the purchase price "at $5,000 or more per year, plus interest at 5% or terms to mutual satisfaction." This was held to be no agreement, the court saying: "The deposit receipt signed by defendant did not constitute an agreement of purchase and sale by the parties since it expressly provided that the balance of the purchase price was to be paid 'at $5,000 or more per year, plus interest at 5% or terms to mutual satisfaction'. Since the parties never agreed upon terms which were mutually satisfactory, there was never an agreement of purchase and sale. Hence the plaintiff was not entitled to any portion of the purchase price." 80 Cal.App.2d at page 160, 181 P.2d at page 387.

Avalon Products, Inc., v. Lentini, supra, was an action for damages. It considered a contract for purchase of ice cream freezer equipment. The purchase order contained a description of the goods, the delivery date, the purchase price less the down payment, and further said: "Method of payment to be agreed upon before delivery." 98 Cal. App.2d at page 179, 219 P.2d at page 486. Recognizing that "[t]he law leans against the destruction of contracts because of uncertainty and favors an interpretation which will carry into effect the reasonable intention of the parties if it can be ascertained," the court nevertheless said: "Where, however, there has been no agreement upon an essential element and the contract provides no means for the determination thereof but leaves it to the future negotiation and agreement of the parties, the contract is void. McIlmoil v. Frawley Motor Co., supra [190 Cal. 546, 213 P. 971].

Thus it is true generally that if no price is fixed in the contract the law, upon delivery and acceptance of the commodity sold, implies an understanding between the parties that a reasonable price is to be paid; but where the price of the commodity called for but not delivered is to be subsequently ascertained by the agreement of the parties, the contract of sale is incomplete and unenforceable until the price is fixed or agreed upon." 98 Cal.App.2d at page 179, 219 P.2d at page 486. Also: "Although a greater degree of certainty is required in a contract which is sought to be specifically enforced, the general rule is that a provision in a contract which leaves open the terms of payment for future negotiation renders the contract incomplete and uncertain in one of its material features and for that reason unenforceable in equity. Morris v. Ballard, 56 App.D.C. 383, 16 F.2d 175, 49 A.L.R. 1464 and cases cited. In California the rule is the same and no action will lie to enforce the performance of a contract or to recover damages for its breach unless it is complete and certain." 98 Cal.App.2d at page 180, 219 P.2d at page 486.

Vangel involved a partnership agreement which provided that the parties would agree from time to time upon a fixed amount to be drawn by each partner. The court said, 116 Cal.App.2d at page 631, 254 P.2d at page 929: "An examination of the quoted part of the partnership agreement clearly indicates that although the fixing of compensation for each of the partners was in the contemplation of the parties, it was cast in the form of an agreement reserving this matter for future determination. However, the parties were unable to reach an agreement on this deferred subject. Under such circumstances, 'neither law nor equity provides a remedy for breach of an agreement to agree in the future.'"

In accord with the foregoing decisions are: Mills v. Skaggs, 64 Cal.App.2d 656, 658, 149 P.2d 204; Mariposa Commercial & Mining Co. v. Peters, 215 Cal. 134, 140, 8 P.2d 849; Buckmaster v. Bertram, 186 Cal. 673, 676, 200 P. 610; Gould v. Callan, 127 Cal.App.2d 1, 273 P.2d 93; Bean v. Holmes, Tex.Civ.App., 236 S.W. 120, 121; Monahan v. Allen, 47 Mont. 75, 130 P. 768, 769. See, also, annotation in 49 A.L.R. 1464; 51 C.J.S. Landlord and Tenant § 56b(2), p. 597; 12 Cal.Jur.2d § 107, p. 309.

Appellant relies principally upon Chaney v. Schneider, 92 Cal.App.2d 88, 206 P.2d 669, which was a declaratory relief action. A lease contained this provision: "At the expiration of this lease, Lessor agrees to give Lessee first refusal for an additional term of lease, at rentals and terms to be mutually agreed upon at that time, provided, the said lessee shall faithfully comply with and perform all of the covenants conditions of this lease." 92 Cal.App.2d at page 89, 206 P.2d at page 669. The lessor refused to negotiate when the time came. The trial court held that the lessee was entitled to an additional five years upon the same terms and conditions as the original lease but at an increased rental. In affirming the judgment the court said:

"Leases which left anything for future agreement of the parties were for a long time generally held to be void for uncertainty. The modern trend of decisions would seem to be in relaxation of the strictness of the rule, particularly when the amount of rental is left to future agreement. If there is in the writing a sufficient definite standard or method for the determination of the rental, and if the amount thereof is the only thing to be determined, courts of equity will hold that the parties agreed upon a reasonable rental for the extension, and will declare it if they do not agree. [Citations.]

"The difficulty in enforcing the clause here under consideration lies in the fact that it provides for mutual agreement as to the terms as well as to the rental for the extended period

Also: "Like all other branches of the law, the rules as to uncertainty in interpreting contracts are developing along with changing conditions in business and human affairs." 92 Cal.App.2d at page 90, 206 P.2d at page 670. "California has adopted the rule of practical business utility in Streicher v. Heimburge, supra, 205 Cal. 675, 272 P. 290. In that case a lease provided for a renewal upon rental to be determined by arbitration. It was held that when arbitrators failed to agree the court would fix a reasonable rental." 92 Cal. App.2d at page 91, 206 P.2d at page 670. "So in this case here before us, the right of renewal constituted a substantial element in the agreement of the lessor and lessee, and inasmuch as the lessor failed and refused to agree upon the terms of the renewal or the rental, these terms were properly declared by the trial court." 92 Cal.App.2d at page 92, 206 P.2d at page 671. There was no petition for hearing in the Supreme Court, but the case was discussed in Ablett v. Clauson, supra, 43 Cal. 2d 280, 286, 272 P.2d 753, 756, as follows:

"The trial court adjudged that the option entitled the lessee to an additional term of five years, upon the same terms and conditions as the original lease, but at an increased rental. Upon appeal, the judgment was affirmed, the court ruling that the renewal of the lease was the 'essence of the contract' with the other terms and conditions merely incidental details.

"Although there is an intimation in other decisions that a court of equity is empowered to fix a reasonable rental under an option provision reserving that matter to the future agreement of the parties [citations], the extensions of the rule suggested by the Chaney decision seem seriously questionable. The basis for upholding option provisions which leave the amount of rent to future agreement is that the implied agreement of a reasonable rent if the parties are unable to agree, provides a sufficient standard for enforcing the option without requiring the court to write a new contract for them. But certainly the Streicher case is not authority for the proposition, relied upon in the Chaney decision, that the court may fix all of the provisions of a new lease without ascertainable standards in the option agreement. [Citation.]"

This leaves the Chaney decision in such status that it cannot be accepted as controlling at bar.

California Lettuce Growers v. Union Sugar Co., supra, 45 Cal.2d 474, 289 P.2d 785, 49 A.L.R.2d 496, is also relied upon by appellant. In that instance there was a contract for the sale of beets which was claimed to be void because no provision for price, or time and place of delivery was contained therein and no duty of Union Sugar to accept and pay therefor expressly stated. 45 Cal.2d at page 481, 289 P.2d at page 789. At page 481 of 45 Cal. 2d, at page 789 of 289 P.2d the opinion uses language above quoted herein. The holding is that the pattern of prior dealings between the parties was sufficient "to support the conclusion that the parties intended the 1949 crop to be governed by the procedure previously followed." 45 Cal.2d at page 483, 289 P.2d at page 791. This conclusion in no way detracts from the primary proposition stated at page 481 of 45 Cal.2d at page 790 of 289 P.2d: "Where a contract is so uncertain and indefinite that the intention of the parties in material particulars cannot be ascertained, the contract is void and unenforceable. [Citations.] If the price of a commodity in a sales contract is intended to be left to the subsequent agreement of the parties, the purported contract is merely an agreement to agree and therefore nudum pactum until the price is fixed or agreed upon. [Citations.] Unless the court has ascertainable provisions of agreement before it, there is no contract on which the court may act." We do not regard this decision as contrary to the Ablett and other cases above discussed.

[6] Appellant's counsel earnestly argues that he was prepared and offered to pay cash upon the exercise of the option, and that this fact cured any uncertainty about terms of payment that inhered in the option clause of the lease. The point has been ruled adversely in several cases.

Klein v. Markarian, supra, 175 Cal. 37, 41, 165 P. 3, 4, says that appellant "claims, however, that all uncertainty was removed by his act of tendering four notes, together with a mortgage to secure them. The defendant having then failed to specify any objections to the terms of the instruments tendered, he was, it is argued, precluded from objecting thereafter. * * * No matter what the defendant might have said in response to the offer, the plaintiff could not, of course, have remedied the defects in the written option. The writing was so indefinite that the plaintiff could not, within its terms, lay the foundation for a decree of specific performance. To hold the defendant bound by a tender outside of the provisions of the option would be to make a new contract for him."

In Burgess v. Rodom, supra, 121 Cal. App.2d 71, 262 P.2d 335, the balance of the purchase price was $5,000. The court said, at page 74 of 121 Cal.App.2d, at page 337 of 262 P.2d: "Plaintiff offers to supply the absent elements of an enforceable agreement by proving that respondent arranged for a loan at the bank for $2,200; that she had more than $2,800 in her account (but not in the escrow) at the bank; and that she moved into the property, remaining for about three weeks and moving out because of alleged misrepresentations relative to its construction. Such proof would be aliunde the writing and is not admissible for the purpose of establishing an essential and material feature of the abortive agreement."

Westphal v. Buenger, 324 Ill. 77, 154 N.E. 426, 427: "An agreement in writing, which does not purport to give an absolute right, without further negotiations thereon, cannot be specifically enforced. Appellant contends that he is now ready and willing to pay the entire $16,000, but such is not of the terms of the contract. There were to be mortgages, and, while it might be generally considered more acceptable to have the actual cash than mortgages, the court will not make a new contract for the parties, because it appears that conditions claimed by one party, but not in the contract, might prove more beneficial to the other party."

[7] We are persuaded that the ruling of the trial judge is correct. In view of this conclusion arguments presented by counsel upon other points (e. g. whether Harry J. Grella is properly named as an appellant) require no discussion.

Judgment affirmed.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing

Nov. 21, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of offense of manslaughter in the driving of a vehicle, with a finding of gross negligence. The Superior Court, Napa County, Wright L. Callender, J., entered judgment and an order denying defendant's motion for new trial, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that evidence that defendant was operating automobile while under influence of intoxicating liquor and that, while in the commission of such unlawful act, she negligently failed to see and take reasonable precautions to avoid hitting driver of automobile parked alongside paved portion of highway was sufficient to support conviction with finding of gross negligence.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Lewis H. DeCastle, Santa Rosa, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., G. A. Strader, Deputy Atty. Gen., Sacramento, for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Defendant was charged with the crime of manslaughter as defined in section 192 of the Penal Code, it being alleged in the information that on the 18th day of March, 1957, in the county of Napa, said defendant "did willfully and unlawfully, feloniously and without malice, while engaged in the driving of a vehicle in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony, with gross negligence and while in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, with gross negligence, kill Huealton Wiley." She was found guilty by a jury of the offense charged with gross negligence. The jury recommended that punishment be in the county jail. A motion for a new trial was denied. Probation was granted. Defendant filed a notice of appeal which stated that she appealed from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying her motion for a new trial.

[1] Appellant makes a number of contentions but her principal contention is that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment and order. Before discussing the specific contentions of appellant we shall summarize the evidence, as shown by the record, stating it, as must be done, in the light most favorable to respondent.

Huealton Wiley died at the Parks Victory Hospital in Napa on March 23, 1957. The cause of death was extensive brain injury and hemorrhage resulting from a blow to the skull. Five days prior to the death he suffered the fatal injuries upon being struck on the head by a car being driven by appellant. The incident occurred on Highway 29 in Napa County, approximately two and one-half miles from its intersection with Highway 12.

Mr. Kenneth MacLoud, the only eye witness to the incident, testified that on March 18, 1957, while traveling on Highway 12 in Napa County he observed a 1956 DeSoto automobile, which he subsequently learned was being driven by Mrs. Hoe, traveling on this highway ahead of him. He observed that the automobile being driven by Mrs. Hoe was weaving back and forth across the road, slipping over the white line and coming close to the right-hand edge of the highway. He observed this erratic driving for approximately two and one-half miles until Mrs. Hoe pulled off on the right side of the road near a spot referred to as "Lillian's Club." She appeared to be dazed and threw her head back. Mr. MacLoud, after passing her, stopped his automobile and started to back up and see if Mrs. Hoe was in need of help. As Mr. MacLoud was backing up, Mrs. Hoe started up again and passed him. Mr. MacLoud again proceeded to follow her and stayed behind her about four car lengths. The appellant continued on Highway 12 to its intersection with Highway 29 where she came to a stop and then proceeded north on Highway 29. About a mile and one-half beyond the point where Mrs. Hoe had stopped off the highway the decedent, Huealton Wiley, had parked his automobile for the purpose of changing a flat tire. The highway at this point was a four-lane divided highway with two lanes in each direction. Each lane was approximately 12 feet wide and there was a macadamized or improved shoulder three feet in width and a dirt shoulder another three feet in width. Mr. Wiley's car was parked off the main-traveled portion of the highway with the left wheel about 8 inches from the pavement. The left side of the car body was just off the pavement. It was approximately 5:00 p. m., the weather was clear and the sun was shining.

Mr. MacLoud testified that after Mrs. Hoe turned onto Highway 29 she was driving straighter than she had been and was driving about a foot from the shoulder on the right of the pavement, at a speed of from 35 to 40 miles per hour. MacLoud observed the decedent's car which was clearly visible and saw Mr. Wiley walk from the right-hand side of his car to the rear of his car. Mr. Wiley looked to the rear toward MacLoud's car and the appellant's car. When Mr. Wiley got to the left rear of his car he bent over. Just as Mr. Wiley bent or stooped over, Mrs. Hoe's car struck him. She did not strike the parked car. She passed about one foot within the pavement. Without stopping, Mrs. Hoe proceeded on down the road. Mr. MacLoud, after first stopping beside Mr. Wiley's car and signaling to a woman occupant in the back seat, proceeded down the highway in pursuit of the appellant.

After traveling approximately a mile or a mile and one-half Mr. MacLoud succeeded in overtaking Mrs. Hoe after trying to attract her attention by sounding his horn. Upon being informed by Mr. MacLoud that she had struck someone Mrs. Hoe appeared to be surprised. Mr. MacLoud then got into Mrs. Hoe's car and drove it back to the scene of the accident. Upon their arrival spectators had gathered and shortly thereafter a highway patrolman arrived on the scene.

Appellant contends that the evidence fails to establish that appellant committed an unlawful act. Respondent does not contend that appellant was guilty of a violation of Vehicle Code, section 510, the basic speed law, section 525, driving on the wrong side of the road, or section 480, commonly referred to as hit and run, but respondent does contend that the death of Wiley resulted from the act of appellant committed in violation of Vehicle Code, section 502, commonly referred to as drunk driving.

Appellant argues that the evidence is insufficient to prove that she was driving a vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor. She points to her own testimony that she was suffering from an arthritic condition and that her inability to walk properly or maintain her balance at the scene of the accident was due to this physical condition, rather than the fact that she was intoxicated. She points also to the testimony of her chiropractor who corroborated her testimony as to her physical condition, and to her testimony that she had only one beer and was not intoxicated. She points to other testimony and states: "It is respectfully submitted that defendant's conduct all during the day of the accident up to and after its occurrence would not justify reaching a conclusion that she was affected by the consumption of intoxicating liquor to such a degree that she could not, and, more important, did not, operate her car in a cautious, safe and prudent manner."

However, there was the testimony of two highway patrolmen that in their opinion she was under the influence of intoxicating liquor. There was also expert testimony showing that she had a concentration of alcohol in her blood of .16 per cent one hour after the accident, and the testimony of Mr. MacLoud that she was driving erratically while he was following her. Mr. MacLoud testified that the decedent, Mr. Wiley, was clearly visible; that the day was clear and the sun was shining, and there was no other traffic in the immediate vicinity at the time of the accident.

[2] The evidence pointed to by appellant merely created a conflict upon the point of whether or not appellant was under the influence of intoxicating liquor at the time of the accident. There was sufficient evidence to support the implied finding of the jury that she was.

Appellant also contends that the evidence of the highway patrol officers that there appeared to be flesh and hair stuck to the right front headlamp frame should have been stricken. No objection was made at the time the testimony was received. A motion to strike was made at the conclusion of the prosecution's case. The testimony which appellant contends should have been stricken were answers to questions asked of Officer Evensen, as follows:

"Q. What did you find that was out of the ordinary? A. Well, on the right front headlight frame in the adjacent fender was appeared to be flesh and hair stuck around the frame and on the fender.

* * * * *

"A. Well, from the hair and flesh on the front of her car; I had reason to believe that she had hit this person."

The second answer which appellant argues should have been stricken was given in response to a question by appellant's counsel and was directly in response to the question asked by counsel. The witness was being questioned concerning the basis upon which he arrived at the conclusion that Mrs. Hoe had been involved in an accident and had struck the decedent. He was asked by counsel as follows:

"Q. Well, by what other means did you know it?"

The witness answered the question, stating as follows:

"A. Well, from the hair and the flesh on the front of her car; I had reason to believe that she had hit this person."

[3] The said evidence having been received without objection, and part of it in response to a question by appellant's counsel, we believe that appellant waived any objection to its reception. As was stated in People v. Caritativo, 46 Cal.2d 68, at page 73, 292 P.2d 513, 516:

"The rule is settled that where a defendant deliberately permits evidence to be given without objection in the first instance and then moves to strike it out on grounds readily available at the time the evidence was offered, he waives such objections to the reception of the evidence. (People v. Long, 43 Cal. 444, 446; People v. Rolfe, 61 Cal. 540, 542.)"

So even if such evidence was inadmissible, which we do not hold, the motion to strike came too late and was properly denied.

[4] There is no merit in the contention of appellant that the trial judge and the district attorney were guilty of misconduct. During the examination of Mr. MacLoud appellant's counsel objected to a question concerning a statement of the appellant made to the witness. Appellant's counsel contended that the corpus delicti had not been established. During a colloquy between counsel and the judge the parties disagreed as to the testimony of the witness. We have read this portion of the record carefully and are convinced that nothing was said by either the trial judge or the district attorney that could have resulted in any prejudice to appellant.

[5,6] Appellant argues that the court erred in instructing the jury that "The proximate cause of an injury or death is that cause which in natural and continuous sequence unbroken by any efficient intervening cause produces the injury or death and without which the results would not have occurred. It is the efficient cause, the one that necessarily sets in operation the factors that accomplish the injury or death." Appellant contends that "This instruction relieves the prosecution of that burden of proof and assumes a homicide because a death occurred without regard to the cause." There was no error in giving this instruction. A similar instruction was approved by this court in People v. Mead, 126 Cal.App.2d 164, 177, 271 P.2d 619, as containing the standard definition of proximate cause. The instructions in a case must be read as a whole, and in the instant case the court also instructed the jury that before they could find appellant guilty they "must find that the defendant's misconduct was the cause of death for there must be a causal connection between commission of the unlawful acts and death."

Finally, appellant contends that there was not sufficient evidence to prove the death of decedent to have been the proximate result of the commission of an unlawful act by appellant. Section 192 of the Penal Code prescribes the offense of manslaughter in the driving of a vehicle, as follows:

"3. In the driving of a vehicle—

"(a) In the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to felony, with gross negligence; or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, and with gross negligence.

"(b) In the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to felony, without gross negligence; or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, but without gross negligence."

The statute then provides:

"This section shall not be construed as making any homicide in the driving of a vehicle punishable which is not a proximate result of the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to felony, or of the commission of a lawful act which might produce death, in an unlawful manner."

[7-11] Whether the misconduct proven constitutes gross negligence or ordinary negligence it must appear that it was the proximate cause of the death. In testing the record for the presence of proximate cause we are not concerned with appellant's conduct preceding her approach to the place where the death occurred. At the time and just before her automobile struck decedent she was driving straight and about one foot within the limit of the right-hand travel lane. Although she testified she did not see decedent's car parked at the side of the road and did not see decedent, she is chargeable with what was then visible to her had she exercised care and looked. She is chargeable, then, with seeing the position in which decedent's car had been parked with respect to its proximity to her path of progress and with seeing decedent pass toward the rear of his car from the right-hand side of it and then behind the car in a manner indicating his approach to her proposed path. The jury could find that she could reasonably anticipate he might go into the area to the left of his car and that if he did there was a reasonable probability that unless she took evasive action open to her, injury to decedent might result. Under these circumstances the jury could find that a reasonably prudent person would have either slowed down or pulled enough to the left to create a margin of safety or have done both of these things, that her failure to do so was negligence and that this negligence was a proximate cause of decedent's death. It matters not that decedent's conduct was grossly negligent and a proximate cause of his death. It cannot, however, be said that decedent's conduct was the sole proximate cause of his death. It results, therefore, that appellant was guilty of manslaughter in the driving of a vehicle. The record supports the jury's verdict in that respect.

[12] It is argued further that the evidence will not support the jury's finding of gross negligence and in support of that argument it is insisted that the proximate cause of death, that is, appellant's failure to exercise care to avoid injuring decedent, will not in itself support a finding of gross negligence. Conceding that to be true, that is, that the only conduct of appellant material here was that immediately preceding the instant her car struck decedent, yet under the statute that negligence occurred in the commission of an unlawful act with gross negligence. The jury could find that her conduct in driving while intoxicated and in failing to see either decedent or his car as she approached was grossly negligent conduct.

The judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

Civ. 22962.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.
Oct. 21, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 18, 1958.

Hearing Denied Dec. 17, 1958.

Action for specific performance of a contract to exchange properties wherein the respondents subsequently filed an action seeking rescission of the same contract upon the ground of fraud. The actions were consolidated. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Phillip H. Richards, J., the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Herndon, J., held that the respondents were not precluded from seeking rescission because of their answer or failure to file a timely cross-complaint in the specific performance action in view of the stipulation of the parties; that the transfer of the actions to Los Angeles County was proper and that the judgment was not inequitable.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Pleading ⚡127(2)

In broker's action for specific performance of a contract for exchange of properties, defendants were not precluded from seeking a rescission of the transaction because they admitted execution of the agreement, where they neither alleged nor admitted any fact which was inconsistent with any fact which they had alleged in their complaint for rescission.

2. Stipulations ⚡14(11)

In broker's action for specific performance of an agreement for exchange of properties wherein defendants subsequently filed action for rescission, broker waived contentions that defendants were barred from seeking rescission by failure to timely file cross complaint in specific performance action, where broker stipulated to the transfer of the rescission action and to consolidation of the two actions for the purposes of trial since any matter with respect to procedural matters antecedent to the stipulation was waived.

3. Appeal and Error ⚡181

Where appellant interposed no objections in the trial court on basis of contentions raised on appeal but sought an adjudication on the merits, any right to urge error in respect to such contentions was waived.

4. Exchange of Property ⚡3(1)

In broker's action for specific performance of an agreement for exchange of properties, defendants who filed action for rescission for alleged fraud before they filed their answer in the specific performance action did not by failure to plead fraud or seek rescission by cross complaint in the specific performance action affirm the contract or admit its validity, where broker at the time he stipulated to a consolidation of the actions knew that the defendants were seeking a judicial confirmation of the rescission.

5. Stipulations ⚡14(11)

Plaintiff's stipulation for transfer of rescission action of defendants and to consolidation of that action with an action for specific performance was not construable as intending to foreclose the granting of any relief as sought by the respondents' complaint in the rescission action.

6. Courts ⚡23

Parties to an action over which the court has general jurisdiction cannot claim lack of power to try a particular issue after they have consented to a trial thereof and have participated therein.

7. Courts ⚡484

Where broker filed in Los Angeles county, action for specific performance of an agreement for exchange of properties and subsequently the defendants filed in Lake county action for rescission and damages and by stipulation the actions were consolidated for trial in Los Angeles county and broker claimed that the Lake county superior court lacked jurisdiction of the rescission action, transfer of the action to Los Angeles county was proper.

8. Appeal and Error ⚡197(2)

In broker's action for specific performance of an agreement for exchange of properties where defendants sought rescission, broker was not entitled to complain that the finding as to value of the resort property was unsupported by the evidence where the pleadings raised no issue with respect to such matter.

9. Appeal and Error ⚡671(4)

Appellant was not entitled to complain on appeal that the judgment failed to charge the respondent with reasonable value of resort property during the time they were in possession where the appellant did not refer to any evidence in the record which would have afforded a basis for such a charge.

10. Cancellation of Instruments Ⓒ55

Specific Performance Ⓒ125

In an action for specific performance wherein the defendants sought rescission of the transaction, the trial court had power to grant such monetary relief as might be necessary to do complete equity between the parties.

11. Exchange of Property Ⓒ8(1)

In suit for specific performance of an agreement for exchange of properties where defendants sought rescission for alleged fraud and the rescission action was tried as an action upon a rescission in pais in which defendants sought recovery of the equivalent of the consideration given pursuant to a contract with consequential damages, award of a money judgment which sought to accomplish as nearly as possible the restoration of the status quo was not inequitable.

Chas. I. Rosin, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Rodney F. Williams, North Hollywood, Ralph V. DeVoto, and Philip C. Crump, Lakeport, for respondents.

HERNDON, Justice.

The judgment at bar adjudicates the issues tendered in two actions which were consolidated for trial pursuant to stipulation: (1) an action brought by Robert W. Phillips (appellant) against Mr. and Mrs. Harry L. Beilsten (respondents) seeking specific performance of a certain contract whereby the parties agreed to an exchange of their respective interests in certain parcels of real property, and (2) an action brought by respondents Beilstens seeking rescission of the same contract upon the ground of fraud in the inducement. The trial court decreed a rescission and granted Beilstens a money judgment in the sum of $28,476.91.

In February, 1955, Phillips, a real estate broker, owned certain real property located near Kelseyville, Lake County, California, consisting of a resort hotel and cabins, generally known as The Lakewood Resort, which was encumbered in the amount of approximately $75,000. The Beilstens owned a residential property located in Los Angeles County referred to in the briefs as the Lemona property which was subject to an encumbrance in the amount of $6,925.67.

By written contract dated February 12, 1955, the parties agreed to an exchange of the above mentioned properties. It was provided that Beilstens were to receive the Lakewood Resort with all its furniture, furnishings and equipment, subject to the encumbrance thereon. According to the original agreement Phillips was to receive the Lemona property free and clear, but it was subsequently agreed orally that he would take it subject to the encumbrance and that Beilstens would pay him an equivalent amount in cash from the proceeds of a loan to be obtained upon the security of other property.

The parties promptly executed their respective deeds and deposited them in escrow. Beilstens' deed conveying the Lemona property to Phillips was recorded. It appears, however, that Phillips withdrew from the escrow the deed to the resort property and that this deed was never delivered. Nevertheless, Beilstens went into possession of the resort property in the latter part of March, 1955. In April, 1955, Phillips sold the Lemona property to one John M. Morehart.

Shortly after taking possession of the Lakewood Resort, Beilstens discovered the falsity of numerous representations made by Phillips and upon which they had relied in agreeing to the exchange of properties. On May 24, 1955, Beilstens gave Phillips written notice of rescission offering to restore to him the ownership and possession of Lakewood Resort and demanding that he return to them all monies and things of value which he had received and that he pay all damages suffered by them. By reason of these circumstances, Beilstens refused to take any further steps to clear the Lemona property and declined to pay Phillips the amount of the encumbrance thereon.

On July 18, 1955, Phillips filed in the Los Angeles County superior court his action for specific performance. From the allegations of the complaint, it appeared that the only promise of Beilstens then unfulfilled was their promise to pay Phillips the amount of the encumbrance on the Lemona property.

On August 24, 1955, Beilstens filed in the Lake County superior court their complaint for rescission and damages. This complaint charged Phillips with numerous false representations material to the quality, condition and value of the resort property and set forth all the essential elements of a conventional action for rescission on the ground of fraud. It alleged the giving of the notice of rescission and the offer of restoration in May of 1955; it repeated the offer to restore to Phillips all that the complaining parties had received under the agreement and offered "to do equity in the premises as the Court may require." The rescission complaint further alleged: that Phillips had deeded the Lemona property to a third party; that the reasonable and agreed value of the Lemona property was $27,000; that Beilstens had made numerous outlays in the form of payments to Phillips, payment of taxes on the resort property, payments on the encumbrances and for improvements and other expenses incident to the transaction. The total of these outlays added to the alleged value of the Lemona property amounted to the sum of $35,866.69. The prayer of the complaint sought cancellation and rescission of the agreement and recovery of the indicated sum.

On December 7, 1955, (a little over three months after filing their rescission action in Lake County) Beilstens filed an answer to the complaint in the specific performance action in Los Angeles. This answer admitted the execution of the agreement and the taking of possession of the resort property but denied the other material allegations of the complaint. It affirmatively alleged that Phillips had failed and refused to perform various conditions of the agreement and that he had removed from the premises furniture, furnishings and equipment which were to have been delivered with the resort property.

On May 1, 1956, Beilstens filed in the Los Angeles specific performance action their notice of motion for leave to file a cross-complaint and an amendment to their answer. This proposed cross-complaint was essentially a duplicate of the complaint in the Lake County action. The motion for leave to file the cross-complaint was denied. Shortly thereafter, and pursuant to stipulation, the rescission action was ordered transferred from Lake County to Los Angeles County.

On May 16, 1956, the parties, through their counsel, presented to the presiding judge of the Los Angeles County superior court a written stipulation which, after reciting the pendency of the specific performance action and the transfer of the rescission action from Lake County, provided: that said court might make its order consolidating said causes for the purposes of trial; that in lieu of Phillips filing an amended answer and cross-complaint, each and all of the allegations of the complaint in the rescission action would be deemed denied, and that Phillips might be granted such affirmative relief by way of accounting and otherwise as might be "equitable in the premises."

An order for consolidation was made in conformity with the terms of the foregoing stipulation and the consolidated actions were set for trial. On June 15, 1956, Phillips filed an amended answer which amounted to a general and specific denial of most of the material allegations of Beilstens' complaint.

The consolidated actions came on for trial on July 13, 1956, and after a lengthy trial, the court rendered its decision finding Phillips guilty of fraud substantially as charged in the Beilsten complaint. The judgment decreed a rescission of the contract and awarded the Beilstens a money judgment in the sum of $28,476.91. The computation of the monetary award was set forth in the trial judge's memorandum of decision as follows:

|                                                                                                                                                           |             |             |

On this appeal from the judgment Phillips expressly concedes the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain all of the findings of the trial court with respect to his fraudulent misrepresentations and respondents' reliance thereon. Appellant also concedes the sufficiency of the evidence to support all of the findings as to the value of the Lemona property. A review of the record readily discloses that appellant's concessions are not only proper but clearly necessary.

[1] Appellant first argues that respondents were precluded from seeking rescission because their verified answer to the complaint in the specific performance action admitted the validity and enforceability of the agreement. Appellant cites a number of decisions in support of the rule stated in Beatty v. Pacific States Savings & Loan Co., 4 Cal.App.2d 692, 696-697, 41 P.2d 378, to the effect that where a fact is directly alleged in a verified pleading the pleader will not be permitted later to contradict the fact so alleged without a satisfactory explanation. The rule which appellant seeks to invoke has no application here. It is true that by their answer in the specific performance action respondents admitted the execution of the agreement, but they neither alleged nor admitted any fact which was in the slightest degree inconsistent with any fact which they had alleged in their complaint for rescission which they previously had filed in Lake County.

[2] Appellant advances the concomitant contentions that respondents were barred from seeking rescission (1) by their failure to seek it by way of a timely cross-complaint or counter claim in the specific performance action and (2) by the order denying their motion for leave to file the cross-complaint which they tendered in the specific performance action. Without conceding that these contentions might otherwise have had merit, we hold that appellant waived them by stipulating to the transfer of the rescission action from Lake County to Los Angeles and to the consolidation of the two actions for purposes of trial.

[3] These stipulations were plainly designed to avoid a multiplicity of actions in a situation where suits involving the same general subject matter were pending in different courts. The procedure followed was obviously advantageous both to appellant and respondents. (See 2 Witkin, California Procedure, 1132 et seq.) Appellant suggests no reason why he should be permitted to repudiate his stipulations. Manifestly, any right to urge error with respect to procedural matters antecedent to the stipulations has been waived. (Cf. McClure v. Donovan, 33 Cal.2d 717, 722, 723, 205 P.2d 17; Moore v. Hubbard & Johnson Lumber Co., 149 Cal.App.2d 236, 242, 308 P.2d 794.) Appellant interposed no objections in the trial court on the basis of these contentions but rather sought an adjudication on the merits. For this additional reason, therefore, any right to urge error in respect to these procedural matters has been waived. Huntoon v. Hurley, 137 Cal.App.2d 33, 38, 290 P.2d 14.

[4, 5] Since respondents had filed their pending action for rescission on the ground of alleged fraud several months before they filed their answer in the specific performance action, it cannot be maintained with reason that their failure to plead fraud or to seek rescission by cross-complaint in the latter action should have been construed as an affirmance of the contract or an admission of its validity. At the time appellant stipulated to a consolidation of the two actions, he well knew that respondents were seeking a judicial confirmation of the rescission which they had declared by their notice of May 24, 1955. (Cf. Montgomery v. McLaury, 143 Cal. 83, 88, 76 P. 964; and see Walsh v. Majors, 4 Cal.2d 384, 398, 49 P.2d 598.) We must reject as strained and wholly unreasonable appellant's construction of the stipulation upon which the two actions were consolidated for trial. We find nothing either in the stipulation or in the record to support the contention that the stipulation was intended to foreclose the granting of any part of the relief sought by the prayer of respondents' complaint in the rescission action. We hold that the trial court's construction of the stipulation was reasonable and proper.

[6, 7] Appellant next urges that the Lake County superior court was without jurisdiction of the subject matter of the rescission action for the asserted reason that exclusive jurisdiction of all litigation arising from the transaction involved had vested in the Los Angeles superior court upon the filing of the specific performance action. Upon this premise it is argued that the Los Angeles court "was equally without jurisdiction to grant Beilsten any affirmative relief on his complaint in the rescission action. Hence, the judgment in the rescission action was void and it should be vacated." We find no merit in this contention. For the purposes of discussion we may accept appellant's premise that the Lake County superior court lacked jurisdiction of the subject matter of the rescission action. On this premise the transfer of the action to Los Angeles County was clearly proper.

In Schlyen v. Schlyen, 43 Cal.2d 361, 376, 273 P.2d 897, 905, referring to legislation adopted in 1957 and citing § 396 of the Code of Civil Procedure as amended in that year, the court declared: "One of the results of that legislation is to authorize a court having no jurisdiction of the subject matter of an action commenced therein to transfer it to the court having jurisdiction, if there be one." Again it is to be borne in mind that appellant stipulated to the transfer of the rescission action to Los Angeles County and to its consolidation with the specific performance action and that thereafter he participated in the trial on the merits without interposing any objection on any of the procedural or jurisdictional grounds which he now advances. As this court stated in Munns v. Stenman, 152 Cal.App.2d 543, 557, 314 P.2d 67, 76: "Applicable here is the rule that parties to an action over which the court has general jurisdiction cannot be heard to claim lack of power to try a particular issue after they have consented to a trial thereof and have participated in the same." In Schlyen, supra, (43 Cal.2d at page 377, 273 P.2d at page 905,) the rule is stated: "Where the superior court has jurisdiction over the particular class of cases in question it is the established rule that if no objection on the ground of another action pending or other appropriate objection be timely made it is deemed to be waived. In re Estate of Dombrowski, 163 Cal. 290, 297, 125 P. 233; In re Estate of Latour, 140 Cal. 414, 425-426, 73 P. 1070, 74 P. 441. The latter rule has been applied to proceedings in a court exercising general jurisdiction where a party has failed to interpose a timely objection on the ground that the issues should not be determined in the pending action. Simons v. Bedell, 1898, 122 Cal. 341, 55 P. 3 [68 Am.St.Rep. 35]; Miller v. Forster, 1933, 131 Cal.App. 509, 21 P.2d 678."

[8,9] Appellant asserts that the trial court's finding as to the value of the Lemona property is unsupported by the evidence. However, the record reveals that the pleadings tendered no issue with respect to this matter. In his answer to the rescission complaint appellant made no denial of respondents' allegation that $27,000 was the reasonable value of said property. Furthermore, it appears to be undisputed that at the time the agreement was made the parties mutually set the value of the property at that figure. Appellant also complains that the judgment erroneously fails to charge respondents with the reasonable rental value of the resort property during the time they were in possession. This argument is futile because appellant does not refer to any evidence in the record which would have afforded a basis for such a charge.

[10,11] Although the briefs of the parties contain no discussion of the matter, it clearly appears that the rescission action was tried in the trial court as an action upon a rescission in pais in which the respondents sought recovery of the equivalent of the consideration which they had given pursuant to the contract, together with consequential damages. (See 9 Cal. Jur.2d 517, § 3.) It is clear also that the theory and intent of the trial court's award of the money judgment was to accomplish as nearly as possible a restoration of the status quo. It is elementary, of course, that the trial court was empowered to grant such monetary relief as might be found necessary to do complete equity between the parties. (See 9 Cal.Jur.2d 633, § 48.) Appellant has failed to show that the judgment is inequitable in any respect.

The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 23117.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 17, 1958.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing

Nov. 14, 1958.

Hearing Denied Dec. 10, 1958.

Declaratory judgment action. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, George Francis, J., rendered judgment adverse to plaintiff, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that municipal employee's right to future pension vests upon his entering employment and rendering substantial services therein, and that such right cannot be destroyed by charter amendment even before time for retirement has arrived; but held that potential pension may be modified in a reasonable manner and to a reasonable extent.

Affirmed.

Where appellant had not denied statement, in respondents' brief, that insufficient funds had been provided to establish fund on an actuarially sound basis and that resultant pension demands had exceeded amount provided, court reviewing declaratory judgment adverse to plaintiff, who claimed to be entitled to have amount of his pension fixed by pre-amendment charter subdivision, deemed such fact established "sufficiently for present purposes."

Albert D. White and Kenneth Sperry, Long Beach, for appellant.

Walhfred Jacobson, City Atty., Clifford E. Hayes, Deputy City Atty., Long Beach, for respondents.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Here presented is another problem growing out of the pension provisions of the City Charter of Long Beach. Plaintiff, a Police Sergeant, joined the department in 1921 and at the time of trial had served continuously for more than 30 years. On the effective date of an attempted repeal of pension provisions (by adoption of § 187.1, effective on March 29, 1945, St.1945, p. 2954) he had served some 24 years. Plaintiff claims to be entitled when he retires to a pension of two-thirds of his pay based on the highest rank or position held by him one year prior to the date of his retirement, this under § 187, subdivision 2, of the Charter as enacted in 1925. He has now served some 37 or 38 years in the department. Defendant asserts that plaintiff is entitled to a pension of 56- $\frac{2}{3}$  per cent of said annual salary by virtue of the said amendment adopting § 187.1 in 1945. The action is one for declaratory relief. The trial judge having ruled with defendant, plaintiff appeals.

The pattern for pensions for members of the Police and Fire Departments starts with § 187 of the Charter which was enacted in 1925 (Stats.1925, p. 1333). Subdivision 2 then provided that any member of either department, after serving for 30 years in the aggregate in any capacity or rank whatever, should upon his own application or order of the Board of Police and Fire Commissioners, be retired and should thereafter be paid a lifetime yearly pension "equal to two-thirds of the annual salary attached to the rank or position held by him in such department one year prior to the date of his retirement." The said subdivision also provided that after 20 years of aggregate service such member should be retired upon his own application or upon order of the commission, and thereupon should be paid a "limited pension" for 20 years service of 50 per cent of the annual salary of the rank or position held by him one year prior to date of retirement, plus an additional  $1\frac{2}{3}$  per cent of such salary for each year over 20 years and less than 30 years in the aggregate served by the member before retirement.

[1] Subdivision 6 of the same § 187 provided for a Relief and Pension Fund. The commission was directed thereby to employ an actuary to report "the cost of maintaining, on a reservation basis, the pension system as hereinabove provided." The same subdivision further said: "[T]he city manager is hereby authorized to include in his annual budget an amount not exceeding two per cent (2%) of the general tax levy to be paid into said fund, based upon the estimate of cost as established by the actuary's survey, and the city council shall annually appropriate the amount of such estimate to the 'Relief and Pension Fund', and also the amount of any deficit which may remain therein in the event the appropriation of any previous year prove insufficient to pay all demands drawn against such fund, which amount, however, in any one year, shall not exceed two per cent (2%) of the general tax levy." This required no contribution from the employee. It seems clear that it provided a limited fund consisting of not more than two per cent of the general tax levy for the year, and, in case of a deficit in any one year, same was required to be made good in the following year, but the appropriation for any one year was specifically limited to two per cent of the general tax levy for that year. Conceivably a deficit in any one year would never be made up; this would be true if the annual cost were to amount to more than two per cent of the general levy in each successive year. We are told in England v. City of Long Beach, 27 Cal.2d 343, 163 P.2d 865: "The accruing payments, however, have not been made to petitioner because, according to respondents, payments due to pensioners have greatly exceeded the sums paid into the pension fund." 27 Cal.2d at page 344, 163 P.2d at page 866. Also: "The report of the actuary, appointed as directed by this subdivision, stated that the payment of two per cent of the general tax levy would be wholly inadequate and that an amount equal to at least five and one-half per cent would be required each year to place the pension system on a reservation basis. Thereafter, until 1931, the full two per cent authorized was not paid into the fund, but the city manager and the city council paid into the fund only a sufficient amount to pay such pensions as then became due." 27 Cal.2d at page 345, 163 P.2d at page 867. Respondents' brief herein says: "It is true that a fund was to be established on an actuarially sound basis, but the total contribution of the City was not to exceed two per cent (2%) of the general tax levy in any one year. It was subsequently ascertained that insufficient funds were provided to establish a fund on an actuarially sound basis. The result was that pension demands soon exceeded the funds provided." Appellant has not denied the last two sentences of this statement and the fact therefore is established sufficiently for present purposes. See, Royko v. Griffith Co., 147 Cal.App.2d 770, 774, 306 P.2d 36.

Section 187 was amended in 1931 (Stats. 1931, p. 2785). The provisions of subdivision 2 above mentioned were not materially altered and hence no change was made in the amount of pension to which plaintiff would become entitled. But subdivision 6 was amended to provide: "The city manager shall include in his annual budget an amount equal to two per cent of the estimated pay of the members of the police and fire departments, as herein-after provided, and the city council shall appropriate such amount to the 'Relief and Pension Fund.'

"There shall be paid into the said fund, the following monies, to-wit: (a) The City Auditor is hereby authorized, and shall deduct and pay into said fund semi-monthly, two per cent of the salary of each member of the police and fire departments; (b) The amount appropriated by the city council, as hereinbefore provided, to-wit: a sum equal to the amount paid into said fund from the salaries of the members of the police and fire departments; * * *

The England case, supra, says in 27 Cal. 2d at page 347, 163 P.2d at page 867: "The only portion of subdivision 6 which might have been held to constitute an express limitation—the reference in the 1925 amendment to an amount not exceeding two percent of the general tax levy—was eliminated by the 1931 amendment." The court specifically held, following the 1931 amendment, "the pension payments directed to be made by the charter constitute general obligations of the city and are not limited in amount to the sums assigned to the pension fund by subdivision 6." 27 Cal.2d at page 347, 163 P.2d at page 867. It was stipulated at the trial of the instant case that "pursuant to the said 1931 Amendment deductions of two percent of plaintiff's monthly salary were thereafter deducted for payment into a pension fund by said City and continued up to March 29, 1945, when the deductions terminated pursuant to the effective date of Section 187.1 of said Charter."

[2] We are unable to accept the view expressed in appellant's reply brief that the England case and City of Long Beach v. Lentz, 27 Cal.2d 890, 165 P.2d 677, hold that the pensions prescribed by § 187 of the Charter always had been general obligations of the city. While there is language in the England opinion which is consistent with that view, the actual ruling was not so broad. It dealt with a pension which had been granted in 1944, upon which none of the accruing payments had been made because of insolvency of the pension fund. This was long after the amendment of 1931 which eliminated the two per cent limitation upon the city's provision for the fund. The question was whether the instalments of this 1944 pension were general obligations of the city. This was answered in the affirmative, but it was not necessary for the court to decide, nor did it hold, that prior to the 1931 amendment pensions had been general obligations of the city. The reply brief insists that the contrary is true and invokes the supposed authority of City of Long Beach v. Lentz, supra, 27 Cal.2d 890, 165 P.2d 677, which was decided upon the authority of England, supra. Resort to the record is had in an effort to establish appellant's contention. It there appears that the case involved pension instalments which had accrued subsequent to January 1, 1944; some of the pensions in question had been granted prior to the effective date of the 1931 amendment, but the instalments remaining unpaid were those accruing after January 1, 1944, —an aggregate of $149,321.62 according to the amended complaint. The limitation of the fund to a two per cent tax levy having been eliminated in 1931, the question before the court in the Lentz case was only that of a general obligation as to the payments becoming due after January 1, 1944. The judgment did not enter into the refinements suggested by appellant herein, but said: "[I]t is the duty of the plaintiff to appropriate and make available sufficient funds to pay all pensions which are now due, or which may become payable in the future, under the provisions of Section 187 or 187.1 of said Charter." And the Supreme Court said: "The problem thus presented has been fully determined by our decision in the England case, where it was held that the pension payments directed to be made by subdivision 2 of section 187 of the charter, as amended in 1925 and 1931, * * * constitute general obligations of the city and are not limited in the manner urged by the city. The declaratory relief granted in the present case is entirely in accord with that decision." City of Long Beach v. Lentz, supra, 27 Cal.2d 890, 165 P.2d 677. It is our conclusion that neither Allen nor Lentz holds that the pension fund or obligation was not a limited one prior to the 1931 amendment; we further hold that it was in fact limited to two per cent of the general tax levy.

[3, 4] The solution of the ultimate question at bar requires a determination at this point of the validity of this 1931 amendment, which operated to convert the pension into a general obligation (not limited to any prescribed percentage of the general levy) and to impose upon the employee contributions to the fund equal to two per cent of his salary.

It had been established previous to Allen v. City of Long Beach, 45 Cal.2d 128, 287 P.2d 765 (Sept. 23, 1955)<sup>1</sup> that the employee's right to a future pension vests upon his entering the employment and rendering substantial services therein, vests in such a sense that it cannot be destroyed by charter amendment even before the time for retirement has arrived (Kern v. City of Long Beach, 29 Cal.2d 848, 853, 855, 179 P.2d 799, Apr. 1, 1947); but the vesting is subject to the qualification that the potential pension may be modified in reasonable manner and to a reasonable extent. The Kern case says: "Thus it appears, when the cases are considered together, that an employee may acquire a vested contractual right to a pension but that this right is not rigidly fixed by the specific terms of the legislation in effect during any particular period in which he serves. The statutory language is subject to the implied qualification that the governing body may make modifications and changes in the system. The employee does not have a right to any fixed or definite benefits, but only to a substantial or reasonable pension. There is no inconsistency therefore in holding that he has a vested right to a pension but that the amount, terms and conditions of the benefits may be altered" (29 Cal.2d at page 855, 179 P.2d at page 803); and, "[t]he ruling permitting modification of pensions is a necessary one since pension systems must be kept flexible to permit adjustments in accord with changing conditions and at the same time maintain the integrity of the system and carry out its beneficent policy." 29 Cal.2d at page 854, 179 P.2d at page 803. In the later case of Manning Allen, supra, the court became more specific as to the extent of permissible modifications in advance of retirement. Certain 1951 amendments to the Long Beach Charter were there under consideration, especially one attempting to substitute a fixed pension for a fluctuating one. At page 131, of 45 Cal.2d, at page 767 of 287 P.2d it is said: "An employee's vested contractual pension rights may be modified prior to retirement for the purpose of keeping a pension system flexible to permit adjustments in accord with changing conditions and at the same time maintain the integrity of the system. * * * Such modifications must be reasonable, and it is for the courts to determine upon the facts of each case what constitutes a permissible change. To be sustained as reasonable, alterations of employees' pension rights must bear some material relation to the theory of a pension system and its successful operation, and changes in a pension plan which result in disadvantage to employees should be accompanied by comparable new advantages." These criteria were reiterated in Abbott v. City of Los Angeles, 50 Cal.2d 438, 326 P.2d 484 (June 6, 1958). The court says in each of these opinions that each case must turn upon its own facts. It seems quite apparent that a revamping of an existing system so as to eliminate shortages in the available fund, by substituting a general obligation of the city for a mere two per cent of the general levy, has direct relation to the integrity of the system and keeping it flexible "to permit adjustments in accord with changing conditions." The imposition of a member's contribution of two per cent of his salary toward a solvent fund, in substitution for an insolvent one, is "a disadvantage" which is "manifestly accompanied by comparable new advantages." We therefore hold that the 1931 amendment to § 187 was valid as applied to plaintiff. The city was therefore entitled to collect from him the two per cent contributions which it did receive until March 29, 1945, the effective date of adoption of § 187.1 which attempted "to withdraw substantially all pension rights granted by section 187 of its charter to employees of the police and fire departments." Allen v. City of Long Beach, supra, 45 Cal.2d 128, 130, 287 P.2d 765, 766, but we are told by respondents' brief, with no denial from appellant, that "[b]y 1945, the 'Relief and Pension Fund' was exhausted."

The text of that 1945 amendment is as follows: "Sections 187 and 188 of this Charter are hereby repealed; provided, however, that any member of the Fire or Police Department who shall have served in such department for twenty (20) years or more on the effective date of this amendment shall be entitled to retire at any time within five (5) years from said effective date as provided by subdivision (2) of said Section 187, and beginning with the date of his retirement, shall be paid a pension of such percentage of his salary as he would have been entitled to receive had he been retired on the effective date of this amendment. \* \* \*" This language preserves to members who had served 20 years or more the same pension which was provided for 20-year employees in subdivision 2 of the repealed § 187, a fluctuating one equal to 50 per cent of the salary plus  $1\frac{2}{3}$  per cent thereof for each year of service over 20 and less than 30; but its application is confined to those who had attained the 20-year status upon the effective date of the amendment and who should elect to retire within 5 years from said date, the amount to be fixed at the same percentage as if the employee had retired on the effective date of the amendment.

[5] This § 187.1 was specifically held valid as to the complaining party in each of three decisions of the district court of appeal, namely, Palaske v. City of Long Beach, 93 Cal.App.2d 120, 208 P.2d 764, July, 1949; Albion Allen v. City of Long Beach, supra, 101 Cal.App.2d 15, 224 P.2d 792; Dec., 1950; and Allstot v. City of Long Beach, 104 Cal.App.2d 441, 231 P.2d 498, May, 1951. The Supreme Court denied a hearing in each instance.

These decisions are not concerned with statutory changes substituting a pension of fixed amount in place of a fluctuating one, as was the case in Allen v. City of Long Beach, supra, 45 Cal.2d 128, 287 P.2d 765; Abbott v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 50 Cal.2d 438, 326 P.2d 484; Cochran v. City of Long Beach, 139 Cal.App.2d 282, 293 P.2d 839; Chapin v. City Commission, 149 Cal.App.2d 40, 307 P.2d 657; Glaeser v. City of Berkeley, 148 Cal.App.2d 614, 307 P.2d 61; they pass upon the power to withdraw, before right to retirement has accrued, the privilege of working beyond the permissible retirement age and thereby acquiring a larger pension than would be received as the result of retiring immediately upon reaching the specified permissible age. Relying primarily upon the unanimous Kern decision, supra, the court in each of those cases held that such a change is a lawful one relating to "the amount, terms and conditions of the benefits" to accrue in the future.

In Palaske, supra, petitioner, after being credited with time spent in the armed services, had 22 years of service when § 187.1 became effective. The court held that the limitation upon the amount of pension which he could obtain was valid, saying in part: "Applying the principles set forth in Kern v. City of Long Beach, supra, it appears that it was within the power of the city to modify its pension plan to provide that on and after the effective date of the amendment an employee who was entitled to retire might do so or not, as he saw fit, but that if he chose to continue as an employee he could not thereby earn any additional pension above that to which he was entitled on the effective date of the amendment. As stated by the Supreme Court, the employee has a vested right only to a substantial or reasonable pension. His contractual right to such a pension has not been impaired by legislation which, operating prospectively, merely withdraws his right or option to earn a bonus by continuing in employment after he has become eligible for retirement." 93 Cal.App.2d at page 132, 208 P.2d at page 771. Also: "We are in accord with appellants' contention that since the city had the power to modify the pension plan although it could not repeal it altogether, that section 187.1 should be construed as effective to limit respondent's pension right to 50% of his salary. While the attempted repeal of all rights was void, the provision limiting pension rights is separable therefrom. It appears from the amendment that the electors of the city intended to reduce the liability for pensions created under section 187 to the extent of their power constitutionally to do so, and intended to preserve pension rights only to those who were eligible for retirement on the effective date. Although they could not deprive respondent and others similarly situated of all pension rights, they had the power to modify such rights, and it would seem to follow, therefore, that respondent is entitled only to those rights accorded by the amendment—that is, a limited pension. Those who were eligible for retirement on the effective date were entitled to the pension they had earned on the effective date and no more, while those who reached the 20-year mark subsequent to the effective date became eligible for retirement on a 50% pension and no more." 93 Cal.App.2d at page 133, 208 P.2d at page 771.

Albion Allen v. City of Long Beach, supra, 101 Cal.App.2d 15, 20, 224 P.2d 792, 794; "After due consideration of the arguments advanced by respondents, we adhere to the conclusion reached in the Palaske case, wherein this court held that the proviso in the repealing amendment saving pension rights to those who had completed the minimum term of service was separable from the invalid portion of the amendment which attempted to repeal all pension rights as to others; that such proviso constituted a reasonable modification under the rule laid down in the Kern case, and operated to limit the pension rights of those who had not served the minimum term to a pension of fifty per cent."

Allstot v. City of Long Beach, supra, 104 Cal.App.2d 441, 443, 231 P.2d 498, 500: "In the Allen case the District Court of Appeal was asked to reverse its holding in the Palaske case and declined to do so, adopting as a part of its opinion the following from the former decision (101 Cal.App.2d at page 28, 224 P.2d [792] at page 795): 'Those who were eligible for retirement on the effective date were entitled to the pension they had earned on the effective date and no more, while those who reached the 20-year mark subsequent to the effective date became eligible for retirement on a 50% pension and no more.' Plaintiffs now ask us to disregard the quoted holding in the Kern case and also to disapprove of the holdings in the Palaske and Allen cases to the same effect. It is said that the point did not require decision in the Kern case and received practically no consideration by the court in the Allen case. We are not sympathetic to the criticism of either decision." At page 444 of 104 Cal.App.2d, at page 501 of 231 P.2d: "Not only are we well satisfied that the former decisions reflect the mature judgment of the court on the points decided, but after giving the problems independent consideration we are fully in accord with the reasoning and the conclusions of the District Court of Appeal in both the Palaske and Allen cases."

In the Allstot case, supra, Mr. Presiding Justice Shinn also said, 104 Cal.App.2d at page 445, 231 P.2d at page 501, referring to the Albion Allen case, supra: "Moreover, we may not overlook the fact that the same argument was advanced in the petition for hearing in the Allen case and that a hearing was denied. So far as we are concerned, the denial of a hearing in a case which decides questions of such widespread interest and importance means that they were fully considered by the Supreme Court and were not deemed to have been decided incorrectly." Again the Supreme Court unanimously denied a hearing. This is "most persuasive" (People v. Rowland, 19 Cal.App.2d 540, 542, 65 P.2d 1333).

In Housing Authority of City of Los Angeles v. Peters, 120 Cal.App.2d 615, 616, 261 P.2d 561, it is said: "Therefore we are bound by the foregoing decisions, the correct rule being that when the precise question of law has been decided by a District Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court has denied a hearing, such decision will be followed as settling the law in the absence of a later decision of the Supreme Court overruling or modifying the prior case. [Citations.]"

With respect to the Manning Allen case, supra, the trial judge at bar found: "[T]hat it is true that the Supreme Court established a new criterion for determining the reasonableness of permissive changes in pension systems where the changes occur prior to the time the employee becomes eligible for retirement, but did not alter the law with respect to a change in pension systems if the change altered the benefit to be earned subsequent to the employee being eligible for a retirement pension." Also: "The court further finds that the Supreme Court in said case held that the decisions culminating in Allstot v. City of Long Beach, 104 Cal.App.2d 441, 231 P.2d 498, which upheld a Charter Amendment depriving employees of the opportunity to earn an increase in their pensions by remaining in service after reaching retirement age, were distinguishable from the Allen case." This is a reference to the following passage of the Manning Allen case, supra: "Cases relied on by the city which were decided prior to Kern v. City of Long Beach, 29 Cal.2d 848, 179 P.2d 799, are not controlling here, and the series of decisions culminating in Allstot v. City of Long Beach, 104 Cal.App.2d 441, 231 P.2d 498, which upheld a charter amendment depriving employees of the opportunity to earn an increase in their pensions by remaining in service after reaching retirement age, are distinguishable from the present case." Allen v. City of Long Beach, supra, 45 Cal.2d 128, 133, 287 P.2d 765, 768. Certainly the Palaske, Albion Allen and Allstot cases, supra, were not overruled by the Manning Allen decision. Nor did the later Abbott case, supra, 50 Cal.2d 438, 326 P.2d 484, do so. The claim that the court in the Abbott case "expressly disapproved 'any implications in the former' decisions of the District Courts of Appeal which were inconsistent with the 'commensurate advantage' criteria * * *" is misplaced. The quoted phrase "any implications in the former" is found in this context in Abbott, 50 Cal.2d at page 453, 326 P.2d at page 492. "Carey v. Retirement Board (1955), 131 Cal.App.2d 739, 281 P.2d 25, is relied upon by defendants. * * * That case was decided before the Allen case and any implications in the former which are inconsistent with our decision in the latter must be deemed disapproved." The Palaske, Albion Allen and Allstot rulings stand as persuasive if not controlling authority.

There is no merit in the contention that the city is estopped to make any changes in the pension system after one has entered its service in reliance thereon. It is thus expressed in appellant's brief: "Since the obvious purpose of the offer contained in the first sentence of Section 187, subdivision 2, was to induce the employee to render an aggregate period of service of at least 30 years, the City would be estopped from withdrawing or substantially altering its offer after the acceptance thereof by partial performance on the part of the employee, under well-settled principles of contract law." The fact is that plaintiff entered the police department in 1921 and the city's pension plan was first put into effect in 1925 (see England, supra, 27 Cal.2d at pages 344-345, 163 P.2d 865). So far as plaintiff is individually concerned it was merely a method of increase in salary through adding deferred payments. There is no basis for estoppel so far as he is concerned. Kern v. City of Long Beach, supra, 29 Cal.2d 848, 851-853, 179 P.2d 799. It is the effect upon the individual employee that controls in this field of amendments to a pension system. Abbott v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 50 Cal.2d 438, 326 P.2d 484.

It seems to us that the "Rule of Property Theory" discussed in Abbott, supra, 50 Cal.2d at page 455, 326 P.2d at page 494 et seq. (but there held inapplicable) is pertinent here. If § 187.1 was not valid with respect to plaintiff the city had a lawful right to continue to deduct two per cent of his salary from March 29, 1945, to the present date. (See quotation from Palaske, supra, as to severability.) The same is true of others standing in the same position as plaintiff. After the city's reliance upon the Palaske line of cases, beginning in July, 1949, it would seem not sound to now reverse those decisions with a retroactive effect, for rights and duties have accrued upon the basis of decisions which have represented the law since 1949; if they are to be reversed the effect of that action doubtless will be limited to future events. That is what was done with reference to the Cahan rule ([People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905, 50 A.L.R.2d 513] People v. Kitchens, 46 Cal.2d 260, 262, 294 P.2d 17). County of Los Angeles v. Faus, 48 Cal.2d 672, 680, 312 P.2d 680, 685, discusses the matter thus: "It is the general rule that a decision of a court of supreme jurisdiction overruling a former decision is retrospective in its operation and that the effect is not that the former decision was bad law but that it never was the law.

"A well-recognized exception to this general rule is that, where a constitutional provision or statute has received a given construction by a court of last resort and contracts have been made or property rights acquired under and in accordance with its decision, such contracts will not be invalidated nor will vested rights acquired under the decision be impaired by a change of construction adopted in a subsequent decision. Under those circumstances it has been the rule to give prospective, and not retrospective, effect to the later decision. (7 R.C.L.(1915), Courts, § 36, p. 1010.)"

We consider the Palaske, Albion Allen and Allstot cases not to be in conflict with Manning Allen or Abbott, and we accept them as good law.

The judgment is affirmed.

Action for divorce. From an order of the Superior Court, Riverside County, *Hilton H. MUSSELL, Justice.

The complaint in this action for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty was filed in Riverside County on December 6, 1956, and the affidavit of service of summons shows that personal service thereof was made on the defendant in the County of Los Angeles on December 18, 1956. Defendant failed to appear in said action and his default was entered on January 21, 1957. On January 30, 1957, the cause was heard by the court and an interlocutory judgment entered granting plaintiff a divorce and the property described in the complaint as the family home and rental property belonging to the parties and located at 529 West Arenas Road in Palm Springs was declared to be community property and was awarded and assigned to plaintiff as her sole and separate property. No appeal was taken from this judgment. On March 19, 1957, the defendant filed a motion in said action to set aside the default and default judgment. In his affidavit in support of the motion defendant states that "neither the summons nor the complaint in said action nor any order to show cause, nor any copies thereof, were served personally upon affiant or received by him at any time or in any manner, either through the mail or otherwise; that there has been no order for service of summons by publication upon the said defendant".

On March 26, 1957, defendant filed a motion to quash the service of summons in said action on the same grounds stated in his previous motion to set aside his default. In opposition to these motions plaintiff filed the affidavit of Louis Lane, who signed the affidavit of service endorsed on the summons. In additional affidavits Lane stated that he received the original summons and a copy of the summons and complaint on or about December 15, 1956, with instructions to serve the said papers on the defendant, who could be located as residing at the Alexandria Hotel in Los Angeles; that he checked with the room clerk at said hotel and was informed that the defendant occupied room 843 at said hotel; that he called this room and a man's voice answered the telephone and stated that his name was Herman Rackov; that the party to whom he talked refused to make an appointment; that on another occasion he called the same room number and talked to the same man's voice but was again unable to make an appointment; that on the evening of December 18, 1956, he again went to the hotel and the same voice answered his telephone call; that he then went to said room 843 in said hotel and rapped on the door "and when the voice answered, I asked 'Mr. Rackov' to which the voice answered 'Yes'. I stated that I had a message for him, the door opened slightly and I dropped a copy of the summons and complaint issued out of the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Riverside, No. Indio No. 1217, through the opening of the door and through the room and stated in substance, these are copies of a complaint and summons for you to appear in court, be sure and read them. The door closed and I left. I was not able to see the person who was inside the room, but the voice was that of a man and was the same voice that I had heard in my prior conversations with the person occupying the said room No. 843."

The affidavits of one of the attorneys for plaintiff and of the plaintiff, filed in opposition to the motion, indicated that the plaintiff and defendant met in the attorney's office on December 27, 1956, and a lengthy conference was held at which defendant did not claim that he was not served with the summons in said action. Plaintiff, in her affidavit in opposition to the said motions, states that during the first week of December, 1956, she ascertained that the defendant was living at the Alexandria Hotel in Los Angeles; that on December 18, 1956, said defendant ordered his mail forwarded to him at said hotel; that on December 26, at a conference in which the matter of a divorce was discussed, nothing was said by either party relative to the service of summons.

On April 17, 1957, the court denied defendant's motion to quash the service of summons and on May 15, 1957, denied defendant's motion to set aside the default judgment. On May 31, 1957, the defendant filed notice of motion for an order of court setting aside the granting and awarding of the real property owned by the parties to the plaintiff on the ground that the property involved was held by the parties in joint tenancy and was not community property. On June 11, 1957, the trial court denied this motion to set aside the default judgment. Defendant appeals from the orders of May 15, 1957 and June 11, 1957.

[1] Defendant states in his opening brief that his appeal is prosecuted pursuant to the provisions of sections 963 and 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is a settled principle of law that motions for relief from default under the remedial provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure are addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and the exercise of that discretion, in the absence of a clear showing of abuse, will not be interfered with by an appellate tribunal. Hendrix v. Hendrix, 130 Cal.App.2d 379, 382, 279 P.2d 58; Colvin v. Sibley, 117 Cal.App.2d 144, 146, 255 P.2d 16.

In Kapple v. Kapple, 140 Cal.App.2d 787, 788, 295 P.2d 932, on appeal from an order denying a motion to vacate a default and an interlocutory decree, the court said:

"It is of course presumed that the trial court resolved any conflicts in favor of the prevailing party, Warren v. Warren, 120 Cal.App.2d 396, 400, 261 P.2d 309; Baratti v. Baratti, 109 Cal. App.2d 917, 922, 242 P.2d 22, and the order will not be set aside in the face of such conflict and the ruling thereon. Warren v. Warren, supra; Elms v. Elms, 72 Cal.App.2d 508, 513, 164 P. 2d 936."

In Smith v. Jones, 174 Cal. 513, 515-516, 163 P. 890, 891, the court, in discussing section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure in a default case, said:

"That section provides for relief upon motion when the judgment is taken against a party through 'mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect.' Not having been served with process, and hence having no knowledge that he was required to appear, the failure of respondent to do so cannot be said to arise from any mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or neglect on his part. If respondent, as defendant in the action, had not been served with summons, he had an absolute right on motion, if timely made, to have the judgment set aside independent of section 473, or any other statute, as violative of the fundamental principle that one may not be deprived of his property without due process of law. The only condition to his right to invoke this aid of the court by a motion in the action itself is that his motion be made within a reasonable time."

In Suttman v. Superior Court, 174 Cal. 243, 244, 162 P. 1032, it is said that "In view of our statutory provisions, the interlocutory judgment provided for by section 131, Civil Code, is, when regularly entered, subject to be modified or vacated only in some way provided by law for the modification or vacating of final judgments. The character of such an interlocutory judgment in this regard is fully shown by what is said in Claudius v. Melvin, 146 Cal. 257, 79 P. 897. It is final except against such attack as is expressly authorized by statute. It is subject to be vacated on appeal, or on motion for new trial, or by proceedings under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure (Claudius v. Melvin, supra, [146 Cal. 257, 79 P. 897]), or in any other way that may be expressly authorized for the review of final judgments."

[2] In the instant case the question of whether personal service of the summons and complaint was made on the defendant as shown by the return attached to the summons was one of fact for the trial court. The matter was heard on conflicting affidavits and since there is substantial evidence to support the trial court's refusal to set aside the default judgment, no clear abuse of discretion was shown. The trial court impliedly found that the defendant was personally served with process and that finding is supported by the record.

[3] It is alleged in the complaint that "there is community property belonging to the parties hereto consisting of the multiple unit apartments known as 'Sulas Lodge', located at 529 West Arenas Road, Palm Springs, California, together with the furniture and furnishings therein contained, and one (1) 1954 Skyliner Ford automobile. That the said community property stands in the names of both parties hereto." It therefore follows that by his default the defendant admitted all the allegations of the complaint and is estopped from thereafter challenging them. Christiana v. Rose, 100 Cal. App.2d 46, 50, 222 P.2d 891.

The motion of the defendant made on May 31, 1957, was an attack on the sufficiency of the evidence to support the interlocutory decree and was properly denied.

The orders appealed from are affirmed.

Cr. 1381.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,

Oct. 30, 1958.

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court of San Diego County, Clarence Harden, J., for aiding and abetting in commission of a robbery (first degree), robbery (second degree), burglary (second degree), conspiracy to commit robbery and conspiracy to commit burglary, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, P. J., held that convictions were sustained by evidence.

T. T. Crittenden, San Diego, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Carl Boronkay, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Presiding Justice.

Appellant William Otis Conklin was charged in count one of an amended information and was convicted by a jury of aiding and abetting one Womack and one Shields in the commission of a robbery (first degree) on November 24, 1957; in count two of robbery (second degree) on November 22; in count three with burglary (second degree) on November 23rd; in count four, of conspiracy to commit robbery, on November 24th; in count five, of conspiracy to commit robbery on November 22nd; and in count six, of conspiracy to commit burglary on November 23rd. Several separate and distinct overt acts are alleged under the conspiracy counts. Appellant was sentenced to State's prison, sentences to run consecutively on counts one and two, and the remaining counts to run concurrently with counts one and two.

Counsel for appellant sets forth in his brief an elongated and all-inclusive statement of the many reasons why he claims the judgment should be reversed. As we construe it, he claims that appellant's co-defendants, Shields and Womack, pleaded guilty to the robberies under some alleged "deal" with the district attorney; that in truth and in fact these co-defendants "used" appellant to assist them in the robberies and burglaries alleged; that there was no evidence showing appellant received any of the loot or benefit from the robberies; that one of the co-defendants and principal witness at the trial had "vengeance against him" and "framed" this appellant by implicating him in these alleged offenses; that appellant's acts in connection with these crimes were only incidental to and were innocent acts; that there was no sufficient corroboration of the testimony of the two named conspirators; that these alleged conspirators had been on a "robbery spree" for over six weeks and appellant was but a tool in their hands; that although he furnished transportation to them it was the same as any public utility, and that the evidence was not sufficient to support the verdicts on any of the counts alleged. No authorities are cited and no reference to the record is made supporting these claims. We have read the entire transcript. The testimony of the two co-conspirators, if believed by the jury, fully supports the charges made. The only possible point indicating any merit would involve the question of corroboration of their testimony.

Generally speaking, it was on November 22nd that appellant Conklin, Womack and Shields were together at Imperial Beach and had a conversation relating to robbery. They discussed robbing a cab driver in San Ysidro. Shields and Womack were to enter a cab and appellant was to follow it in his car. They planned that Shields would hit the cab driver and Womack would take his money; that the loot would be divided three ways; that Shields and Womack entered the cab of one Kilcrease, and directed him to drive to a certain location. Appellant was parked in his automobile at the San Ysidro Hotel awaiting a pre-arranged signal to follow as the cab went by. One of the cab passengers acted as if he were sick and drunk, so the driver stopped and opened the door. Womack then grabbed the driver and after a scuffle the driver slumped down on the seat. His money and his watch were taken. The appellant did not appear but met Shields and Womack the following day. They told appellant they had gotten some money but they were not going to share it with him because he did not fulfill his part of the plan. However, on the night of November 23rd the appellant Conklin, Shields and Womack were riding together in the Logan Heights area in appellant's car. They had a conversation about burglarizing a TV store. Appellant took them to the store and gave them a key to it. Shields and Womack were to burglarize it while the appellant waited for them. They entered the store and took some "Hi-Fi" equipment. As they came out they saw the spotlight of a patrol car, dropped the articles taken, and ran down an alley. Appellant did not appear immediately, but in a little while he drove through the same alley. Shields and Womack got in appellant's car and he told them there were patrolmen all around the place.

On November 24th Shields, Womack and the appellant again met at a drive-in in the Pacific Beach area and discussed robbing a cab driver. They predetermined an address where Shields and Womack were to be driven by the cab driver. They agreed that appellant would then call a cab and follow it in Shields' car, after Shields and Womack entered the cab, in order to pick them up after they robbed the driver; and that if connections were not made they were to meet at a certain bar not far from the address agreed upon. Shields picked out an address and the three went there to view the area. They proceeded to the Aztec Bar and appellant called a cab from a near-by public booth. A cab arrived and Shields and Womack entered it, giving the driver the address agreed upon. When they arrived there they struck the driver, Van Stelle, with a flashlight and took his billfold, money, wrist watch and gloves. The appellant did not appear at the scene of the robbery at this time, so Shields and Womack proceeded to the bar where they had agreed to meet following the commission of the crime. A short time later the appellant arrived there. When Shields and Womack left the cab the driver called the cab company from a radio in the vehicle. In about a minute a police car arrived at the scene as well as a 1954 Chevrolet automobile driven by the appellant. The police officers brought the appellant from his car to the cab driver who failed to identify him as one of the assailants and he was released.

An officer who answered the robbery call was at the scene of the crime when appellant was observed backing west on Thomas Street in the 1954 Chevrolet. He talked to him and then appellant left. The officer remained there and was talking to the victim when again he noticed appellant driving up in a 1957 Chevrolet. Later appellant arrived at the bar where he and his companions had arranged to meet, driving his own automobile, a 1957 Chevrolet, and told Shields and Womack they had better leave because there were police in the area. They drove towards La Jolla and appellant, upon seeing a patrol car, told Shields and Womack to say they were on Mount Soledad transmitting on a ham radio set. Officers then stopped appellant's car.

At about midnight on November 24, 1957, an officer stopped a 1957 Chevrolet on La Jolla Boulevard. Appellant got out of the car and spoke to the officer and said he was going to Ocean Beach and had been on Mount Soledad with his "ham" radio. Shields and Womack were seated in appellant's automobile. On his way to the station the officer observed that the 1957 Chevrolet in which he had seen the appellant earlier that evening had been stopped by another police officer, and he recognized the driver as the appellant. He observed that two other men, Shields and Womack, were also in the car. Another officer was also present when appellant was stopped and out of the presence of Shields and Womack appellant told him that there were some things he could tell him. Appellant then stated, in the presence of another officer, that Womack and Shields had committed the robbery in Pacific Beach; that they were at the Aztec Bar and they, Womack and Shields, had planned the robbery, planned to call the cab, had a pre-arranged place, and they agreed to rob the cab driver at that place. He stated that he had been in the area of Thomas Street looking for Womack and Shields. He then asked if the officer had heard of the cab driver who was robbed in San Ysidro and then related that Womack and Shields had committed that robbery and told him about it the following day. At the police station appellant related the details of the robbery of Van Stelle at Pacific Beach. When asked about the things taken in the robbery he stated that the gloves were left on a barrel near a service station or used-car lot near the bar where he had picked up Womack and Shields. An officer recovered the wrist watch of Van Stelle from a grey jacket lying on the rear seat of appellant's automobile.

About December 4th the officer had a conversation with appellant as he was brought to court for arraignment on the charge of burglary. Appellant stated to him that he had been employed by Dependable TV & Appliance Company; that at one time he was sent to have a duplicate key made, and he had two duplicate keys made and kept one for himself; that on the night of the burglary he, Shields and Womack were driving by this store and he mentioned that he had a key to it and Shields and Womack then stated they would like to burglarize it; that he gave them the key, dropped them off, and later on he picked them up.

Appellant, in defense, testified generally that on November 22nd he went to the Drive-In at Imperial Beach with Shields and Womack and there met their friends; that they later went to a party, and then drove away; that they stopped at San Ysidro for a short time and then drove on to the border; that he remained in his automobile while Shields and Womack left the car and said they would come back in 10 or 15 minutes; that he waited that time but his companions failed to return and he went home; that on November 23rd he, Shields and Womack were together at the Drive-In until late in the evening; that they drove through Logan Heights, passing the Dependable TV store; that he mentioned he used to work there and remembered he still had a key to the place; that when he mentioned it his companions said they wanted to enter the store; that he said "If you're stupid enough to go in you are on your own"; that he gave them the key, let them out of the car, and drove around the corner; that he waited there quite a while and then drove through an alley observing a police car there, and proceeded downtown; that he returned to the alley in 10 or 15 minutes, heard his companions calling to him, and picked them up. He then testified that on November 24th he again went to the Drive-In and met Shields and Womack, and he and Womack planned to meet Shields later in Pacific Beach; that he and Womack drove to Mount Soledad and did some "hamming" there and then went to the Drive-In where they again met Shields; that they entered Shields' car and drove to the Aztec Bar; that Shields and Womack went into the bar and appellant drove around in Shields' car; and that he started towards a girlfriend's house when he had trouble with the car and had to back around the corner; that there he saw a police car and a cab; that he was then taken to the cab driver and was permitted to leave; and that he drove away thinking of why he was stopped.

It appears that on testing the radio in the car it was tuned in for the police calls. A mere recitation of the testimony produced sufficiently establishes the commission of the crime, and there is sufficient corroborating evidence to satisfy the requirements of section 1111 of the Penal Code. People v. Henderson, 34 Cal.2d 340, 343, 209 P.2d 785; People v. Trujillo, 32 Cal.2d 105, 110, 194 P.2d 681; People v. McLean, 84 Cal. 480, 481, 24 P. 32; People v. Negra, 208 Cal. 64, 69, 280 P. 354.

An examination of the record on appeal illustrates that the appellant received a fair trial; that there is sufficient evidence to support the judgment of conviction; and there is additional evidence, independent of the claimed co-conspirators, enabling the jury to accept as true the accomplices' testimony.

Judgment affirmed.

v.

ATCHISON, TOPEKA &amp; SANTA FE RAILWAY CO., a corporation, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 22674.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Oct. 20, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 5, 1958.

Hearing Denied Dec. 17, 1958.

Action against railroad by passenger for injuries resulting from derailment of train. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, David Coleman, J., rendered judgment for railroad, and passenger appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Patrosso, J. pro tem., held that final judgments in actions by other passengers against railroad for personal injuries resulting from same accident were not res judicata upon issue of railroad's negligence and records of previous actions were properly excluded in subsequent action.

Affirmed.

Vallée, J., dissented.

1. Judgment ⇨665

Final judgments in actions by passengers against railroad for personal injuries resulting from derailment of train were not res judicata upon issue of railroad's negligence in subsequent action instituted by another passenger against railroad for injuries sustained in same accident and records of previous actions were properly excluded in subsequent action.

2. Evidence ⇨219(3)

Fact that railroad passenger effected settlement of passenger's claim for injuries resulting from derailment of train during trial of action against railroad did not constitute an admission in subsequent action instituted by another passenger for injuries resulting from same accident that accident was caused by railroad's negligence.

Cal.Rep. 329-330 P.2d—73

3. Negligence ⇨121(2)

Doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not operate to place upon defendant the burden of overcoming inference of negligence arising thereunder by a preponderance of evidence.

4. Carriers ⇨316(5), 318(6)

Doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was applicable to action by passenger who was injured in train derailment against railroad but it was not necessary for railroad to overcome by preponderance of evidence the inference of negligence arising from application of doctrine.

5. Negligence ⇨134(1, 11)

Plaintiff's burden of proving negligence and proximate cause by preponderance of evidence is not changed by inference arising from application of doctrine of res ipsa loquitur and, in order to hold defendant liable, inference of negligence and proximate cause, either alone or with such other evidence, if any, as favors it, must have greater weight and more convincing force in mind of jury than opposing explanation offered by defendant and any evidence supporting it.

6. Carriers ⇨280(1)

"Negligence" as applied to common carrier with respect to passengers means any breach of duty towards passenger.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Negligence".

7. Carriers ⇨318(6), 320(22)

In action against railroad by passenger for injuries resulting from derailment of train, questions whether accident occurred as result of breaking of equalizer, a steel bar resting on axle and journal box, and whether defect that may have existed in equalizer was not discoverable despite careful inspection thereof immediately prior to time that accident occurred were for jury and jury was warranted in determining that inference of negligence arising from application of doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was met or at least balanced.

8. Carriers ⇨234

In action against railroad by passenger who boarded train in Illinois for injuries sustained when train was derailed in Illinois, law governing degree of care required and liability of railroad for its negligence was law of Illinois.

9. Evidence ⇨35, 43(4), 80(1)

California courts take judicial notice of laws of sister states as well as interpretation thereof by highest courts of appellate jurisdiction of such states and law of sister state, in absence of proof to the contrary, is not presumed to be the same as law of California. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1875, subd. 3.

10. Carriers ⇨280(1)

Under Illinois law, railroad was not insurer of safety of passenger or of her transportation free from injury but care required was highest degree that reasonably could have been exercised consistently with mode of transportation used and practical operation of railroad's business as a carrier and such requirement would be measured in light of best precautions which, at time of accident, were in common, practical use in same business and proved to be efficacious.

11. Appeal and Error ⇨1048(6)Witnesses ⇨282½

In action against railroad by passenger for injuries sustained as result of derailment of train, wherein witness testified on direct examination that he saw train at point 28 miles from scene of accident and observed nothing defective in its appearance, sustaining of objection to question put to witness on cross-examination as to whether he could observe if equalizer, a steel bar resting on axle and journal box, on train going 80 miles an hour was defective by simply standing on platform and watching train go by was not improper, and, even if erroneous, was not prejudicial.

12. Trial ⇨252(10)

In action against railroad by passenger for injuries resulting from derailment of train, wherein railroad produced evidence through its employees that prior to accident they carefully inspected train and found nothing defective, refusal of instruction that where there is evidence to effect that one did look, but did not see that which was in plain sight it follows that either some part of evidence is untrue or that person was negligently inattentive was not improper in absence of evidence that there was any defect which was clearly visible.

Robertson, Harney, Drummond & Dorsey, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Robert W. Walker and Richard K. Knowlton, Los Angeles, for respondent.

PATROSSO, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff instituted this action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained as a result of the derailment of defendant's train upon which she was riding as a passenger. The accident occurred on August 22, 1954, near the town of Lomax in the State of Illinois, some 219 miles west of the city of Chicago, where plaintiff had boarded the train for a journey to Los Angeles. Trial was had before a jury which returned a verdict in favor of the defendant and plaintiff appeals from the judgment entered thereon.

At the opening of the trial, plaintiff sought to secure a ruling by the trial court restricting the trial to the issue of damages. In support of this motion appellant offered in evidence the files of two previous actions instituted in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County by other passengers who sustained injuries in the same accident, and in each of which actions judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs therein and against the defendant, and which judgments had become final. Objections to appellant's motion and the offer in evidence of the record of the prior proceedings, were sustained by the trial court and these rulings are the principal ground of appellant's claim of error upon this appeal.

[1] Appellant contends that the judgments in the two prior actions previously mentioned, are res judicata upon the issue of defendant's negligence within the doctrine announced in Bernhard v. Bank of America, 1942, 19 Cal.2d 807, 122 P.2d 892, and that the trial court erred in refusing to permit proof of such prior judgments. This identical contention was advanced by the plaintiff in Nevarov v. Caldwell, 161 Cal.App.2d 762, 327 P.2d 111 (hearing by Supreme Court denied), and after careful consideration was decided adversely to the appellant by Division Two of this court, in an opinion authored by Mr. Justice Ashburn. As we are in accord with both the conclusion there reached and the reasons assigned in support thereof, we see no need to elaborate thereon. The rulings here complained of were therefore proper.

Appellant also complains that she was precluded from proving that in one of the prior cases above adverted to (Meredith v. The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company) the defendant herein stipulated to judgment in favor of the plaintiff and in the other (Longworth v. The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company), defendant admitted liability. The argument is that the proffered proof would have established an admission by the defendant that the derailment was occasioned by defendant's negligence. With respect to the Longworth case, the file thereof which was offered in evidence failed to disclose that defendant admitted liability, and counsel for the defendant herein denied that any such admission had been made. In response, counsel for the appellant stated that he had been informed by Mr. Murphy, counsel for the plaintiff in the Longworth case, that such an admission had been made and indicated that he intended to call Mr. Murphy as a witness to establish this fact. Counsel for the respondent thereupon stated that appellant's attorney was of course at liberty to do so, but Mr. Murphy was not called as a witness and no further proof was offered in this connection. With reference to the Meredith case, however, the judgment entered therein discloses that after the case had been on trial for 11 successive court days on both the issues of liability and damages, "defendant The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company denying liability," and while the jury was deliberating upon the verdict the parties entered into a stipulation for a settlement of the cause and for entry of judgment in favor of the plaintiff, Mrs. Meredith, and against the defendant in the sum of $110,000 subject to the approval of the Probate Court<sup>1</sup> and in favor of the plaintiff, Mr. Meredith, in the sum of $15,000.

[2] Thus the question presented is whether the fact that the defendant in an action by a third party who was also injured in the same accident as that which constituted the basis of the plaintiff's claim made a settlement thereof, may be given in evidence as constituting an admission that the accident in question was caused by the defendant's negligence. The answer to this question is to be found in Brown v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 1947, 79 Cal.App.2d 613, 180 P.2d 424, in which a hearing by the Supreme Court was denied. There plaintiff was permitted, over objection, to introduce evidence to the effect that the defendant railway company had made a settlement with another party who had sustained damage as a result of the same accident in which plaintiff was injured, upon the theory that this constituted an admission against interest. In holding the trial court's ruling to be error and in reversing a judgment for plaintiff, the court after an elaborate review of the authorities said (79 Cal.App.2d at page 615, 180 P.2d at page 425):

"While it is the policy of the law to discourage litigation and to encourage compromise of doubtful rights and controversies (Hamilton v. Oakland School Dist., 219 Cal. 322, 329, 26 P.2d 296), appellee contends in effect that proof of a settlement of the controversy made by

1. Approval of the Probate Court was required due to the fact that Mrs. Meredith appeared in the action by a guardian ad litem.

the defendant in an action with a third party who was injured in the same accident as that which constitutes the basis of plaintiff's claim is not inhibited by section 2078, Code of Civil Procedure. That statute declares that 'an offer of compromise is not an admission that anything is due.' While it refers to offers only, yet the doctrine that a plaintiff may prove that the defendant has satisfied the demands of a third party who was a victim of the same tort as that alleged by plaintiff is so tenuous and rests upon such precarious support that it should not be extended without legislative enactment. The general rule is to reject such evidence as irrelevant and incompetent.

"Evidence of a compromise settlement by the defendant of a claim which originated in the very tort alleged by the plaintiff is inherently harmful in the trial of an action for personal injuries. It invades the province of reason in the exercise of its function to ascertain the truth as to whether the alleged tortfeasor has committed actionable negligence or has failed to perform an act which in the exercise of reasonable care he should have performed, to the detriment of the claimant. Where the culpability of a defendant in an action based upon his alleged negligence is in issue it should be the aim of the court to endeavor to derive a determination of factual liability by competent proof of the circumstances and occurrences constituting the transaction alleged, and it should not be guided by compromise settlements which the defendant has made of other claims arising out of the same facts. In such a trial there is no proper alternative to the art of presenting only competent evidence and of making sound deductions and drawing reasonable inferences therefrom. When the fact finders enter upon their task poisoned with the recital of some irrelevant event that transpired subsequent to the alleged negligent act they are under a handicap which is not only difficult to disregard but which cannot be eliminated because it has the obvious approval of the judge whose views juries are prone to follow in determining facts if an opportunity is presented for them to ascertain the judicial trend. Moreover, the extrajudicial admission of a party not learned in the law that he is liable amounts to no more than a legal opinion at its best. A fully blown legal opinion asserted by an agent of the alleged tortfeasor outside of court would not be admissible as competent evidence.

"Proof of the settlement made by the corporation with Champion contains no evidence of the admission of the corporation's negligence. It shows no more than the diligence of appellant to buy its peace with the party whose claim was modest and whose automobile had actually been struck by the train. The bare statement that Champion had been compensated for his losses falls far short of an admission of a fact showing the motorman's actionable negligence. It appears to be the prevalent rule in California and in the other states of the Union that in actions for personal injuries arising out of negligence evidence of a settlement with another claimant for injuries caused by the same tort alleged by plaintiff, not connected up with any act admitted by the defendant and which shows his liability for the accident, is clearly irrelevant and therefore inadmissible. Citti v. Bava, 204 Cal. 136, 138, 266 P. 954; Curtis v. McAuliffe, 106 Cal.App. 1, 288 P. 675; Georgia Ry. & Electric Co. v. Wallace & Co., 122 Ga. 547, 50 S.E. 478, 480; Smith v. Sanders, 293 Ky. 6, 168 S.W.2d 359; Moore v. Stetson Machine Works, 110 Wash. 649, 188 P. 769; Quiel v. Wilson, Ohio App., 34 N.E.2d 590. It is contrary to public policy to subject a person who has compromised a claim to the hazard of having his settlement proved in a subsequent lawsuit by another person asserting a cause of action arising out of the same transaction. To receive such evidence would inevitably tend to discourage settlements out of court if one's purchase of his peace with one person were to be thereafter taken as an admission of his liability for an occurrence which brought injury to another. Reasonable and compelling circumstances might very well influence the defendant to make settlement with the third person while denying all liability to the plaintiff. No party to a justiciable controversy should be discouraged from amicably adjusting his claim by the fear that he might subsequently be confronted with the contention that his concession there was an admission of liability. The rule protecting compromises is too salutary to be whittled away. (Citations)."

While in the cited case the settlement relied upon as constituting an admission was seemingly made before suit was filed, we see no difference in principle between such a situation and that where the settlement is effected after suit and during the trial thereof.

[3, 4] Appellant next contends that the trial court erred in denying her motion for a directed verdict upon the ground that the defendant failed as a matter of law to overcome the inference arising from the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. There is no doubt that the doctrine was applicable and the trial court instructed the jury with respect thereto. Appellant's argument in this regard, however, seemingly proceeds upon the assumption that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur operates to place upon the defendant the burden of overcoming the inference of negligence arising thereunder by a preponderance of the evidence. This, of course, is not true. The trial court, at the request of the appellant, gave the jury BAJI instructions 206 and 206D. By the latter they were told:

[5] "In making such a showing, it is not necessary for a defendant to overcome the inference by preponderance of the evidence. Plaintiff's burden of proving negligence and proximate cause by a preponderance of the evidence is not changed by the rule just mentioned. It follows, therefore, that in order to hold the defendant liable, the inference of negligence and proximate cause, either alone or with such other evidence, if any, as favors it, must have greater weight, more convincing force in the mind of the jury, than the opposing explanation offered by the defendant and any evidence, if any, supporting it.

"If such preponderance in plaintiff's favor exists, then you must find that some negligent conduct on the part of defendant was the proximate cause of the injury; but if the evidence preponderates in defendant's favor, or if in the jury's mind an even balance exists as between the weight of the inference and such evidence, if any, as favors it, on the one side, and the weight of the contrary explanation and such evidence, if any, as favors it, on the other side, neither having the more convincing force, then the verdict must be for the defendant.

[6] "As applied to a common carrier such as the defendant, the word 'negligence' wherever used in the instructions just given, means any breach of duty toward the passenger, evidence of which has been received in this trial. That duty is defined elsewhere in my instructions to you."

This is a correct statement of the rule, both generally and specifically as applied to an action against a carrier for injuries sustained by a passenger. Armstrong v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 1946, 74 Cal.App. 2d 367, 371-373, 168 P.2d 457.

In Bourguignon v. Peninsular Ry. Co., 1919, 40 Cal.App. 689, at page 694, 181 P. 669, at page 671, the Supreme Court, in denying a petition for hearing said:

"The petition for rehearing is denied. Such denial, however, is not to be taken as a complete approval of the instruction that the defendant must show 'that the overturning of the car was the result of inevitable casualty, which human foresight and care could not prevent, for the law holds it responsible for the slightest negligence, and will not hold it blameless, except upon the most satisfactory proofs.'

"The true rule is that, where the accident is of such a character that it speaks for itself, as it did in this case, and raises a presumption of negligence, the defendant will not be held blameless, except upon a showing either (1) of a satisfactory explanation of the accident; that is, an affirmative showing of a definite cause for the accident in which cause no element of negligence on the part of the defendant inheres; or (2) of such care in all possible respects as necessarily to lead to the conclusion that the accident could not have happened from want of care, but must have been due to some unpreventable cause, although the exact cause is unknown.

"In the latter case, inasmuch as the process of reasoning is one of exclusion, the care shown must be satisfactory, in the sense that it covers all causes which due care on the part of the defendant might have prevented. In the case of an accident to a passenger in the course of transportation by a railway company, the explanation or care shown, as the case may be, must be most satisfactory, in the sense that the carrier is held to a very high degree of care.

"But the proof which is required of such explanation or care is a different matter from the explanation or care itself. The explanation or the care shown, if true, may be perfectly satisfactory. The proof of its truth may or may not be satisfactory. On this point the rule is the same as in the case of any other presumption which a defendant must meet; that is, he is not obliged to overcome the presumption by a preponderance of evidence, but it is sufficient for him to give such proof of the truth of his explanation, or of his contention that he exercised due care in all particulars, as to offset the presumption in the minds of the jury, and produce a balance in their minds on the question of its truth. Throughout the plaintiff must prove his case by a preponderance of evidence. See Haun v. Tally, [ante, 40 Cal.App. 585] 181 P. 81."

And in James v. American Buslines, 111 Cal.App.2d 273, 276, 244 P.2d 503, 505, it is said:

"In an action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff while a passenger in defendant's bus, it is the sole province of the jury to determine from all the evidence whether plaintiff's prima facie case arising from the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is adequately met or balanced by defendant's showing of the conduct of the driver and the circumstances of the accident. (Armstrong v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 74 Cal.App.2d 367, 375 [8], 168 P.2d 457.)"

As said in Walters v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n, 9 Cal.2d 46, 49, 69 P.2d 839, 840, 110 A.L.R. 1259:

"Substantially the same rules apply to directed verdicts in favor of plaintiffs as apply to such verdicts in favor of defendants. Bias v. Reed, 169 Cal. 33, 145 P. 516; 24 Cal.Jur. p. 913, § 163. A directed verdict may be granted, when, disregarding conflicting evidence, and indulging every legitimate inference which may be drawn from the evidence in favor of the party against whom the verdict is directed, it can be said that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of such party, if such a verdict has been rendered."

Viewed in accordance with the rule last above stated, evidence was adduced by the defendant from which the jury could reasonably conclude that the derailment of defendant's train occurred as a result of the breaking of an equalizer on the south side of the rear truck of the car in which plaintiff was riding and which was the second car of the train. After the accident it was discovered that the equalizer, a curved steel bar resting at each end on the axle and journal box, Exhibit "C", had broken near the foot resting on the journal box and had dropped until the bottom thereof reached a point lower than the surface of the south rail of the westbound track. The point at which the break occurred, because of the truck pedestal, was not visible to inspection. Evidence was adduced to the effect that this car had been completely overhauled in January and February of 1954, some six months prior to the derailment. Included in this overhaul was a complete tearing down and inspection of the truck assemblies including an electrical magnifluxing of the parts thereof and as a result of which no defects were found in the equalizers on the trucks of the car in question. Magnifluxing is described as a process designed to determine the presence of a fracture in metal. The object being inspected is passed through an electrical current which magnetizes the object and thereupon a powder flux is sprinkled upon the surface. If a crack or break of any kind is present, the powder follows the crack and fixes it, thus indicating its presence. It further appears that the car in question arrived in Chicago on August 20th, two days prior to the run on which the derailment occurred. It was then taken to the defendant's coach yard where it was entirely inspected and the inspection revealed no defects. The car then remained in the coach yard until the morning of August 22nd, when it was taken to the Dearborn Street station and again inspected. En route west of Chicago running inspections of the train's running gear were made by the train crew and nothing out of the ordinary was noted by the train crew up to the time of the derailment. The first indication to the train crew of the derailment came when the emergency braking apparatus of the train went into effect automatically and the train came to a stop some three-quarters of a mile west of the Lomax station.

[7] In the light of this evidence, we are unable to say that, as a matter of law, the jury was not warranted in determining that the inference of negligence arising from the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was not met or at least balanced. In its factual aspect, the case at bar is somewhat similar to that of Allbritton v. Interstate Transit Lines, 1939, 31 Cal.App.2d 149, 87 P.2d 704, 706, in which a hearing by the Supreme Court was denied. There, the plaintiff, a passenger upon defendant's bus, was injured when it overturned. To meet the prima facie case of negligence made by the showing of the accident, the defendant introduced evidence to the effect that the bus involved in the accident was regularly inspected and repaired, including daily inspection of its under parts, and that one or two days before the accident the defendant's mechanic had made a front-end inspection of the bus consisting of cleaning the front wheels, spindles, front wheel bearings and front steering mechanism as well as the tie rod and springs. After such cleaning process, a solution of chalk and alcohol was applied to these parts in order to show up cracks or flaws, if any. In this operation the mechanic looked at the left front spring but did not discern any defect in the metal of which the spring was composed. On the day following the accident this mechanic made another inspection of the wrecked bus, particularly with reference to the left front spring and he found the spring broken and the front brake cable torn loose from the wheel housing. He further testified that "the break showed approximately fifty per cent old break and fifty per cent new break." The trial court there instructed the jury upon the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, stating that in order to overcome the inference of negligence, the defendant carrier was required to prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the injury was occasioned by an unavoidable casualty or some other cause which human care and foresight could not prevent. Upon appeal, it was held that this instruction was erroneous insofar as it stated that the burden rested upon the defendant to overcome the inference by a preponderance of evidence. The respondent claimed, however, "that the appellant was not prejudiced by the court's failure to instruct the jury that the burden of proof as to the main issue of negligence remained with the plaintiff throughout the trial, for the reason that under the evidence the jury was bound to find against defendant." The court, however, held (31 Cal.App.2d at page 156, 87 P.2d at page 706) that this claim could not be upheld "because there was in the record a substantial conflict in the evidence upon the issue of whether the accident was caused by, or resulted from, such inevitable casualty or unavoidable accident, or cause beyond human care or foresight to prevent. We cannot say as a matter of law that the instructions here under attack were not prejudicial to the defendant."

What has been said answers the last part of appellant's contention that respondent failed to explain how the derailment occurred or that the derailment occurred without negligence upon its part. While it is true, as appellant states, that no expert testimony was adduced as to the cause of the derailment, as heretofore stated, facts were established from which the jury was entitled to infer that it occurred as a result of the breaking of the equalizer and that any defect that may have existed in the equalizer was not discoverable despite a careful inspection thereof immediately prior to the time that the accident occurred.

Appellant further contends that the trial court erred in denying her motion to strike respondent's evidence as to the care exercised by it in the inspection and maintenance of its cars and equipment. This contention is based upon Civil Code, section 2101, which reads as follows: "A carrier of persons for reward is bound to provide vehicles safe and fit for the purposes to which they are put, and is not excused for default in this respect by any degree of care."

The argument is that, inasmuch as the evidence was such that it would have justified a finding "that the derailment was the result of respondent's failure to provide vehicles safe and fit for the purposes to which they are put" defendant was not excused for default in that respect by any degree of care. In effect the claim is that this section operates to make a carrier an absolute insurer of its passengers, at least for injuries occurring as a result of its failure to provide vehicles safe and fit for the purposes to which they are put. While respondent disputes that such is the effect of the statutory provision in question, we find it unnecessary to consider the question thus posed.

[8] As previously noted, appellant became a passenger of the respondent in Illinois and the accident in question occurred in that state. In such situation "the law which governs the degree of care required and the liability of a carrier for its negligence in injuring a passenger is the law of the place where the injury occurred". 13 C.J.S. Carriers § 679, p. 1263. Appellant has not referred us to any statute of Illinois similar or of like import to section 2101, and our own research has failed to reveal any such. Neither do we find that such a rule has been adopted by the courts of that jurisdiction. The degree of care required by a carrier for the safety of its passengers as declared by the Supreme Court of Illinois is as follows: "Carriers are not insurers of the safety of their passengers. The degree of care to be exercised under circumstances of this character is well defined in the case of North Chicago Street Railroad Co. v. Cook, 145 Ill. 551, 33 N.E. 958. In that case this court said: 'Carriers of passengers are held to the exercise of the utmost or highest degree of care, skill and diligence for the safety of the passenger that is consistent with the mode of conveyance employed.'" Lundquist v. Chicago Rys. Co., 1922, 305 Ill. 106, 137 N.E. 92, 93.

[9] It is to be noted that appellant's argument in this regard seemingly proceeds upon the assumption that in the absence of proof to the contrary, the law of Illinois is presumed to be the same as the law of this state. While this was the former rule, it no longer obtains. Our courts now take judicial notice of the laws of the sister states as well as the interpretation thereof by the highest courts of appellate jurisdiction of such states. Code Civ.Proc. § 1875 (3); 18 Cal.Jur.2d p. 450, § 27.

[10] The preceding discussion also disposes of appellant's further contention that the trial court erred in refusing to give an instruction in the language of section 2101. The court fully and correctly instructed the jury as to the degree of care which a carrier owes to its passengers. A copy of this instruction is set forth in the margin.<sup>2</sup>

[11] Plaintiff further complains that the trial court erred in sustaining an objection to a question propounded upon cross-examination to the respondent's witness R. M. Smith. This witness had testified on direct examination that he saw the train when it passed Nemo, a point some 28 miles from the scene of the accident, and then observed nothing defective in its appearance. Upon cross-examination the witness was questioned at considerable length by counsel for the appellant with respect to what he observed with respect to the train. When asked if he looked at the equalizers he answered in the affirmative and in answer to the question as to what they looked like, he stated they appeared normal; that there was nothing wrong with them insofar as he could see; that he did not see any equalizer "either dragging, making a noise or throwing sparks." He was then asked: "Now, in order to determine if an equalizer on a train that is going 80 miles an hour is defective, you believe that you could observe it by simply standing on the platform and watching the train go by?" To this question defendant interposed an objection which was sustained. The ruling was correct. In answer to previous questions as noted, the witness had stated that insofar as he could see the equalizers appeared normal and did not appear to be dragging, making a noise or throwing sparks. In any event, if it were to be conceded that the ruling was erroneous, it could not have operated to the prejudice of appellant.

[12] Finally appellant complains of the refusal of the trial court to give an instruction, a copy of which appears in the margin.<sup>3</sup> The argument is that the in-

2. "As a common carrier the defendant was required by law to use the utmost care and diligence for the safe carriage of plaintiff, to provide everything necessary for that purpose, including vehicles safe and fit for the purposes to which they are put, and to exercise a reasonable degree of skill.

"The defendant, however, was not a guarantor of the safety of the plaintiff or of her transportation free from injury.

"Its responsibility was not to use the most effective methods for safety that the human mind can imagine, nor that the best scientific skill might suggest. The care required of it, however, was the highest that reasonably could have been exercised consistently with the mode of transportation used, and the practical operation of its business as a carrier. This requirement must be measured in the light of the best precautions which, at the time of the accident in question, were in common, practical use in the same business and had been proved to be efficacious."

3. "General human experience justifies the inference that when one looks in the direction of an object clearly visible, he sees it, and that when he listens, he hears that which is clearly audible. When there is evidence to the effect that one did look, but did not see that which was in plain sight, or that he listened, but did not hear that which he could struction should have been given because of the fact that respondent produced evidence through various of its employees, that prior to the accident they carefully inspected the train and found nothing defective. We see no merit in the claim. There was no evidence that there was any defect which was "clearly visible" and consequently the requested instruction was inapplicable. Moreover, the refusal to give it could in no way have prejudiced the appellant.

The judgment is affirmed.

VALLÉE, Justice.

I dissent. I am of the opinion the court erred in excluding the record in the Meredith case insofar as it shows that after the cause was fully tried and while the jury was deliberating, defendant in open court stipulated that judgment be entered in favor of the plaintiffs in that action and that judgment was entered pursuant to the stipulation. The stipulation constituted an admission of negligence. McClure v. Steele, 326 Mich. 286, 40 N.W.2d 153, 13 A.L.R.2d 160. Cf. Gonzales v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 34 Cal.2d 749, 754, 214 P.2d 809. Certainly such conduct circumstantially implied a consciousness of liability entirely different from an extrajudicial compromise. Of course, it was evidentiary only. That the error was prejudicial goes without saying.

Brown v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 79 Cal.App.2d 613, 180 P.2d 424, quoted by the majority, is not at all analogous. That case involved an extrajudicial, out-of-court compromise settlement of a modest claim. Here we have a solemn, formal, judicial stipulation of liability which necessarily included an admission of negligence. The Santa Fe did not agree to a judgment against it for $125,000 merely to buy its peace.

John C. Williams, in pro. per., for appellant.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Convicted of robbery of Howard Lee Johnson while armed with a deadly weapon (Pen.Code, §§ 211 and 211a), defendant, appearing in propria persona, appeals from the judgment and an order denying his motion for new trial. At the trial he was represented by the Public Defender of Los Angeles County.

[1, 2] First, appellant claims insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict, asserting "numerous instances of perjurous inconsistency" in the testimony of the complaining witness. The argument centers upon the matter of identification of the robber. Appellant says: "That factor (darkness) makes it impossible, according to Mr. Johnson's testimony, for him to have identified the robber." As our duty begins and ends with ascertainment of a substantial conflict in the evidence, we "'must assume in favor of the verdict the existence of every fact which the jury could have reasonably deduced from the evidence, and then determine whether such facts are sufficient to support the verdict.' If the circumstances reasonably justify the verdict of the jury, the opinion of the reviewing court that those circumstances might also reasonably be reconciled with the innocence of the defendant will not warrant interference with the determination of the jury." People v. Daugherty, 40 Cal.2d 876, 885, 256 P.2d 911, 916. To the same effect see People v. Walker, 154 Cal.App.2d 143, 147, 315 P.2d 740. That the evidence is sufficient to sustain the verdict is clearly apparent from the record.

Howard Lee Johnson, on his way home from work, stopped at McDonald's Cafe in the early morning of May 24, 1957; there he remained with friends for an hour or an hour and a half, one of the friends being Bill Dennis. Seated behind Johnson during that time was defendant Williams, whom he saw on that occasion and had seen frequently in that place. Johnson during that time was defendant shirt pocket. It was arranged that Dennis would follow him to his home. At about 4:00 a. m., after Johnson had reached his residence, there was a knock on the door. "Who is it?" "Bill." This inquiry and answer were repeated and Johnson opened the door thinking the caller was Dennis. When he did so he was confronted by defendant, whom he then recognized. Defendant had an automatic pistol in his hand and said, "Give it to me." "What?" "The money." Defendant reached for Johnson's shirt pocket, Johnson got hold of him, there was a tussle, the pistol, then pointed at the floor, was fired and defendant snatched Johnson's money and ran. Johnson summoned the police and Officer Houston soon arrived. He found and preserved a lead slug from the gun which had buried itself in the porch between the wall and the doorstep.

Three or four weeks later Dennis (who had arrived at Johnson's house before the police on the morning of the robbery) telephoned Johnson from McDonald's Cafe and told him that defendant was there. Johnson took police to the place and defendant was there arrested. Later Johnson went to a police line-up and there identified defendant as the robber. He did so again at the trial. Officer Houston corroborated Johnson's testimony to the extent of saying that he found the slug from the gun buried in the porch; he preserved and presented it in court.

Defense counsel sought to weaken Johnson's testimony as to the foregoing facts by cross-examination concerning defendant's clothing, whether his hair was long or short, whether he had a mustache or a goatee or neither one. At best this created a conflict in the evidence which was resolved against defendant by the jury and again by the trial judge.

Defendant testified that he was not a party to any robbery of Johnson, was not at his house with a gun on the 24th, never saw Johnson at McDonald's or elsewhere prior to his own arrest on June 17th, although he had been at that cafe some 20 times. To this he added the defense of alibi. He and Marie A. Chanel had lived together, at least intermittently, without the sanction of a marriage ceremony, for some years, begetting four children. His testimony was that he won some money in shooting dice on the 24th and so he took his "girl friend" that evening to the Celebrity Club where they stayed from about 11:00 p. m. to 2:00 or 2:15 a. m.; while there they saw and talked with Doris Concepcion and Eliza Hayward and other acquaintances; from the club they went to Marie's home, had some sandwiches and went to bed together; there he remained until about 8:30 or 9:00 the next morning. Thus it was impossible for him to have committed the robbery. Marie corroborated this testimony, adding the fact that she was awakened by one of the children at about 4:30 a. m. and then saw that defendant was still in her bed. In all he spent seven nights with her in that month of May and there was nothing unusual about this night of the 24th which would cause it to stand out in memory. Defendant himself disclosed the further fact that about three days after his arrest, "I asked her what day was it that we went to the club, and we talked about what day I went to the club, and everything, so we got our heads together and I said, 'It's not possible for me to have held up this man this particular time,' I said, 'because we was at the club.' Q. And when you and Miss Chanel got going over these things in your own minds, it was just by a happenstance that was the night you went to the Celebrity Club? A. Yes, sir." Obviously the jury was not required to accept this alibi testimony (People v. Baserto, 162 Cal.App.2d 123, 327 P.2d 558). The testimony of Johnson and of Officer Houston, accepted by the jury, made a complete case against defendant.

[3] Next appellant argues that the prosecutor was accorded undue latitude in cross-examination in that he himself was interrogated about a conversation he had with the police, one which is claimed to be outside the scope of proper cross-examination because he had not mentioned it in his direct testimony. Of course there is no merit in this contention. After quoting § 1323, Penal Code<sup>1</sup> the Supreme Court said,

1. Section 1323 of the Penal Code provides: "A defendant in a criminal action or proceeding cannot be compelled to be a witness against himself; but if he offers himself as a witness, he may be cross-examined by the counsel for the people as to all matters about which he was examined in chief. * * * in People v. Zerillo, 36 Cal.2d 222, 228, 223, P.2d 223, 227: "This does not mean that the cross-examination must be confined to a mere categorical review of the matters, dates or times mentioned in the direct examination. [Citations.] It may be directed to the eliciting of any matter which may tend to overcome or qualify the effect of the testimony given by him on his direct examination. * * * If a defendant takes the stand and makes a general denial of the crime with which he is charged the permissible scope of cross-examination is very wide. [Citations.] Moreover, as stated in People v. Teshara, 141 Cal. 633, 638, 75 P. 338, 340, 'A defendant cannot, by testifying to a state of things contrary to and inconsistent with the evidence of the prosecution, thus indirectly denying the testimony against him, but without testifying expressly with relation to the same facts, limit the cross-examination to the precise facts concerning which he testifies. He can be cross-examined with respect to facts or denials which are necessarily implied from the testimony-in-chief, as well as with respect to facts which he expressly states.'"

[4] Closely related to the foregoing contention is that of permitting improper rebuttal evidence. On cross-examination defendant was asked: "In other words, once you knew that the offense here alleged was alleged to have been committed on the 24th of May, you immediately remembered you had been to the Celebrity Club that evening and had been shooting dice? A. No. No, not right then. No." In further response he volunteered information as to a conversation with the police: "[W]hen I was at 77th Street Police Station * * * they told me, asked me did I know this man and I said no, I never seen him before. They called his name. I didn't remember his name. They called four more names and had the address, and I do remember he said this man worked at some kind of aircraft place, and three of the other guys' names on there worked at the aircraft place, but the other guy, he worked somewhere else; and he said, 'Williams, you could be getting around but,' he said, 'if you did not do the robbing, it was somebody probably who looked like you. You went out to this man's house. They were playing poker. You held them up.' I denied. I didn't know the man or any of the fellows who were supposed to have been there. When he gets to the preliminary hearing, he says he was home by himself and the whole thing is a mystery to me. That's why I am confused."

Asked if he did not tell the investigating officer he had been to McDonald's on the 24th of May he said he did not. To the inquiry whether the officers talked to him at the 77th Street Police Station about the night of May 23-24, his counsel objected and the court sustained the objection. Defense counsel at the bench then objected to any conversation between defendant and any officer as outside the scope of the direct examination; also: "That it will be, maybe, evidence in the nature of an admission and, if such, it should have been placed by the People in the case in chief. Not having done so, they would waive at this time the right to proceed on such evidence if it is tantamount to an admission." The prosecutor avowed that he expected to show inconsistent statements by way of impeachment and the objection was overruled. Thereupon defendant testified that he had had no conversation with Officer Griffin at all; that he did not tell him he was at McDonald's on the 24th in the early morning hours; that he had a conversation with Griffin's partner; he did not tell Griffin he did not know whom he saw that night or did not know where else he went that night. In rebuttal Officer Griffin testified that on June 20 defendant told him he had been at McDonald's drive-in on May 24th in the early morning hours. Counsel again objected on the ground that this evidence was part of the prosecution's case in chief. The officer also said that the defendant told him, "'I don't know who I saw that night. I see a lot of people'" and "'I don't know where else I went that night'".

Appellant's claim is that this was a violation of the rule that the prosecution cannot hold back part of its case in chief until after defendant has rested and then surprise and embarrass him by producing it in rebuttal. "In criminal cases, as in civil, the order of proof lies in the discretion of the trial judge. [Citations.] But the practice of permitting the prosecution to withhold a part of its case for use on rebuttal has been severely condemned." People v. Newton, 139 Cal.App.2d 289, 291, 293 P.2d 476, 477. "The purpose of the restriction in that section is to assure an orderly presentation of evidence so that the trier of fact will not be confused; to prevent a party from unduly magnifying certain evidence by dramatically introducing it late in the trial; and to avoid any unfair surprise that may result when a party who thinks he has met his opponent's case is suddenly confronted at the end of trial with an additional piece of crucial evidence. Thus proper rebuttal evidence does not include a material part of the case in the prosecution's possession that tends to establish the defendant's commission of the crime. It is restricted to evidence made necessary by the defendant's case in the sense that he has introduced new evidence or made assertions that were not implicit in his denial of guilt." People v. Carter, 48 Cal.2d 737, 753, 312 P.2d 665, 675.

Fricke on California Criminal Evidence, 3d Ed., p. 325: "While a party should not be allowed to introduce part of his testimony at one stage of the trial and withhold other testimony to be introduced as rebuttal when it may be more effective the trend of a trial is often changed when the adversary puts on his case and raises a relatively minor issue to a position of such importance that the developments should, in the interests of justice, permit the introduction of evidence to meet the enlarged issue even though such evidence belongs in the case in chief and not on rebuttal. While it is improper for the prosecutor to withhold evidence which is properly a part of his case in chief and offer it after the defense has closed its case, such procedure does not call for a reversal where the defense is thereafter permitted to introduce evidence in rebuttal of that so introduced by the prosecution and the defense has not been put to a substantial disadvantage (People v. Avery, 35 Cal.2d 487, 218 P.2d 527). Such evidence may, however, properly be used by the prosecutor where it comes within the rules of Impeachment (q. v.) and may be properly admissible on rebuttal to meet evidence upon a point put into dispute by the testimony for the defense."

It cannot be said at bar that there was any impropriety in the prosecutor's procedure. He had made a clear case before resting. It was not necessary for him to anticipate and disprove every possible defense or alibi of the defendant. The evidence under discussion was directed toward defendant's alibi. He himself had given a portion of his conversation with the police and the prosecutor was entitled to develop the rest of it. Cf. People v. Sutton, 73 Cal. 243, 245, 15 P. 86; 98 C.J.S. Witnesses § 392, p. 164.

Likewise these questions were proper as the basis for impeachment under Code of Civil Procedure, § 2052. People v. Scalapio, 143 Cal. 343, 350, 351, 76 P. 1098; People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 179, 220, 48 P. 75; People v. Kimball, 23 Cal.App.2d 32, 34, 72 P.2d 157. "In the present case, the People did not withhold a material part of the case until rebuttal, but offered rebuttal testimony to support their case in chief after it had been controverted by the defendant. The evidence was properly admitted." People v. Nye, 38 Cal.2d 34, 39, 237 P.2d 1, 4.

[5] Appellant claims that the Deputy Public Defender who conducted his case "proved himself to be incompetent, indifferent and oblivious to his duty to protect the rights of his client" and therefore appellant should have a reversal. On this subject People v. Wein, 50 Cal.2d 383, 326 P.2d 457, 473 says: "The handling of the defense by counsel of the accused's own choice will not be declared inadequate except in those rare cases where his counsel displays such a lack of diligence and competence as to reduce the trial to a 'farce or a sham.' [Citations.] The record in this case does not even remotely approach such a situation. Defendant's sole defense lay in his claim that his identification by the victims was incorrect. His counsel vigorously cross-examined the prosecution's witnesses to test their memories, and assiduously attempted to establish an alibi and to show defendant's good character. He at most committed what in retrospect may be claimed to be mistakes in judgment by following certain strategy employed. Such mistakes, if any, do not constitute a denial of due process." The trial judge considered that defendant had been adequately represented in this case: "The Court: Wait a moment, Mr. Williams. I have told you before and I am telling you again, just answer the question. Mr. Breckenridge is a good attorney. He will ask you everything that he wants." Upon the argument of the motion for new trial the court told the defendant, who was speaking in his own behalf, "I think you had a good, fair trial." Again, "As I say, Mr. Williams, I feel that you had a fair trial. I do not feel that the jury made a mistake." Our own examination of the transcript discloses that defendant had a fair trial and was adequately represented by the Deputy Public Defender in charge of the case.

[6] Finally appellant says that when he asked the judge what procedure to follow in order to "appeal for a new trial" the judge "did so distort, garble, misquote and equivocate the necessary process, which the defendant was bound to follow by the rules adjudicated by the California Judicial Council, that had the defendant been lulled into a temporary sense of legal security and followed the '30 day', dubious, evasive and fraudulent course as directed by the Court (Judge Odemar) then he would have been most decidedly duped and defrauded by the Court to the extent of forfeiture of his right to a direct appeal." The reference is to the following colloquy: "Defendant Williams: Your Honor, Judge, I would like to make a motion for an appeal. The Court: Well, all right. You are making an oral notice of appeal at this time. It will be necessary for you to take the regular steps that are necessary in an appeal, which will have to be done within 30 days." But appellant was not misled by this "30 days" misstatement, for he was sentenced on September 27, 1957, and filed his notice of appeal three days later, on September 30th, well within the time prescribed by the rule.

No prejudicial error appearing, the judgment and the order denying the new trial are affirmed.

Civ. 17633.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 28, 1958.

Hearing Denied Dec. 23, 1958.

Action for divorce. From a decree of the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Twain Michelsen, J., which awarded to the wife property and money for support of a child and support of herself, the wife appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that it was not an abuse of discretion to place a four year limit upon the husband's duty to pay alimony; that closing of hearing to the public was not an abuse of discretion; that the community property was properly disposed of, and that testimony was either properly excluded or its admission was not prejudicial.

Judgment affirmed.

Wife abandoned her appeal from award of support for a child by not discussing it on appeal.

2. Divorce ⚭231, 243

In theory, "alimony" is considered to be compensation to the injured spouse for loss resulting from the other's breach of obligations of the marital relationship and a spouse may acquire no right to permanent alimony in the absence of a provision for it, in the decree. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 139.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Alimony".

3. Divorce ⚭235, 286

A suitable allowance for alimony to the injured spouse is measured by the circumstances, and in making a determination the trial court exercises a sound legal discretion, and in determining whether that discretion has been abused, the reviewing court can only interfere if it finds under all the evidence, viewed most favorably in support of the trial court's action, no judge could reasonably have made the order that he did. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 139.

4. Divorce ⚭237

Alimony to the wife where the husband is without property may not be based on husband's hope of gratuities in the form of inheritances or the court's surmise that he will receive them.

5. Divorce ⚭309

If circumstances change, modification of an award for child's support at any time prior to its maturity could be sought by the wife until husband's obligation therefor had terminated. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 139.

6. Divorce ⚭239

In divorce action, in determining whether the trial court abused its discretion in placing a four year limit upon the husband's duty to pay alimony, evidence did not establish that the wife was lulled into a false sense of security in the conduct of her case and the production of evidence on that issue by the remarks of the court, nor did the evidence indicate that the court had foreclosed its mind on any issue. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 139.

It is the formal findings which a court makes that constitutes judicial action, not mere informal remarks made during the course of a trial.

8. Divorce ⚭235

In divorce action, evidence did not establish an abuse of discretion by the trial court in placing a four year limit on the husband's duty to pay alimony on theory that alimony is a "penalty" and that the penalty was not in due proportion to the degree of cruelty which the husband allegedly committed. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 139.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Penalty".

9. Divorce ⚭146

In divorce action, closing of the hearing to the public was not an abuse of discretion where it was done for the good of the child of the parties. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 125.

10. Divorce ⚭146, 184(12)

In divorce action, striking evidence indicative of a certain personality trait which the wife claimed the husband possessed was not error, where the trial court viewed such as a noncausative factor in relation to the charge of cruelty and no prejudice resulted to the wife where other evidence not stricken supported the findings in the wife's favor.

11. Divorce ⚭253

In divorce action, evidence did not establish an abuse of discretion in disposition of the community property on the ground that the court failed to require the husband to account for an automobile and other property.

12. Divorce ⚭249(1)

In divorce action, wife was not entitled to an automobile which was community property but only to one half of the community property.

13. Divorce ⇨111

In divorce action, evidence concerning the standard of living of the parties was properly excluded.

14. Divorce ⇨243

In divorce action, directing that alimony payments begin soon after the date of the minute order which directed judgment and specified that the alimony payments begin on a certain date, instead of the date interlocutory decree was filed, was not error. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 137.2.

15. Divorce ⇨243

In divorce action, the trial court does not lack authority to direct payment of permanent alimony commencing at a date earlier than the effective date of the decree.

16. Divorce ⇨221

In divorce action, denying wife psychiatric fees and fees of an investigator was not an abuse of discretion where the charges did not appear to be necessary disbursements.

17. Divorce ⇨192

In divorce action, the determination of the items allowable as costs is largely within the trial court's discretion.

18. Divorce ⇨206

In divorce action, dissolving an injunction restraining the husband from disposing of certain shares of corporate stock was not error, where the order of dissolution was simply a supplement to a prior order made without notice to the wife and the wife did not indicate that she was prejudiced thereby.

19. Divorce ⇨184(12)

In divorce action, failing to allow evidence concerning acts that occurred after the filing of the wife's cross complaint was not prejudicial where the excluded evidence pertained to the cruelty charge, which was supported in wife's favor by evidence not excluded, and that feature of the judgment had become final.

20. Divorce ⇨183, 285

In divorce action, denying wife her costs upon appeal and attorney fees was not reviewable where there was nothing in the record before the appellate court concerning such action.

21. Divorce ⇨184(1)

In divorce action, where denial of wife of her costs upon appeal was, if it occurred, in the form of a special order after final judgment, such order was not reviewable upon appeal from the judgment.

James Martin MacInnis, Nicholas Alaga, Harry P. Glassman, San Francisco, for appellant.

Lewis, Field, De Goff & Stein, San Francisco, for respondent.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

[1] The interlocutory decree granted Emily a divorce from George Whitney, Jr., upon the ground of extreme cruelty, and awarded her $300 a month alimony for four years, the custody of their minor child, $100 per month for the child's support, certain property characterized as community property, and $1,250 for attorney fees. She appealed from those portions which awarded her the property, and money for her support and for support of the child, but has abandoned her appeal from the award of support for the child by not discussing it.

[2] (1) Was it an abuse of discretion to place a four-year limit upon respondent's duty to pay alimony? No.

Appellant's argument starts with the premise that "one aspect of alimony is that it is a penalty." She contends that here the penalty is not in due proportion to the degree of cruelty which, she asserts, respondent committed.

A mere reading of the applicable statute demonstrates the fallacy of her premise. "In any interlocutory * * * decree * * * the court may compel the party against whom the decree * * * is granted to make such suitable allowance for support and maintenance of the other party for his or her life, or for such shorter period as the court may deem just, having regard for the circumstances of the respective parties * * *. Civil Code, § 139. This does not speak of punishment of the guilty party measured by the degree of guilt. It speaks only of legal consequences which flow from conduct which causes dissolution of the marriage. In such a case the law imposes a duty to compensate the opposite party. This compensation does not take the form of exemplary or punitive damages. Instead, the trial court in its exercise of sound discretion is to grant a "suitable allowance for the support" of the other party for life or a shorter period "as the court may deem just, having regard for the circumstances of the respective parties."

Appellant cites cases in which the word "penalty" was used when referring to the duty imposed by this statute. But it does not appear that the courts in those cases measured the duty in terms of the degree of the so-called offense. We think, therefore, that they used the word "penalty" as if it meant no more than the expression "legal consequence." It is more accurate to say, as the Supreme Court said in Hall v. Superior Court, 45 Cal.2d 377, 384, 289 P.2d 431, 435: "In theory, alimony is considered to be compensation to the injured spouse for the loss resulting from the other's breach of the obligations of the marital relationship. Arnold v. Arnold, 76 Cal. App.2d 877, 885-886, 174 P.2d 674. But the right to receive it depends not alone upon the granting of a divorce for the fault of the opposing party, but also upon a showing that the circumstances of the parties justify the award made. Civ.Code, § 139; Bowman v. Bowman, 29 Cal.2d 808, 811, 178 P.2d 751, 170 A.L.R. 246. Despite his prevalence in the divorce action, a spouse may acquire no right to permanent alimony in the absence of a provision for it in the decree. Puckett v. Puckett, 21 Cal. 2d 833, 841, 136 P.2d 1; Howell v. Howell, 104 Cal. 45, 47, 37 P. 770, [43 Am.St.Rep. 70]."

[3] It seems too clear to require further elaboration that the "suitable allowance" is measured by the "circumstances of the respective parties" and in making a determination the trial court exercises a sound legal discretion. In ascertaining whether that discretion has been abused in a given case, a reviewing court uses this test: "The discretion was the trial judge's, not ours; and we can only interfere if we find that under all the evidence, viewed most favorably in support of the trial court's action, no judge could reasonably have made the order that he did." Newbauer v. Newbauer, 95 Cal.App.2d 36, 40, 212 P.2d 240, 243. See also Simpson v. Simpson, 134 Cal.App.2d 219, 224, 285 P.2d 313; Winn v. Winn, 143 Cal.App.2d 184, 188, 299 P.2d 721.

[4] Appellant has cited no evidence that would furnish a basis for a reviewing court to conclude that "no judge could reasonably have made the order that" this trial judge did, nor have we found any such evidence in the record. The parties married in March, 1952, and separated in January, 1954. She is in her early thirties. There is nothing to indicate that she is not in good health nor that she suffers any physical impairment that might hamper her availability for gainful employment. The child will be of school age when the four years have elapsed. Respondent testified that he was earning $125 per week gross. He held stock in a family corporation that had never paid dividends and had borrowed $11,000 upon the security of that stock. He had an expectancy of a substantial inheritance some time but it has been said that alimony "where the husband is without property may not be based on the husband's hope of gratuities or the court's surmise that he will receive them." Merritt v. Merritt, 220 Cal. 85, 88, 29 P.2d 190, 191.

[5] Should circumstances change, modification of the award could be sought for the child's support at any time prior to its maturity; for appellant's support, until respondent's obligation therefor has terminated. Simpson v. Simpson, 134 Cal.App. 2d 219, 221-222, 285 P.2d 313.

[6-8] Appellant makes the additional argument that the trial "court had openly represented to" her that "no limitation would be placed upon her right to receive alimony." Early in the trial and before any witness had taken the stand the trial judge made this observation: "Without prejudice, * * * I would be disinclined to place any limitation on the period of time during which alimony payments should run * * *." Respondent's counsel said: "Well, if you say that without prejudice— The Court: I do say that without prejudice." A little later the court repeated this remark, adding "and I say this entirely without prejudice to either side." That furnishes appellant no basis for claiming that she was lulled into a false sense of security in the conduct of her case and the production of evidence on that issue; nor any indication that the court had foreclosed its mind on any issue. Moreover, it is the formal findings which a court makes that constitute judicial action, not mere informal remarks made during the course of a trial. Slavich v. Slavich, 108 Cal.App.2d 451, 455, 239 P.2d 100; Pecarovich v. Becker, 113 Cal.App.2d 309, 315, 248 P.2d 123.

[9] (2) Was the closing of the hearing to the public an abuse of discretion? No.

"In an action for divorce * * * the court may direct the trial of any issue of fact joined therein to be private * * *". Code Civ.Proc. § 125. The court's exclusion of the public in this case was well within the purview of that section. It was done for the good of the child, a purpose that would not be best subserved by further discussion.

[10] (3) It was not error to strike evidence indicative of a certain personality trait which appellant claimed respondent possessed. Appellant sympathetically regarded the alleged personality trait as a sickness in him, if indeed he possessed such a trait. Accordingly, the trial court viewed that as a noncausative factor in relation to the charge of cruelty. Also, there was no possible prejudice to appellant's case. Other evidence, not stricken, supported the finding in appellant's favor, a finding which has become final.

[11] (4) Did the court err in the disposition of the community property? No.

The court found "[t]here is and has been community property of the parties to this action and the Court awards all of the same to" appellant, and listed the items thereof. (Emphasis added.)

Appellant contends that the court erred in failing to require respondent to account for a 1953 Mercury automobile, a Simca automobile, a bunny bank, the child's bank account, and the proceeds of a check representing a federal income tax refund. No mention of these items was made in the decree.

The testimony at the preliminary hearing on temporary alimony was made a part of the record at the trial. At that time, respondent testified that the Mercury automobile had been sold for $495 and the proceeds used to pay a bill to a Dr. Lindner. The proceeds of the bunny bank were eventually used to purchase a gift for the child. The child's bank account, which was a present from respondent's parents to the child, with respondent as trustee, was disbursed for "medical expenses, living expenses for myself and my wife." Except for $500, which was used "for other expenses incurred," the proceeds of the income tax refund check were used to pay off the balance on the Simca automobile which respondent still had at the time of the preliminary hearing. Respondent paid $3,250 for the car. An interim order for alimony and support granted respondent the right to sell the Simca automobile, the proceeds to be used for payment of the community debts of the parties. However, it was agreed at the trial that the Simca was then in respondent's possession.

[12] There was no evidence at the trial as to the value of the property awarded to the wife; the market value of the Simca at the time of the separation or trial; or the amount of respondent's separate property that was used to pay outstanding community debts. At the time the motion for temporary support was noticed, $2,013.86 in community debts allegedly were outstanding, which respondent was ordered to pay in part. Respondent testified that he borrowed approximately $11,000 against his separate property to pay certain obligations pursuant to court order. Defendant could have sold the Simca, paid the obligations, and borrowed against his separate property to buy a car. In that situation, appellant would not be entitled to the car. That he borrowed against his separate property and kept the car should not change the situation. Moreover, appellant was not entitled to the car, but only to more than half the community property. Gaeta v. Gaeta, 102 Cal.App.2d 87, 88, 226 P.2d 619. Without testimony concerning the value of the various items of community property, appellant has failed to show error in this regard. Barry v. Barry, 124 Cal.App.2d 107, 112-113, 268 P.2d 147.

[13] (5) Were objections erroneously sustained to appellant's testimony concerning the standard of living of the parties? No.

An objection that a certain question was compound was properly sustained. Appellant's other references to the record are simply passages where the trial judge remarked that he thought the matter was covered by the evidence given at the hearing of the motion for support pendente lite, the transcript of which was made a part of the record upon the trial. We derive from those remarks no intent to curtail appellant in the presentation of her case. To the contrary, the court upon more than one occasion indicated there should be additional evidence concerning appellant's financial needs.

[14] (6) Was it error to direct that the alimony payments begin soon after the date of the minute order (November 28, 1955) which directed judgment and specified that the alimony payments begin on December 1, 1955, instead of the date (February 14, 1956) the interlocutory decree was filed? No.

This had the effect of terminating the order for temporary alimony ($350 a month) and for payment of certain medical expenses. Appellant cites no authorities in support of this assignment of error.

We perceive no element of error here. An order pendente lite is always subject to modification, as to the future. Civ.Code, § 137.2. The minute order of November 28 in effect modified the pendente lite order, commencing December 1, 1955.

[15] Nor does the trial court lack authority to direct payment of permanent alimony commencing at a date earlier than the effective date of the decree: "Generally, periodic payments commence with the effective date of the decree; but it is not an abuse of discretion to direct payment of permanent alimony 'from the appearance of the defendant in the action, or from its commencement', Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 1, 46, 16 P. 345, 365, or to reserve jurisdiction to consider it at some time after entry of the judgment of divorce. See McCaleb v. McCaleb, 177 Cal. 147, 149, 169 P. 1023." Hall v. Superior Court, 45 Cal.2d 377, 385, 289 P.2d 431, 436.

[16] (7) Was it error not to award appellant psychiatric fees and the fees of an investigator? No.

Appellant included these items in her cost bill. Upon respondent's motion the court disallowed all items including these two. It appears that the court deemed these two items not proper taxable costs.

[17, 18] The determination of the items allowable as costs is largely within the trial court's discretion. Von Goerlitz v. Turner, 65 Cal.App.2d 425, 432, 150 P.2d 278; Puppo v. Larosa, 194 Cal. 721, 723, 230 P. 440. We perceive no abuse of discretion in this case. The charges do not appear on their face to be necessary disbursements. Appellant had the burden of proving the element of necessity. Miller v. Highland Ditch Co., 91 Cal. 103, 27 P. 536 (cost of map disallowed).

[19] (8) Was it error to dissolve the injunction which restrained respondent from disposing of certain shares of corporate stock? No.

On December 30, 1955, a written order was filed dissolving the injunction pendente lite which had restrained respondent from disposing of his stock in Whitney's at the Beach, a California corporation. This was apparently done without notice to appellant.

It appears to us that this was simply a matter that was before the court upon submission of the cause for decision. The minute order of November 28, 1955, failed to dispose of it. Accordingly, the order of December 30, was for all practical purposes, a supplement of the order of November 28. We find in such action no error and no abuse of discretion; nor has appellant indicated to us that she was prejudiced thereby.

[20] (9) Did the court err in failing to allow evidence concerning acts that occurred after the filing of appellant's cross-complaint? No.

330 P.2d—60½

Appellant was asked if surveillance of her, by detectives, occurred at a time which in fact was after the date her cross-complaint was filed. The court sustained an objection that it was not material. No supplemental complaint had been filed.

Moreover, the excluded evidence pertained to the cruelty charge, which was supported in appellant's favor by evidence not excluded, and that feature of the judgment has become final. No conceivable prejudice has been shown.

[21] (10) Was it error to refuse to grant appellant her costs upon this appeal?

Appellant contends it was error to deny her attorney fees and court costs upon appeal. There is nothing in the record before us concerning such action. Moreover, such denial was, if it did occur, in the form of a special order after final judgment, not reviewable upon appeal from the judgment. Fulton v. Fulton, 220 Cal. 726, 729, 32 P.2d 634.

The judgment is affirmed.
